

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

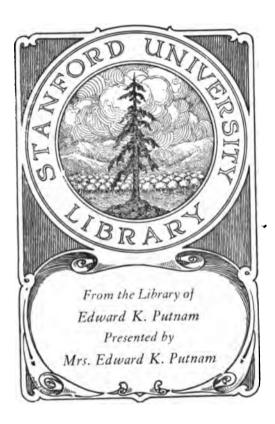

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THE present work was undertaken with the intention of furnishing students with materials for a more scientific study of English etymology than is commonly to be found in previous works upon the subject. It is not intended to be always authoritative, nor are the conclusions arrived at to be accepted as final. It is rather intended as a guide to future writers, shewing them in some cases what ought certainly to be accepted, and in other cases, it may be, what to avoid. The idea of it arose out of my own wants. I could find no single book containing the facts about a given word which it most concerns a student to know, whilst, at the same time, there exist numerous books containing information too important to be omitted. Thus Richardson's Dictionary is an admirable store-house of quotations illustrating such words as are of no great antiquity in the language, and his selected examples are the more valuable from the fact that he in general adds the exact reference<sup>1</sup>. Todd's Johnson likewise contains numerous well-chosen quotations, but perhaps no greater mistake was ever made than that of citing from authors like 'Dryden' or 'Addison' at large, without the slightest hint as to the whereabouts of the context. But in both of these works the etymology is, commonly, of the poorest description; and it would probably be difficult to find a worse philologist than Richardson, who adopted many suggestions from Horne Tooke without enquiry, and was capable of saying that hod is 'perhaps hoved, hov'd, hod, past part. of heafan, to heave.' It is easily ascertained that the A.S. for heave is hebban, and that, being a strong verb, its past participle did not originally end in -ed.

It would be tedious to mention the numerous other books which help to throw such light on the history of words as is necessary for the right investigation of their etymology. The great defect of most of them is that they do not carry back that history far enough, and are very weak in the highly important Middle-English period. But the publications of the Camden Society, of the Early English Text Society, and of many other printing clubs, have lately materially advanced our knowledge, and have rendered possible such excellent books of reference as are exemplified in Stratmann's Old English Dictionary and in the still more admirable but (as yet) incomplete 'Wörterbuch' by Eduard Mätzner. In particular, the study of phonetics, as applied to Early English pronunciation by Mr. Ellis and Mr. Sweet, and carefully carried out by nearly all students of Early English in Germany, has almost revolutionised the study of etymology as hitherto pursued in England. We can no longer consent to disregard vowel-sounds as if they formed no essential part of the word, which seems to have been the old doctrine; indeed, the idea is by no means yet discarded even by those who ought to know better.

On the other hand, we have, in Eduard Müller's Etymologisches Wörterbuch der Englischen Sprache<sup>2</sup>, an excellent collection of etymologies and cognate words, but without any illustrations of the use or history of words, or any indication of the period when they first came into use. We have also Webster's Dictionary, with the etymologies as revised by Dr. Mahn, a very useful and comprehensive volume; but the plan of the work does not allow of much explanation of a purely philological character.

It is many years since a new and comprehensive dictionary was first planned by the Philological Society, and we have now good hope that, under the able editorship of Dr. Murray, some portion of this great work may ere long see the light. For the illustration of the history of words, this will be all-important, and the etymologies will, I believe, be briefly but sufficiently indicated. It was chiefly with the hope of assisting in this national work, that, many years ago, I began collecting materials and making notes upon points relating to etymology. The result of such work, in a modified form, and with very large additions, is here offered to the reader. My object has been to clear the way for the improvement of the etymologies by a previous discussion of all the more important words, executed on a plan so far differing from that which will be adopted by Dr. Murray as not to interfere with his labours, but rather, as far as possible, to assist them. It will, accordingly, be found that I have studied brevity by refraining from any detailed account of the changes of meaning of words, except where absolutely necessary for purely etymological purposes. The numerous very curious and highly interesting examples of words which, especially in later times, took up new meanings will not, in general, be found here; and the definitions of words are only given in a very brief and bald manner, only the more usual senses being indicated. On the other hand, I have sometimes permitted myself to indulge in comments, discussions, and even suggestions and speculations, which would be out of place in a dictionary of the usual character. Some of these, where the results are right, will, I hope, save much future discussion and investigation; whilst others, where the results prove to be wrong, can be avoided and rejected. In one respect I have attempted considerably more than is usually done by the writers of works upon English etymology. I have endeavoured, where possible, to trace back words to their Aryan roots, by availing myself of the latest works upon comparative philology. In doing this, I have especially endeavoured to link one word with another, and the reader will find a perfect network of crossreferences enabling him to collect all the forms of any given word of which various forms exist; so that many of the principal words in the Aryan languages can be thus traced. Instead of considering English as an isolated language, as is sometimes actually done, I endeavour, in every case, to exhibit its relation to cognate tongues; and as, by this process, considerable light is thrown upon English by Latin and Greek, so also, at the same time, considerable light is thrown upon Latin and Greek by Anglo-Saxon and Icelandic. Thus, whilst under the word bite will be found a mention of the cognate Latin findere, conversely, under the word fissure, is given a cross-reference to bite. In both cases, reference is also made to the root BHID; and, by referring to this root (no. 240, on p. 738), some further account of it will be found, with further examples of allied words. It is only by thus comparing all the Aryan languages together, and by considering them as one harmonious whole, that we can get a clear conception of the original forms; a conception which must precede all theory as to how those forms came to be invented <sup>1</sup>. Another great advantage of the comparative method is that, though the present work is nominally one on English etymology, it is equally explicit, as far as it has occasion to deal with them, with regard to the related words in other languages; and may be taken as a guide to the etymology of many of the leading words in Latin and Greek, and to all the more important words in the various Scandinavian and Teutonic tongues.

I have chiefly been guided throughout by the results of my own experience. Much use of many dictionaries has shewn me the exact points where an enquirer is often baffled, and I have especially addressed myself to the task of solving difficulties and passing beyond obstacles. Not inconsiderable has been the trouble of verifying references. A few examples will put this in a clear light.

Richardson has numerous references (to take a single case) to the Romaunt of the Rose. He probably used some edition in which the lines are not numbered; at any rate, he never gives an exact reference to it. The few references to it in Tyrwhitt's Glossary and in Stratmann do not help us very greatly. To find a particular word in this poem of 7700 lines is often troublesome; but, in every case where I wanted the quotation, I have found and noted it. I can recall several half-hours spent in this particular work.

Another not very hopeful book in which to find one's place, is the Faerie Queene. References to this are usually given to the book and canto, and of these one or other is (in Richardson) occasionally incorrect; in every case, I have added the number of the stanza.

One very remarkable fact about Richardson's dictionary is that, in many cases, references are given only to obscure and late authors, when all the while the word occurs in Shakespeare. By keeping Dr. Schmidt's comprehensive Shakespeare Lexicon<sup>1</sup> always open before me, this fault has been easily remedied.

To pass on to matters more purely etymological. I have constantly been troubled with the vagueness and inaccuracy of words quoted, in various books, as specimens of Old English or foreign languages. The spelling of 'Anglo-Saxon' in some books is often simply outrageous. Accents are put in or left out at pleasure; impossible combinations of letters are given; the number of syllables is disregarded; and grammatical terminations have to take their chance. Words taken from Ettmüller are spelt with  $\ddot{a}$  and  $\varpi$ ; words taken from Bosworth are spelt with  $\varpi$  and  $\varpi^2$ , without any hint that the  $\ddot{a}$  and  $\varpi$  of the former answer to  $\varpi$  and  $\acute{e}$  in the latter. I do not wish to give examples of these things; they are so abundant that they may easily be found by the curious. In many cases, writers of 'etymological' dictionaries do not trouble to learn even the alphabets of the languages cited from, or the most elementary grammatical facts. I have met with supposed Welsh words spelt with a v, with Swedish words spelt with  $\varpi$ , with Danish infinitives ending in  $-a^3$ , with Icelandic infinitives in -an, and so on; the only languages correctly spelt being Latin and Greek, and commonly French and German. It is clearly assumed, and probably with safety, that most readers will not detect mis-spellings beyond this limited range.

But this was not a matter which troubled me long. At a very early stage of my studies, I perceived clearly enough, that the spelling given by some authorities is not necessarily to be taken as the true one; and it was then easy to make allowances for possible errors, and to refer to some book with reasonable spellings, such as E. Müller, or Mahn's Webster, or Wedgwood. A little research revealed far more curious pieces of information than the citing of words in impossible or mistaken spellings. Statements abound which it is difficult to account for except on the supposition that it must once have been usual to manufacture words for the express purpose of deriving others from them. To take an example, I open Todd's Johnson at random, and find that under bolster is cited 'Gothic bolster, a heap of hay.' Now the fragments of Gothic that have reached us are very precious but very insufficient, and they certainly contain no such word as bolster. Neither is bolster a Gothic spelling. Holster is represented in Gothic by hulistr, so that bolster might, possibly, be bulistr. In any case, as the word certainly does not occur, it can only be a pure invention, due to some blunder; the explanation

'a heap of hay' is a happy and graphic touch, regarded in the light of a fiction, but is out of place in a work of reference.

A mistake of this nature would not greatly matter if such instances were rare; but the extraordinary part of the matter is that they are extremely common, owing probably to the trust reposed by former writers in such etymologists as Skinner and Junius, men who did good work in their day, but whose statements require careful verification in this nineteenth century. What Skinner was capable of, I have shewn in my introduction to the reprint of Ray's Glossary published for the English Dialect Society. It is sufficient to say that the net result is this; that words cited in etymological dictionaries (with very few exceptions) cannot be accepted without verification. Not only do we find puzzling misspellings, but we find actual fictions; words are said to be 'Anglo-Saxon' that are not to be found in the existing texts; 'Gothic' words are constructed for the mere purpose of 'etymology;' Icelandic words have meanings assigned to them which are incredible or misleading; and so on of the rest.

Another source of trouble is that, when real words are cited, they are wrongly explained. Thus, in Todd's Johnson, we find a derivation of bond from A. S. 'bond, bound.' Now bond is not strictly Anglo-Saxon, but an Early English form, signifying 'a band,' and is not a past participle at all; the A. S. for 'bound' being gebunden. The error is easily traced; Dr. Bosworth cites 'bond, bound, ligatus' from Somner's Dictionary, whence it was also copied into Lye's Dictionary in the form: 'bond, ligatus, obligatus, bound.' Where Somner found it, is a mystery indeed, as it is absurd on the face of it. We should take a man to be a very poor German scholar who imagined that band, in German, is a past participle; but when the same mistake is made by Somner, we find that it is copied by Lye, copied by Bosworth (who, however, marks it as Somner's), copied into Todd's Johnson, amplified by Richardson into the misleading statement that 'bond is the past tense<sup>1</sup> and past participle of the verb to bind,' and has doubtless been copied by numerous other writers who have wished to come at their etymologies with the least trouble to themselves. It is precisely this continual reproduction of errors which so disgraces many English works, and renders investigation so difficult.

But when I had grasped the facts that spellings are often false, that words can be invented, and that explanations are often wrong, I found that worse remained behind. The science of philology is comparatively modern, so that our earlier writers had no means of ascertaining principles that are now well established, and, instead of proceeding by rule, had to go blindly by guesswork, thus sowing crops of errors which have sprung up and multiplied till it requires very careful investigation to enable a modern writer to avoid all the pitfalls prepared for him by the false suggestions which he meets with at every turn. Many derivations that have been long current and are even generally accepted will not be found in this volume, for the plain reason that I have found them to be false; I think I may at any rate believe myself to be profoundly versed in most of the old fables of this character, and I shall only say, briefly, that the reader need not assume me to be ignorant of them because I do not mention them. The most extraordinary fact about comparative philology is that, whilst its principles are well understood by numerous students in Germany and America, they are far from being well-known in England, so that it is easy to meet even with classical scholars who have no notion what 'Grimm's law' really means, and who are entirely at a loss to understand why the English care has no connection with the Latin cura, nor the English whole with the Greek δλos, nor the French charité with the Greek  $\chi d\rho_i$ . Yet for the understanding of these things nothing more is needed than a knowledge of the relative values of the letters of the English, Latin, and Greek alphabets. A knowledge of these alphabets is strangely neglected at our public schools; whereas a few hours carefully devoted to each would save scholars from innumerable blunders, and a boy of sixteen who understood them would be far more than a match, in matters of etymology, for a man of fifty who did not. In particular, some knowledge of the vowel-sounds is essential. Modern philology will, in future, turn more and more upon phonetics; and the truth now confined to a very few will at last become general, that the vowel is commonly the very life, the most essential part of the word, and that, just as pre-scientific etymologists frequently went wrong because they considered the consonants as being of small consequence and the vowels of none at all, the scientific student of the present day may hope to go right, if he considers the consonants as being of great consequence and the vowels as all-important.

The foregoing remarks are, I think, sufficient to shew my reasons for undertaking the work, and the nature of some of the difficulties which I have endeavoured to encounter or remove. I now proceed to state explicitly what the reader may expect to find.

Each article begins with a word, the etymology of which is to be sought. When there are one or more words with the same spelling, a number is added, for the sake of distinction in the case of future reference. This is a great convenience when such words are cited in the 'List of Aryan Roots' and in the various indexes at the end of the volume, besides saving trouble in making cross-references.

After the word comes a brief definition, merely as a mark whereby to identify the word.

Next follows an exact statement of the actual (or probable) language whence the word is taken, with an account of the channel or channels through which it reached us. Thus the word 'Canopy' is marked '(F., — Ital., — L., — Gk.),' to be read as 'French, from Italian, from Latin, from Greek;' that is to say, the word is ultimately Greek, whence it was borrowed, first by Latin, secondly by Italian (from the Latin), thirdly by French (from the Italian), and lastly by English (from French). The endeavour to distinguish the exact history of each word in this manner conduces greatly to care and attention, and does much to render the etymology correct. I am not aware that any attempt of the kind has previously been made, except very partially; the usual method, of offering a heap of more or less related words in one confused jumble, is much to be deprecated, and is often misleading<sup>1</sup>.

After the exact statement of the source, follow a few quotations. These are intended to indicate the period at which the word was borrowed, or else the usual Middle-English forms. When the word is not a very old one, I have given one or two of the earliest quotations which I have been able to find, though I have here preferred quotations from well-known authors to somewhat earlier ones from more obscure writers. These quotations are intended to exemplify the history of the form of the word, and are frequently of great chronological utility; though it is commonly sufficient to indicate the period of the word's first use within half a century. By way of example, I may observe that canon is not derived from F. canon, but appears in King Ælfred, and was taken immediately from the Latin. I give the reference under Canon, to Ælfred's translation of Beda, b. iv. c. 24, adding 'Bosworth' at the end. This means that I took the reference from Bosworth's Dictionary, and had not, at the moment, the means of verifying the quotation (I now find it is quite correct, occurring on p. 598 of Smith's edition, at 1. 13). When no indication of the authority for the quotation is given, it commonly means that I have verified it myself; except in the case of Shakespeare, where I have usually trusted to Dr. Schmidt.

A chief feature of the present work, and one which has entailed enormous labour, is that, whenever I cite old forms or foreign words, from which any given English word is derived or with which it is connected, I have actually verified the spellings and significations of these words by help of the dictionaries of which a list is given in the 'Key to the General Plan' immediately preceding the letter A. I have done this in order to avoid two common errors; (1) that of misspelling the words cited 1, and (2) that of misinterpreting them. The exact source or edition whence every word is copied is, in every case, precisely indicated, it being understood that, when no author is specified, the word is taken from the book mentioned in the 'Key.' Thus every statement made may be easily verified. and I can assure those who have had no experience in such investigations that this is no small matter. I have frequently found that some authors manipulate the meanings of words to suit their own convenience, when not tied down in this manner; and, not wishing to commit the like mistake, which approaches too nearly to dishonesty to be wittingly indulged in, I have endeavoured by this means to remove the temptation of being led to swerve from the truth in this particular. Yet it may easily be that fancy has sometimes led me astray in places where there is room for some speculation, and I must therefore beg the reader, whenever he has any doubts, to verify the statements for himself (as, in general, he easily may), and he will then see the nature of the premises from which the conclusions have been drawn. In many instances it will be found that the meanings are given, for the sake of brevity, less fully than they might have been, and that the arguments for a particular view are often far stronger than they are represented to be.

Span. and Port. curso, Lat. cursus,' &c. Here the Latin form should have followed the French. With the Prov., Ital., Span., and Port forms we have absolutely nothing to do.

The materials collected by the Philological Society will doubtless decide many debateable points, and will definitely confirm or refute, in many cases, the results here arrived at. It is, perhaps, proper to point out that French words are more often cited from Cotgrave than in their modern forms. Very few good words have been borrowed by us from French at a late period, so that modern French is not of much use to an English etymologist. In particular, I have intentionally disregarded the modern French accentuation. To derive our word recreation from the F. récréation gives a false impression; for it was certainly borrowed from French before the accents were added.

In the case of verbs and substantives (or other mutually related words), considerable pains have been taken to ascertain and to point out whether the verb has been formed from the substantive, or whether, conversely, the substantive is derived from the verb. This often makes a good deal of difference to the etymology. Thus, when Richardson derives the adj. full from the verb to fill, he reverses the fact, and shews that he was entirely innocent of any knowledge of the relative value of the Anglo-Saxon vowels. Similar mistakes are common even in treating of Greek and Latin. Thus, when Richardson says that the Latin laborare is 'of uncertain etymology,' he must have meant the remark to apply to the sb. labor. The etymology of laborare is obvious, viz. from that substantive.

The numerous cross-references will enable the student, in many cases, to trace back words to the Aryan root, and will frequently lead to additional information. Whenever a word has a 'doublet,' i.e. appears in a varying form, a note is made of the fact at the end of the article; and a complete list of these will be found in the Appendix.

The Appendix contains a list of Prefixes, a general account of Suffixes, a List of Aryan Roots, and Lists of Homonyms and Doublets. Besides these, I have attempted to give lists shewing the Distribution of the Sources of English. As these lists are far more comprehensive than any which I have been able to find in other books, and are subdivided into classes in a much stricter manner than has ever yet been attempted, I may crave some indulgence for the errors in them.

From the nature of the work, I have been unable to obtain much assistance in it. The mechanical process of preparing the copy for press, and the subsequent revision of proofs, have entailed upon me no inconsiderable amount of labour; and the constant shifting from one language to another has required patience and attention. The result is that a few annoying oversights have occasionally crept in, due mostly to a brief lack of attention on the part of eye or brain. In again going over the whole work for the purpose of making an epitome of it, I have noticed some of these errors, and a list of them is given in the Errata. Other errors have been kindly pointed out to me, which are also noted in the Addenda; and I beg leave to thank those who have rendered me such good service. I may also remark that letters have reached me which cannot be turned to any good account, and it is sometimes surprising that a few correspondents should be so eager to manifest their entire ignorance of all philological principles. Such cases are, however, exceptional, and I am very anxious to receive, and to make use of, all reasonable suggestions. The experience gained in writing the first 'part' of the book, from A-D, proved of much service; and I believe that errors are fewer near the end than near the beginning. Whereas I was at first inclined to trust too much to Brachet's Etymological French Dictionary, I now believe that Scheler is a better guide, and that I might have consulted Littré even more frequently than I have done. Near the beginning of the work, I had no copy of Littré of my own, nor of Palsgrave, nor of some other very useful books; but experience soon shewed what books were most necessary to be added to my very limited collection. In the study of English etymology, it often happens that instantaneous reference to some rather unexpected source is almost an absolute necessity, and it is somewhat difficult to make provision for such a call within the space of one small room. This is the real reason why some references to what may, to some students, be very familiar works, have been taken at second-hand. I have merely made the best use I could of the materials nearest at hand. But for this, the work would have been more often interrupted, and time would have been wasted which could ill be spared.

It is also proper to state that with many articles I am not satisfied. Those that presented no difficulty, and took up but little time, are probably the best and most certain. In very difficult cases, my usual rule has been not to spend more than three hours over one word. During that time, I made the best I could of it, and then let it go. I hope it may be understood that my object in making this and other similar statements regarding my difficulties is merely to enable the reader to consult the book with the greater safety, and to enable him to form his own opinion as to how far it is to be trusted. My honest opinion is that those whose philological knowledge is but small may safely accept the results here given, since they may else do worse; whilst advanced students will receive them with that caution which so difficult a study soon renders habitual.

One remark concerning the printing of the book is worth making. It is common for writers to throw the blame of errors upon the printers, and there is in this a certain amount of truth in some instances. But illegible writing should also receive its fair portion of blame; and it is only just to place the fact on record, that I have frequently received from the press a first rough proof of a sheet of this work, abounding in words taken from a great many languages, in which not a single printer's error occurred of any kind whatever; and many others in which the errors were very trivial and unimportant, and seldom extended to the actual spelling.

I am particularly obliged to those who have kindly given me hints or corrections; Mr. Sweet's account of the word left, and his correction for the word bless, have been very acceptable, and I much regret that his extremely valuable collection of the earliest English vocabularies and other records is not yet published, as it will certainly yield valuable information. I am also indebted for some useful hints to Professor Cowell, and to the late Mr. Henry Nicol, whose knowledge of early French phonology was almost unrivalled. Also to Dr. Stratmann, and the Rev. A. L. Mayhew, of Oxford, for several corrections; to Professor Potwin, of Hudson, Ohio; to Dr. J. N. Grönland, of Stockholm, for some notes upon Swedish; to Dr. Murray, the Rev. O. W. Tancock, and the Rev. D. Silvan

Evans, for various notes; and to several other correspondents who have kindly taken a practical interest in the work.

In some portions of the Appendix I have received very acceptable assistance. The preparation of the lists shewing the Distribution of Words was entirely the work of others; I have done little more than revise them. For the word-lists from A—Literature, I am indebted to Miss Mantle, of Girton College; and for the lists from Litharge — Reduplicate, to A. P. Allsopp, Esq., of Trinity College, Cambridge. The rest was prepared by my eldest daughter, who also prepared the numerous examples of English words given in the List of Aryan Roots, and the List of Doublets. To Miss F. Whitehead I am indebted for the List of Homonyms.

To all the above-named and to other well-wishers I express my sincere thanks.

But I cannot take leave of a work which has closely occupied my time during the past four years without expressing the hope that it may prove of service, not only to students of comparative philology and of early English, but to all who are interested in the origin, history, and development of the noble language which is the common inheritance of all English-speaking peoples. It is to be expected that, owing to the increased attention which of late years has been given to the study of languages, many of the conclusions at which I have arrived may require important modification or even entire change; but I nevertheless trust that the use of this volume may tend, on the whole, to the suppression of such guesswork as entirely ignores all rules. I trust that it may, at the same time, tend to strengthen the belief that, as in all other studies, true results are only to be obtained by reasonable inferences from careful observations, and that the laws which regulate the development of language, though frequently complicated by the interference of one word with another, often present the most surprising examples of regularity. The speech of man is, in fact, influenced by physical laws, or in other words, by the working of divine power. It is therefore possible to pursue the study of language in a spirit of reverence similar to that in which we study what are called the works of nature; and by aid of that spirit we may gladly perceive a new meaning in the sublime line of our poet Coleridge, that 'Earth, with her thousand voices, praises God.'

BRIEF NOTES UPON THE LANGUAGES CITED IN THE DICTIONARY

ENGLISH. Words marked (E.) are pure English, and form the true basis of the language. They can commonly be traced back for about a thousand years, but their true origin is altogether pre-historic and of great antiquity. Many of them, such as father, mother, &c., have corresponding cognate forms in Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin. These forms are collateral, and the true method of comparison is by placing them side by Thus father is no more 'derived' from the Sanskrit pild' than the Skt. pild is 'derived' from the side. English father. Both are descended from a common Aryan type, and that is all. Sometimes Sanskrit is said to be an 'elder sister' to English; the word 'elder' would be better omitted. Sanskrit has doubtless suffered less change, but even twin sisters are not always precisely alike, and, in the course of many years, one may come to look younger than the other. The symbol + is particularly used to call attention to collateral descent, as distinct from borrowing or derivation. English forms belonging to the 'Middle-English' period are marked 'M. E.' This period extends, roughly speaking, from about 1200 to 1460, both these dates being arbitrarily chosen. Middle-English consisted of three dialects, Northern, Midland, and Southern; the dialect depends upon the author cited. The spellings of the 'M. E.' words are usually given in the actual forms found in the editions referred to, not always in the theoretical forms as given by Stratmann, though these are, etymologically, more correct. Those who possess Stratmann's Dictionary will do well to consult it.

Words belonging to English of an earlier date than about 1150 or 1200 are marked 'A. S.', i.e. Anglo-Saxon. Some have asked why they have not been marked as 'O. E.', i. e., Oldest English. Against this, there are two reasons. The first is, that 'O. E.' would be read as 'Old English,' and this term has been used so vaguely, and has so often been made to include 'M. E.' as well, that it has ceased to be distinctive, and has become comparatively useless. The second and more important reason is that, unfortunately, Oldest English and Anglo-Saxon are not coextensive. The former consisted, in all probability, of three main dialects, but the remains of two of these are very scanty. Of Old Northern, we have little left beyond the Northumbrian versions of the Gospels and the glosses in the Durham Ritual: of Old Midland, almost the only scrap preserved is in the Rushworth gloss to St. Matthew's Gospel; but of Old Southern, or, strictly, of the old dialect of Wessex, the remains are fairly abundant, and these are commonly called Anglo-Saxon. It is therefore proper to use 'A. S.' to denote this definite dialect, which, after all, represents only the speech of a particular portion of England. The term is well-established and may therefore be kept; else it is not a particularly happy one, since the Wessex dialect was distinct from the Northern or Anglian dialect, and 'Anglo-Saxon' must, for philological purposes, be taken to mean Old English in which Anglian is not necessarily included.

Anglo-Saxon cannot be properly understood without some knowledge of its phonology, and English etymology cannot be fairly made out without some notion of the gradations of the Anglo-Saxon vowel-system. For these things, the student must consult Sweet's Anglo-Saxon Reader and March's Grammar. Only a few brief hints can be given here.

SHORT VOWELS: a, z, e, i, o, u, y.

LONG VOWELS:  $\dot{a}$ ,  $\dot{a}$ ,  $\dot{e}$ ,  $\dot{e}$ ,  $\dot{s}$ ,  $\dot{b}$ ,  $\dot{u}$ ,  $\dot{y}$ .

DIPHTHONGS: ed, answering to Goth. au; ed, Goth. iu; also (in early MSS.) ie and ie.

BREAKINGS. The vowel a commonly becomes ea when preceded by g, c, or sc, or when followed by l, r, h, or x. Similarly e or i may become eo. The most usual vowel-change is that produced by the occurrence of i (which often disappeared) in the following syllable. This changes the vowels in row (1) below to the corresponding vowels in row (2) below.

(1) a, u, ea, eo, á, ó, ú, eá, eó. (2) e, y, y, y, źc, é, ź, ź, ź.

These two rows should be learnt by heart, as a knowledge of them is required at almost every turn. Note that  $\dot{a}$  and  $\dot{z}$  most often arise from an original (Aryan) i; whilst  $c\delta$ ,  $c\delta$ ,  $\dot{u}$ , and  $\dot{y}$  arise from original u.

Modern E. th is represented by A.S. p or S, used indifferently in the MSS.; see note to Th.

Strong verbs are of great importance, and originated many derivatives; these derivatives can be deduced from the form of the past tense singular, of the past tense plural, or of the past participle, as well as from the infinitive mood. It is therefore necessary to ascertain all these leading forms. Ex: bindan, to bind; pt. t. band, pl. bundon, pp. bunden. From the pt. t. we have the sb. band or bond; from the pp. we have the sb. bundle.

Examples of the Conjugations are these.

- I. Feallan, to fall; pt. t. feoll, pl. feollon; pp. feallen. Base  $FAL = \sqrt{SPAR}$ .
- 2. Bindan, to bind; pt. t. band, pl. bundon; pp. bunden. Base BAND =  $\sqrt{BHANDH}$ .
- 3. Beran, to bear; pt. t. bær, pl. bæron; pp. boren. Base BAR = VBHAR.
- 4. Gifan, to give; pt. t. geaf, pl. geafon, pp. gifen. Base GAB.
- 5. Scinan, to shine; pt. t. scan, pl. scinon, pp. scinen. Base ski.
- 6. Bebdan, to bid; pt. t. bead, pl. budon, pp. boden. Base BUD.
- 7. Faran, to fare; pt. t. for, pl. foron, pp. faren. Base  $FAR = \sqrt{PAR}$ .

Strong verbs are often attended by secondary or causal verbs; other secondary verbs are formed from substantives. Many of these ended originally in -ian; the i of this suffix often disappears, causing gemination of the preceding consonant. Thus we have habban, to have (for haf-ian*); beccan, to thatch (for bac-ian*); biddan, to prav (for bid-ian*); secgan, to say (for sag-ian*); sellan, to give, sell (for sal-ian*); dyppan, to dip (for dup-ian*); sellan, to set (for sal-ian *). With a few exceptions, these are weak verbs, with pt. t. in -ode, and pp. in -od.

OLD LOW GERMAN. Denoted by 'O. Low G.' This is a term which I have employed for want of a better. It is meant to include a not very large class of words, the precise origin of which is wrapped in some obscurity. If not precisely English, they come very near it. The chief difficulty about them is that the time of their introduction into English is uncertain. Either they belong to Old Friesian, and were introduced by the Friesians who came over to England with the Saxons, or to some form of Old Dutch or Old Saxon, and may have been introduced from Holland, possibly even in the fourteenth century, when it was not uncommon for Flemings to come here. Some of them may yet be found in Anglo-Saxon. I call them Old Low German because they clearly belong to some Old Low German dialect; and I put them in a class together in order to call attention to them, in the hope that their early history may receive further elucidation.

DUTCH. The introduction into English of Dutch words is somewhat important, yet seems to have received but little attention. I am convinced that the influence of Dutch upon English has been much underrated, and a closer attention to this question might throw some light even upon English history. I think I may 223 take the credit of being the first to point this out with sufficient distinctness. History tells us that our 41 relations with the Netherlands have often been rather close. We read of Flemish mercenary soldiers being : ie employed by the Normans, and of Flemish settlements in Wales, 'where (says old Fabyan, I know not with 7E-( what truth) they remayned a longe whyle, but after, they sprad all Englande ouer.' We may recall the i⊇ ch alliance between Edward III and the free towns of Flanders; and the importation by Edward of Flemish weavers. The wool used by the cloth-workers of the Low Countries grew on the backs of English sheep; and other close relations between us and our nearly related neighbours grew out of the brewing-trade, the invention of printing, and the reformation of religion. Caxton spent thirty years in Flanders (where the first a íor English book was printed), and translated the Low German version of Reynard the Fox. Tyndale settled at con Antwerp to print his New Testament, and was strangled at Vilvorde. But there was a still closer contact in > bs the time of Elizabeth. Very instructive is Gascoigne's poem on the Fruits of War, where he describes his 3. W experiences in Holland; and every one knows that Zutphen saw the death of the beloved Sir Philip Sidney. ₹$s | As to the introduction of cant words from Holland, see Beaumont and Fletcher's play entitled 'The Beggar's Bush.' After Antwerp had been captured by the Duke of Parma, 'a third of the merchants and manufacturers of the ruined city,' says Mr. Green, 'are said to have found a refuge on the banks of the Thames.' All this 00 cannot but have affected our language, and it ought to be accepted, as tolerably certain, that during the 1 DOW fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries, particularly the last, several Dutch words were introduced into र्थ <sub>()</sub> England; and it would be curious to enquire whether, during the same period, several English words did not, : the in like manner, find currency in the Netherlands. The words which I have collected, as being presumably Dutch, are deserving of special attention. sk

For the pronunciation of Dutch, see Sweet's Handbook of Phonetics. It is to be noted that the English oo in boor exactly represents the Dutch or in boer (the same word). Also, that the Dutch sch is very different from the German sound, and is Englished by sc or sk, as in landscape, formerly landskip. The audacity with which English has turned the Dutch ui in bruin (brown) into broo-in is an amazing instance of the influence of spelling upon speech. V and s are common, where English has f and s. The symbol ij is used for double i, and was formerly written y; it is pronounced like E. i in wine. The standard Low German th appears as d; thus, whilst thatch is English, deck is Dutch. Ol appears as ou, as in oud, old, goud, gold, houden, to hold. D between two vowels sometimes disappears, as in weer (for weder *), a wether. The language abounds with frequentative verbs in -eren and -elen, and with diminutive substantives in -je (also -lje, -pje, -elje), a suffix which has been substituted for the obsolete diminutive suffix -ken.

Authorities: Oudemans, Kilian, Hexham, Sewel, Ten Kate, Delfortrie; dictionary printed by Tauchnitz. OLD FRIESIC. Closely allied to Anglo-Saxon; some English words are rather Friesian than Saxon. Authorities: Richthofen; also (for modern North Friesic) Outzen; (for modern East Friesic) Koolman.

OLD SAXON. The old dialect of Westphalia, and closely allied to Old Dutch. Authority: Heyne.

LOW GERMAN. This name is given to an excellent vocabulary of a Low German dialect, in the work commonly known as the Bremen Wörterbuch.

SCANDINAVIAN. By this name I denote the old Danish, introduced into England by the Danes and Northmen who, in the early period of our history, came over to England in great numbers. Often driven back, they continually returned, and on many occasions made good their footing and remained here. Their language is best represented by Icelandic, owing to the curious fact that, ever since the first colonisation of Iceland by the Northmen about A.D. 874, the language of the settlers has been preserved with but slight changes. Hence, instead of its appearing strange that English words should be borrowed from Icelandic, it must be remembered that this name represents, for philological purposes, the language of those Northmen, who, settling in England, became ancestors of some of the very best men amongst us; and as they settled chiefly in Northumbria and East Anglia, parts of England not strictly represented by Anglo-Saxon, 'Icelandic' or 'Old Norse' (as it is also called) has come to be, it may almost be said, English of the English. In some cases, I derive 'Scandinavian' words from Swedish, Danish, or Norwegian; but no more is meant by this than that the Swedish, Danish, or Norwegian words are the best representatives of the 'Old Norse' that I could find. The number of words actually borrowed from what (in the modern sense) is strictly Swedish or strictly Danish is but small, and they have been duly noted.

Icelandic. Vowels, as in Anglo-Saxon, are both short and long, the long vowels being marked with an accent, as d, d, &c. To the usual vowels are added  $\ddot{o}$ , and the diphthongs au, ey, ei; also z, which is written both for z and  $\alpha$ , strictly of different origin; also ja, ja, jb, jb, jb, dz. Among the consonants are  $\ddot{o}$ , the voiced  $t\dot{h}$  (as in E. thou), and b, the voiceless  $t\dot{h}$  (as in E. thin). D was at one time written both for d and  $\ddot{o}$ .  $\dot{P}$ , z, and  $\ddot{o}$  come at the end of the alphabet. There is no zv. The A.S. zv and hzv appear as v and hzv. The most usual vowel-change is that which is caused by the occurrence of i (expressed or understood) in the following syllable; this changes the vowels in row (1) below into the corresponding vowels in row (2) below.

Assimilation is common; thus dd stands for  $\delta d$ , or for Goth. zd (=A.S. rd); kk, for nk; ll, for lr or lp; nn, for np, nd, or nr; ll, for dl, hl, kl, nl, ndl, lp. Initial sk should be particularly noticed, as most E. words beginning with sc or sk are of Scand. origin; the A.S. sc being represented by E. sh. Very remarkable is the loss of v in initial vr = A.S. wr; the same loss occurring in modern English. Infinitives end in -a or ja; verbs in -ja, with very few exceptions, are weak, with pp. ending in  $-\delta$ ,  $-\delta r$ , -l, -lr, &c.; whereas strong verbs have the pp. in -inn.

Authorities: Cleasby and Vigfusson, Egilsson, Möbius, Vigfusson's Icelandic Reader.

Swedish. To the usual vowels add a, d, d, d, v, which are placed at the end of the alphabet. Diphthongs do not occur, except in foreign words. Qv is used where English has qu. The Old Swedish w (= A.S. w) is now v. The Icelandic and A.S. initial p (= th) is replaced by t, as in Danish, not by d, as in Dutch; and our language bears some traces of this peculiarity, as, e.g. in the word hustings (for husthings), and again in the word tight or taut (Icel. pltr).

Assimilation occurs in some words, as in finna (for finda*), to find, dricka (for drinka*), to drink; but it is less common than in Icelandic.

Infinitives end in -a; past participles of strong verbs in -en; weak verbs make the pt.t. in -ade, -de, or -ie, and the pp. in -ad, -d, or -i.

Authorities: Ihre (Old Swedish, also called Suio-Gothic, with explanations in Latin); Widegren; Tauchnitz dictionary; Rietz (Swedish dialects, a valuable book, written in Swedish).

xviii BRIEF NOTES UPON THE LANGUAGES CITED IN THE DICTIONARY.

Danish. To the usual vowels add æ and ö, which are placed at the end of the alphabet. The symbol ö is also written and printed as o with a slanting stroke drawn through it; thus ø. Qv is used where English has qu; but is replaced by kv in Aasen's Norwegian dictionary. V is used where English has w. The Icelandic and A.S. initial  $\flat$  (h) is replaced by l, as in Swedish; not by d, as in Dutch. Assimilation occurs in some words, as in drikke, to drink, but is still less common than in Swedish. Thus the Icel. finna, Swed. finna, to find, is finde in Danish. Mand (for mann\*), a man, is a remarkable form. We should particularly notice that final k, l, p, and f sometimes become g, d, b, and v respectively; as in bog, a book, rag-e, to rake, lag-e, to take; ged, a goat, bid-e, to bite, græd-e, to weep (Lowland Scotch greet); reb, a rope, grib-e, to grip or gripe, knib-e, to nip; liv, life, kniv, knife, viv, wife. Infinitives end in -e; the past participles of strong verbs properly end in -en, but these old forms are not common, being replaced (as in Swedish) by later forms in -el or -l, throughout the active voice.

Authority: Ferrall and Repp's Dictionary.

Norwegian. Closely allied to Danish.

Authority: Aasen's Dictionary of Norwegian dialects (written in Danish).

GOTHIC. The Gothic alphabet, chiefly borrowed from Greek, has been variously transliterated into Roman characters. I have followed the system used in my Mœso-Gothic Dictionary, which I still venture to think the best. It is the same as that used by Massmann, except that I put w for his v, kw for his kv, and hw for his hv, thus turning all his v's into w's, as every true Englishman ought to do. Stamm has the same system as Massmann, with the addition of p for th (needless), and q for kw, which is not pleasant to the eye; so that he writes qap for kwath (i.e. quoth). f corresponds to the E. y. One peculiarity of Gothic must be particularly noted. As the alphabet was partly imitated from Greek, its author used gg and gk (like Gk.  $\gamma\gamma$ ,  $\gamma\pi$ ) to represent ng and nk; as in tuggo, tongue, drigkan, to drink. The Gothic vowel-system is particularly simple and clear, and deserving of special attention, as being the best standard with which to compare the vowel-systems of other Teutonic languages. The primary vowels are a, i, u, always short, and e, o, always long. The two latter are also written  $\ell$ ,  $\delta$ , by German editors, but nothing is gained by it, and it may be observed that this marking of the letters is theoretical, as no accents appear in the MSS. The diphthongs are ai, au, ei, and iu; the two former being distinguished, theoretically, into ai and di, au and du. March arranges the comparative value of these vowels and diphthongs according to the following scheme,

	Aryan	Α	I	U	AI (Skt. ?)	AU (Skt. 6).
	Gothic	{ a, i, u, } { ai, au, }	i	u au	ei	iu.
•	Aryan	Â	î	au Û	ÂI	ÂU.
	Gothic	e, o	ei	u	ái	áu.

Hence we may commonly expect the Gothic ai, ei, to arise from an original I, and the Gothic iu, au, to arise from an original U. The Gothic consonant-system also furnishes a convenient standard for other Teutonic dialects, especially for all Low-German. It agrees very closely with Anglo-Saxon and English. But note that A.S. gifan, to give, is Gothic giban (base GAB), and so in other instances. Also ear, hear, berry, are the same as Goth. auso, hausjan, basi, shewing that in such words the E. r is due to original s.

Authorities: Gabelentz and Löbe, Diefenbach, Schulze, Massmann, Stamm, &c. (See the list of authorities in my own Mœso-Gothic Glossary, which I have used almost throughout, as it is generally sufficient for practical purposes)<sup>1</sup>.

GERMAN. Properly called High-German, to distinguish it from the other Teutonic dialects, which belong to Low-German. This, of all Teutonic languages, is the furthest removed from English, and the one from which fewest words are directly borrowed, though there is a very general popular notion (due to the utter want of philological training so common amongst us) that the contrary is the case. A knowledge of German is often the sole idea by which an Englishman regulates his 'derivations' of Teutonic words; and he is better pleased if he can find the German equivalent of an English word than by any true account of the same word, however clearly expressed. Yet it is well established, by Grimm's law of sound-shiftings, that the German and English consonantal systems are very different. Owing to the replacement of the Old High German p by the Mod. G.  $\delta$ , and other changes, English and German now approach each other more nearly than Grimm's law suggests; but we may still observe the following very striking differences in the dental consonants.

<sup>1</sup> Let me note here that, for the pronunciation of Gothic, the student should consult my edition of the Gospel of St. Mark in Gothic, Oxford, 1882; in which the errors occurring on p. 288 of my Gothic Glossary are corrected.

English. d 1 th.

German. 1 g(ss) d.

These changes are best remembered by help of the words day, tooth, fool, thorn, German lag, sahn, fuss, dorn; and the further comparison of these with the other Teutonic forms is not a little instructive.

Teutonic type	DAGA	TANTHU	FOTU	THORNA.
Anglo-Saxon	dæg	163	f61	þorn.
Old Friesic	dei	toth	fot	thorn.
Old Saxon	dag	land	fot	thorn.
Low German	dag	län	foot
Dutch	dag	tand	voel	doorn.
Icelandic	dag-r	lünn	f61-r	þorn.
Swedish	dag	tand	fot	lörne.
Danish	dag	land	fod	liörn.
Gothic	dag-s	tunthu-s	folu-s	thaurnu-s.
German	lag	z ah n	fuss	dorn.

The number of words in English that are borrowed directly from German is quite insignificant, and they are nearly all of late introduction. It is more to the purpose to remember that there are, nevertheless, a considerable number of German words that were borrowed indirectly, viz. through the French. Examples of such words are brawn, dance, gay, guard, halbert, &c., many of which would hardly be at once suspected. It is precisely in accounting for these Frankish words that German is so useful to the English etymologist. The fact that we are highly indebted to German writers for their excellent philological work is very true, and one to be thankfully acknowledged; but that is quite another matter altogether.

Authorities: Wackernagel, Flügel, E. Müller. (I have generally found these sufficient, from the nature of the case; especially when supplemented by the works of Diez, Fick, Curtius, &c. But there is a good M.H.G. Dictionary by Lexer, another by Benecke, Müller, and Zarncke; and many more.)

FRENCH. The influence of French upon English is too well known to require comment. But the method of the derivation of French words from Latin or German is often very difficult, and requires the greatest care. There are numerous French words in quite common use, such as aise, ease, trancher, to cut, which have never yet been clearly solved; and the solution of many others is highly doubtful. Latin words often undergo the most curious transformations, as may be seen by consulting Brachet's Historical Grammar. What are called 'learned' words, such as mobile, which is merely a Latin word with a French ending, present no difficulty; but the 'popular' words in use since the first formation of the language, are distinguished by three peculiarities: (1) the continuance of the tonic accent, (2) the suppression of the short vowel, (3) the loss of the medial consonant. The last two peculiarities tend to disguise the origin, and require much attention. Thus, in the Latin bonilatem, the short vowel i, near the middle of the word, is suppressed; whence F. bontl, E. bounly. And again, in the Latin ligare, to bind, the medial consonant g, standing between two vowels, is lost, producing the F. liable.

The result is a great tendency to compression, of which an extraordinary but well known example is the Low Latin zelaticum, reduced to edage by the suppression of the short vowel i, and again to aage by the loss of the medial consonant d; hence F. dge, E. age.

One other peculiarity is too important to be passed over. With rare exceptions, the substantives (as in all the Romance languages) are formed from the accusative case of the Latin, so that it is commonly a mere absurdity to cite the Latin nominative, when the form of the accusative is absolutely necessary to shew how the French word arose. On this account, the form of the accusative is usually given, as in the case of caution, from L. cautionem, and in numberless other instances.

French may be considered as being a wholly unoriginal language, founded on debased Latin; but it must at the same time be remembered that, as history teaches us, a certain part of the language is necessarily of Celtic origin, and another part is necessarily Frankish, that is, Old High German. It has also clearly borrowed words freely from Old Low German dialects, from Scandinavian (due to the Normans), and in later times, from Italian, Spanish, &c., and even from English and many entirely foreign languages.

Authorities: Cotgrave, Palsgrave, Littré, Scheler, Diez, Brachet, Burguy, Roquefort, Bartsch.

xx. BRIEF NOTES UPON THE LANGUAGES CITED IN THE DICTIONARY.

OTHER ROMANCE LANGUAGES. The other Romance languages, i.e. languages of Latin origin, are Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Provençal, Romansch, and Wallachian. English contains words borrowed from the first four of these, but there is not much in them that needs special remark. The Italian and Spanish forms are often useful for comparison with (and consequent restoration of) the crushed and abbreviated Old French forms. Italian is remarkable for assimilation, as in ammirare (for admirare) to admire, ditto (for dicto), a saying, whence E. ditto. Spanish, on the other hand, dislikes assimilation, and carefully avoids double consonants; the only consonants that can be doubled are c, n, r, besides ll, which is sounded as E. l followed by y consonant, and occurs in dueña, Englished as duenna. Spanish is also remarkable as containing many Arabic (Moorish) words, some of which have found their way into English. The Italian infinitives commonly end in -are, -ere, -ire, with corresponding past participles in -ado, -udo, -ido. In all the Romance languages, substantives are most commonly formed, as in French, from the Latin accusative.

CELTIC. Words of Celtic origin are marked '(C.)'. This is a particularly slippery subject to deal with, for want of definite information on its older forms in a conveniently accessible arrangement. That English has borrowed several words from Celtic cannot be doubted, but we must take care not to multiply the number of these unduly. Again, 'Celtic' is merely a general term, and in itself means nothing definite, just as 'Teutonic' and 'Romance' are general terms. To prove that a word is Celtic, we must first shew that the word is borrowed from one of the Celtic languages, as Irish, Gaelic, Welsh, Cornish, or Breton, or that it is of a form which, by the help of these languages, can be fairly presumed to have existed in the Celtic of an early period. The chief difficulty lies in the fact that Welsh, Irish, Cornish, and Gaelic have all borrowed English words at various periods, and Gaelic has certainly also borrowed some words from Scandinavian, as history tells us must have been the case. We gain, however, some assistance by comparing all the languages of this class together, and again, by comparing them with Latin, Greek, Sanskrit, &c., since the Celtic consonants often agree with these, and at the same time differ from Teutonic. Thus the word bard is probably Celtic, since it appears in Welsh, Irish, and Gaelic; and again, the word down (2), a fortified hill, is probably Celtic, because it may be compared with the A.S. Kin, a Celtic d answering to A.S. I. On the other hand, the W. hofio, to hover, appears to be nothing but the common M.E. hoven, to hover, derived from the A.S. hof, a dwelling, which appears in E. hov-el. We must look forward to a time when Celtic philology shall be made much more sure and certain than it is at present; meanwhile, the Lectures on Welsh Philology by Professor Rhys give a clear and satisfactory account of the values of Irish and Welsh letters as compared with other Aryan languages.

Some Celtic words have come to us through French, for which assistance is commonly to be had from Breton. A few words in other Teutonic languages besides English are probably of Celtic origin.

BUSSIAN. This language belongs to the Slavonic branch of the Aryan languages, and, though the words borrowed from it are very few, it is frequently of assistance in comparative philology, as exhibiting a modern form of language allied to the Old Church Slavonic. My principal business here is to explain the system of transhiteration which I have adopted, as it is one which I made out for my own convenience, with the object of avoiding the use of diacritical marks. The following is the Russian alphabet, with the Roman letters which I use to represent it. It is sufficient to give the small letters only.

	Bussian Letters:
_	Boman Letters:	2	Ъ	۷	g	d	e (é)	j	2	i	i	k	1	'n	n	0	P	r	8	t	u	- f	kh	ts	ch	sh
	Russian Letters :																•
•	Roman Letters :	shch	1 *	ui	e	ie	e é	iu	ia	ph	ı y		·.	•

This transliteration is not the best possible, but it will suffice to enable any one to verify the words cited in this work by comparing them with a Russian dictionary. I may here add that, in the 'Key' preceding the letter A, I have given Heym's dictionary as my authority, but have since found it more convenient to use Reiff (1876). It makes no difference. It is necessary to add one or two remarks.

The symbol z only occurs at the end of a word or syllable, and only when that word or syllable ends in a consonant; it is not sounded, but throws a greater stress upon the consonant, much as if it were doubled; I denote it therefore merely by an apostrophe. The symbol z most commonly occurs at the end of a word or syllable, and may be treated, in general, as a mute letter. z only occurs at the beginning of words, and is not very common. e may be represented by e at the beginning of a word, or otherwise by e, if necessary, since it cannot then be confused with a. It is to be particularly noted that j is to have its French value, not the English; seeing that m has just the sound of the French j, it may as well be so written. m and i are distinguished by the way in which they occur; ie can be written id, to distinguish it from id = a. a, which is rare, can be written as ph, to distinguish it from a, or f; the sound is all one. By kh, Russ. x, I mean the German guttural ch, which comes very near to the sound of the letter; but the combinations ts, ch, sh, shck are all as in English. b, or ui, resembles the French oui. The combinations id, iu, ia, are to be read with i as English y, i.e. yea, you, yaa. v, or y, pronounced as E. ee, is of no consequence, being very rare. I do not recommend the scheme for general use, but only give it as the one which I have used, being very easy in practice.

The Russian and Slavonic consonants agree with Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin rather than with Teutonic. The same may be said of Lithuanian, which is a very well preserved language, and often of great use in comparative philology. The infinitive mood of Russian regular verbs ends in -ale, -iale, -iele, -ile, -uile, -ole, -ule; that of irregular verbs in -che, or -li. In Lithuanian, the characteristic suffix of the infinitive is -li.

SANSKRIT. In transliterating Sanskrit words, I follow the scheme given in Benfey's Dictionary, with slight modifications. The principal change made is that I print Roman letters instead of those which, in Benfey, are printed with a dot beneath; thus I print ri, ri; t,  $t\hbar$ , d,  $d\hbar$ , n, instead of ri, ri, t,  $t\hbar$ , d,  $d\hbar$ , n. This is an easy simplification, and occasions no ambiguity. For  $\mathbf{N}$ , I print c, as in Benfey, instead of  $\delta$ , as in Monier Williams' Grammar. It might also be printed as a Roman s; but there is one great advantage about the symbol c, viz. that it reminds the student that this sibilant is due to an original k, which is no slight advantage. The only letters that cause any difficulty are the four forms of n. Two of these, n and n (or n), are easily provided for.  $\mathbf{N}$  is represented in Benfey by  $\hbar$ , for which I print  $\tilde{n}$ , as being easier;  $\mathbf{F}$  is represented by  $\tilde{n}$ , which I retain. The only trouble is that, in Monier Williams' Grammar, these appear as  $\tilde{n}$  and n, which causes a slight confusion.

Thus the complete alphabet is represented by a, d, i, i, u, u, ri, ri, hi, hi, e, ai, o, au; gutturals, k, kh, g, gh, i;palatals, ch, chh, j, jh, i; cerebrals, t, th, d, dh, n; dentals, t, th, d, dh, n; labials, p, ph, b, bh, m; semivowels, y, r, l, v; sibilants, c, sh, s; aspirate, h. Add the nasal symbol  $\tilde{m}$ , and the final aspirate, h.

It is sometimes objected that the symbols ch,  $ch\hbar$ , are rather clumsy, especially when occurring as chchh; but as they are perfectly definite and cannot be mistaken, the mere appearance to the eye cannot much matter. Some write c and ch, and consequently cch instead of chchh; but what is gained in appearance is lost in distinctness; since  $\neg$  is certainly ch, whilst c gives the notion of E. c in can.

The highly scientific order in which the letters of the Sanskrit alphabet is arranged should be observed; it may be compared with the order of letters in the Aryan alphabet, given at p. 730, col. 2.

There are a few points about the values of the Sanskrit letters too important to be omitted. The following short notes will be found useful.

The Skt. ri answers to Aryan AR, and is perfectly distinct from r. Thus rich, to shine = Aryan ARK; but rich, to leave = Aryan RIE. An Aryan K becomes Skt. k, kh, ch, c; Aryan G becomes g, j; Aryan GH becomes gh, h; Aryan T becomes l, lh; Aryan P becomes p, ph; Aryan s becomes s and sh. See the table of 'Regular Substitution of Sounds' in Curtius, i. 158. Other languages sometimes preserve a better form than Skt.; thus the  $\sqrt{AG}$ , to drive, gives Lat. ag-ere, Gk.  $\frac{3}{2}$ -ew, and (by regular 'change from g to k') Icelandic ak-a; but the Skt. is aj, a weakened form. The following scheme, abridged from Curtius, shews the most useful and common substitutions.

ARYAN.	SÁNSKRIT.	GŔ.	LAT.	LITH.	GOTHIC.
K	k, kh, ch,ç	ĸ	e, qu	k, 52	h (g).
G	в, j	γ	g	g, ż	k .
GH	gh, h	x	$\begin{cases} \text{ init. } h, f \\ \text{ med. } g \end{cases}$	g, ż	g.
Т	1, th	Ŧ	1	1	th (d).
D	d	8	d	d	th (d). 1.
DH	dh	θ	$\begin{cases} \text{ init. } f \\ \text{ med. } d, b \end{cases}$	ď	d.
Р	p, ph	π	Þ	Þ	ſ.
В	p, ph b	ß	6	•	•
BH	bh	φ	$\begin{cases} init. f \\ med. b \end{cases}$	б	б.

Both in this scheme, and at vol. i. p. 232, Curtius omits the Latin f as the equivalent of Gk.  $\chi$  initially. But I think it may fairly be inserted, since Gk.  $\chi o \lambda \eta = Lat$ . fel, Gk.  $\chi o i e w = Lat$ . friare, and Gk.  $\chi e e w$  is allied to Lat. fundere, on his own showing. Initial h is, however, more common, as in Lat. hiare, pre-hendere, humus, anser (for hanser\*), hiems, heluus, haruspex, allied respectively to Gk.  $\chi a e w$ ,  $\chi a w d w e w$ , allied to Gk.  $\chi a h e w$  ought not also to insert 'initial g' in the same place, since we have Lat. grando and gratus, allied to Gk.  $\chi a \lambda a e w$ .

To the above list of substitutions may be added that of l for r, which is a common phenomenon in nearly all Aryan languages; the comparison of Lat. grando with Gk.  $\chi \alpha \lambda \alpha \zeta \alpha$ , has only just been mentioned. Conversely, we find r for l, as in the well-known example of F. rossignol = Lat. lusciniola.

NON-ARYAN LANGUAGES: HEBREW. The Hebrew words in English are not very numerous, whilst at the same time they are tolerably well known, and the corresponding Hebrew words can, in general, be easily found. I have therefore contented myself with denoting the alphabet beth, gimel, daleth, &c. by b, g, d, h, v, s, kh, l, y, k, l, m, n, s, ', p, ls, q, r, sh or s, l. This gives the same symbol for samech and sin, but this difficulty is avoided by making a note of the few instances in which samech occurs; in other cases, sin is meant. So also with teth and tau; unless the contrary is said, tau is meant. This might have been avoided, had the words been more numerous, by the use of a Roman s and t for samech and teth, the rest of the word being in italics. I put kh for cheth, to denote that the sound is guttural, not E. ch. I denote ayin by the mark'. The other letters can be readily understood. The vowels are denoted by a, e, i, o, u, d, e, i, o, ú.

ARABIC. The Arabic alphabet is important, being also used for Persian, Turkish, Hindustani, and Malay. But as the letters are variously transliterated in various works, it seemed to be the simplest plan to use the spellings given in Richardson's Arabic and Persian Dictionary (with very slight modifications), or in Marsden's Malay Dictionary; and, in order to prevent any mistake, to give, in every instance, the number of the page in Richardson or Marsden, or the number of the column in Palmer's Persian Dictionary; so that, if in any instance, it is desired to verify the word cited, it can readily be done. Richardson's system is rather vague, as he uses i to represent i and i also the occasional i; also s to represent i and j also k for r and s; s for z and k; k for z and k and krid of one ambiguity by using q (instead of k) for 3; and for ayin I have put the mark', as in Palmer's Persian Dictionary. In other cases, the reader can easily tell which t, s, h, or s is meant, if it happens to be an initial letter (when it is the most important), by observing the number of the page (or column) given in the reference to Richardson's or Palmer's Dictionary. Thus in Richardson's Dictionary, pp. 349-477 contain ; pp. 960–981 contain ; pp. 477–487 contain ; pp. 795–868 contain ; op. 924–948 contain ; ص pp. 548-588 contain r; pp. 1660-1700 contain 1; pp. 705-712 contain 3; pp. 764-794 contain ;; pp. 949-960 contain في and pp. 981-984 contain d. In Palmer's Dictionary, the same letters are distinguished as s (coll. 121-159); i (coll. 408-416); i (coll. 160, 161); i (coll. 331-370); i (coll. 396-405); i (coll. 191-207);h (coll. 692-712); z (coll. 283-287); z (coll. 314-330); z (coll. 405-408); and z (coll. 416-418). Palmer gives the complete alphabet in the form a [4, i, &c.] b, p, l, s, j, ch, h, kh, d, z, r, z, zh, s, sh, s, z, t, z, s, gh, f, k [which I have written as q], k, g, l, m, n, w, h, y. It deserves to be added that Turkish has an additional letter, saghir nun, which I denote by n, occurring in the word year, which helps to form the E. word janisary.

In words derived from Hindi, Hindustani, Chinese, &c., I give the page of the dictionary where the word may be found, or a reference to some authority.

CANONS FOR ETYMOLOGY.

In the course of the work, I have been led to adopt the following canons, which merely express well-known principles, and are nothing new. Still, in the form of definite statements, they are worth giving.

r. Before attempting an etymology, ascertain the earliest form and use of the word; and observe chronology.

2. Observe history and geography; borrowings are due to actual contact.

3. Observe phonetic laws, especially those which regulate the mutual relation of consonants in the various Aryan languages, at the same time comparing the vowel-sounds.

4. In comparing two words, A and B, belonging to the same language, of which A contains the lesser number of syllables, A must be taken to be the more original word, unless we have evidence of contraction or other corruption.

5. In comparing two words, A and B, belonging to the same language and consisting of the same number of syllables, the older form can usually be distinguished by observing the sound of the principal vowel.

6. Strong verbs, in the Teutonic languages, and the so-called 'irregular verbs' in Latin, are commonly to be considered as primary, other related forms being taken from them.

7. The whole of a word, and not a portion only, ought to be reasonably accounted for; and, in tracing changes of form, any infringement of phonetic laws is to be regarded with suspicion.

8. Mere resemblances of form and apparent connection in sense between languages which have different phonetic laws or no necessary connection are commonly a delusion, and are not to be regarded.

9. When words in two different languages are more nearly alike than the ordinary phonetic laws would allow, there is a strong probability that one language has borrowed the word from the other. Truly cognate words ought not to be too much alike.

10. It is useless to offer an explanation of an English word which will not also explain all the cognate forms.

These principles, and other similar ones well known to comparative philologists, I have tried to observe. Where I have not done so, there is a chance of a mistake. Corrections can only be made by a more strict observance of the above canons.

A few examples will make the matter clearer.

1. The word surloin or sirloin is often said to be derived from the fact that the loin was knighted as Sir Loin by Charles II., or (according to Richardson) by James I. Chronology makes short work of this statement; the word being in use long before James I. was born. It is one of those unscrupulous inventions with which English 'etymology' abounds, and which many people admire because they are 'so clever.' The number of those who literally prefer a story about a word to a more prosaic account of it, is only too large.

As to the necessity for ascertaining the oldest form and use of a word, there cannot be two opinions. Yet this primary and all-important rule is continually disregarded, and men are found to rush into 'etymologies' without the slightest attempt at investigation or any knowledge of the history of the language, and think nothing of deriving words which exist in Anglo-Saxon from German or Italian. They merely 'think it over,' and take up with the first fancy that comes to hand, which they expect to be 'obvious' to others because they were themselves incapable of doing better; which is a poor argument indeed. It would be easy to cite some specimens which I have noted (with a view to the possibility of making a small collection of such philological curiosities), but it is hardly necessary. I will rather relate my experience, viz. that I have frequently set out to find the etymology of a word without any preconceived ideas about it, and usually found that, by the time its earliest use and sense had been fairly traced. the etymology presented itself unasked.

2. The history of a nation generally accounts for the constituent parts of its language. When an early English word is compared with Hebrew or Coptic, as used to be done in the old editions of Webster's dictionary, history is set at defiance; and it was a good deed to clear the later editions of all such rubbish. As to geography, there must always be an intelligible geographical contact between races that are supposed to have borrowed words from one another; and this is particularly true of olden times, when travelling was less common. Old French did not borrow words from Portugal, nor did old English borrow words from Prussia, much less from Finnish or Esthonian or Coptic, &c., &c. Yet there are people who still remain persuaded that Whitsunday is derived, of all things, from the German Pfingsten.

3. Few delusions are more common than the comparison of L. cura with E. care, of Gk. those with E. whole, and of Gk.  $\chi d\rho s$  with E. charity. I dare say I myself believed in these things for many year-owing to that utter want of any approach to any philological training, for which England in general long been so remarkable. Yet a very slight (but honest) attempt at understanding the English, the Latin, and the Greek alphabets soon shews these notions to be untenable. The E. care, A.S. cearu, meant originally sorrow, which is only a secondary meaning of the Latin word; it never meant, originally, attention or painstaking. But this is not the point at present under consideration. Phonetically, the A.S. c and the L. c, when used initially, do not correspond; for where Latin writes c at the beginning of a word, A. S. has h, as in L. cel-are = A.S. hel-an, to hide. Again, the A.S. ea, before r following, stands for original a, cears answering to an older caru. But the L. cūra, Old Latin coira, is spelt with a long ū, originally a diphthong, which cannot answer exactly to an original a. It remains that these words both contain the letter r in common, which is not denied; but this is a slight ground for the supposed equivalence of words of which the primary The fact of the equivalence of L. c to A.S.  $\lambda$ , is commonly known as being due senses were different. to Grimm's law. The popular notions about 'Grimm's law' are extremely vague. Many imagine that Grimm made the law not many years ago, since which time Latin and Anglo-Saxon have been bound to obev it. But the word law is then strangely misapprehended; it is only a law in the sense of an observed fact. Latin and Anglo-Saxon were thus differentiated in times preceding the earliest record of the latter, and the difference might have been observed in the eighth century if any one had had the wits to observe it. When the difference has once been perceived, and all other A.S. and Latin equivalent words are seen to follow it, we cannot consent to establish an exception to the rule in order to compare a single (supposed) pair of words which do not agree in the vowel-sound, and did not originally mean the same thing.

As to the Gk.  $\delta \lambda o_s$ , the aspirate (as usual) represents an original s, so that  $\delta \lambda o_s$  answers to Skt. sarva, all, Old Lat. sollus, whilst it means 'whole' in the sense of entire or total. But the A. S. hal (which is the old spelling of whole) has for its initial letter an h, answering to Gk.  $\kappa$ , and the original sense is 'in sound health,' or 'hale and hearty.' It may much more reasonably be compared with the Gk. makes; as to which see Curtius, i. 172. As to  $\chi doos$ , the initial letter is  $\chi$ , a guttural sound answering to Lat. h or g, and it is, in fact, allied to L. gratia. But in charily, the ch is French, due to a peculiar pronunciation of the Latin c, and the F. charile is of course due to the L. acc. carilatem, whence also Ital. carilate or carilà, Span. caridad, all from L. cārus, with long a. When we put  $\chi doos$  and cārus side by side, we find that the initial letters are different, that the vowels are different, and that, just as in the case of cears and cura, the sole resemblance is, that they both contain the letter r! It is not worth while to pursue the subject further. Those who are confirmed in their prejudices and have no guide but the ear (which they neglect to train), will remain of the same opinion still; but some beginners may perhaps take heed, and if they do, will see matters in a new light. To all who have acquired any philological knowledge, these things are wearisome.

4. Suppose we take two Latin words such as carilas and carus. The former has a stem car-i-lat-; the latter has a stem car-o-, which may very easily turn into car-i-. We are perfectly confident that the adjective came first into existence, and that the sb. was made out of it by adding a suffix; and this we can tell by a glance at the words, by the very form of them. It is a rule in all Aryan languages that words started from monosyllabic roots or bases, and were built up by supplying new suffixes at the end; and, the greater the number of suffixes, the later the formation. When apparent exceptions to this law present themselves, they require especial attention; but as long as the law is followed, it is all in the natural course of things. Simple as this canon seems, it is frequently not observed; the consequence being that a word A is said to be derived from B, whereas B is its own offspring. The result is a reasoning in a circle, as it is called; we go round and round, but there is no progress upward and backward, which is the direction in which we should travel. Thus Richardson derives chine from 'F. echine,' and this from 'F. echine, to chine, divide, or break the back of (Cotgrave), probably from the A. S. cinan, to chine, chink, or rive.' From the absurdity of deriving the 'F. echiner' from the verb echiner, it is obvious that echiner, to break the back of, is derived from echine, the back, as Cotgrave certainly meant us to understand; see eschine, eschiner in Cotgrave's Dictionary. Putting eschine and eschiner side by side, the shorter form is the more original.

5. This canon, requiring us to compare vowel-sounds, is a little more difficult, but it is extremely important. In many dictionaries it is utterly neglected, whereas the information to be obtained from vowels is often extremely certain; and few things are more beautifully regular than the occasionally complex, yet often decisive manner in which, especially in the Teutonic languages, one vowel-sound is educed from another. The very fact that the A.S.  $\ell$  is a modification of  $\delta$  tells us at once that fedan, to feed, is a derivative of fod, food; and that to derive food from feed is simply impossible. In the same way the vowel e in the verb to sel owes its very existence to the vowel a in the past tense of the verb to sil; and so on in countless instances.

The other canons require no particular comment.

SELECTED EXAMPLES, ILLUSTRATING THE FORMATION OF ENGLISH DERIVATIVES FROM STRONG VERBS.

It has already been said, at p. xiii, that derivatives from strong verbs can be deduced from the form of the past tense singular, of the past tense plural, or of the past participle, as well as from the infinitive mood.

Many of these derivatives further involve one of the vowel-changes given in the scheme on p. xiii, lines 5 and 6 from the bottom of the page; to which may be added the occasional change (not there noted) of o to y. By way of illustrating some of the complexities in the vowel-sounds which are thus introduced, the following selected examples are given below, which may be considered as exercises.

In order to understand these, it is necessary to remember (1) that the formula bindan (band, bundon, bunden) is an abbreviation for the following: infinitive bindan, past tense sing. band, past tense plural bundon, past part. bunden; and so on for other verbs. Also (2) that the formula (a to e) or the like, is an abbreviation for 'by vowel-change of a to e.' Also (3) that a form marked by an asterisk, such as bar*, is theoretical.

Bairn, a child = A. S. bear-n; formed (with breaking <sup>1</sup> of a to ea) from bar *, orig. form of pt. t. sing. of ber-an (bar, bár-on, bor-en), to bear. Hence also bar-m, the lap = A. S. bear-m. Also bier = A. S. bár; from bár-on, pt. t. pl. of ber-an. Also birth, answering to A. S. ge-byrd; from bor-en, pp. of the same (o to y). Also burd-en, A. S. byr-5-en, from the same bor-en (o to y).

Bode, A. S. bodian, to announce, bod, a message; from bod-en, pp. of bodd-an (brad, bud-on, bod-en), to bid, command.

Borough = A.S. burk, burg; from burg-on, pt. pl. of beorg-an (bearg, burg-on, borg-on), to protect. Also borrow, A.S. borg-ian, v. from bork, borg, a pledge; from A.S. borg-on, pp. of the same. Also bury, A.S. byrg-an, from the same pp. borg-on (o to y).

Band, Bond; from A.S. band, pt. t. sing. of bindan (band, bund-on, bund-en), to bind. Also bund-le, from A.S. bund-en, pp. of the same. Also bend = A.S. bend-an, to fasten a band or string on a bow, from bend, sb.  $(=band-i^*)$ , a band, from the pt. t. sing. band.

Bit = A. S. bit-a, a morsel; from bit-en, pp. of bit-an (bdt, bit-on, bit-en), to bite. Bitter = A. S. bit-or, biting; from the same. Beetle (1) = A. S. bit-el, a biter, from bit-an. Bait, a Scand. word = Icel. beit-a, causal of Icel. bit-a, to bite (pt. t. sing. beit).

Broth, A.S. brow, for brow-&; from brow-en, pp. of breów-an (breáw, bruw-on, brow-en), to brew. And see Bread.

Bow (3), sb., A.S. bog-a; from bog-en, pp. of bug-an (beak, bug-on, beg-en), to bow, bend. Also bight, A.S. byh-i (=byg-i*); from the same pp. bog-en (o to y).

Cripple, O. Northumb. cryp-sl, lit. ' creeper;' from crwp-on, pt. t. pl. of areopan (crssp, crwp-on, crop-on), to creep (u to y).

Drop, sb. A. S. drop-a; from drop-en, pp. of obs. dreóp-an (dreáp, drup-on, drop-en), to drip. Also drip = A. S. dryppan *, from drup-on, pt. t. pl. of the same (u to g). Also droop, a Scand. word, Icel. drúp-a, allied to Icel. drjúp-a = A. S. dreóp-an.

Dreary, A. S. dreúr-ig, for dreús-ig, orig. 'gory;' from dreós-an (dreás, drur-on, dror-en), to drip. Dross, A. S. dros, from dros-en *, orig. form of dror-en, pp. of the same. Also drizz-le, formed from drys-*, from the same dros-en * (o to y).

Drove, A. S. dróf; from dráf, pt. t. sing. of dríf-an (dráf, drif-on, drif-en), to drive. Drif-t, from drif en, pp. of the same.

Drench, A. S. drenc-an (=dranc-ian*); from dranc, pt. t. sing. of drinc-an (dranc, drunc-on, drunc-en), to drink. Drunk-ard; from drunc-en, pp. of the same. Drown, A.S. drunc-nian (= druncen-ian *), from the same pp. druncen.

Float, vb., A.S. flot-ian; from flot-en, pp. of flebt-an (flebt, flut-on*, flot-en*), to float. Fleet (1), fleet (2), fleet (3); all from the infin. flebt-an. Flit, Flot-sam; Scandinavian. Flutter, A.S. flotor-ian, from the pp. flot-en.

Frost, A. S. fros-t; from fros-en*, orig. form of fror-en, pp. of fredsan (freds, frur-on, fror-en), to freeze. The form frosen (not found otherwise) is curiously preserved in the mod. E. frozen (unless it be a new formation); fror-en is the orig. form of frore (Milton).

Grope, A. S. gráp-ian; from gráp, pt. t. sing. of gríp-an (gráp, grip-on, grip-en), to gripe.

Lot, A. S. klot, also klyt or klyt. Here klot is from klot-en, pp., and klyt from klut-on (u to y), pt. t. pl., of hleót-an (kleát, klut-on, klot-en), to obtain by lot; or else klýt is from kleát (eá to ý).

Leasing, falsehood, from A.S. leás, false; from leás, pt. t. sing. of leós-an (leás, lur-on, lor-en), to lose. The suffix -less also = A.S. leás, loose or false. Loss = A.S. los-ian; from los-en *, orig. form of the pp. lor-en. For-lorn = A.S. for-lor-en, pp. of for-leosan. And see Loose, Loss.

LOAN, A. S. lás (usually lés), put for lák- $n^{\circ}$ ; from lák, pt. t. of Mhan (lák, lik-on, lik-en), to grant. The verb to lend = M. E. len-en, A. S. lén-an; from the sb. lás (á to á).

Lay, trans. vb., A. S. leegan, written for leggan (= lag-ian *); from lag *, orig. form of lag, pt. t. of liegan (lag, lågon, leg-en), to lie. Lair, A. S. leg-er, from leg-en, pp. of liegan. And see Law, Leaguer, Ledge, Log.

Lode, A. S. lád, a course, put for láð *; from láð, pt. t. sing. of líðan (láð, lið-on, lið-on), to travel. And see Load. Also lead, A.S. lád-an; from the sb. lád above (á to á).

Main (1), sb., A. S. mæg-en; from mæg, pres.t. of the anomalous verb mugan, to be able. Allied words are mai-d, migh-i, mich-le, much, more, most.

Malt, A.S. mealt; from mealt, pt. t. sing. of moltan (mealt, multon *, molt-en), to melt. The pp. molton is still in use. Milt (1) is allied.

Nimble, A.S. nim-ol; from nim-an (nam, nám-on, num-on), to seize. Numb, from A.S. num-on, pp. of the same.

Quail (1), A. S. owelan (cwal, cwal-on, cwol-en), to die. Qual-m,

A. S. cweal-m, formed (by breaking of a to sa) from cwal *, orig. form of cwal, pt. t. sing. of the same. Quell, A. S. cwell-an (= cwal-ian *), from the same cwal * (a to s).

Boad, A.S. rád; from rád, pt. t. sing. of rídan (rúd, rid-on, rid-en), to ride. Raid is the Scand. form. Read-y, A.S. ræd-e; from the same rád (á to æ).

Ripe, A.S. rip-e, allied to rip, harvest; from A.S. ripan (róp, rip-on, rip-on), to reap.

Bear (1), A. S. rder-an, to raise; put for rdes-an*; formed (by change of á to d) from rds, pt. t. sing. of risan (rds, ris-on, ris-en), to rise. Raise is the Scand. form, Icel. reis-a, from reis, pt. t. sing. of Icel. ris-a, to rise.

Sake = A. S. sac-u, from sac-an (soc, soc-on, sac-en), to contend. Soke, Soken, A. S. soc, socn; from soc, the pt. t. sing. of sacan. Seek, A. S. soc-an; from the same soc (o to 6). Be-sech = be-seek.

Sheet, A. S. scite, scyle, also sceit; from sceit, pt. t. sing. of socot-an (sceit, scut-on, scot-en), to shoot. Skot, from the pp. scot-en. Skut, A. S. scyltan (= scot-ian *), from the same (o to y). And see Skoot, Scuttle (1) and (2), Skittisk, Skittles.

Score, A.S. scor; from scoren, pp. of scoran (scor, scor-on, scor-on), to shear. And see Shore (1), Short, Shirt, Scar (2), Shirt. Also share (1), A.S. scear-u (by breaking of a to ea) from scar *, orig. form of the pt. t. scar above.

Shove, A.S. scof-ian, vb.; from scof-en, pp. of scufan (sceaf, scuf-on, scof-en), to push. Sheaf, A.S. sceaf, from sceaf, pt. t. sing. of the same. And see Skuffle, Scuffle.

Sod; from A.S. sod-en, pp. of se65-an (sed5, sud-on, sod-en), to see the. Suds, from the pt. t. pl. sud-on.

Song, A. S. sang; from sang, pt. t. sing. of singan (sang, sung-on, sung-on, to sing. So also singe, A. S. song-an, from the same pt. t. sang (a to s).

Set, A. S. settan (= sat-ian *); from sat * (a to e), orig. form of sat, pt. t. sing. of sitt-an (sat, sati-on, set-en), to sit. Seat is a Scand. word.

Slope = A. S. sláp *; from sláp, pt. t. sing. of alipan (sláp, slip-on, slip-en), to slip. Slipper-y, A. S. slip-or, from slip-en, pp. Allied to Slop (1), Slop (2), Sloven.

Speech, A. S. spáce, earlier form sprác-e; from sprác-on, pt. t. pl. of sprecan (spræc, sprác-on, sprec-en), to speak. Spokesman is a late form, due to a new M. E. pp. spoken, substituted for the earlier M. E. pp. speken.

Stair, A. S. st&g-er; from stág, pt. t. sing. of stígan (stág, stig-on, stig-en), to climb (á to á). Also stile, A. S. stig-el, from stig-en, pp. of the same. And see Sty (1), Sty (2).

Thread, A.S. prád, put for práw-d*; from the infin. or pp. of práw-an (preów, preów-on, práw-en), to throw, twist.

Throng, A. S. prang; from prang, pt. t. sing. of pringen (prang, prung-on, prung-on), to press, crowd.

Wain, A. S. wén, contracted form of wag-n; from the pt. t. wag of wegan (wag, wág-on, weg-en), to carry; the infin. of which is preserved in the mod. E. weigh. Also wey, a heavy weight, A. S. wág-e; from the pt. t. pl. wág-on.

Wander, A.S. wand-rian, frequent. from wand, pt. t. sing. of windan (wand, wund-on, wund-en), to wind, turn about. Also wend, A.S. wend-an, from the same pt. t. sing. wand (a to e).

Wrangle, frequent. formed from wrang, pt. t. sing. of wringan (wrang, wrung-on, wrung-en), to twist, strain, wring. Also wrong, A.S. wrang, from the same. See also Wrench and Wrinkle.

Wroth, A.S. wráč, adj., from wráč, pt. t. sing. of wríčan (wráč, wrič-on, wrič-en), to writhe, wring. Also wreath, A.S. wráč, from the same (á to á). And see Wrest.

Further illustrations of VOWEL-CHANGE will be found in the following selected examples, which are especially chosen to illustrate the changes given on p. xiii, lines 5 and 6 from the bottom; with the addition of the change (there omitted) from o to y.

A to E. Cases in which the vowel e is due to an original a, the change being caused by the occurrence of i in the following syllable, are best observed by comparing the following words with their Gothic forms. Bed, A. S. bed = Goth. badi; better, A. S. betera = Goth. batiza; fen = A. S. fen or fenn = Goth. fani; ken, Icel. kenna = Goth. kannjan (= kannian*); kettle, A. S. cetel = Goth. katils, borrowed from Lat. catillus; let (2), A. S. lettan = Goth. latjan; net, A. S. net = Goth. nati; send, A. S. sendan = Goth. sandjan; twelve, A. S. twelf = Goth. twalif; wed, from A. S. wed, sb. = Goth. wadi. Even in mod. E. we have men as the pl. of man; Englisk from Angle; Frenck (A. S. Frenc-isc) from Frank; sell from sale; tell from tale; fell from fall; length, strength, from long, strong (A. S. lang, strang). And see belt, blend, ken, penny, quell, say, wretch.

O to Y. Observe kitchen, A.S. cycen = Lat. coquina; mill, A.S. mylen = Lat. molina; minster, A.S. mynster = Lat. monasterium; mint (1), A.S. mynet = Lat. moneta. Next observe build, A.S. byldan, from A.S. bold, a dwelling; first, A.S. fyrst, from fore; gild, A.S. gyldan, from gold; kernel, A.S. cyrnel, from corn; kiss, v., A.S. cyssan, from coss, a kiss; knit, A.S. cnyttan, from knot, A.S. cnot; lift from loft; visen from fox.

U to Y. Inch, A. S. ynce = Lat. uncia; pit, A. S. pyt = Lat. puteus. Again fill, A. S. fyllan = Goth. fulljan, from full (cf. fulfil); kin, A. S. cyn = Goth. huni (cf. king); list (4), A. S. lystan, from lust; thrill, A. S. pyrlian, from A. S. purk, through. And see stint, trim, winsome. EA to Y. Eldest, A. S. yldesta (for yldista *), is the superlative of old, A. S. eald. Cf. eld, A. S. yldo.

EO to Y. Work, v., A. S. wyrcan, is from work, sb., A. S. weorc. And see wright.

Long A to long 28. Any, A. S. denig, from an, one; bleak, A. S. blde, from blde, pt. t. of blican, to shine; feud (1), A. S. fekö, from fa, foe; heal, A. S. helan, from hal, whole; heat, A. S. heltu, from hat, hot; hest, A. S. helan, from A. S. hatan. And see leave (1), lend, tease.

Long O to long E. We have feet, geese, teeth, A. S. fét, gés, téö, as the pl. of foot, goose, tooth, A. S. fét, gés, tiö. Compare bleed from blood, breed from brood, deem from doom, feed from food. And see beech, glede (2), green, meet (2), speed, steed, weep. Brethren, A. S. bréber, is the pl. of brother, A. S. bróbor.

Long U to long Y. Hide (2), A. S. kýd, is cognate with Lat. cūtis. We find lice, mice, A.S. lýs, mýs, as the pl. of louse, mouse, A. S. lús, mús; and kine, A.S. cý, as the pl. of cow, A. S. cú. Filth, A. S. fýlö, is from foul, A. S. fúl (cf. de-file); kith, A. S. cýööe, is from A. S. cúö, known (cf. un-couth); pride, A. S. prýte, is from proud, A. S. prút. And see wish; also dive in the Supplement.

Long EA to long Y. Steeple, A.S. stýpel, is from steep, A.S. steáp.

Long EO to long Y. Stirk, A.S. styric, is from steor, a steer.

KEY TO THE GENERAL PLAN OF THE ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY.

THE general contents of each article are, as far as seemed advisable, arranged in a uniform order, and the following scheme will explain the nature of the information to be found in this work.

• § 1. The words selected. The Word-list contains all the primary words of most frequent occurrence in modern literature; and, when their derivatives are included, supplies a tolerably complete vocabulary of the language. I have been chiefly guided in this matter by the well-arranged work known as Chambers's Etymological Dictionary of the English Language, edited by James Donald, F.R.G.S. A few unusual words have been included on account of their occurrence in familiar passages of standard authors.

§ 2. The Definitions. These are given in the briefest possible form, chiefly for the purpose of identifying the word and shewing the part of speech.

§ 3. The Language. The language to which each word belongs is distinctly marked in every case, by means of letters within marks of parenthesis immediately following the definition. In the case of words derived from French, a note is (in general) also made as to whether the French word is of Latin, Celtic, German, or Scandinavian origin. The symbol '-' signifies 'derived from.' Thus the remark '(F.,-L.)' signifies 'a word introduced into English from French, the French word itself being of Latin origin.' The letters used are to be read as follows.

Arab.=Arabic. C.=Celtic, used as a general term for Irish, Gaelic, Welsh, Breton, Cornish, &c. E.=English. F.=French. G.=German. Gk.=Greek. L. or Lat.=Latin. Scand.=Scandinavian, used as a general term for Icelandic, Swedish, Danish, &c. W.=Welsh.

For other abbreviations, see § 7 below.

§ 4. The History. Next follows a brief account of the history of the word, shewing (approximately) the time of its introduction into the language; or, if a native word, the Middle-English form or forms of it, with a few quotations and references. This is an important feature of the work, and (I believe) to some extent a new one. In attempting thus, as it were, to date each word, I must premise that I often cite Shakespeare in preference to a slightly earlier writer whose writings are less familiar; that an attempt has nevertheless been made to indicate the date within (at least) a century; and lastly, that in some cases I may have failed to do this, owing to imperfect information or knowledge. In general, sufficient is said, in a very brief space, to establish the earlier uses of each word, so as to clear the way for a correct notion of its origin.

§ 5. The References. A large number of the references are from Richardson's Dictionary, denoted by the symbol '(R.)' Some from Todd's Johnson, sometimes cited merely as 'Todd.' Many from Stratmann's Old English Dictionary, or the still better (but unfinished) work by Mätzner; these are all 'M. E.,' i. e. Middle-English forms. Many others are due to my own reading. I have, in very many instances, given exact references, often at the expenditure of much time and trouble. Thus Richardson cites 'The Romaunt of the Rose' at large, but I have given, in almost every case, the exact number of the line. Similarly, he cites the Fairy Queen merely by the book and canto, omitting the slanza. Inexact quotations are comparatively valueless, as they cannot be verified, and may be false.

For a complete list of authorities, with dates, see the Preface.

§ 6. The Etymology. Except in a few cases where the etymology is verbally described, the account of it begins with the symbol-, which is always to be read as 'directly derived from,' or 'borrowed from,' wherever it occurs. A succession of these symbols occurs whenever the etymology is traced back through another gradation. The order is always upward, from old to still older forms.

§ 7. Cognate Forms. Cognate forms are frequently introduced by way of further illustration, though they form, strictly speaking, no part of the direct history of the etymology. But they frequently throw so much light upon the word that it has always been usual to cite them; though no error is more common than to mistake a word that is merely cognale with, or allied to, the English one for the very original of it! For example, many people will quote the German word acker as if it accounted for, or is the original of the English acre, whereas it is (like the Lat. ager, or the Icelandic akr), merely a parallel form. It is remarkable that many beginners are accustomed to cite German words in particular (probably as being the only continental-Teutonic idiom with which they are acquainted) in order to account for English words; the fact being that no Teutonic language has contributed so little to our own tongue, which is, in the main, a Low-German dialect as distinguished from that High-German one to which the specific name 'German' is commonly applied. In order to guard the learner from this error of confusing cognate words with such as are immediately concerned with the etymology, the symbol + is used to distinguish such words. This symbol is, in every case, to be read as 'not derived from, but cognate with.' The symbol has, in fact, its usual algebraical value, i. e. plus, or additional; and indicates additional information to be obtained from the comparison of cognate forms.

§ 8. Symbols and Etymological References. The symbols used are such as to furnish, in every case, an exact reference to some authority. Thus the symbol 'Ital.' does not mean merely Italian, but that the word has actually been verified by myself (and may be verified by any one else) as occurring in Meadows's Italian Dictionary. This is an important point, as it is common to cite foreign words at random, without the slightest hint as to where they may be found; a habit which leads to false spellings and even to gross blunders. And, in order that the student may the more easily verify these words, (as well as to curb myself from citing words of unusual occurrence) I have expressly preferred to use common and cheap dictionaries, or such as came most readily to hand, except where I refer by name to such excellent books as Rietz's Svenskt Dialekt-Lexicon. The following is a list of these symbols, with their exact significations.

A. S.—Anglo-Saxon, or native English in its earliest form. The references are to Grein, Bosworth, or Lve, as cited; or to some A. S. work, as cited. All these words are authorised, unless the contrary is said. The absurd forms in Somner's Dictionary, cited ad nauseam by our Dictionary-makers, have been rejected as valueless.

Bret.-Breton ; as in Legonidec's Dictionary, ed. 1821.

Corn.—Cornish; as in Williams's Dictionary, ed. 1865.

Dan.—Danish; as in Ferrall and Repp's Dictionary, ed. 1861.

Du.—Dutch; as in the Tauchnitz stereotyped edition.

E.-Modern English; see Webster's English Dictionary, ed. Goodrich and Porter.

M. E. - Middle English; i.e. English from about A.D. 1200 to about A.D. 1500. See § 5 above.

F.—French, as in the Dict. by Hamilton and Legros. The reference 'Cot.' is to Cotgrave's French Dictionary, ed. 1660. The reference 'Brachet' is to the English translation of Brachet's French Etym. Dict. in the Clarendon Press Series. Wherever O.F. (=Old French) occurs, the reference is to Burguy's Glossaire, unless the contrary be expressly stated, in which case it is (in general) to Cot. (Cotgrave) or to Roquefort.

Gael.—Gaelic; as in Macleod and Dewar's Dictionary, ed. 1839.

G.—German; as in Flügel's Dictionary, ed. 1861.

Gk,-Greek; as in Liddell and Scott's Lexicon, ed. 1849.

Goth.—Moeso-Gothic; as in Skeat's Moeso-Gothic Glossary, ed. 1868.

Heb.—Hebrew; as in Leopold's small Hebrew Dictionary, ed. 1872.

Icel.-Icelandic; as in Cleasby and Vigfusson's Icelandic Dictionary, ed. 1874.

Ir. or Irish.—Irish; as in O'Reilly's Dictionary, ed. 1864.

Ital.—Italian; as in Meadows's Dictionary, ed. 1857.

L. or Lat.-Latin; as in White and Riddle's Dictionary, 5th ed., 1876.

Low Lat.-Low Latin; as in the Lexicon Manuale, by Maigne d'Arnis, ed. 1866.

M. H. G.-Middle High German; as in Wackernagel's Wörterbuch, ed. 1861.

O. F.-Old French; as in Burguy's Glossaire, ed. 1870.

O. H. G.-Old High German; chiefly from Wackernagel; see M. H. G. above.

Pers.—Persian; as in Palmer's Persian Dictionary, ed. 1876.

Port.—Portuguese; as in Vieyra's Dictionary, ed. 1857.

Prov.—Provençal; as in Raynouard's Lexique Roman (so called).

Russ.—Russian; as in Heym's Dict. of Russian, German, and French, ed. 1844.

Skt.—Sanskrit; as in Benfey's Dictionary, ed. 1866.

Span.—Spanish; as in Meadows's Dictionary, ed. 1856.

Swed.—Swedish; as in the Tauchnitz stereotyped edition.

W.-Welsh; as in Spurrell's Dictionary, ed. 1861.

For a complete list of authorities, see the Preface. The above includes only such as have been used too frequently to admit of special reference to them by name.

Other abbreviations. Such abbreviations as 'adj.'=adjective, 'pl.'=plural, and the like, will be readily understood. I may particularly mention the following. Cf.=confer, i.e. compare. pt. t.=past tense. pp.=past participle. q.v.=quod vide, i.e. which see. s.v.=sub verbo, i.e. under the word in question. tr.=translation, or translated. b.=book. c. (or ch., or cap.)=chapter; sometimes=canto. i.=line. s.=section. st.=stanza. A.V.=Authorised Version of the Bible (1611).

§ 9. The Roots. In some cases, the words have been traced back to their original Aryan roots. This has only been attempted, for the most part, in cases where the subject scarcely admits of a doubt; it being unadvisable to hazard many guesses, in the present state of our knowledge. The root is denoted by the symbol  $\checkmark$ , to be read as 'root.' I have here most often referred to G. Curtius, Principles of Greek Etymology, translated by Wilkins and England, ed. 1875; and to A. Fick, Vergleichendes Wörterbuch der Indogermanischen Sprachen, third edition, Göttingen, 1874.

§ 10. Derivatives. The symbol 'Der.,' i.e. Derivatives, is used to introduce forms derived from the primary word, or from the same source. For an account of the various suffixes, see Morris's Historical Outlines of English Accidence, and Haldemann's Affixes to English Words; or, for the purpose of comparative philology, consult Schleicher's Compendium der Indogermanischen Sprachen.

§ 11. Cross-references. These frequently afford additional information, and are mostly introduced to save repetition of an explanation.

§ 12. It may be added that, when special allusion is made to Brachet's Etymological Dictionary, or to a similar work, it is meant, in general, that further delails are to be found in the work referred to; and that it will commonly appear that there is a special reason for the reference.

Articles to which the mark [*] is suffixed are considerably altered or modified in the Errata and Addenda, beginning at p. 775. Articles to which the mark [+] is suffixed are but slightly altered, or are further illustrated in the same Errata and Addenda.

A.

A, the indef. article; see An.

A-, prefix, has at least thirteen different values in English. a. Representative words are (1) adown; (2) afoot; (3) along; (4) arise; (5) achieve; (6) avert; (7) amend; (8) alas; (9) abyss; (10) ado; (11) aware; (12) space; (13) avast. B. The full form of these values may be represented by of-, on-, and-, us-, ad-, ab-, ex-, hè-, an-, at-, ge-, án, houd. y. This may be illustrated by means of the examples given; cf. (1) y. This may be illustrated by means of the champles g. Gothic ur-A. S. ofdine; (a) on foor; (3) A. S. andlang; (4) Messo-Gothic ur-reisan, for us-reisan; (5) verb from F. à chef, Lat. ad caput; (6) Lat. auertere, for abuertere; (7) F. amender, corrupted from Lat. emendare, for exmendare; (8) F. hclas, where he is interjectional; (9) Gk. abuoros, for auburgos; (10) for at do, i. e. to do; (11) for M.E. ywar, A.S. gewar; (12) apace. for a pace, i. e. one pace, where a is for A.S. án, one; (13) avast, Dutch houd vast, hold fast. These prefixes are discussed at greater length in my article 'On the Prefix A - in English, in the Journal of Philology, vol. v. pp. 32-43. See also each of the above-mentioned representative words in its proper place in this Dictionary. ¶ Prefix a (5) really has two values: (a) French, as in avalanche; (b) Latin, as in astringent; but the source is the same, viz. Lat. ad. Similarly, prefix a (6) really has two values; (a) French, as in abate; (b) Latin, as in avert, avocation; the source being Lat. ab. Gor In words discussed below, the prefix has its number assigned in accordance with the above scheme, where necessary.

AB-, prefix. (Lat.) Lat. ab, short form a; sometimes extended to abs. Cognate with Skt. apa, away, from; Gk.  $d\pi b$ ; Goth. af; A.S. of; see Of. Hence numerous compounds, as abdicate, abstract, &c. In French, it becomes a- or av-; see Abate, Advantage.

BACK, backwards. (E.) M. E. abakke; as in 'And worthy to be put abakke; 'Gower, C. A. i. 295. For on bakke, as in 'Sir Thopas drough on bak ful faste; 'Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 2017, in the Harleian MS., where other MSS, have abak. - A. S. onbac; Matt. iv. 10. Thus the prefix is a-(2); see A. See On and Back. [†]

ABAFT, on the aft, behind. (E.) a. From the prefix a-(a), and -baft, which is contracted from bi-aft, i.e. by aft. Thus abaft is for on (the) by aft, i.e. in that which lies towards the after part.  $\beta$ .-baft is M. E. baft, Allit. Poems, 3. 148; the fuller form is biaft or biaften, as in 'He let biaften the more del' = he left behind the greater part; Genesis and Exodus, 3377. M. E. biaften is from A.S. beaftan, compounded of be, by, and aftan, behind; Grein, i. 53. See By, and Aft. ABANDON, to forsake, give up. (F., -Low Lat., -O. H.G.) M. E. abandoune. 'Bot thai, that can thame abandoune Till ded'= but they, that gave themselves up to death; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvii. 642. = F. abandonner, to give up. = F. à bandon, at liberty, discussed in Brachet, Etym. F. Dict. = F. à, prep., and bandon, permission, liberty. - Lat. ad, to; and Low Lat. bandum, a feudal term (also spelt bannum) signifying an order, decree; see Ban. ¶ The F. à bandon is lit. 'by proclamation,' and thus has the double sense (1) 'by license,' or 'at liberty,' and (2) 'under control.' The latter is obsolete in modern English; but occurs frequently in M. E. See Glossary to the Bruce; and cf. 'habben abandum,' to have at one's will, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 189. Der. abandon-ed, lit. given up; abandon-ment.

ABASE, to bring low. (F., -Low Lat.) Shak. has 'abase our eyes so low,' 2 Hen. VI, i. 2. 15. Cf. 'So to abasse his roialte,' Gower, C. A. i. 111. - F. abaisser, abbaisser, 'to debase, abase, abate, humble;' Cotgrave. - Low Lat. abasser, to lower. - Lat. ad, to; and Low Lat. bassare, to lower. - Low Lat. bassus, low. See Base. Der. abassement, A. V. Ecclus. xx. 11. ¶ It is extremely probable that some confusion has taken place between this word and to abask; for in Middle English we find abaist, abayst, abaysed, abaysyd, &c. with the sense of abashed or dismayed. See numerous examples under abasen in Mätzner's Wörterbuch. He regards the M. E. abasen as equivalent to abash, not to abase.

ABASH, to confuse with shame. (F.) M. E. abaschen, abaischen, abaissen, abasen, &cc. 'I abasche, or am amased of any thynge;' Palsgrave. 'Thei weren abaischt with greet stoneyinge;' Wyclif, Mk. v.

ABDICATE.

42. 'He was abasched and agast ;' K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1. 224. -O. F. esbahir, to astonish (see note below); mod. F. ébahir. - Pretix es- (Lat. ex, out); and bahir, to express astonishment, an onomatopoetic word formed from the interjection bah ! of astonishment. Cf. Du. verbazen, to astonish, amaze; Walloon bawi, to regard with open mouth; Grandg. ¶ The final -sh is to be thus accounted for. French verbs in -ir are of two forms, those which (like venir) follow the Latin inflexions, and those which (like fleurir) add -iss to the root. See Brachet's Hist. French Grammar, Kitchin's translation, p. 131. This -iss is imitated from the Lat. -esc- seen in 'inchoative' verbs, such as floresco, and appears in many parts of the French verb, which is thus conjugated to a great degree as if its infinitive were fleurissir instead of fleurir.  $\beta$ . An excellent example is seen in obeir, to obey, which would similarly have, as it were, a secondary form (beissir; and, corresponding to these forms, we have in English not only to obey, but the obsolete form obeysche, as in 'the wynd and the sea obeyschen to hym; 'Wyclif, Mk. iv. 41.  $\gamma$ . Easier examples appear in E. abolish, banish, cherish, demolish, embellish, establish, finish, flourish, furbish, furnish, garnish, languish, nourish, polish, punish, all from French verbs in -ir. 8. We also have examples like admonish, diminish, replenish, evidently from French sources, in which the termination is due to analogy; these are discussed in their proper places. e. In the present case we have O. F. esbahir, whence (theo-retical) esbahissir, giving M. E. abaischen and abaissen. ¶ It is probable that the word to abash has been to some extent confused with to abase. See Abase.

ABATE, to beat down. (F., -L.) M.E. abaten. 'To abate the bost of that breme duke;' Will. of Paleme, 1141. 'Thou...abatest alle tyrannè;' K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 7499. -O.F. abatre, to beat down. - Low Lat. abbattere; see Brachet. - Lat. ab, from; and batere, popular form of batuere, to beat. Der. abate-ment, and F. abbatt-oir. ¶ Often contracted to bate, a.v.

ABBESS, fem. of abbot. (F., -L.) M. E. abbesse, Rob. of Glouc. p. 370. - O. F. abaesse, abbesse; see abbésses in Roquefort. - Lat. abbatissa, fem. in -issa from abbat-, stem of abbas, an abbot. See Abbot. ABBEY, a religious house. (F., -L.) M. E. abbeye, abbaye. 'Abbeye, abbatia' [misprinted abbacia], Prompt. Parv. Spelt abbai in the Metrical Life of St. Dunstan, 1. 30. - O. F. abeie, abaie; Bartsch's Chrestomathie. - Low Lat. abbasia. - Low Lat. abbat-, stem of abbas. See Abbot.

ABBOT, the father (or head) of an abbey. (L., -Syriac.) M. É. abbod, abbod. 'Abbot, abbas;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt abbod, Ancren Riwle, p. 314; abbed, Rob. of Glouc. p. 447. -A.S. abbod, abbad; AElfric's homily on the Old Test. begins with the words 'AElfric' abbod.' - Lat. abbatem, acc. of abbas, father. - Syriac abba, father; see Romans, viii. 15; Galat. iv. 6. ¶ The restoration of the i (corrupted to d in A. S.) was no doubt due to a knowledge of the Latin form; cf. O. F. abet, an abbot.

ABBREVIATE, to shorten. (L.) Fabyan has abreuyatyd in the sense of abridged ; Henry III, an. 26 (R.) Elyot has 'an abbreuiate, called of the Grekes and Latines epitoma;' The Governor, b. iii. c. 24 (R.)-Lat. abbreviare (pp. abbreviatus), to shorten, found in Vegetius (Brachet). - Lat. ad, to; and breuis, short. See Brief, and Abridge. Der. abbreviat-ion, -or. Doublet, abridge. ¶ Here adbreuiare would at once become abbreuiare ; cf. Ital. abbonare, to improve, abbassare, to lower, abbellare, to embellish, where the prefix is plainly ad. Gr The formation of verbs in -ate in English is curious; a good example is create, plainly equivalent to Lat. creare; but it does not follow that create was necessarily formed from the pp. creatus. Such verbs in -ate can be formed directly from Lat. verbs in -are, by mere analogy with others. All that was necessary was to initiate such a habit of formation. This habit plainly began with words like advocate, which was originally a past participle used as a noun, and, secondarily, was used as a verb by the very common English habit whereby substantives are so freely used as verbs.

ABDICATE, lit. to renounce. (L.) In Levins, A. D. 1570; and used by Bishop Hall, in his Contemplations, b. iv. c. 6. § 2 (R.)-Lat. abdicare (see note to Abbreviate). - Lat. ab, from ; and dicare, to consecrate, proclaim. Dicare is from the same root as dicere, to say; see Diction. Der. abdicat-ion.

ABDOMEN, the lower part of the belly. (L.) Modern : borrowed from Lat. abdomen, a word of obscure origin. ¶ Fick suggests that -domen may be connected with Skt. dáman, a rope, that which binds, and Gk. διάδημα, a fillet, from the ADA, to bind; cf. Skt. dá, Gk. Séeir, to bind. See Fick, ii. 121. Der. abdomin-al.

ABDUCE, to lead away. (L.) Not old, and not usual. Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 20. § 4 (R.) where some edd, have adduce. More common is the derivative abduction, used by Blackstone, Comment. b. iv. c. 15, and a common law-term. - Lat. abducere, to lead away. - Lat. ab, from, away; and ducere, to lead. See Duke. Der. abduct-ion, abduct-or, from the pp. abductus.

ABED, in bed. (E.) Shakespeare has abed. As You Like It, ii. 4. 6, and elsewhere. The prefix a- stands for on. 'Thu restest the on bædde' = thou restest thee abed; Layamon, ii. 372.

ABERRATION, a wandering. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. aberrationem. acc. of aberratio. - Lat. aberrare, to wander from. - Lat. ab, away; and errare, to wander. See Err.

Used by Shak. Com. of Errors, ABET, to incite. (F., - Scand.) ii. 2. 172. [Earlier, the M. E. abet is a sb., meaning 'instigation; Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 357.] - O. F. abeter, to deceive (Burguy); abet, instigation, deceit; cf. Low Lat. abettum, excitement, instigation. -O.F. a = Lat. ad, to; and beter, to bait : cf. ' ung ours, quant il est bien betez' = a bear, when he is well baited ; Roquefort. - Icel. beita, to bait, chase with dogs, set dogs on; lit. 'to make to bite;' causal verb from bita, to bite. See Bait; and see Bot. Der. abett-or, Shak. Lucrece, 886. ¶ The sense of O.F. abeter is not well explained in Burguy, nor is the sense of beter clearly made out by Roquefort; abeter no doubt had the sense of 'instigate,' as in English. Burguy wrongly refers the etym. to A. S. bætan, instead of the corresponding Icel. beita. ABEYANCE, expectation, suspension. (F., -L.) A law term; used by Littleton, and in Blackstone's Commentaries; see Cowel's Law Dict., and Todd's Johnson. - F. abeïance, in the phrase 'droit en abéiance,' a right in abeyance, or which is suspended (Roquefort). - F. prefix a- (= Lat. ad); and beiance, expectation, a form not found, but consistent with the F. beant, gaping, pres. pt. of obs. verb beer (mod. F. bayer), to gape, to expect anxiously. - Lat. ad; and badare, to gape, to open the mouth, used by Isidore of Seville; see Brachet, s. v. bayer. The word badare is probably onomatopoetic; see Abash.

ABHOR, to shrink from with terror. (L.) Shak. has it frequently. It occurs in Lord Surrey's translation of Virgil, b. ii; cf. quanquam animus meminisse horret;' Aen. ii. 12. - Lat. abhorrere, to shrink from. - Lat. ab, from; and horrere, to bristle (with fear). See Horrid. Der. abhorr-ent, abhorr-ence.

ABIDE (1), to wait for. (E.) M. E. abiden, Chancer, C. T. Group E, 757, 1106; and in common use. - A. S. ábídan, Grein, i. 12. - A. S. prefix á-, equivalent to G. er-, Goth. us-; and bidan, to bide. + Goth. usbeidan, to expect. See Bide. Der. abid-ing ; abode, formed by variation of the root-vowel, the A.S. Gram., sect. 230. to the mod. E. long o; March, A.S. Gram., sect. 230. a. We find in Shak. variation of the root-vowel, the A.S. i passing into d, which answers

ABIDE (2), to suffer for a thing. (E.) a. We find in Shak. 'lest thou abide it dear,' Mids. Nt. Dream, iii. 2.175; where the first quarto has aby. The latter is correct; the verb in the phrase 'to abide it' being a mere corruption. B. The M. E. form is abyen, as in 'That thou shalt with this fauncegay Abyen it ful soure; Chaucer, C. T., Group B, 2011 (l. 13751). This verb abyen is also spelt abuggen and abiggen, and is extremely common in Middle English; see examples in Mätzner and Stratmann. Its pt. tense is aboughte, and we still preserve it, in a reversed form, in the modern to buy off.  $\gamma$ . Hence lest thou abide it dear' signifies 'lest thou have to buy it off dearly,' i.e. lest thou have to pay dearly for it. -A. S. dbyegan, to pay for. 'Gif friman wið fries mannes wif geligeð, his wergelde ábicge'= If a free man lie with a freeman's wife, let him pay for it with his wergeld; Laws of King Æthelbirht, 31; pr. in Thorpe's Ancient Laws of England, i. 10. - A. S. a-, prefix, probably cognate with the Goth. us- (unless the prefix is a-, and is short for af-, put for of-, i.e. off); and A.S. bycgan, to buy. See Buy.

ABJECT, mean; lit. cast away. (L.) Shak. has it several times, and once the subst. abjects, Rich. III, i. 1 106. It was formerly used also as a verb. 'Almighty God abjected Saul, that he shulde no more reigne ouer Israel;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. i. - Lat. abiectus, cast away, pp. of abiicere, to cast away. - Lat. ab; and iacere, ¶ The Lat. iacere, according to Curtius, vol. ii. p. 59, 'can to cast. hardly be separated from Gk. láwrew, to throw.' Fick suggests that the G. jat, quick, and jagen, to hunt, are from the same root; see Yacht. Dor. abject-ly, abject ion, abject-ness, abjects (pl. sb.).

ABLATIVE, taking away. (L.) Grammatical. - Lat. ablations, the name of a case. - Lat. ab. from ; and latum, to bear, used as active supine of fero, but from a different root. Latum is from an older form tlatum, from O. Lat. tulere, to lift; cf. Lat. tollere. The corresponding Gk. form is  $\tau \lambda \eta \tau \delta s$ , endured, from  $\tau \lambda \delta \epsilon i r$ , to endure. Coradicate words are tolerate and the Middle Eng. thole, to endure. See ¶ 'We learn from a fragment of Cæsar's work, De Tolerate. Analogia, that he was the inventor of the term ablative in Latin. The word never occurs before ;' Max Müller, Lectures, i. 118 (6th edit.). ABLAZE, on fire. (E.) For on blaze, i.e. in a blaze. The A. S. and Mid. Eng. on commonly has the sense of in. See Abed, and Blaze. ABLE, having power; skilful. (F., -L.) M. E. able, Chaucer, Prol. 584. -O. F. kabile, able, of which Roquefort gives the forms abel, able, - Lat. habilis, easy to handle, active. - Lat. habere, to have, to hold.  $\beta$ . The spelling hable is also found, as, e.g. in Sir Thomas

More, Dialogue concerning Heresies, b. iii. c. 16; also habilitie, R. Ascham, The Schoolmaster, ed. 1570, leaf 19 (ed. Arber, p. 63). Der. abl-y, abil-i-ty (from Lat. acc. habilitatem, from habilitas).

ABLUTION, a washing. (L.) Used by Bp. Taylor (R.) From Lat. acc. ablutionem. - Lat. abluere, to wash away. - Lat. ab, away; And luere, to wash. + Gk. Aover, for Aover, to wash. - VLU, to wash; Fick, ii. 223. Cf. Lat. laware, to wash. [+] ABNEGATE, to deny. (L.) Used by Knox and Sir E. Sandys (R.) - Lat. abnegare, to deny. - Lat. ab, from, away; and negare, to deny. See Negation. Der. abnegation. ABOARD, on board. (E.) For on board. 'And stode on borde baroun and knight To help king Richard for to fyght;' Richard Coer de Lion, 2543; in Weber, Met. Romances. ABODE, a dwelling. (E.) The M. E. abood almost always has an. 28, who has the unnecessary spelling abholish, just as abominate was also once written abhominate. - F. abolir; (for the ending -sk see remarks on Abash.) - Lat. abolere, to annul. The etymology of abolere is not clear; Fick (ii. 47) compares it with Gk. απόλλυνα, to destroy, thus making Lat. olere = Gk. δλλυναι, to destroy. Mr. Wedgwood suggests that abolescere means to grow old, to perish, from the root al, to grow, for which see Fick, i. 499. Benfey refers both  $\delta\lambda\lambda\nu rai and \delta\rho rurai (as well as Lat. olere and oriri) to the same root$ as Skt. ri, to go, to rise, to hurt, &c. See the various roots of the form ar in Fick, i. 19. Der. abol-it-ion, abol-it-ion-ist.

ABODE, a dwelling. (E.) The M. E. abood almost always has the sense of 'delay' or 'abiding;' see Chaucer, C. T. 967. Older form abad, Barbour's Bruce, i. 142. See Abide (1). ABOLISH, to annul. (F., -L.) Used by Hall, Henry VIII.

ABOMINATE, to hate. (L.) The verb is in Levins, A. D. 1570. Wyclif has abomynable, Titus, i. 16; spelt abhominable, Gower, C. A. i. 263; iii. 204. - Lat. abominari, to dislike; lit. to turn away from a thing that is of ill omen; (for the ending -ate, see note to Abbreviate.) - Lat. ab, from ; and omen, a portent. See Omen. Der. abomin-able, abomin-at-ion ABORTION, an untimely birth. (L.) Abortion occurs in Hakewill's Apology, p. 317 (R.) Shak. has abortive, L. L. L. i. I. 104.-Lat. acc. abortionem, from abortio. - Lat. abortus, pp. of aboriri, to fail. - Lat. ab, from, away; and oriri, to arise, grow. + Gk. άρνυμ, I excite (root δρ). + Skt. rinómi, I raise myself, I excite (root ar). -AR, to arise, grow. See Curtius, i. 432; Fick, i. 19. From the same root, abort-ive.

ABOUND, to overflow, to be plentiful. (F., - L.) M. E. abound-m, Wyclif, 2 Cor. ix. 8. Also spelt habunden, as in Chaucer's translation of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 4; p. 41, l. 1073. - O. F. (and mod. F.) abonder. - Lat. abundare, to overflow. - Lat. ab; and unda, a wave. See Undulate. Der. abund ance, abund-ant, abund-ant-ly.

ABOUT, around, concerning. (E.) M. E. abuten, Ormulum, 4084; later, abouten, aboute. - A. S. ábútan ; as in ' ábútan bone munt' = around the mountain, Exod. xix. 12. a. Here the prefix a- is short for an-, the older form (as well as a later form) of on; and we accordingly find also the form onbutan, Genesis. ii. 11. [A commoner A.S. form was ymbútan, but here the prefix is different, viz. ymb, about, corresponding to Ger. um.] B. The word butan is itself a com-pound of be, by, and útan, outward. Thus the word is resolved into on-be-útan, on (that which is) by (the) outside. y. Again utan, outward, outside, is an adverb formed from the prep. it, out. See On, By, and Out. The words abaft and above have been similarly resolved into on-by-aft and on-by-ove(r). See Abaft, Above. ¶ Similar forms are found in Old Friesic, where abefta is deducible from an-bi-efta; abuppa (above), from an-bi-uppa; and abuta (about), from an-bi-uta.

ABOVE, over. (E.) M. E. abufen, Ormulum, 6438; later, aboven, above. - A.S. ábufan, A. S. Chron. an. 1090. - A.S. an, on; be, by; and afan, upward; the full form be-ufan actually occurs in the Laws of Acthelstan, in Wilkins, p. 63. See About. The word ufan is exactly equivalent to the cognate G. oben, and is an extended or adverbial form from the Goth. uf, which is connected with E. up. See On, By, and Up. Cf. Du. boven, above. ABRADE, to scrape off. (L.) In Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. - Lat.

ABRADE, to scrape off. (L.) In Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. – Lat. abradere, to scrape off, pp. abrasus. – Lat. ab, off; and radere, to scrape. See Base. Der. abrase, pp. in Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Act v. Sc. 3, descr. of Apheleia; abras-ion.

ABREAST, side by side. (E.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 6. 17. The prefix is for an, M. E. form of on; cf. abed, asleep, &c. ABRIDGE, to shorten. (F., -L.) M. E. abregen, abrege; Ham-

ABRIDGE, to shorten. (F., -L.) M. E. abregen, abrege; Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 4571; also abregge, Chaucer, C. T. 3001. -O. F. abrevier (Burguy); also spelt abrever, abbregier, abridgier, abrigier (Roquefort). - Lat. abbreviare, to shorten. Der. abridge-ment. Doublet, abbreviate, q. v.

Doublet, abbreviate, q. v. ABBOACH, TO SET, to broach. (Hybrid; E. and F.) M. E. setten abroche, Gower, C. A. ii. 183. For setten on broche; cf. 'to set on fire.' From E. on; and O. F. broche, a spit, spigot. See Broach.

ABROAD, spread out. (E.) M. E. abrood, Chaucer, C. T. Group F, 1. 441; abrod, Rob. of Glouc. p. 542. For on brood, or on brod. 'The bawme thurghe his brayn all on brod ran;' Destruction of Troy, 8780. M. E. brod, brood is the mod. E. broad. See Broad.

ABROGATE, to repeal. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. 55. Earlier, in Hall, Ed. IV, an. 9. - Lat. abrogare, to repeal a law; (for the ending -ate see note on Abbreviate.) - Lat. ab, off, away; and rogare, to ask, to propose a law. See Rogation. Der. abrogat-ion. ABRUPT, broken off, short, rough. (L.) Shak. I Hen. VI, ii. 3. 30. - Lat. abruptus, broken off, pp. of abrumpere, to break off. - Lat. ab; and rumpere, to break. See Rupture. Der. abrupt-ly, abruptness; abrupt, sb., as in Milton, P. L. ii. 409.

ABSCESS, a sore. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. - Lat. abscessus, a going away, a gathering of humours into one mass. - Lat. abscedere, to go away; pp. abscessus. - Lat. abs, away; and cedere, to go. See Code.

ABSCIND, to cut off. (L.) Bp. Taylor has the derivative abscission, Sermons, vol. ii. s. 13. The verb occurs in Johnson's Rambler, no. 90. – Lat. abscindere, to cut off. – Lat. ab, off; and scindere, to cut. Scindere (pt. t. scidi) is a nasalised form of SKID, to cleave, which appears also in Gk.  $\sigma_X(sev. Skt. chhid, to cut; Fick, i. 237. Der. abscission, from the pp. abscissus.$

absciss-ion, from the pp. abscissus. ABSCOND, to hide from, go into hiding. (L.) Blackstone, Comment. b. iv. c. 24. - Lat. abscondere, to hide. - Lat. abs, away; and condere, to lay up, to hide. - Lat. con - cum, together; and -dere, to put; from ADHA, to put, set, place. See Curtius, i, 316. [†] ABSEINT, being away. (L.) Wyclif, Philip. i. 27. [The sb.

ABSENT, being away. (L.) Wyclif, Philip. i. 27. [The sb. absence, which occurs in Chaucer, Kn. Ta. 381, is not directly from the Latin, but through F. absence, which is Lat. absentia.] = Lat. absentem, acc. case of absens, absent, pres. pt. of absens, to be away. = Lat. ab, away, and sens, being, which is a better division of the word than abs-ens; cf. pra-sens, present. This Lat. sens, being, is cognate with Skt. sant, being, and Gk. dw,  $\delta vros$ , being; and even with our E. sooth; see Booth. =  $\sqrt{AS}$ , to be; whence Lat. est, he is, Skt. asti, he is, Gk.  $\delta \sigma r$ , he is, G. ist, E. is; see IS. Thus Lat. sens is short for essens. See EBSONCO. The Lat. ens is short for sens. See Ensure.

ABSOLUTE, unrestrained, complete. (L.) Chaucer has absolut; transl. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 10, l. 2475. - Lat. absolutus, pp. of absoluere, to set free. See Absolve.

ABSOLVE, to set free. (L.) In Shak. Henry VIII, iii. 1. 50. The sb. absolucium is in the Ancren Riwle, p. 346. The M. E. form of the verb was assoile, taken from the O. French. – Lat. absoluere, to set free. – Lat. ab; and soluere, to loosen. See Bolve. Der. absolute, from the pp. absolutus; whence absolut-ion, absolut-ory.

from the pp. absolutes; whence absolut-ion, absolut-ory. ABSORB, to suck up, imbibe. (L.) Sir T. More has absorpt as a past participle, Works, p. 367c (R.) - Lat. absorbere, to suck up. -Lat. ab, off, away; and sorbere, to suck up. + Gk.  $\beta optien$ , to sup up. -  $\sqrt{SARBH}$ , to sup up; Fick, i. 798; Curtius, i. 368. Der. absorbable, absorb-ent; also absorpt-ion, absorpt-ive, from the pp. absorptus.

ABSTAIN, to refrain from. (F., -L.) M. E. absteynen; Wyclif, I Tim. iv. 3. The sb. abstinence occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 340. -O. F. abstener (Roquefort); cf. mod. F. abstenir. - Lat. abstinere, to abstain. - Lat. abs, from; and tenere, to hold. Cf. Skt. tan, to stretch. - ATAN, to stretch. See Tenable. Der. abstin-ent, abstin-ence, from Lat. abstin-ere; and abstens-ion, from the pp. abstens-us. ABSTEMIOUS, temperate. (L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 53. The suffix -ous is formed on a F. model. - Lat. abstemius, temperate, refraining from strong drink. - Lat. abs, from; and temum, strong drink, a word only preserved in its derivatives temetum, strong drink, and temulentus, drunken. Cf. Skt. tam, to be breathless, originally, to choke. -  $\sqrt{TAM}$ , to choke; Fick, i. 89. Der. abstemious-ness, abstemious-loss.

ABSTRACT, a summary; as a verb, to separate, draw away from. (L.) Shak. has the sb. abstract, All's Well, iv. 3. 39. The pp. abstracted is in Milton, P. L. ix. 463. The sb. appears to have been first in use. - Lat. abstractus, withdrawn, separated, pp. of abstrahere, to draw away. - Lat. abs, from; and trahere, to draw. See Trace, Tract. Der. abstract-ion.

ABSTRUSE, difficult, out of the way. (L.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 40. – Lat. abstrusus, concealed, difficult, pp. of abstrudere, to thrust aside, to conceal. – Lat. abs, away; and trudere, to thrust. The Lat. trudere is cognate with Goth. thriutan, to vex, harass, and A. S. predian, to vex, to threaten; and, consequently, with E. threaten. See Threaten. Der. abstruse-ly, abstruse-ness.

ABSURD, ridiculous. (L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. VI, v. 5. 137. – Lat. absurdus, contrary to reason, inharmonious. – Lat. ab, away; and surdus, indistinct, harsh-sounding; also, deaf. Perhaps absurdus was, originally, a mere intensive of surdus, in the sense of harsh-sounding. See Surd. Der. absurd-ity, absurd-ness.

ABUNDANCE, plenty. (F., -L.) M. E. haboundanse, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 15. - O. F. abondance. -L. abundantia. See Abound.

ABUSE, to use amiss. (F., -L.) M. E. abusen; the pp. abused, spelt abuysit, occurs in the Scottish romance of Lancelot of the Laik, l. 1206. 'I abuse or misse order a thing;' Palsgrave. Chaucer has the sb. abusion, Troilus, iv. 962. -O. F. abuser, to use amiss. - Lat, abusus, pp. of abuti, to abuse, mis-use. - Lat, ab, from (here amiss); and uti, to use. See UB8. Der. abus-ive, abus-ive-mess.

ABUT, to project towards, to converge to, be close upon. (F., -G.)Shak, speaks of England and France as being 'two mighty monarchies Whose high, upreared, and abuting fronts The perilous narrow ocean parts asunder;' Prol. to Hen. V, l. 21. - O. F. abouter (Roquefort), of which an older form would be aboter; mod. F. abouter, to arrive at, tend to; orig. to thrust towards. [The mod. F. abouter, to arrive at, evidently rests its meaning on the F. bout, an end, but this does not affect the etymology.] - O. F. a, prefix = Lat. ad; and boter, to push, thrust, but. See But. Der. abut-ment, which is that which bears the 'thrust' of an arch; cf. buttress, a support; but see Buttress. [†]

ABYSS, a bottomless gulf.  $(L_{..}-Gk_{.})$  Frequent in Milton, P. L. i. 21, &c.-Lat. abyssus, a bottomless gulf, borrowed from Gk.-Gk.  $\delta\beta\nu\sigma\sigma\sigma\sigma$ , bottomless.-Gk. d-, negative prefix; and  $\beta\nu\sigma\sigma\delta\sigma$ , depth, akin to  $\beta\nu\delta\phi\sigma$  and  $\beta\deltad\sigma\sigma$ , depth; from  $\beta\alpha\delta\delta\sigma$ , deep.  $\P$  Fick, i. 688, connects  $\beta\alpha\delta\delta\sigma$  with Lat. fodere, to dig; but Curtius rejects this and compares it with Skt. gambhan, depth, gabhiras, deep, and with Skt. gah, to dip oneselve, to bathe. Der. abys-m, abys-m al.  $\P$  The etymology of abysm is traced by Brachet, s. v. abime. It is from O. F. abisme; from a Low Lat. abyssimus, a superlative form, denoting the lowest depth.

ACACIA, a kind of tree. (Gk.) Described by Dioscorides as a useful astringent thom, yielding a white transparent gum; a description which applies to the gum-arabic trees of Egypt. – Lat. acacia, borrowed from Gk. – Gk. dxaxia, the thomy Egyptian acacia. – Gk dxis a point thom – dAK to pierre. See Acuta [1]

-Gk. dxis, a point, thom. - AAK, to pierce. See Acute. [+] ACADEMY, a school, a society. (F., -Gk.) Shak. has academes, pl., L. L. L. i. I. 13; iv. 3. 303; and Milton speaks of 'the olive grove of Academe, Plato's retirement; 'P. R. iv. 244. [This form is more directly from the Latin.] Burton says 'affliction is a school or academy; 'Anat. of Melancholy, p. 717 (Todd's Johnson). - F. académis. - Lat. academia, borrowed from Gk. -Gk. àxabiµusa, a gymnasium near Athens where Plato taught, so named from the hero Academus. Der. academ-ic. academ-ic. ian. [+]

ACCEDE, to come to terms, agree to. (L.) The verb is not in early use; but the sb. access is common in Shak. and Milton. In Mid, Eng. we have accesse in the sense of a sudden accession of fever or ague, a fever-fit; as in Lydgate's Complaint of the Black Knight, 1. 136. This is a French use of the word. - Lat. accedere, to come towards, assent to; also spelt adcedere; pp. accessus. - Lat. ad, to; and cedere, to come, go, yield. See Code. Der. access, access-ary, access-ible, access-ion, access-or-y; all from the pp. accessus.

ACCELLERATE, to hasten. (L.) 'To accelerate or spede his iorney;' Hall, Hen. IV, an. 31 (R.) - Lat. accelerate, to hasten; (for the ending -ate, see note on Abbreviate.) - Lat. ac- (=ad); and celerare, to hasten. - Lat. celer, quick. + Gk. xixya, a race-horse. - VKAL, to drive, impel; cf. Skt. kal, to drive. Fick, i. 527; Curtius, i. 179. Der. accelerat-ion. accelerat-ive.

ACCENT, a tone. (L.) Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. 124. - Lat. accentus, an accent. - Lat. ac- (= ad); and cantus, a singing. - Lat. canere, to sing, pp. cantus. - (KAN, to sound, Fick, i. 517; whence also E. hen. See Hen. Der. accent-u-al, accent-u-ate, accent-u-at-ion. [†]

ACCEPT, to receive. (L.) M. E. accepten, Wyclif, Rom. iv. 6.-Lat. acceptare, to receive; a frequentative form. - Lat. accipere. to receive. - Lat. ac- (= ad); and capere, to take. It is not easy to say whether capere is cognate with E. heave (Curtius) or with E. have (Fick). Der. accept-able, accept-able-ness, accept-at-ion, accept-ance, accept-er. [+] ACCESS, ACCESSARY; see Accode.

ACCIDENT, a chance event. (L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 8483. -Lat. accident-, stem of accidents, happening, pres. pt. - Lat. accidere, to happen. - Lat. ac (= ad); and cadere, to fall. See Chance. Der. accident-al; also accidence (French; from Lat. accident-ia). [†]

ACCLAIM, to shout at. (L.) In Milton four times, but only as a sb.; P. L. ii. 520; iii. 397; x. 455; P. R. ii. 235. The word acclaiming is used by Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. iv. c. 25. § 4 (R.) [The word is formed on a French model (cf. claim from O. F. claimer), but from the Latin.]-Lat. acclamare, to cry out at.-Lat. ac- (=ad); and clamare, to cry out, exclaim. See Claim. Der.

acclamation, from pp. of Lat. acclamate. ACCLIVITY, an upward slope. (L.) Used by Ray, On the Creation (R.)-Lat. acc. accliuitatem, from nom. accliuitas, a steepness; whence acclivity is formed in imitation of a F. model: the suffix -ty answers to F. -te, from Lat. -tatem. - Lat. ac- (= ad); and -clivitas, a slope, a word which does not occur except in compounds. - Lat. clinns, a hill, sloping ground; properly, sloping. -  $\sqrt{KLI}$ , to lean, slope; whence also Lat. inclinare, to incline, Gk.  $\kappa\lambda i ver$ , to lean, and E. lean. See Lean, and Incline. See also Declivity.

ACCOMMODATE, to adapt, suit. (L.) Shak. Lear, iv. 6.81. -Lat. accommodare, to fit, adapt; for the ending -ate, see note on Abbreviate. - Lat. ac- (= ad); and commodare, to ht. - Lat. commodus, fit, commodious. See Commodious and Mode. Der. accommodat-ion, accommod-at-ing.

ACCOMPANY, to attend. (F., -L.) Sir. T. Wyat has it in his 'Complaint of the Absence of his Love' (R.) - O. F. acompaignier, to associate with. - F. a = Lat. ad; and O. F. compaignier, compaigner, cumpagner, to associate with. - O. F. compaignie, cumpanie, association, company. See Company. Der. accompani-ment. ACCOMPLICE, an associate, esp. in crime. (F., -L.) Shak. 1 Hen. VI, v. 2. 9. An extension (by prefixing either F. a or Lat. ac-ad) of the older form complice. -F. complice, 'a complice, confederate, companion in a lewd action;' Cot. - Lat. acc. complicem, from nom. complex, an accomplice, lit. interwoven. - Lat. com- (for cum), together; and plicare, to fold. See Complex.

ACCOMPLISH, to complete. (F., -L.) M. E. accomplisen, in Chaucer's Tale of Melibeus (Six-text, Group B, 2322). -O. F. acomplir, to complete; (for the ending -ish, see note to Abash.) - Lat. ad, to; and complere, to fulfil, complete. See Complete. Der. accomplishable, accomplish-ed, accomplish-ment.

ACCORD, to grant; to agree. (F., -L.) M. E. accorden, to agree; Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 2137; and still earlier, viz. in Rob. of Glouc. pp. 237, 309 (R.) and in K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 148. -O.F. acorder, to agree. - Low Lat. accordare, to agree, used in much the same way as Lat. concordare, and similarly formed. - Lat. ac- = ad, to, i.e. in agreement with; and cord-, stem of cor, the heart. Cf. E. concord, discord. The Lat. cor is cognate with E. Heart, q.v. Der. accord-ance, accord-ing, according-ly, accord-ant, accord-ant-ly; also accord-ion, from its pleasing sound.

ACCOST, to address. (F., -L.) Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 52, which see. - F. accoster, 'to accoast, or join side to side;' Cot. - Lat. accostare, which occurs in the Acta Sanctorum, iii. Apr. 523 (Brachet). -Lat. ac- = ad; and costa, a rib; so that accostare means to join side to side, in accordance with Cotgrave's explanation. See Coast. ACCOUNT, to reckon, value. (F., - L.) M. E. accompten, ac-counten. In Gower, C. A. iii. 299, we find accompteth written, but it in Rob. of Brunne, it. of Langtoft, p. 135-O. F. accounts, occurs and accounter (Roquefort); the double forms being still preserved in F. compter and conter, which are doublets. - F. a, prefix = Lat. ad; and conter, or compter, to count. - Lat. computare, to compute, count. See Count. Der. account, sb., account-able, account-able-ness, account-ant. ACCOUTRE, to equip. (F., -L.?) Shak. has accounted, Jul. Czes. i. 2. 105. – F. accounter, accounter. Cotgrave gives both forms, and explains accounter by 'to cloath, dress, apparell, attire, array, deck, trim.' Marked by Brachet 'origin unknown.' [†] ¶ The most likely guess is that which connects it with the O. F. 'cousteur, couster, courre, the sexton or sacristan of a church (Roquefort). One of the sacristan's duties was to have charge of the sacred vestments, whence the notion of dressing may have arisen. If this be right, we may further suppose the Ö. F. cousteur or constre to be a corruption of a church. Custos seems to have been corrupted into custor, as shewn by the existence of the fem. form custrix, which see in Ducange. From custorem was formed the O.F. cousteur. Custor seems to have been further corrupted into custer, which would give the form coustre, like maistre from magister; this also accounts for G. küster, a sacristan. In this view. coustrer would mean to act as sacristan, to keep the sacred vestments, and hence, to invest. Der. accoutre-ment. ACCREDIT, to give credit to.  $(F_{..}-L)$  Not in early use. In Cowper, Letter 43  $(R_{..}) = F$ . accréditer, to accredit; formed from the sb. crédit, credit. See Credit, Creed. ACCRETION, an increase.  $(L_{.})$  In Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 13 (R.) - Lat. acc. accretionem, from nom. accretio. -Lat. accrescere, pp. accretus, to grow, increase. - Lat. ac- for ad, to; and crescere, to grow. See Crossoont. Der. accret-ive; and see accrne.

ACCRUE, to grow to, to come to in the way of increase. (F., -L.) Spenser, F. O. iv. 6. 18, has both decrewed, decreased, and accrewed, increased or gathered. = O. F. 'acereu, growne, increased, enlarged, augmented, amplified;' Cot. The E. word must have been borrowed from this, and turned into a verb. - O. F. accroistre (Cotgrave), now accrottre, to increase, enlarge ; of which accreu (accru) is the pp -Lat. accrescere, to enlarge .- Lat. ac- = ad, to; and crescere, to grow. See above. [†] ACCUMULATE, to amass. (L.) Hall has accumulated; Hen. VII, an. 16 (R.) - Lat. accumulare, to amass; for the ending -ate see note to Abbreviate. - Lat. ac- = ad; and cumulare, to heap up. -Lat. cumulus, a heap. See Cumulate. Der. accumulation, accumulat-ive.

ACCURATE, exact. (L.) Used by Bishop Taylor, Artificial Handsomeness, p. 19; Todd. - Lat. accuratus, studied; pp. of accurare, to take pains with. - Lat. ac- = ad; and curare, to take care. -Lat. cura, care. See Cure. Der. accurate-ness, accurate-ly; also accur-acy, answering (nearly) to Lat. accuratio.

ACCURSED, cursed, wicked. (E.) The spelling with a double c is wrong, and due to the frequency of the use of ac-=Lat. ad as a prefix. M. E. acorsien, acursien. 'Ye shule ... acursi alle fi;tinge;' Owl and Nightingale, 1701; acorsy, Rob. of Glouc. p. 296. - A. S. a., intens. prefix = G. er- = Goth. us-; and cursian, to curse. See Curse.

ACCUSE, to lay to one's charge. (F.,-L.) Chaucer has accused, accusyng, and accusours, all in the same passage; see his tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 334. - F. accuser. - Lat. accusare, to criminate, lay to one's charge. - Lat. ac- = ad; and causa, a suit at law, a cause. See Cause. Der. accus-able, accus-at-ion, accus-at-ory, accus-er, accusat-ive (the name of the case expressing the subject governed by a transitive verb).

ACCUSTOM, to render familiar. (F.,-L.) 'He was ever accustomed;' Hall, Hen. V, an. 5. [The sb. accustomaunte, custom. oc-curs in a poem of the 15th century, called 'Chaucer's Dream,' l. 256.] -0. F. estre acostume, to be accustomed to a thing. -F. prefix a =Lat. ad; and O. F. costume, constume, constome, a custom. - Lat. consuc-tudinem, acc. of consuctudo, custom. See Custom.

ACE, the 'one' of cards or dice.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.,-}Gk_{.})$  M. E. as, Chaucer, C. T. 4544, 14579. – O. F. as, an ace. – Lat. as, a unit. – Gk. ás, said to be the Tarentine pronunciation of Gk. «Is, one; but not cognate with E. one.

ACEPHALOUS, without a head. (Gk.) Modern. - Gk. ἀπέφ-αλοι, the same. - Gk. ἀ-, privative; and πεφαλή, the head, cognate with E. head. See Head.

ACERBITY, bitterness. (F., -L.) Used by Bacon, On Amend-ing the Laws; Works, vol. ii. p. 542 (R.) - F. acerbitd, 'acerbitie, sharpnesse, sourcenesse;' Cot. - Lat. acerbitatem, acc. of acerbitas, bitterness. - Lat. acerbus, bitter. - Lat. acer, sharp, acrid. See Acrid.

ACHE, a severe pain. (E.) a. The spelling ache is a falsified one, due to the attempt to connect it more closely with the Gk.  $d_{Xos}$ , which is only remotely related to it. In old authors it is spelt ake. 'Ake, or ache, or akynge, dolor;' Prompt. Parv.  $\beta$ . That the word is truly English is best seen from the fact that the M. E. aken, to ache, was a strong verb, forming its past tense as ook, ok, pl. ooke, oke, oken. 'She saide her hede oke' [better spelt ook, pron. oak]; The Knight of La Tour, ed. Wright, p. 8. 'Thauh alle my fyngres oken ;' P. Plowman, C. xx. 159. - A. S. ace, an ake, a pain; 'eal part sar and se ace onward alzded was' = all the sore and the ake were taken away; Beda, 5. 3. 4 (Bosworth). ¶ The connection with the Gk.  $\delta \chi os$ , obvious as it looks, is not after all very certain; for the Gk.  $\chi$  is an E. g, and the right corresponding word to axos is the Goth. agis, A. S. ege, mod. E. awe, as pointed out both in Fick and Curtius. For the root of axos and awe, see Anguish, Awe. [+]

ACHIEVE, to accomplish. (F., -L.) M. E. acheven = acheven. Chaucer has 'acheved and performed;' tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, Lat. custos, which was the Med. Latin name for the sacristan of 1. 404.-O. F. achever, achiever, to accomplish. Formed from the phrase venir a chef or venir a chief, to come to the end or arrive at one's object. - Lat. ad caput unire, to come to an end (Brachet). Lat. caput is cognate with E. head. See Chief, and Head. Der. achievement.

ACHROMATIC, colourless. (Gk.) Modern and scientific. Formed with suffix ie from Gk. dxps/paros, colourless. - Gk. d., privative; and xpôppa, colour. Connected with xpós, the skin, just as Skt. varnas, colour, is connected with the root var, to cover; cf. xpácuv, Xpaves, to graze; Curtius, i. 142, 251. Fick, i. 819, places Gk. Xpod, the hide, under the form strawa, from ✓ SKRU; cf. E. stroud.

ACID, sour, sharp. (L.) Bacon speaks of 'a cold and acide juyce;' Nat. Hist. § 644 (R.) – Lat. acidus, sour. –  $\sqrt{AK}$ , to pierce; cf. Skt. aq, to pervade; E. to egg on. See Egg, verb. Der. acid-ity, acid-ify, acid-ul-ate, acid-ul-at-ed, acid-ul-ous. [†]

ACKNOWLEDGE, to confess, own the knowledge of. (E.) Common in Shakespeare. M. E. knowlecken, to acknowledge. a. The prefixed a is due to the curious fact that there was a M. E. verb a monom with the same sense; ex. 'To mee wold shee neuer almow That any man for any meede Neighed her body,' Merline, 901, in Percy Folio MS., i. 450. This abnown is the A.S. onenaiwan, to perceive. Hence the prefixed a- stands for A. S. on. B. The verb knowlechen is common, as e.g. in Wyclif; 'he knoweleckide and denyede not, and he knowlechide for I am not Christ; St. John, i. 20. It appears early in the thirteenth century, in Hali Meidenhad, p. 9; Legend of St. Katharine, l. 1352. Formed directly from the sb. knowlecke, now spelt knowledge. See Knowledge. Der. acknowledg-ment, a hybrid form, with F. suffix.

ACME, the highest point. (Gk.) Altogether a Greek word, and written in Gk. characters by Ben Jonson, Discoveries, sect. headed Scriptorum Catalogus. - Gk. dsup, edge. - AK, to pierce. ACOLYTE, a servitor. (F., -Gk.) Cotgrave has 'Acolyte, Accolice, he that ministers to the priest while he sacrifices or saies mass. -Low Lat. acolythus, borrowed from Gk. - Gk. dx όλουθοs, a follower. -Gk. d-, with (akin to Skt. sa-, sam, with); and relations, a road, way; so that deόλουθοs meant originally 'a travelling companion.' The Gk.

where is cognate with Lat. callis, a path.  $\P$  Fick, i. 43, suggests the  $\checkmark$  KAR, to run; which Curtius, i. 179, hardly accepts. [+] ACONITE, monk's hood; poison. (F., -L, -Gk.) Occurs in Ben Jonson, Sejanus, Act. iii. sc. 3 (R.) [It may have been borrowed directly from the Gk. or Latin, or mediately through the French. ] - F. Aconit, Aconitum, a most venemous herb, of two principall kinds, viz. Libbards-bane and Wolf-bane;' Cot. - Lat. aconitum. - Gk. dxóriror, a plant like monk's-hood; Pliny, Nat. Hist. bk. xxvii. c. 3. ¶ Pliny says it is so called because it grew ir dxóras, on 'steep sharp rocks' (Liddell and Scott).-Gk. drorn, a whetstone, hone.- / AK, to pierce; Curtius, i. 161.

ACORN, the fruit of the oak. (E.) Chaucer speaks of 'acornes of okes; 'tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 5, p. 50. - A. S. acern, acirn; pl. acirnu, which occurs in the A. S. version of Gen. xliii. 11, where the exact meaning is not clear, though it is applied to some kind of fruit. + Icel. abarn, an acom. + Dan. agern, an acom. + Du. aker, an acom. +G. scher, the fruit of the oak or beech; Fick, iii. 8.+Goth. akran, fruit ; cf. the comp. akrana-lans, fruitless. - A.S. acer, a field, an acre. See Acre. The suffix -ern has been changed to -orn, from a notion that accern meant an oak-corn, an etymology which is, indeed, still current. It is remarkable that acorn is related, etymologically, neither to oak nor to corn.  $\beta$ . If it be remembered that arre should rather be spelt acer or aker (the latter is common in Mid. Eng.), and that acorn should rather be acern or akern, it will be seen that akern is derived from aker much in the same way as silvern from silver, or wooden from wood. y. The cognate languages help here. 1. The Icel. akarn is derived from akr, a field, not from eik, an oak. 2. The Du. aker is related to akker, a field, not to eik, an oak ; indeed this has been so plainly felt that the word now used for 'acorn' in Dutch is generally eikel. 3. So in German, we have eichel, an acorn, from eiche, an oak, but the word ecker is related to acker, a field, and stands for ücker. 4. The Danish is clearest of all, forming agers, an acorn, from ager, a field. 5. That the Goth. akran, fruit, is immediately derived from akrs, a field, has never been overlooked. 8. Thus the original sense of the A. S. neut. pl. æcirnu or æcernu was simply ' fruits of the field,' understanding 'field' in the sense of wild open country; cf. Gk. dypós, e. It will now be seen that a field, the country, and dypios, wild. Chaucer's expression 'acomes of okes' is correct, not tautological.

ACOUSTIC, relating to sound. (Gk.) Modern and scientific. -Gk. drouoruso, relating to hearing. -Gk. droueu, to hear. Con-nected by Curtius and Liddell with the verb rosir, to perceive. - $\sqrt{KOF}$ , to perceive; Curtius, i. 186; Fick, i. 815; a form which has probably lost an initial  $s - \sqrt{SKU}$ , to perceive; whence also E. shew. See Shew.

ACQUAINT, to render known. (F., -L.) M.E. acqueynten carlier acointen, abointen. Acqueyntyn, or to make knowleche, notifico; Frompt. Parv. 'Wel akointed mid on' = well acquainted with you; tion; becoming ac before c, af before f, ag before g, al befor acquiesc-ence, acquiesc-ent. ACQUIRE, to get, obtain. (L.) Used by Hall, Hen. VIII, an. 37 (R.)-Lat. acquirere, to obtain. -Lat. ac- = ad; and quærere, to seek. See Query. Der. acquir-able, acquire-ment; also acquisit-ion, ACQUIT, to set at rest, set free, &c. (F.,-L.) M. E. acwiten, aqwyten, to set free, perform a promise. 'Uorto acwiten his fere'= to release his companion. Ancren Riwle. p. 124; 'whan it aquyted be'=when it shall be repaid; Rob. of Glouc. p. 265. - O. F. aquiter, to settle a claim. - Low Lat. acquietare, to settle a claim; see Brachet. -Lat. ac- = ad; and quietare, a verb formed from Lat. quietus, discharged, free. See Quit. Dor. acquitt-al, acquitt-ane. ACRE, a field. (E.) M. E. aker. The pl. akres occurs in Rob. of Brunne's tr. of P. Langtoft, ed. Hearne, p. 115. - A. S. acer, a field. + O. Fries. ekker. + O. Sax. accar. + Du. akker. + Icel. akr. + Swed. Aker. + Dan. ager. + Goth. akrs. + O. H. G. achar, G. acker. + Lat. ager. + Gk. dypos. + Skt. ajra; in all of which languages it means 'a field.' Whether it meant originally 'a pasture,' or (more probably) 'a chase' or hunting-ground (cf. Gk. aypa, the chase), the root is, in any case, the same, viz. AG, to drive; Lat. ag.ere, Skt.

See Know. Der. acquaint-ance, acquaint-ance-ship.

ACQUIESCE, to rest satisfied. (L.) Used by Ben Jonson, New Inn, Act iv. sc. 3 (R.) - Lat. acquiescere, to rest, repose in. - Lat. ac-= ad; and guiescere, to rest. - Lat. guies, rest. See Quiet. Der.

aj, to drive; Curtius, i. 209; Fick, i. 8. See Act. Der. acre-age. ACRID, tart, sour. (L.) Not in early use. Bacon has acrimony. Nat. Hist. sect. 639 (R.) There is no good authority for the form acrid, which has been made (apparently in imitation of acid) by adding the suffix -id to the stem acr, which is the stem of Lat. acer, sharp, and appears clearly in the O. Lat. acrus, sharp; see Curtius, i. 161. This O. Lat. form is cognate with Gk. anpos, pointed, Skt. apra, pointed. - AK, to pierce. See Curtius, as above; Fick, i. 5. Der. acrid-ness ; acri-mony, acri-moni-ous, from Lat. acrimonia, sharpness. Co-radicate words are acid, acerbity, and many others. See Egg, verb. ACROBAT, a tumbler. (Gk.) Modern. Probably borrowed, in the first instance, from F. acrobate. - Gk. dxpoßárns, lit. one who walks on tip-toe. - Gk. dapo-v, a point, neut. of dapos, pointed; and Barós, verbal adj. of Baireir, to walk, which is cognate with E. come. See Acrid. and Come. Der. acrobat-ic.

ACROPOLIS, a citadel. (Gk.) Borrowed from Gk. dπρόπολιε, a citadel, lit. the upper city. - Gk. άπρο-ε, pointed, highest. upper; and πόλιε, a city. For άπροε, see Acrid. For πόλιε, see Police.

ACROSS, cross-wise. (Hybrid.) Surrey, in his Complaint of Absence, has 'armes acrosse.' (R.) Undoubtedly formed from the very common prefix a (short for an, the later form of A.S. on), and cross; so that across is for on-cross, like abed for on bed. I do not find the full form on-cross, and the word was probably formed by analogy. Thus the prefix is English. But the word is a hybrid. See Cross.

ACROSTIC, a short poem in which the letters beginning the lines spell a word. (Gk.) From Gk. deposition, an acrostic. - Gk. anpo-s, pointed, also first; and origior, dimin. of origos, a row, order, line. - AK, to pierce; and STIGH, to climb, march, whence

ΔCT, a deed. (L.) M. E. act, pl. actes. The pl. actes occurs in Chaucer's Freres Tale. C. T. 7068 (misprinted 2068 in Richardson). - Lat. actum, an act, thing done, neut. of pp. actus, done. - Lat. agere, to do, lit. to drive. + Gk. ayer, to drive. + Icel. aka, to drive. + Sansk. aj, to drive. - AG, to drive; Fick, i. 7. Der. act, verb, whence act-ing; also (from the pp. actus) act-ion, act-ion-able, act-ive, act-iv-ity, act-or, act-r-ess; also act-ual (Lat. actualis), act-wal-ity; also act-wary (Lat. actuarius); also act-w-ale (from Low Lat. actuare, to perform, put in action). From the same root are exact, react, and a large number of other words, such as acre, &c. See Agent.

ACUMEEN, keenness of perception. (L.) It occurs in Selden's Table-Talk, art. Liturgy. Borrowed from Lat. acumen, sharpness. - AK, to pierce; whence the verb ac-u-ere, to sharpen, ac-u-men, sharpness, ac-u-s, a needle, with added u. Cf. Zend aku, a point; Fick, i. 4. Der. acumin-ated, i. e. pointed, from the stem acumin-.

ACUTE, sharp. (L.) Shak. L. L. L. iii. 67. - Lat. acutus, sharp; properly pp. of verb acuere, to sharpen. From the stem ac-u-, which from AK, to pierce. See Acumon. Dor. acute-ly, acute-ness.

AD-, prefix ; corresponding to Lat. ad, to, cognate with E. at. S ¶ The Lat. ad often changes its last letter by assim At.

an- before n, ap- before p. Ex. ac-cord, af-fect, ag-gregate, al-lude, an-nex, ap-pear; also ar-, as-, as-, as in ar-rest, as-sist, at-test. ADAGE, a saying, proverb. (F., -L.) Used by Hall; Hen. IV, an. 9 (R.) - F. adage, 'an adage, proverb, old-said saw, witty saying; Cot. - Lat. adagium, a proverb. - Lat. ad, to; and -agium, a saying. - AGH, to say, represented in Latin by the verb aio, I say (with long a): in Gk. by the verb  $\eta \mu i$ , I say: and in Sanskrit by the root ak, to say, whence aka, he said. Fick, i. 481.

ADAMANT, a diamond. (F., -L., -Gk.) Adamaunt in Wyclif, Ezek. iii. 9; pl. adamauntz, Chaucer, C. T. 1992. [It first occurs in the phrase 'adamantine's stan;' Hali Medenhad, p. 37. The sense in Mid. Eng. is both 'diamond' and 'magnet.'] = O. F. adamant. The -Lat. adamanta, acc. of adamas, a very hard stone or metal. -Gk. doápas, gen. doáparros, a very hard metal, lit. that which is unconquerable. - Gk. d-, privative; and dapáew, to conquer, tame, cognate with E. tame. See Tame. Der. adamant-ine; from Lat. adamantinus, Gk. doapávrivos.

ADAPT, to fit, make suitable. (L.) In Ben Jonson's Discoveries; sect. headed Lectio, Parnassus, &c. - Lat. adaptare, to fit to. - Lat. ad, to; and aptare, to fit. See Apt. Der. adapt-able, adapt-at-ion, adapt-abil-ity.

ADD, to put together, sum up. (L.) M. E. adden. Wyclif has addide, Luke, xix. 11. Chaucer has added, Prol. to C. T. 501. - Lat. addere, to add. - Lat. ad, to; and -dere, to put, place; see Absoond. Dor. add-endum, pl. add-enda, neut. of add-endus, fut. part. pass. of

Lat. addere; also addition, addition-al, from pp. additus. ADDER, a viper. (E.) M. E. addere, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 352; and again, in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 381, we find 'in persone of an addere,' where other MSS. have a naddere and a neddere. The word addere is identical with nadders, and the two forms are used interchangeably in Middle English. [There are several similar instances of the loss of initial n in English, as in the case of auger, umpire, orange, &c.] - A.S. nædre, an adder, snake; Grein, ii. 275. + Du. adder, a viper. + Icel. nadr. nadra. + Goth. nadrs. + O. H. G. natra, G. natter. ¶ The root is not clear; possibly from & NA, to sew, spin, cf. Lat. nere, to spin, so that the original sense may have been 'thread,' 'cord.' Cf. Old Irish, snáthe, a thread. See Curtius, i. 393. Wholly unconnected with A.S. áttor, átor, poison.

ADDICT, to give oneself up to. (L.) Addicted occurs in Grafton's Chronicles, Hen. VII, an. 4 (R.) – Lat. addicere, to adjudge, assign; pp. addictus, - Lat. ad, to; and dicere, to say, proclaim. See Diction. Der. addict-ed-ness.

ADDLED, diseased, morbid. (E.) Shak. has 'an addle egg;' Troilus, i. 2. 145. Here addle is a corruption of addled, which is also in use, and occurs in Cowper, Pairing-time Anticipated. Addled means 'affected with disease,' the word addle being properly a sub-stantive. The form adle, sb. a disease, occurs in the Ormulum, 4801. - A. S. adl, disease; Grein. i. 16. ¶ The original signification of adl was 'inflammation,' and the word was formed by suffix -1 (for -el, -al) from A.S. ad, a funeral pile, a burning; cf. M.H.G. eiten, to heat, glow, O. H. G. eit, a funeral pile, a fire; Lat. æstus, a glowing heat, æstas, summer; Gk. aldesv, to burn, aldos, a burning; Skt. edhas, edha, wood for fuel, from indh, to kindle; Curtius, i. 310. - /IDH, to kindle; Fick, i. 28. [*]

ADDRESS, to direct oneself to. (F., -L.) M. E. adressen. And therupon him hath adressed ;' Gower, C. A. ii. 295. - F. adresser, to address. - F. a- = Lat. ad ; and dresser, to direct, dress. See Dress. Der. address, sb.

ADDUCE, to bring forward, cite. (L.) Bp. Taylor has adduction and adductive ; Of the Real Presence, § 11. - Lat. adducere, to lead to, pp. adductus. - Lat. ad, to; and ducere, to lead. See Duke, Der. adduc-ible; also adduct-ion, adduct-ive. ADEPT, a proficient. (L.) 'Adepts, or Adeptists, the obtaining sons of art, who are said to have found out the grand elixir, commonly called the philosopher's stone;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715.-Lat. adeptus, one who has attained proficiency; properly pp. of adip-isci. to attain, reach to. - Lat. ad, to; and apisci, to reach. The form ap-isci is from AP, to attain, which appears also in the Gk. arrew, to tie, bind, seize, and in the Skt. ap, to attain, obtain. ¶ From the same root is apt, which see; also option. See Fick, i. 489, Curtius, ii. 110.

ADEQUATE, equal to, sufficient. (L.) It occurs in Hale's Contemplation of Wisdom, and in Johnson's Rambler, No. 17.-Lat. adaequatus, made equal to, pp. of adaequare, to make equal to. - Lat. ad, to; and aequare, to make equal. - Lat. aequus, equal. See Equal. Der. adequate-ly, adequacy.

ADHERE, to stick fast to. (L.) Shak. has adhere; and Sir T. More has adherents, Works, p. 222.-Lat. adhaerere, to stick to.-Lat. ad, to; and haerere, to stick; pp. haesus. - AGHAIS, to stick; which occurs also in Lithuanian; Fick, i. 576. Der. adher-ence, adher-ent ; also adhes-ive, adhes-ion, from pp. adhaesus.

ADIEU, farewell. (F., -L.) Written a dien. Gower, C. A. i. 251. - F. à dieu, (I commit you) to God. - Lat. ad deum.

ADJACEINT, near to. (L.) It occurs in Lydgate's Siege of Thebes, pt. 1 (R.); see Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 360 back, col. 1. - Lat. adiacentem, acc. of adiacens, pres. pt. of adiacene, to lie near. -Lat. ad, to, near; and iacere, to lie. Jacere is formed from iacere, to Lat. ad, to, near; and to adjacency. throw. See Jet. Der. adjacency. throw. is add to. (L.) Unusual. Fuller has adjecting;

ADJECT, to add to. (L.) Unusual. Fuller has adjecting; General Worthies, c. 24. [The derivative adjective is common as a grammatical term.] - Lat. adjicere, to lay or put near, pp. adjectus. -Lat. ad, near; and iacere, to throw, put. See Jet. Der. adject-ion. adject-ive ADJOIN, to lie next to. (F., -L.) Occurs in Sir T. More's Works, p. 40 b (R.) = O. F. adjoindre, to adjoin. = Lat. adiangere, to join to; pp. adiunctus. - Lat. ad, to; and iungere, to join. See Join. Der.

ADJOURN, to postpone till another day. (F.,-L.) M. E. aiornen (ajornen), to fix a day, Rob. of Brunne's tr. of P. Langtoft, p. 309. - O. F. ajorner, ajurner, properly to draw near to day, to dawn. -O.F. a = Lat. ad; and jornee, a morning; cf. O. F. jor, jur, jour, a day, originally jorn = Ital. giorno. - Lat. diurnus, daily. - Lat. dies; a day. See jour in Brachet, and see Journey, Journal. Der. adjourn-ment.

ADJUDGE, to decide with respect to, assign. (F., -L.) M. E. adiugen (-adjugen), or better aiugen (-ajugen); Fabyan, an. 1212; Grafton, Hen. II, an. 9 (R.) Chaucer has aiu ged, tr. of Boethius, bk. i. pr. 4, l. 325. - O. F. ajuger, to decide. - O. F. a = Lat. ad; and juger, to judge. See Judge. ¶ Since the F. juger is from the juger, to judge. See Judge. ¶ Since the F, juger is from the Lat. indicare, this word has its doublet in adjudicate.

ADJUDICATE, to adjudge. (L.) See above. Der. adjudicat-ion, which occurs in Blackstone's Commentaries, b. ii. c. 21.

ADJUNCT. See Adjoin.

ADJURE, to charge on oath. (L.) It occurs in the Bible of 1539, 1 Sam. c. 14. Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Ira, has 'that horrible swering of adjuration and conjuration.' - Lat. adjurare, to swear to. -Lat. ad, to; and iurare, to swear. See Abjure. Der. adjural-ion.

ADJUST, to settle, make right. (F., -L.) In Addison's trans-lation of Ovid's story of Aglauros. M. E. aiusten (= ajusten) in the old editions of Chaucer's Boethius, but omitted in Dr. Morris's edition, p. 37, l. 6; see Richardson. – O. F. ajoster, ajuster, ajouster (mod. F. ajouter), to arrange, lit. to put side by side. – Low Lat. adjustare, to put side by side, arrange. - Lat. ad, to, by; and justa, near, lit. adjoining or joining to  $-\sqrt{YUG}$ , to join; whence also Lat. ingum, cognate with E. yoke, and in n-gere, to join. See Join. Dor. adjust-ment, adjust-able. ¶ But see Errata. [\*]

ADJUTANT, lit. assistant. (L.) Richardson cites a passage from Shaw's translation of Bacon, Of Julius Cæsar. Adjutors occurs in Drayton's Barons' Wars, and adjuting in Ben Jonson, King's Entertainment at Welbeck .- Lat. adjutantem, acc. of adjutans, assisting, pres. pt. of adiutare, to assist ; a secondary form of adiuvare, to assist. -Lat. ad, to; and inware, to assist, pp. intus. - VU, to guard; cf. Skt. yw, to keep back; Fick, ii. 202. Der. adjutanc-y; and (from the vb. adiutare) adjut-or, adjute. From the same root is aid, q. v.

ADMINISTER, to minister to. (L.) Administer occurs in The Testament of Love, bk. i, and administration in the same, bk. ii (R.) -Lat. administrare, to minister to. -Lat. ad, to; and ministrare, to minister. See Minister. Der. administrat-ion, administrat-ive, administrat-or; all from Lat. administrare.

ADMIRAL, the commander of a fleet. (F.,-Arabic.) See Trench's Select Glossary, which shews that the term was often ap-There is select brossely, which are used in a fleet, called in North's Plutarch the 'admiral-galley.' Thus Milton speaks of 'the mast Of some great ammiral;' P. L. i. 294. But this is only an abbreviated expression, and the modern use is correct.  $\beta$ . M. E. admiral, admiral admiral (Layamon, iii. 103), or more often amiral, amirail. Rob. of Glouc. has amyrayl, p. 409. - O. F. amirail, amiral; also found as amire, without the suffix. There is a Low Lat. form amiraldus, formed by suffix -aldus (O.F. -ald, F. -aud) from a shorter form amiraus. -Arabic amir, a prince, an 'emir;' see Palmer's Pers. Dict. p. 51. ¶ Hammer derives admiral from Arabic amir-al-báhr, commander of the sea, supposing that the final word bahr has been dropped. As to the reason for this supposition, see note in Errata. [\*] See Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 264, note (8th edition).  $\beta$ . The suffix is Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 264, note (8th edition). just the same as in rib-ald, Regin-ald, from Low Lat. -aldus, answering to Low G. -wald; see Brachet's Dict. of French Etym. sect. 195: Kitchin's translation. In King Horn, l. 89, admirald rhymes with bald, bold; and in numerous passages in Middle English, amiral or amirail means no more than 'prince,' or 'chief.' Der. admiral-ty. ADMIRE, to wonder at. (F., -L.) Shak. has 'admir'd disorder; Mach. iii, 4. 110. - F. admirer, 'to wonder, admire, marvel at:"

Cot.-Lat. admirari, to wonder at.-Lat. ad, at; and mirari, to wonder. Mirari is for an older smirari, to wonder at, smile at; cognate with Gk. µeiddeev, to smile, Skt. smi, to smile, smera, smiling, and E. smirk and smile; Curtius, i. 409. See Smile. Der. admir-able, adsmirat-ion, admir-er, admir-ing-ly.

ADMIT, to permit to enter. (L.) Fabyan has admytted, admyssion; Hen. III, an. 1261. - Lat. admittere, lit. to send to. - Lat. ad, to; and mittere, to send, pp. missus. See Missile. Der. admittance, admitt-able; also admiss-ion, admiss-ible, admiss-ibil-ity, from pp. admissus.

ADMONISH, to warn. (F., -Lat.) M. E. amonesten, so that admonisk is a corruption of the older form amonest. 'I amoneste, or warne;' Wyclif, I Cor. iv. 14. 'This figure amonesteth thee;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. met. 5. 'He amonesteth [advises] pees;' Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus. The sb. amonesternent is in an Old. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 28.-O. F. amonester (F. admonester), to advise. - Low. Lat. admonitare, afterwards corrupted to admonistare, a frequentative of admonere, to advise, formed from the pp. admonitus (Brachet).- Lat. ad, to; and monere, to advise. See Monition. Der. admonit-ion, admonit-ive, admonit-ory, all from the pp. admonitus.

A-DO, to-do, trouble. (E.) M. E. at do, to do. 'We have othere thinges at do;' Towneley Mysteries, p. 181; and again, 'With that prynce... Must we have at do;' id. p. 337. In course of time the phrase at do was shortened to ado, in one word, and regarded as a substantive. 'Ado, or grete busynesse, sollicitudo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 7. ¶ The prep. at is found thus prefixed to other infinitives, as at ga, to go; Seuyn Sages, 3017; 'That es at say,' that is to say; Halliwell's Dict. s. v. at, See Matzner, Engl. Gram. ii. 2. 58.  $\beta$ . This idiom was properly peculiar to Northern English, and is of Scandinavian origin, as is evident from the fact that the sign of the infinitive is at in Icelandic, Swedish, &cc.

ADOLLESCEINT, growing up. (L.) Rich. quotes adolescence from Howell, bk. iii, letter 9; and adolescency occurs in Sir T. Elyot's Governour, b. ii. c. 4. – Lat. adolescentem, acc. of adolescene, to grow up. – Lat. ad, to, up; and olescene, to grow, the 'inceptive' form of the shorter olere, to grow; which again is formed from alere, to nourish. –  $\checkmark$ AL, to nourish; whence also Icel. ala, to produce, nourish, and Goth. alam, to nourish, cherish. The  $\checkmark$ AL is probably a development of  $\checkmark$ AR, to arise, to grow, seen in Lat. adviri; see Abortion. Der. adolescence; and see adult.

ADOPT, to choose or take to oneself. (L.) Adopt occurs in Hall, Hen. VII, an. 7. The sb. adoptions is in Wyclif, Romans, c. 8; and in the Ayenbite of Inwyt, pp. 101, 104, 146. - Lat. adoptare, to adopt, choose. - Lat. ad, to; and optare, to wish. -  $\sqrt{AP}$ , to wish. See Option. Der. adopt-ive, adopt-ion.

Option. Der. adopt-ive, adopt-ion. ADORE, to worship. (L.) See Levins, Manip. Vocabulorum, p. 174; adored is in Surrey's Virgil, tr. of Æn. ii. 700. [The M. E. adouren in The Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 163, was probably taken from the O. F. adourer, generally cut down to aourer.] – Lat. adorare, lit. to pray to. – Lat. ad, to; and orare, to pray. – Lat. os, oris, the mouth; cf. Skt. daya, the mouth, asus, vital breath; shewing that the probable signification of ↓ AS, to be, was originally 'to breathe;' Curtius, i. 469. See Oral. Der. ador-at-ion, ador-er, ador-able, ador-able. ador-ing-ly. ADORN, to deck. (L.) Chaucer has adorneth, Troilus, iii. I. – ADORN, to deck. (L.) Chaucer has adorneth, Troilus, iii. I. – Lat. adornare, to deck. – Lat. ad, to, on; and ornare, to deck. Curtius has no hesitation in stating that here the initial o stands for va (or wa), so that Lat. ornare is to be connected with Skt. varna, colour, which is from  $\checkmark$  WAR (Skt. vri), to cover over. See Ornament. Dor. adorn-ing, adorn-ment.

ADOWN, downwards. (E.) M. E. adune, Havelok, 2735; very common. – A. S. of-dúne, lit. off the down or hill. – A. S. of, off, from; and dún, a down, hill. See Down; and see A-, prefix. ADRIFT, floating at random. (E.) In Milton, P. L. xi. S32. For ADRIFT, floating at random. (E.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 832. For on drift; as afloat for on float, ashore for on shore. See Afloat, and Drift.

ADROIT, dexterous. (F., -L.) Used by Evelyn, The State of France (R.) - F. adroit, 'handsome, nimble, wheem, ready or quick about;' Cotgrave. -F. a droit, lit. rightfully, rightly; from a, to, towards; and droit, right. The F. droit is from Lat. directum, right, justice (in late Latin), neut. of directus, direct. See Direct. Der. adroit-ly, adroit-ness.

ADULATION, flattery. (F., -L.) In Shak. Henry V, iv. 1. 271. - F. adulation, 'adulation, flattery, fawning,' &c.; Cotgrave. -Lat. adulationem, acc. of adulatio, flattery. - Lat. adulari, to flatter, fawn, pp. adulatus. ¶ The supposed original meaning of adulari is to wag the tail as a dog does, hence to fawn, which Curtius connects with the  $\checkmark$  WAL, to wag, roll (cf. Skt. val. to wag, move to and fro, Lat. voluere, to roll). And the  $\checkmark$  WAL points back to an older  $\checkmark$ WAR, to surround, twist about; Curtius, i. 447, Fick, i. 212.  $\beta$ . Fick, 9 however, takes a different view of the matter, and identifies the -ūlin adulari with Gk. oùpá, a tail; i. 770. Der. adulat-or-y.

ADULT, one grown up. (L.; or F., -L.) Spelt adulte in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. I. [Perhaps through the French, as Cotgrave has 'Adulte, grown to full age.'] - Lat. adultus, grown up, pp. of adolescere, to grow up. See Adolescent. ADULTERATE, to corrupt. (L.) Sir T. More, Works, p. 636 h,

ADULITERATE, to corrupt. (L.) Sir T. More, Works, p. 636 h, has adulterate as a past participle; but Bp. Taylor writes adulterated, On the Real Presence, sect. 10. – Lat. adulterare, to commit adultery, to corrupt, falsify. – Lat. adulter, an adulterer, a debaser of money. [Of the last word I can find no satisfactory etymology.] Der. adulteradvion; also (from Lat. adulterium) the words adulter-y, adulter-er, adulter-ess; and (from Lat. adulter) adulter-ous, adulter-ine.

adulter-ess; and (from Lat. adulter) adulter-ous, adulter-ine. ADUMBRATE, to shadow forth. (L.) Adumbrations occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, book iii. c. 25. – Lat. adumbrare, to cast shadow over. – Lat. ad, to, towards, over; and umbrare, to cast a shadow. – Lat. umbra, a shadow. [Root unknown.] Der. adumbrane (from pres. pt. adumbrars), adumbrat-ion. ADVANCE, to go forward. (F., – L.) [The modern spelling

ADVANCE, to go forward. (F., -L.) [The modern spelling is not good; the inserted d is due to the odd mistake of supposing that, in the old form avance, the prefix is a-, and represents the Lat. ad. The truth is, that the prefix is av-, and represents the Lat. ab. The inserted d came in about A.D. 1500, and is found in the Works of Sir T. More, who has advauncement, p. 1369. The older spelling is invariably without the d.] M. E. avancen, avauncen. Chaucer has 'awaunced and forthered,' tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 4, l. 1057. The word is common, and occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 77.-O.F. awancer (F. avancer), to go before.-O. and mod. F. avant, before. - Low Lat. ab ante, also written abante, before (Brachet).- Lat. ab, from ; ante, before. See Ante-, and Van. Der. advancermant; and see below. ADVANTAGE, profit. (F., -L.) Properly a state of forwardness or advance. [The d is a mere wrong insertion, as in advance (see above), and the M.E. form is avantage or avantage.] 'Avantage, profectus, emolumentum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 17. Hampole has avantage, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1012; and it is common. = O. F. and mod. F. avantage, formed by suffix -age from prep. avant, before. See Advance. Der. advantage-ous, advantage-ous-ness.

ADVENT, approach. (L) M. E. advent, Rob. of Glonc. p. 463; also in Ancren Riwle, p. 70. – Lat. adventus, a coming to, approach. – Lat. advenire, to come to, pp. adventus. – Lat. ad, to; and venire, to come, cognate with E. come. See Come. Der. advent-u-al, adventivi-ous.

ADVENTURE, an accident, enterprise. (F., -L.) [The older spelling is aventure, the F. prefix a-having been afterwards replaced by the corresponding Lat. prefix ad-.] Sir T. More, Works, p. 761 e, has adventure as a verb. The old form aventure is often cut down to awatte. Rob. of Glouc. has to aventure at p. 70, but the sb. an anatre at p. 64. The sb. awenture, i. e. occurrence, is in the Ancren Riwle, p. 340.-0.F. and mod. F. aventure, an adventure - Lat. adventurus, about to happen, of which the fem. adventura was used as a sb. (res, a thing, being understood), and is represented in Italian by the form avventura.- Lat. adventure, to come to, happen; fut, part. act. adventur-rus.- Lat. adventure, to come, cognate with E. come. See Come. Der. adventure, vb., adventur-er, adventur-ous, adventur-ous, adventur-ous, [t]

ADVERB, a part of speech. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, ch. xxi. Used to qualify a verb; and formed from Lat. ad, to, and uerburn, a verb, a word. See Vorb. Der. adverb-ial, adverb-ial-ly. ADVERSE, opposed to. (F.; - Lat.) M. E. adverse. Gower has 'Whan he fortune fint [finds] adverse; 'C. A. ii. 116. Adversite, i.e. adversity, occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 194. Chaucer has adversarie, an adversary, C. T. 13610. – O. F. advers, generally avers (mod. F. averse), adverse to. – Lat. adversus, turned towards, contrary, opposed to; pp. of adverse to. – Lat. adversus, turned towards, contrary, ere, to turn. – & WART, to turn; Fick, i. 215. See Towards. Dor. advers-ary, advers-ad-ive, adverse-ness, advers-iv. See below. ADVERT, to turn to, regard. (L.) Advert occurs in The Court

ADVERT, to turn to, regard. (L.) Aduent occurs in The Court of Love, l. 150, written about A.D. 1500. - Lat. aduentere, to turn towards; see above. Der. advert-ent, advert-ence, advert-enc-y.

ADVERTISE, to inform, warn. (F., -L.) Fabyan has aduertysed, Hist. c. 83. For the ending ise, see note at the end of the article. - O. F. advertir, avertir. Cotgrave has 'Advertir, to inform, certific, advertise, warn, admonish.' - Lat. aduertere, to turn towards, advert to. See Advort. [Thus advertise is really a doublet of advert.] Der. advertis-er, advertis-ing; also advertisesement, from O. F. advertissement, which see in Cotgrave. ¶ In this case the ending ise is not the Gk. -l(iv, nor even the F. iser, but a development from the mode of conjugating the verb avertir, which has the part. avertiss-ant, and the imperf. avertiss-ais; see Brachet French Gram., trans. by Kitchin, p. 131.  $\beta$ . Hence also b. avertisse-ment, formerly advertisse-ment, whence E. advertis aduisedly. Fabyan has aduyce, Hen. III, an. 46. Cotgrave has 'Advis, advise, opinion, counsell, seatence, judgment, &c.  $\beta$ . But in M. E. and O. F. there is generally no d. Rob. of Glouc. has any, p. 144. - O. F. avis, an opinion ; really a compounded word, standing for a vis, lit. according to my opinion, or 'as it seems' to me; which would correspond to a Lat. form ad uisum. - Lat. ad, according to; And uisum, that which has seemed best, pp. neuter of uidere, to see. → WID, to know. See Wit. Der. advise (O. F. adviser); advisable, advis-able-ness, advis-ed, advis-ed-ness, advis-er. See below ADVISE, to counsel. (F., -L.) The form advise is from O. F. adviser, a form given by Cotgrave, and explained to mean 'to advise, mark, heed, consider of, 'cc.  $\beta$ . But in Middle English, as in O. F., the usual form is without the d; though advised occurs in Gower, C. A. i. 5. The pt. t. avisede occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 558, and the sb. awys (i. e. advice) in the same, p. 144.-O. F. aviser, to have an opinion. - O. F. avis, opinion; see above.

ADVOCATE, one called on to plead. (Lat.) 'Be myn adudcat in that heye place;' Chaucer, Sec. Nun's Ta., Group G, 68. - Lat. aduocatus, a common forensic term for a pleader, advocate, one 'called to' the bar. Lat. ad, to; wocatus, called, pp. of wocare, to call. See Voice. Der. advocate, verb; advocate-ship; advocac-y (F. advocat-ie, which see in Cotgrave); also advouve, advouve, for which see below. [†] ADVOWSON, the right of presentation to a benefice. (F.,-L.) Occurs in the Statute of Westminster, an. 13 Edw. I, c. 5; see Blount's Law Dictionary. Merely borrowed from O.F. advouson, also spelt adwouson; see Adwouson d'église in Roquefort. The sense also spelt advouson; see Advouson d'église in Roquefort. is patronage, and the corresponding term in Law Lat. is advocatio (see Blount), because the patron was called advocatus, or in O.F. avoue, now spelt avourse or advourse in English. Hence advourson is derived from Lat. advocationem, acc. of advocatio, and advourse is derived from Lat. advocatus. See Advocato. [†] ADZE, a cooper's axe. (E.) M. E. adse; the pl. adses occurs in Palladius on Husbandrie, ed. Lodge, bk. i. l. 1161; adses, Wyclif, Isaiah, xliv. 13. - A.S. adesa, adese, an ane or hatchet; Alfric's Glossary, 25; Beda, Hist. Eccl. iv. 3; Grein, p. 1. ¶ I suspect that A.S. adesa or adese is nothing but a corruption of an older acesa (with hard c) or acwesa, and is to be identified with Goth. akwisi, an axe, cognate with Lat. ascia (put for acsia) and Gk. dfirn; in which case adze is merely a doublet of aze. See Axe.

AERIAL, airy, high, lofty. (L.) Milton has aërial, also written aëreal, P. L. iii. 445, v. 548, vii. 443; also aëry, P. L. i. 430, 775. Formed, apparently in imitation of ethereal (P. L. i. 25, 70, &c.), from Lat. aerius, dwelling in the air. - Lat. aër, the air. See Air. Der. From the same Lat. sb. we have aër-ate, aër-ify. ¶ The cognate Gk. word is dhp, whence the Gk. prefix depo-, relative to air, appearing in English as aero-. Hence aero-lite, an air-stone, from Gk. Nilos, a stone; aero-naut, a sailer or sailor in the air, from Gk. vairys (Lat. nauta) a sailor, which from Gk. vais (Lat. nauis) a ship; aero-static, for which see Static ; &c.

AERY, lit. an eagle's nest; also, a brood of eagles or hawks. (F., -Teut.) 'And like an eagle o'er his aery towers;' K. John, v. 2. 149. 'There is an aery of young children;' Hamlet, ii. 2. 354.-F. aire; Cotgrave has 'Aire, m. an airie or nest of hawkes.'-Low Lat. area, a nest of a bird of prey; of which we find an example in Ducange. 'Aues rapaces . . . exspectant se inuicem aliquando prope nidum suum consuetum, qui a quibusdam area dicitur ;' Fredericus II, de Venatu. β. The word aire is marked as masculine in Cotgrave, whereas F. aire, Lat. area, in the ordinary sense of 'floor,' is feminine. It is sufficiently clear that the Low Lat. area is quite a distinct word from the classical Lat. area, and is a mere corruption of a term of the chase. Now these terms of the chase are mostly Teutonic; hence Brachet derives this F. airs from the M. H. G. ar or ars (O. H. G. aro, mod. G. aar, an eagle).  $\gamma$ . It must be admitted, however, that the word is one of great difficulty; and Littre maintains the contrary opinion, that the F. aire is nothing but the Lat. area, supposed to mean 'a flat place on the surface of a rock, where an eagle builds its nest.' He thinks that its meaning was further extended to imply dwelling, stock, family, race; so that hence was formed the expression de bon aire, which appears in the E. debonair. He would even further extend the sense so as to include that of manner. mien, or air; as in the E. expression 'to give oneself airs.' See Littré, Hist de la Langue Française, i. 61. 8. Cognate with Icel. ari, an eagle, are O. H. G. aro, Goth. ara, Swed. orn, A. S. earn, all in the same sense, Gk. öpre, a bird; probably from AR, to raise oneself; cf. Gk. Sprura, Lat. oriri. When fairly imported into English, the word was ingeniously connected with M. E. sy, an egg, as if the word meant an egg-ery; hence it came to be spelt eyrie or eyry, and to be misinterpreted accordingly. [+]

ÆSTHETIC, tasteful, relating to perception. (Gk.) Modern.

AFFILIATION.

. ADVICE, counsel. (F.,-L.) Sir T. More, Works, p. 11 a, has 7 Borrowed from Gk. alothyrikos, perceptive. - Gk. alothivoyai, alothivojai, I perceive; a form which, as Curtius shews (vol. i. p. 483), is expanded from the older diw, I hear, cognate with Lat. au-d-ire, to hear, and Skt. av, to notice, favour. - AW, to take pleasure in, be AFAR, at a distance. (E.) For on far or of far. Either expression would become o far, and then a-far; and both are found; but, by analogy, the former is more likely to have been the true original; cf. abed, asleep, &c. Stratmann gives of feor, O. E. Homilies, i. 247; a fer, Gower, C. A. i. 314; on ferrum, Gawain, 1575; o ferrum, Minot, 29. See Far.

29. See Far. AFFABLE, easy to be addressed. (F., -L.) Milton has affable, affable curteous gracious P. L. vii. 41; viii. 648. - F. affable, 'affable, gentle, curteous, gracious in words, of a friendly conversation, easily spoken to, willingly giving and votes; or control of the second s affabilitatem, acc. of affabilitas).

AFFAIR, business. (F., -L.) M. E. affere, afere, effer; the pl. afferes is in P. Plowman, C. vii. 152. Commonest in Northern English; spelt effer in Barbour's Bruce, i. 161.-O. F. afaire, afeire (and properly so written with one f), business; merely the phrase a faire, to do, used as a substantive, like ado in English for at do; see Ado. O. F. faire = Lat. facere; see below.

AFFECT, to act upon. (L.) In Shak. it means to love, to like; Gent. of Ver. iii. 1. 82; Antony, i. 3. 71, &c. The sb. affection (formerly affeccious) is in much earlier use, and common in Chaucer. -Lat. affectare, to apply oneself to; frequentative form of afficere, to aim at, treat.-Lat. af- = ad; and facere, to do, act. See Fact. Der. affect-ed, affect-ed-ness, affect-ing, affect-at-ion, affect-ion, affect-ion-ate, affect-ion-ate-ly. Of these, affectation occurs in Ben Jonson, Discoveries, sect. headed Periodi, & c.

AFFERER, to confirm. (F, -L) Very rare; but it occurs in Macbeth, iv. 3. 34; 'the title is affeer'd.' Blount, in his Law Dictionary, explains Affeerers as 'those that are appointed in court-lects upon oath, to satisfy and moderate the fines of such as have committed faults arbitrarily punishable.'  $\beta$ . Blount first suggests an impossible derivation from F. affier, but afterwards adds the right one, saying, 'I find in the Customary of Normandy, cap. 20, this word affeurer, which the Latin interpreter expresseth by taxare, that is, to set the price of a thing, which etymology seems to me the best." - O. F. afeurer, to fix the price of things officially (Burguy). -Low Lat. afforare, to fix the price of a thing; Ducange. (Migne adds that the O. F. form is afforer, affeurer.) - Lat.  $a_r^{-} = ad$ ; and forum, or forus, both of which are used synonymously in Low Latin in the sense of price; ' the O. F. form of the sb. being fuer or feur, which see in Burguy and Roquefort. The classical Latin is forum, meaning 'a market-place,' also 'an assize;' and is also (rarely) written ¶ If forum be connected, as I suppose, with foris and forus. foras, out of doors (see Fick, i. 640), it is from the same root as E. door. See Door. (27 The change from Lat. o to E. ee is clearly seen in Lat. bovern, O. F. buef (mod. F. basuf), E. beef. The Lat.

equivalent of afferer is afforator, also written (by mistake) afferator. AFFIANCE, trust, marriage-contract. (F., - L.) [The verb affy is perhaps obsolete. It means (1) to trust, confide, Titus Andron. i. 47; and (2) to betroth; Tam. of Shrew, iv. 4. 49.] Both affire and affiance occur in Rob. of Brunne's tr. of P. Langtoft, pp. 87, 155. I. The verb is from O. F. affier, to trust in, also spelt after; which is from a- (Lat. ad), and fier, formed from Low Lat. fidare, a late form from Lat. fidare, to trust. 2. The sb. is from O. F. afiance, which is compounded of a- (Lat. ad) and fiance, formed from Low Lat. fidantia, a pledge, security; which is from the same Low Lat. fidare, pres. pt. fidans, of which the stem is fidant. Thus both are reduced to Lat. fidere, to trust. + Gk. neibeiv, to persuade, whence nénoiba, I trust. - $\checkmark$  BH1DH, perhaps meaning to pledge or oblige; a weakened form of  $\checkmark$  BHANDH, to bind. See Bind. So Curtius, i. 325. β. Fick β. Fick also gives V BHIDH, but assigns to it the idea of 'await, expect, trust,' and seems to connect it with E. bide. See Bide. Der.

affiance, verb; affianc-ed. AFFIDAVIT, an oath. (L.) Properly the Low Lat. affidavit = he made oath, 3 p. s. perf. of affidare, to make oath, pledge. - Lat. af-ad; and Low Lat. fidare, to pledge, a late form from fidere, to trust. See above.

AFFILIATION, assignment of a child to its father. (F., -L.) The verb affiliate seems to be later than the sb., and the sb. does not appear to be in early use, though the corresponding terms in French and Latin may long have been in use in the law courts. - F. affiliation, explained by Cotgrave as 'adoption, or an adopting.'-Law Lat. affiliationem, acc. of affiliatio, 'an assigning a son to,' given by Ducange, though he does not give the verb affiliare. - Lat. af = ad, to; and filius, a son. See Filial.

AFFINITY, nearness of kin, connection. (F., -L.) Fabyan has  $\int_{1}^{6}$  frigidare, to chill. - Lat. frigidus. cold, frigid. See effrayer in affynite. c. 133. - F. affinité, 'affinity, kindred, allyance, nearness;' Brachet, and see Frigid. The pp. affrayed, soon contracted Cot. - Lat. affinitatem, acc. of affinitas, nearness. - Lat. affinis, near. to affray or afraid, was in so common use that it became a mere affynite, c. 133. - F. affinité, 'affinity, kindred, allyance, nearness;' Cot. - Lat. affinitatem, acc. of affinitas, nearness. - Lat. affinis, near, bordering upon. - Lat. af- = ad, near; and finis, a boundary. See Final.

AFFIRM, to assert strongly. (F., -L.) M. E. affermen; Chaucer has affermed; C. T. 2351. It occurs earlier, in Rob. of Brunne's tr. of P. Langtoft, p. 316. - O. F. afermer, to fix, secure. - O. F. a-Lat. ad; and Lat. firmare, to make firm: from firmus, firm. See ¶ The word has been assimilated to the Lat. spelling, but Firm was not taken immediately from the Latin. Der. affirm-able, affirmat-ion, affirm-at-ive, affirm-at-ive-ly.

AFFIX, to fasten, join on to. (F.,-L.) [Not from Lat. directly, but from the French, the spelling being afterwards accommodated to the Latin.] M. E. affichen. Gower has 'Ther wol thei al her love affiche,' riming with riche; C. A. ii. 211. Wyclif has afficchede (printed affichede), 4 Kings. xviii. 16. – O. F. aficher, to fix to. – O. F. a. = Lat. ad; and ficher, to fix. - Low Lat. figicare* (an unauthenticated form) developed from Lat. figere, to fix. See Fix. Der. affix, sb.

AFFLICT, to harass. (L.) Sir T. More has afflicteth, Works, p. affights in Gower, C. A. i. 327; these are from O. F. affiit (fem. affights in Gower, C. A. i. 327; these are from O. F. affiit (fem. affiite), pp. of affire, to afflict. The sb. affliction occurs early, in Rob. of Brunne's tr. of Langtoft, p. 202.] - Lat. afflictus, pp. of In Kob. of brune's it, of Langton, p. 202.] - Lat. applicat, pp. of affligere, to strike to the ground. - Lat. af = ad, to, i.e. to the ground; and fligere, to dash, strike, pp. flictus. Cf. Gk.  $\phi\lambda i\beta au$ ,  $\theta\lambda i\beta au$ , to crush. -  $\checkmark$  BHLIGH, to dash down; Fick, i. 703. ¶ This  $\checkmark$  BHLIGH is but a weakened form of  $\checkmark$  BHLAGH, to strike, whence Lat. flag-ellum, a scourge, and G. bleuen, to strike. Hence both Flagellate and Blow (in the sense of stroke, hit) are related words. Der. afflict-ion (Lat. acc. afflictionem, from pp. afflictus); also afflict-ive.

AFFLUENCE, profusion, wealth. (F., -L.) It occurs in Wotton's Reliquize, art. A Parallel; and in his Life of Buckingham in the same collection. Also in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. - F. affluence, 'affluence, plenty, store, flowing, fulness, abundance;' Cot. - Lat. affluencia, abundance. - Lat. affluere, to flow to, abound. - Lat. af- = ad; and fluere, to flow. See Fluent. Der. affluent (from Lat. affluentem, acc. of affluens, pres. pt. of affluere); afflux, given by Cotgrave as a French word (from Lat. affluxus, pp. of affluere).

AFFORD, to supply, produce. (E.) a. This word should have but one f. The double f is due to a supposed analogy with words that begin with aff in Latin, where aff is put for adf; but the word is not Latin, and the prefix is not ad-. β. Besides this, the pronunciation has been changed at the end. Rightly, it should be aforth, but the th has changed as in other words; cf. murther, now murder, further, provincially furder. Y. M. E. aforthen, to afford, suffice, provide. And here and there, as that my litille wit Aforthe may [i. e. may suffice], eek thinke I translate it'; Occleve, in Halliwell's Dictionary (where the word is misinterpreted). 'And thereof was Piers proude, and put hem to worke, And yaf hem mete as he myghte aforth [i.e. could afford or provide], and mesurable huyre' [hire]; P. Plowman, B. vi. 200. B. In this word, as in aware, q. v., the prefix a- is a corruption of the A. S. prefix ge-, which in the 12th century was written ye- or i-, and iforth easily passed into aforth, owing to the atonic nature of the syllable. Hence we find the forms yeforthian and iforthien in the 12th century. Ex. 'thenne he iseye thet he ne mahte na mare yeforthian' = when he saw that he could afford no more; Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 1st series, p. 31; "do thine elmesse of thon thet thu maht iforthien'=do thine alms of that which thou mayest afford, id. p. 37. - A. S. ge-fordian (where the ge- is a mere prefix that is often dropped), or fordian, to further, promote, accomplish, provide, afford. 'Hwilc man swa haued behaten to faren to Rome, and he ne muge hit fordian' = whatever man has promised [vowed] to go to Rome, and may not accomplish it; A.S. Chron. ed. Thorpe, an. 675, later interpolation; see footnote on p. 58. 'Pa wæs gefordad hin fægere weorc' = then was accomplished thy fair work (Grein); 'hæfde gefor od, bæt he his frean gehet '= had performed that which he promised his lord; Grein, i. 401. - A.S. ge, prefix (of slight value); and fordian, to promote, forward, produce, cause to come forth. -A. S. for 8, forth, forward. See Forth.

AFFRAY, to frighten; AFRAID, frightened. (F., -L.)Shak, has the verb. Romeo, iii. 5. 33. It occurs early. Rob. of Brunne, in his translation of P. Langtoft, p. 174, has 'it affraied the Sarazins' = it frightened the Sarazens; and 'ther-of had many affray' = thereof many had terror, where affray is a sb. - O. F. effreier effraier, esfreër, to frighten, lit. to freeze with terror ; cf. Provençal esfreidar, which shews a fuller form. - Low Lat. exfrigidare, a nonoccurrent form, though the simple form frigidare occurs. The prefix adjective. See, however, corrections in Errata. [#]

AFFRIGHT, to frighten. (E.) The double f is modern. and a mistake. The prefix is A, S. d-. A transitive verb in Shak. Mid-summer Nt. Dream, v. 142, &c. The old pp. is not affrighted, but afright, as in Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 75. – A. S. dyrhtan, to terrify; Grein, i. 19.-A.S. á., prefix, = G. er., Goth. us., and of intensive force; and fyrhtan, to terrify, though this simple form is not used. - A. S. fyrkto, fright, terror. See Fright. Der. affright-ed-la AFFRONT, to insult, lit. to stand front to front. (F., -L.) double f was originally a single one, the prefix being the F. a. M. E. afronten, afrounten, to insult. 'That afrontede me foule' = who foully insulted me; P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 5. The inf. affround occurs in the Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 229. - O. F. afronter, to confront, oppose face to face. - O. F. a, to, against; and front, the front; so that a front answers to Lat. ad frontem; cf. Low Lat. affrontare, to strike against. - Lat. ad; and fromtern, acc. case of froms, the fore-head. See Front. Der. affront, sb. [+] AFLOAT, for on float. (E.) 'Now er alle on flote' - now are all afloat ; Rob. of Brunne's tr. of P. Langtoft, p. 169. So also on flot, afloat, in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xiv. 359.

AFOOT, for on foot. (E.) 'The way-ferande frekez on fote and on hors'= the wayfaring men, afoot and on horse; Allit. Poems, ed.

Morris, B. 79. We still say 'to go an foot.' AFORE, before, in front; for on fore. (E.) M. E. afore, aforn, As it is afore seid,' Book of Quinte Essence, ed. Furnivall, p. 12; aforn, Rom. Rose, 3951. - A. S. onforan, adv. in front, Grein, ii. 344. There is also an A. S. form æiforan, prep. Grein, i. 61. See Fore.

Der. afore-said, afore-hand, afore-time. AFRAID, adj.; see Affray. AFRESH, anew. (E.) Sir T. More, Works, p. 1390c. Either for on fresh or of fresh. Perhaps the latter, by analogy with anew, q. v. AFT, AFTER, adj. and adv. behind. (E.) As a nautical term, perhaps it is rather Scandinavian than English. Cf. Icel. aptr (pronounced aftr), used like aft in nautical language (Cleasby and Vigfusson). In M. E. generally eft, with the sense of 'again;' and after, prep. and adv. - A. S. oft, eft, again, behind, Grein, i. 219; aftan, behind (very rare); aftar, prep., after, behind, also as an adv., after, afterwards (very common). + Icel. aptan (pron. aftan), adv. and prep. behind; aptr, aftr, aftan, backwards; aftr, back, in composition. + Dan. and Swed. efter, prep. and adv. behind, after. + Du. achter, prep. and adv. behind. + Goth. aftra, adv. again, backwards. + O. H. G. aftar, after, prep. and adv. behind. + Gk. awarépou, adv., further off. + O. Persian apataram, further (Fick, i. 17). ¶ In English, there has, no doubt, been from the very first a feeling that after was formed from aft; but comparative philology shews at once that this is merely an English view, and due to a mistake. The word aft is, in fact, an abbreviation or development from after, which is the older word of the two, and the only form found in most other languages. 2. The word after, as the true original, deserves more consideration. It is a comparative form, but is, nevertheless, not to be divided as aft-er, but as after. The ter is the suffix which appears in Lat. alter, uter, in the Gk. 50-repos, 4-repos, Skt. katara, &c.; and in English is generally written -ther, as in o-ther, whe-ther, ei-ther, &c. 'By Sanskrit grammarians the origin of it is said to be found in the Skt. root tar (cp. Lat. trans, E. through), to cross over, go beyond; Morris, Outlines of English Accidence, p. 106; and see p. 204. The positive form af- corresponds to Skt. apa, Gk. dw, Lat. ab, Goth. af, A. S. of, E. of and off. Thus after stands for of-ter, i.e. more off, further away. See Of. Der. after-erop, after-most (q. v.). after-moon, after-piece, after-ward, after-wards (q. v.), ab-aft (q. v.). AFTERMOST, hindmost. (E.) The suffix -most in such words as wimost is a double superlative ending, and not the word most'; Morris, Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 110. M. E. estemeste, Early Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 23. - A. S. astemest, astemyst, last, used by Ælfric (Bosworth). + Goth. aftumists, the last; also aftuma, the last, which is a shorter form, shewing that afum-ists is formed regularly by the use of the suffix -ists (E. -est). The division of aftuma is into af and -tuma (see explanation of aft), where af is the Goth. of, E. of, and -tuma is the same as the Lat. -tumus in O. Lat. op-tumus, best, and the Skt. -tama, the regular superl. termination answering to the comparative -tara. Thus oftermost is for aftermost, i.e. of-tem-ost, double superl. of af=of, off. See Aft. AFTERWARD, AFTERWARDS, subsequently. (E.) M.

E. afterward, Ormulum, 14793; efter-ward, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 24. The adverbial suffix -s (originally a gen. sing. suffix) was added at a later time. Shakespeare has both forms, but I do not find that es- (=Lat. ex) may have been added in the French. - Low Lat. gfterwards is much earlier than his time. - A.S. afterweard, adj.

behind, Grein, i. 55. - A. S. æfter, behind; and weard, answering to E. -ward. towards. See After and Towards.

AGAIN, a second time; AGAINST, in opposition to (E.) M. E. ayein, ayen, aye, ogain, onyain, generally written with 3 for y, and very common both as an adverb and preposition. Also in the forms ayaines, ogaines, ayens, onyanes, generally written with 3 for y. B. At a later period, an excrescent & (common after s) was added, just as in whilst from the older form whiles, or in the provincial Eng. wunst for once; and in betwix-t, amongs-t. Ayenst occurs in Maundeville's for once; and in betward, amongs-1. Algensi occurs in Maundeville's Travels, p. 220; and ayeynest in Chaucer's Boethius, p. 12; I doubt if it is much older than A.D. 1350. Y. The final -es in ayaines is the adverbial suffix -es, originally marking a gen. singular. The form ayeines occurs in Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris. p. 7; onyanes is in the Ormulum. 1. 249; I doubt if this suffix is much older than A.D. 1200, though the word togenes or togenes is common at an early period. - A. S. ongegn, ongeán, against, again, prep. ard and carly period. He of Sax, angegin, prep. and adv. again, against. + Icel. i gegn, against. + Dan. igien, adv. again. + Swed. igen, adv. again. + O. H. G. ingagene, ingegene, engegene (mod. G. entgegen, where the t appears to be merely excrescent). ¶ Hence the prefix is plainly the A.S. and mod. E. on, generally used in the sense of in. The simple form gean occurs in Cædmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 62, 1.2 (ed. Grein, 1009); 'he him geán pingode'=he addressed him again, or in return; cf. Icel. gegn, G. gegen, con-trary to. A. S. ongeán seems thus to mean 'in opposition to.' The remoter history of the word is obscure; it appears to be related either to the sb. gang, a going, a way, or to the verb gán or gangan, to gang, to go, the root being either way the same. In Beowulf, ed. Thorpe, 3772, we have the phase on gange, in the way; from which phrase the alteration to ongan is not violent. ¶ The prefix again- is very common in Mid. Eng., See Go. and enters into numerous compounds in which it frequently answers to Lat. re- or red-; ex. ayenbite = again-biting, i. e. re-morse; ayenbuye = buy back, i. e. red-eem. Nearly all these compounds are obsolete. The chief remaining one is M.E. ayein-seien, now shortened to gain-say AGAPE, on the gape. (E.) No doubt for on gape; cf. 'on the broad grin.' See Abed, &c. And see Gape. AGATE, a kind of stone. (F., -L., -Gk.) Shak. L. L. L. ii. 236.

Often confused with gagate or gagates, i. e. jet, in Middle English; see Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, sect. xviii. A. 30, and gagate in Halliwell. - O. F. agate, spelt agathe in Cotgrave. - Lat. achates, an agate (see Gower, C. A. iii. 1 30); borrowed from Gk. dxárns, an agate; which, according to Pliny, 37. 10, was so called because first found near the river Achates in Sicily. For the M.E. form gagate, see Jot.

AGE, period of time, maturity of life. (F., -L.) 'A gode clerk wele in age;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of P. Langtoft, p. 114. -O. F. aage, age; fuller form, edage (11th century). - Low Lat. estaticum, a form which is not found, but the ending -aticum is very common; for the changes, see âge in Brachet. - Lat. atatem, acc. of atas, age; which is a contraction from an older form œuitas, formed by suffixing -tas to the stem œui-; from œuum, life, period, age. + Gk. alar (for alfor), a period. + Goth. aiws, a period, time, age. + Skt. eva, course. conduct; discussed by Curtius, i. 48. Der. ag-ed. (See Max Müller, Lectures, i. 337, ii. 274. 8th ed.)

AGENT, one who performs or does, a factor. (L.) Shak. AGGLOMERATE, to mass together. (L.) Modern. Used by Thomson, Autumn, 766. - Lat. agglomeratus, pp. of agglomerare, to form into a mass. to wind into a ball. - Lat. ad, to, together (which becomes ag- before g); and glomerare, to wind into a ball. -Lat. glomer-, stem of glomus, a clue of thread (for winding), a thick bush, orig. a mass; closely related to Lat. globus, a globe, a ball. See Globe. Der. agglomeration. AGGLUTINATE, to glue together. (L) Agglutinated occurs in Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 14. - Lat. agglutinatus, pp. of agglutinare, to glue together. - Lat. ad (becoming ag- before g); glutinare, to fasten with glue. - Lat. gluten (stem glutin-), glue. See Glue. Der. agglutinat-ion, agglutinat-ive.

AGGRANDISE, to make great. (F., -L.) Young has aggrand-ize, Night Thoughts. Nt. 6, 1. 111. - F. aggrandise, a stem which occurs in the conjugation of aggrandir, which Cotgrave explains by 'to greaten, augment, enlarge,' &c. The older form of the verb must have been agrandir, with one g; the double g is due to analogy with Latin words beginning with agg - 0. F. a, to (for Lat. ad); and grandir, to increase. - Lat. grandire, to increase. - Lat. grandia, and grandir, to increase. - Lat. grandire, to increase. - Lat. grandis, great. See Grand. Der. aggrandise-ment. AGGRAVATE, lit. to make heavy, to burden. (L.) Hall has aggrauate as a past participle; Hen. V. Shak, has the verb. Rich. II, i. I. 43. - Lat. aggrauatus, pp. of aggrauare, to add to a load. -Lat. ad (ag- before g); grauare, to load, make heavy. - Lat. gravis, heavy. See Grave. Der. aggravation. I Nearly a doublet of aggrieve. AGGREGATE, to collect together. (L.) Aggregate occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ül. c. 22. (The Mid. Eng. has the form aggreggen, which is like the F. agreger (which see in Brachet), and occurs in Chaucer's Melibeus; but this aggreggen is really distinct from agréger, and represents O. F. agregier, to aggravate.] -Lat. aggregare, to collect into a flock. -Lat. ad (ag-before g); gregare, to collect a flock. - Lat. grez (stem greg.), a flock. See Gregarious. Der. aggregate, pp. as adj. or sb.; aggregately, aggregation. AGGRESS, to attack. (F., - L.) Not in early use. Either from F. aggresser, or from the stem of aggressor, which is purely Latin, and occurs in Blackstone's Commentaries, b. iv. c. 1. Cotgrave gives 'Aggresser, to assail, assault, set on.' - Lat. aggressus, pp. of aggredior, I assail. - Lat. ad (ag- before g); gradior, I walk, go. -Lat. gradus, a step. See Grado. Dor. aggress-ion, aggress-ive, aggress-ive-ness, aggress-or. AGGRIEVE, to bear heavily upon. (F., -L.) M. E. agrewen; whence agreued, Chaucer, C. T. 4179; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 323. -O. F. agrever, to overwhelm (see Burguy, p. 190, s. v. grief). -O. F. a, to; and grever, to burden, injure. - Lat. ad, to; gravari, to burden, gravare, to weigh down.-Lat. gravis, heavy. See Grave. ¶ Aggrieve is thus nearly a doublet of aggravate.

AGHAST, struck with horror. (E.) Misspelt, and often mis-interpreted. Rightly spelt agast. [? Spelt agazed in Shak. 1 Hen. VI, i. 1. 126, 'All the whole army stood agazed on him ;' evidently with the notion that it is connected with gaze; but see the Note below.] Probably Shakespeare did not write this line, as he rightly has gasted for 'frightened' in Lear, ii. 1. 57; a word which is often now misspelt ghasted. 1. M. E. agasten, to terrify, of which the pp. is both agasted and agast; and examples of the latter are very numerous. See Mätzner, Altenglische Sprachproben (Wörterbuch), ii. 41. In Wyclif's Bible, Luke, xxiv. 37. we have 'Thei, troublid and agast,' where one MS. has agasted. 'He was abasched and agast;' K. Alis-aunder, ed. Weber, l. 224. 'So sore agast was Emelye;' Chaucer, C. T. 2343. 'What may it be That me agasteth in my dreme?' Leg. of Good Wom. Dido, 245. 'The deouel schal 3et agesten ham' = the devil shall yet terrify them ; Ancren Riwle, p. 212. 2. The simple form gasten also occurs. 'Gaste crowen from his corn' = to frighten crows from his corn; P. Plowman, A. vii. 129.-A.S. intensive prefix a- (= G. er-, Goth. us-); and A. S. gæstan, to terrify, hence, and lige '= they torture, torment; 'hie geston godes cempan gare and lige '= they tortured God's champions with spear and flame; Juliana, 17; Grein, i. 374. The vowel-change in A.S. gastan, E. E. gesten, later gasten, is just parallel to that in A. S. loston, E. E. lesten, mod. E. last. The final t is properly excrescent, just as in our hes-t. behes-t, from A.S. has, a command. B. Hence the root is an A.S. gás-, answering to Goth. geis- or gais-, to terrify, which appears in the compounds us-gaisjan, to make afraid, and us-geisnan, to be amazed ; where, by the way, the prefix us- is the same as in E. a-gast. The primary notion of this gais- is to fix, stick, fasten; hence, to fix to the spot, to root to the spot with terror; cf. Lat. harrere to stick fast, cling; as in 'adspectu conterritus hasit;' Verg. Aen. iii. 597; 'uox faucibus hasit;' Aen. ii. 774; 'Attonitis hastere animis,' i. e. they were utterly agast; Aen. iii. 539. –  $\sqrt{GHAIS}$ , to stick fast; which appears not only in Goth. us-gaisjan and usgeisnan, and in Lat. hærere, but in the Lithuanian gaisz-tu, to tarry, delay, with its derivatives ; Fick, i. 576, ii. 359. ¶ It will now, perhaps, be perceived that the word agazed, if it be spelt agased, is really a good one, and corresponds to an older form without an inserted t. Nor is it the only instance; for we find another in 'the were so sore agased' = they were so sorely terrified ; Chester Plays, ii. 85.

AGIILE, active. (F., -L.) Shak. has agile once; Romeo, iii. 1. 171.-F. agile, which Colgrave explains by 'nimble, agile, active,' &c. - Lat. agilis, nimble, lit. moveable, easily driven about; formed by suffix -ilis from agere, to drive. - AG, to drive. See Agent. Der. agil-ity, from F. agilité (Cotgrave); from Lat. agilitatem, acc.

to drive, and strictly signifies 'to drive about often.'-  $\sqrt{AG}$ , to drive. See Agent. Der. agitat-ion, agitat-or.

AGLET, a tag of a lace; a spangle. (F, -L.) Spenser has aygulet, F. Q. ii. 3. 26. Sir T. More has aglet, Works, p. 675h. – F. aiguillette, a point (Cotgrave), dimin. of aiguille, a needle; formed by adding the dimin. fem. suffix ette. – Low Lat. aeucula, dimin. of Lat. acus, a needle. –  $\sqrt{AK}$ , to pierce. See Aoute. AGNAIL, a corn on the foot; obsolete. (F, -L.) a. Much turns on the definition. In Ash's Dictionary, we find it to be 'the disease called a witlow (sie)'; but in Todd's Johnson it is 'a disease of the nails; a whitlow; an inflammation round the nails; ' without any citation or authority. The latter definition proves that the definer was thinking of the provincial Eng. Angnails, rightly explained by Halliwell to be 'small pieces of partially separated skin about the roots of the finger-nails;' but this is really quite a different word, and is plainly made up of hang and nail, unless it be a cor-ruption of A.S. angnægl, a sore by the nail (occurring in A.S. Leechdoms, ii. 81, § 34, but given in Lye's Dictionary without a citation). β. The old word agnal, now probably obsolete, meant something different, viz. a swelling or a corn. It means 'a corn' in Rider's Dictionary, A. D. 1640 (Webster), and seems to have been especially used of a corn on the foot. Palsgrave has 'agnayle upon one's too;' and in MS. Med. Linc. fol. 300 is a receipt 'for agnayls one [on] mans fete or womans' (Halliwell). The fuller form is angnail, asserted by Grose to be a Cumberland word, and explained to mean a corn on the toe (Halliwell). - F. angonaille; Cotgrave has 'angonailles, botches, pockie bumps, or sores;' also called angonages, according to the same authority. The Italian has likewise the double form anguinaglia and anguinaja, but these are generally explained to mean the groin; though there is little reason for con-necting them with Lat. ingues. Rather, turning to Ducange, we should note Low Lat. anguen, a carbuncle; anguinalia, with the same sense ; and anghio, a carbuncle, ulcer, redness. I should connect these with Lat. angina, quinsy, Gr. dyxóny, a throttling, strangling; from Lat. angere, Gr.  $\delta\gamma\chi_{exv}$ , to choke; from  $\sqrt{AGH}$  or ANGH, to choke, compress, afflict. From the same root come anger, anxious, &c.; and the notion of 'inflamed' is often expressed by 'angry.' Hence I should suppose the original notion in the Low Lat. anghio and angues to be that of 'inflammation,' whence that of 'swelling' would at once follow. A corn would, according to this theory, be called an agnail because caused by irritation or pressure. And from the same root must also come the first syllable of the A.S. ang-nagl, which may, after all, be the true source of both angnail and agnail. The word is one of some difficulty; see remarks in the Errota. [#]

AGO, AGONE, gone away, past. (E.) Sometimes explained as if a miswritten form of ygo, the old pp. of go. This explanation is altogether wrong as far as the prefix is concerned. It is the M. E. ago, agon, agoon, by no means uncommon, and used by Chaucer, C. T. 1782. This is the pp. of the verb agon, to go away, pass by, used in other parts of the verb. Thus we find 'bis worldes wele al agoth' = this world's wealth all passes away; Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 160. -A.S. dgdn, to pass away (not uncommon); Grein, i. 20. -A.S. d-G. er, Goth. ws-); and gdn, to go. See Go. Cf. G. ergehen, to come to pass (which is one meaning of A. S. dgdn; Goth. usgaggan, to go forth. AGOG, in eagerness; hence, eager. (Scand.) Well known as

AGOG, in eagemess; hence, eager. (Scand.) Well known as occurring in Cowper's John Gilpin; 'all agog,' i.e. all eager. Gog signifies eagemess, desire; and is so used by Beaumont and Fletcher: 'you have put me into such a gog of going, I would not stay for all the world;' Wit Without Money, iii. I; see Todd's Johnson. To 'set agog' is to put in eagemess, to make one eager or anxious to do a thing. Cf. F. wive a gogo, to live in clover, lit. according to one's desire; an avoir à gogo, to have in full abundance, to have all one can wish. Both F. and E. terms are of Scand. origin. Cf. Icel. gagjask, to be all agog, to bend eagerly forward and peep; also gagjur, fem. pl., only used in the phrase standa á gægjum, to stand agog, or on tiptoe (of expectation); Cleasby and Vigfusson's Icel. Dict. [*]

AGONY, great pain. (F., -L., -Gk.) The use of the word by Gower (C. A. i. 74) shews that the word was not derived directly from the Gk., but from the French. Wyclif employs agonye in the translation of Luke, xxii. 43, where the Vulgate has 'factus in agonia.' -F. agonie (Cotgrave). -Lat. agonia, borrowed from Gk.  $d\gamma \omega \nu ia$ , agony; orig. a contest, wrestling, struggle. -Gk.  $d\gamma \omega \nu$ , (1) an assembly, (2) an arena for combatants, (3) a contest, wrestle. -Gk.  $d\gamma \varepsilon \nu$ , to drive, lead. -4/AG, to drive. See Agant. Der. agonise, from F. agoniser, 'to grieve extreamly, to be much perplexed' (Cotgrave): whence agonis-ing, agonis-ing-ly; Agonistes, directly from Gr.  $d\gamma \omega \nu \iota \sigma \tau \gamma \mu$ , a champion. Also ant-agon-ist, ant-agon-iste.

AGRIOULTURE, the art of cultivating fields. (L.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. vi. c. 3. § 7. – Lat. agricultura (Cicero). – Lat. agri, gen. of ager, a field; and cultura, culture. Ager is cognate with E. acre, and cultura is from Lat. colere, to till, fut. act. part. culturus. See Acro and Culture. Der. agricultur-al, agricultur-ist.

AGROUND, on the ground. (E.) For on ground. 'On grounde and on lofte,' i. e. aground and aloft, both on the earth and in heaven; Piers Plowman, A. i. 88; the B-text reads 'agrounde and aloft,' i. 90. See Abed, Afoot, &c.

aloit, i. 90. See Abed, Aloot, etc. AGUE, a fever-fit. (F., -L.) M. E. agw, ague. Spelt agw in Rich. Coer de Lion, ed. Weber, l. 3045. 'Brenning agwes,' P. Plowman, B. xx. 33. 'Agwe, sekenes, acuta, querquera;' Prompt. Parv. p. 8. 'A fever terciane Or an agw;' Chaucer, C. T. 16445. -O. F. agu, ague, sharp, acute; mod. F. aigu. -Lat. acutus, acute, fem. acuta. The explanation is found in Ducange, who speaks of 'febris acuta,' a violent fever, s. v. Acuta; observe that the Prompt. Parv. gives Lat. acuta as the equivalent of M. E. agwe. The final e in ague is due to the fem. form of O. F. agu.  $-\sqrt{AK}$ , sharp. See Acute:

AH I an interjection. (F, -L.) Not in A.S. 'He bleynte and cryed a! As that he stongen were to the herte,' Chaucer, C. T. 1080. In the 1ath century we find a wak or a wey, i.e. ah! woe! See Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 25, 29; Rob. of Glouc. p. 25. -0. F. a, interjection. -L at. ak, interjection. + Gr. d, int. + Skt. d, int. + Icel. a, ai, int. +0. H. G. d, int. + Lithuanian d, dd, int. See Fick, i. 4. We also find M. E. a ha! as in Towneley Myst. p. 214. This is formed by combining a with ha! Mätmer remarks that a ha! in Mid. English denotes satisfaction or irony. See Ha!

AHEAD, in front. (E.) Prob. for on head, where on signifies in, as common in Mid. English. By analogy with afoot, abed, asleep, &c. It is used by Milton, on the Doctrine of Divorce; and by Dryden, A. B. bk. v. 1. 206. See Head.

AHOY, interj. used in hailing a boat. (Dutch.) Like many seaterms, it is Dutch. Du. hui, pronounced very nearly like hoy, interj. used in calling to a person. The prefixed a- is here a mere interjectional addition, to give the word more force.

tional addition, to give the word more force. AID, to help. (F., -L.) Used by Chaucer, who has 'to the aiding and helping of thin euen-Christen;' Pers. Tale, De Ira (where he speaks of swearing). -O. F. aider, to aid. -Lat. adjutare, to aid, in later Latin aiwtare, afterwards shortened to aidree; see Brachet. Adjutare is the frequent. form of adjuware, to assist. -Lat. ad, to; and inware, to help, pp. intus. - $\sqrt{YU}$ , to guard; cf. Skt. yu, to keep back; Fick, ii. 202. See Adjutant. Der. aid, sb.; also F. aide-de-camp, lit. one who aids in the field. From the same root, adjutant.

AIL, to feel pain; to give pain. (E.) M. E. ailen, rarely ailen. 'What eileth the?' Chaucer, C. T. 10S1. Spelt esten, Ormulum, 4767.— A. S. eglan, to trouble, pain; Grein, i. 222. Cf. A. S. egle, troublesome, hostile. + Goth. agian, only in the comp. us-agian, to trouble exceedingly, to distress, to weary out, Luke, xviii. 5. Cf. Goth. agio, anguish; aglitha, agony, tribulation; aglus, difficult, hard. From a stem ag., with a suffixed l, often used to give a frequentative force; so that agl-means 'to keep on vexing' or 'to distress continually.' The stem ag- corresponds to mod. E. awe, and appears in A. S. eg-sea, awe, terror, distress, eg-sian, to frighten; also in Goth. ag-is, fright, af-ag-jan, to terrify; also in Gk. dx-os, distress, pain.  $-\sqrt{AGH}$ , to feel distress, orig. to choke; Fick, i, 481. See Awe. Der. ail-ment, in Kersey, a hybrid compound, with F. suffix.

AIM, to endeavour after. (F., -L.) M. E. amen, aimen, eimen, to guess at, to estimate, to intend. 'No mon vpon mold might ayme the number;' Will. of Paleme, 1596, 3819, 3875. Wyclif has eymeth, Levit. xxvii. 8. 'Gessyn or amyn, estimo, arbitror;' Prompt. Parv. p. 190. 'I ayme, I mente or gesse to hyt a thynge;' Palsgrave. 'After the mesure and eymyng [Lat. æstimationem] of the synne;' Wycl. Levit. v. 18; cf. xxvii. 2, 8. -O. F. assmer, to make an offer to strike, to purpose, determine, intend;' also 'esme, an aime, or levell taken; also, a purpose, intention, determination.' The s was dropped in English before m just as in blame, from O. F. blasmer, phantom for phantasm, emerald from O. F. essmeralde, ammell (i. e. offer.amel) from O. F. esmail (translated by Cotgrave 'ammell or enammell'), &c. The O. F. esmer = Lat. æstimare, but O. F. aesmer = Lat. adastimare; yet they may have been confused. There was also an intermediate form eesmer. See examples in Bartsch's Chrestomathie Française, 69, 22; 116, 33; 394, 37. - Lat. assimare, to esti-mate, perhaps with the prefix ad, to, about. See Estimate. Der. aim, sh., aim-less.

AIR, the atmosphere, &c. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. air, eir. Spelt air in Mandeville's Travels, p. 312; erre in Chaucer, C. T. Group G. 767 (Can. Yeom. Tale). - F. air, air. - Lat. aër, air. - Gk. dhp, air, mist; the stem being  $dF \epsilon_{P}$ , according to Curtius, i. 483. – Gr.  $d\epsilon_{P}$ , to breathe; root  $dF = \sqrt{AW}$ , to blow, according to Curtius, who remarks that 'av changes into va, as and into vaks,' the latter being an allusion to the relation between Gk. aufeur and the E. war, to grow, Cf. Skt. vá, to blow, and E. wind, q. v. Der. air, verb, air-y, air-less, air-gun, &c. ¶ For Air (2), see Errata, &c.

AISLE, the wing of a church. (F., -L.) Spelt aisle in Gray's Elegy and by Addison; see Richardson. - F. aile, a wing; sometimes spelt aisle, as Cotgrave notices. But the s is a meaningless insertion. -Lat. āla, a wing; the long a being due to contraction. It is no doubt contracted from axia or axula, whence the dimin. axilla, a wing; see Cicero, Orat. 45. 153; Fick, i. 478. The proper meaning of axula is rather 'shoulder-blade' or 'shoulder'; cf. G. achsel. It is a diminutive of Lat. axis, a word borrowed by us from that language. See Axis, and Axle. (Max Müller quotes the passage from Cicero; see his Lectures, ii. 309, 8th ed.) [†]

ATT, a small island. (E.) A contraction of ey-or, dimin. of ey, an sland. _Cf. Angles ey, Angle's island; &c. See Eyot. [†] island.

AJAR, on the turn; only used of a door or window. (E.) A corruption of a-char, which again stands for on char, i.e. on the turn; from M. E. char, a turn.

'Quharby the day was dawyn, weil I knew;

A schot-wyndo onschet a litill on char,

Persauyt the morning bla, wan, and bar.

G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil; Prol. to Book vii. It means 'I undid a shot-window, a little ajar.' [Jamieson quotes this, and explains it rightly, but wrongly adds another example in which on char means in a chariot, the Latin being bijugis; An. x. 399.] The M. E. char was earlier spelt cherre, as in the Ancren Riwle, pp. 36, 408; it is not an uncommon word; see seven ex-amples in Stratmann. - A. S. on cyrre, on the turn; where cyrre is the dat. case of eyrr, a turn, turning, time, period. - A. S. cyrran, cirran, cerran, to turn; Grein, i. 156, 161, 180. + O.H.G. cheren, cherren (G. kehren), to turn. -  $\checkmark$  GAR, perhaps in the sense to turn; cf. Gk. yupos, round, yupos, a circle. See Fick, i. 73; who assigns a different sense. [+] AKIMBO, in a bent position. (C. and E.) In the Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, oddly spelt in kenebouse; 'The host. set his hond in kenebouse; 'I. 1838 (l. 1105 in Urry). Dryden uses kimbo as an adj. in the sense of 'bent,' 'curved.' 'The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot carved ;' Virgil, Ecl. 3. a. It is clear that in kenebowe, lit. in a sharp curve, is a corruption, because kene in M. E. is not used to denote 'sharp' in such a context. Also is is here a translation of the older form on, of which a is a shortened form (through the intermediate form an). the intermediate form an).  $\beta$ . Again, we may feel tolerably certain that the right word, in place of kene, is the M. E. cam or kam, of Celtic origin (W. cam, crooked); which is sometimes attenuated to kim, as in the reduplicated phrase kim-kam, used by Holland to signify 'all awry.' Hence akimbo stands for on-kimbow, and that again for on-kam-bow, i.e. lit. 'in a bend bend.'  $\gamma$ . The last syllable  $\gamma$ . The last syllable is, in fact. superfluous, and only repeats the sense of the second one. This is quite a habit of the E. language, which abounds in words of this character, especially in place-names. Thus Derwentwater means 'white water water,' luke-warm means 'warm warm,' and so on. The addition of the E. bow was a necessary consequence of the W. cam not being well understood. Cf. Gael. camag, anything curved, a bent stick; Scot. cammock, a bent stick; Irish camog, a twist or winding, a curve; camlorgain, a bandy leg, &c. [†] AKIN, of kin. (E.) For of kin; 'near of kin' and 'near akin' are equivalent expressions. A- for of occurs also in Adown, q.

ALABASTER, a kind of soft marble. (L.-Gk.) 'Alabaster, a stone;' Prompt. Parv. p. 8. Wyclif has 'a boxe of alabastre' in Mark, xiv. 3, borrowed from the Vulgate word alabastrum. - Lat. alabastrum, and alabaster, alabaster. - Gk. alabastroe, alabastrov, alabaster, more properly written  $d\lambda \Delta\beta a \sigma \tau \sigma \sigma$ ; also  $d\lambda \alpha \beta a \sigma \tau \tau \tau \eta s$ ,  $d\lambda \alpha \beta a \sigma \tau \tau \tau \tau \eta s$ , and to be derived from Alabastron, the name of a town in Egypt; see Pliny, Nat. Hist. 36. 8, 37. 10. [†] ALACK, interjection. (E.) Very common in Shakespeare; Temp.

i. 2. 151; L. L. L. ii. 186, &c. Said in some dictionaries to be *a corruption of alas l' which would be an unusual phonetic -Gk.) Chaucer has alkamistre, an alchemist; C.T. Group G, change. It is more probably a corruption of 'ah l lord l' or 'ah l 1204. The usual M. E. forms of the word are alkanamys and lord Christ !' Otherwise, it may be referred to M. E. lak, signifying loss, failure, defect, misfortune. 'God in the gospel grymly repre-ueth Alle that lakken any lyf, and lakkes han hem-selue' = God grimly reproves all that blame anybody, and have faults themselves; P. Plowman. x. 262. Thus alack would mean 'ah ! failure' or 'ah ! a loss;' and alackaday would stand for 'ah! lack on (the) day,' i. e. ah ! a loss to-day ! It is almost always used to express failure. Cf. alack the day! Shak. Pass. Pilgrim, 227. In modern English lack seldom has this sense, but merely expresses 'want.'

ALACRITY, briskness. (Lat.) Sir T. More has alacritie, Works, p. 75 b. [The word must have been borrowed directly from the Latin, the termination being determined by analogy with such words as bounty (from O. F. bonte, bontet, Lat. acc. bonilatem). This we know because the O. F. form was alaigreté, which see in Cotgrave; the form alacrité being modern.] - Lat. acc. alacritatem, nom. alacritas, briskness. - Lat. alacer, brisk. Perhaps from AL, to drive, Fick, i. 500; he compares Gk. ¿λαίνειν, ¿λάειν, to drive; Goth. al-jan, zeal. ¶ The Ital. allegro is likewise from the Goth. al-jan, zeal. Lat. alacer

ALARM, a call to arms. (F., -Ital., -Lat.) M. E. alarme, used interjectionally, to call men to arms. 'Alarme! Alarme! quath that lord;' P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 92. -F. alarme, a call to arms. Cotgrave gives 'Alarme, an alarum.' Brachet says that the word alarme was first introduced into French in the 16th century, but this must be a mistake, as it occurs in the Glossary to Bartsch's Crestomathie, which contains no piece later than the 15th century, and it is obvious that it must even have come to England before the close of the 14th century. The form, however, is not French, as the O. F. form was as armes; and we actually find as armes in Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 3674. It was obviously merely borrowed from Italian, and may very well have become generally known at the time of the crusades. - Ital. all'arme, to arms 1 a contracted form of alle arme, where alle stands for a le, lit. ' to the,' and arme is the pl. of arma, a weapon, not now used in the singular. The corresponding Latin words would be ad illa arma, but it is remarkable that the Lat. pl. arma is neuter, whilst the Ital. pl. arme is feminine. Ducange, however, notes a Low Lat. sing. arma, of the feminine gender; and thus Ital. all'arme answers to Low Lat. ad illas armas. See Arms. Der. alarm ist. ¶ Alarm is a doublet of alarum, q. v. ALARUM, a call to arms; a loud sound. (F., - Ital., - Lat.) M. E. alarom; mention is made of a 'loude alarom' in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1207. The o is no real part of the word, but due to the strong trilling of the preceding r. Similarly in Havelok the Dane, the word arm is twice written arum, 11. 1982, 2408; harm is written harum, and corn is written koren. It is a well-known Northern peculiarity. Thus alarom is really the word alarm, which see above.

ALAS, an interjection, expressing sorrow. (F., - L.) alas, allas. Occurs in Rob. of Glouc. pp. 125, 481, 488; and in Havelok, l. 1878. - O. F. alas, interjection. [The mod. F. has only kélas, formed with interj. ké in place of the interj. a, the second member las being often used as an interjection in O.F. without either prefix.]=O.F. a, ah ! and las ! wretched (that I am)! Cf. Ital. aki lasso (or lassa), ah! wretched (that I am) !- Lat. ak ! interj. and lassus, fatigued, miserable. See Fick, i. 750, where he supposes lassus to stand for lad-tus, and compares it with Goth. lats, which is the E. late. See Late.

ALB, a white priestly vestment.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$ M. E. albe, Rob. of Brunne's tr. of Langtoft, p. 319; and in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 163. = O. F. albe, an alb. = Low Lat. alba, an alb; fem. of Lat. albas, white. Cf. Gk. άλφόs, a white rash; O. H. G. elbiz, a swan; See Curtius, i. 364. From the same root, album, albumen

ALBATROSS, a large sea-bird. (F., - Port.) The word occurs in Hawkesworth's Voyages, A.D. 1773 (Todd's Johnson). - F. albatros. 'The name albatross is a word apparently corrupted by Dampier [died 1712] from the Portuguese alcatraz, which was applied by the early navigators of that nation to cormorants and other sea-birds; Eng. Cyclopædia. – Portuguese alcatraz, a sea-fowl.  $\P$  It has been supposed that the prefix al is the Arabic article, and that the word was originally Arabic. [\*]

ALBUM, a white book. (Lat.) Lat. album, a tablet, neuter of albus, white. See Alb. [†]

ALBUMEN, white of eggs. (Lat.) Merely borrowed from Latin albumen oui, the white of an egg, rarely used. More commonly album oui. From Lat. albus, white (whence albu-men, lit. whiteness). See Alb. Der. albumin-ous.

ALCHEMY, the science of transmutation of metals. (F., - Arab., alconomy; P. Plowman, A. xi. 157; Gower, C. A. ii. 89 - O. F. alchemie, arquemie; see arquemie in Roquefort. - Arabic al-kimiú; in Freytag, iv. 75 b; a word which is from no Arabic root, but simply composed of the Arabic def. article al, prefixed to the late Greek xyµeia, given by Suidas (eleventh century). - Late Gk.  $\chi\eta\mu e ia$ , chemistry, a late form of  $\chi\nu\mu e ia$ , a mingling. – Gk.  $\chi e e v$ , to pour (root  $\chi\nu$ ); cognate with fundere. –  $\sqrt{GHU}$ , to pour out; Curtius, i. 252; Fick, i. 585. See Chomist. ALCOHOL, pure spirit. (F., - Arabic.) Borrowed from F. alcool, formerly spelt alcohol (see Brachet), the original signification of which is a fine, impalpable powder. 'If the same salt shall be reduced into alcohol, as the chymists speak, or an impalpable powder, the particles and intercepted spaces will be extremely lessened; Boyle (in Todd's Johnson). - Arab. alkahál or alkohl, compounded of al, the definite article, and kahal or kohl, the (very fine) powned of antimony, used to paint the eyebrows with. See Richardson's Dict. p. 1173; cf. kuhl, collyrium; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 484. The extension of meaning from 'fine powder' to 'rectified spirit' is European, not Arabic. Der. alcohol-ic, alcohol-ize. [†] ALCORAN, see KORAN. (A! is the Arabic def. article.) ALCOVE, a recess, an arbour. (F., - Ital., - Arabic.) 'The Ladies stood within the alcove; ' Burnet, Hist, of His Own Time, an. 1688 (R.)-F. alcove, a word introduced in the 16th century from Italian (Brachet).-Ital. alcovo, an alcove, recess; the same word as the Span. alcoba, a recess in a room; the Spanish form being of Arabic origin. - Arab. al, def. article, and gobbah, a vaulted space or tent : Freytag, iii. 388 a; gubbah. a vault, arch, dome; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 467. See Alcova in Diez, whose explanation is quite satis-factory. ¶ Not to be confused (as is usual) with the English word cove.

ALDER, a kind of tree. (E.) Chaucer has alder, C. T. 2923 (Kn. Ta. 2063). 'Aldyr-tre or orvelle tre, alnus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 9. [The letter d is, however, merely excrescent, exactly as in alder-first, often used for aller-first, i.e. first of all; or as in alderliefest, used by Shakespeare for aller-liefest. Hence the older form is aller.] 'Coupet de aunne, of allerne ;' Wright's Vocabularies, i. 171 ; 13th century. - A.S. alr, an alder-tree = Lat. alnus; Ælfric's Glossary, Nomina Arborum. + Du. els, alder; elzen, aldern; elzen-boom, alder-tree. + Icel. elrir, elri, ölr, an alder. + Swed. al. + Dan. elle, el. + O. H. G. elira, erila, erla; M. H. G. erle; G. erle; prov. G. eller, else. + Lat. alnus. + Lithuanian elksznis (with excrescent k), an alder-tree. + Church-Slavonic elicha, jelucha, olcha, an alder-tree; Russian olekha. See Fick, i. 500, who gives the Lith. and Slavonic forms. and gives alsna as the original form of the stem. - AL, to grow; connected with  $\sqrt{AR}$ , to rise. From the same root we have old, ad-ult, elm; cf. Göthe's 'erl-king,' i.e. alder-king. See Elm. ¶ Ihre's notion of connecting alder with a word al, water, which he supposes to exist in some Teutonic dialects, is wholly inadequate to account for the wide-spread use of the word. See Alimont.

ALDERMAN, an officer in a town. (E.) M. E. alderman, al-dermon. 'Princeps, aldermon;' Wright's Vocabularies, p. 88; 12th century. Spelt aldermon in Layamon, i. 60. - Northumbrian aldormon, used to explain centurio in Mark, xv. 39, and occurring in many other passages in the Northumbrian glosses; West-Saxon ealdor-man, a prince, lit. 'elder-man.' See Turner's Hist. of the Anglo-Saxons, bk. viii. c. 7. - A. S. ealdor, an elder; and man, a man. - A. S. eald, old; and man. See Old, Elder.

ALE, a kind of beer. (E.) M. E. ale, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 177; Layamon. ii. 604. – A. S. ealu, Grein, i. 244. + Icel. öl. + Swed. öl. + Dan. öl. + Lithuanian, alus, a kind of beer. + Church-Slavonic olu, beer. q See Fick, iii. 27, who gives the Lith. and Slavonic forms, and gives alu as the original form of the stem. The root is rather al, to burn, than al, to nourish. [The nature of the connection with Gaelic and Irish ol, drink, is not quite clear.] Der. brid-al, i.e.

bride-ale ; ale-stake (Chaucer), ale-house, ale-wife. ALEMBIC, a vessel formerly used for distilling. (F., -- Span., --Arab., -Gk.) Also limbeck, as in Shak. Macb. i. 7. 67, but that is a contracted form. Chaucer has the pl. alembyses, C. T. Group G, 774. - F. alambique, 'a limbeck, a stillatory;' Cot. - Span. alambique. - Arabic al-anbik; where al is the definite article, and anbik is 'a still, adapted from the Greek. – Gk.  $\delta\mu\beta\mu$ , a cup, goblet, used by Dioscorides to mean the cap of a still. – Gk.  $\delta\mu\beta\eta$ , the Ionic form of dubow, the foot of a goblet; see Curtius, i. 367; a word related to Gk. supparios, Lat. numbo, the boss of a shield. - Graco-Lat. √AMBH; Skt.√ NABH, to burst, tear, swell out (Curtius). [†]

ALERT, on the watch. (F., - Ital., - Lat.) Aleriness, Spectator, no. 566. 'The prince, finding his rutters [knights] alert, as the Italians say, &c.; Sir Roger Williams, Act of the Low Countries, 1618, p. 87 (R.)-F. alerte, formerly allerte, and in Montaigne and watch; properly in the phrase stare all'erta, to be on one's guard. - Ital. alla (for a la), at the, on the; and erta, fem. of adj. erto, erect. -Lat. ad, prep. at; illam, fem. accus. of ille, he; and erectam, fem. accus. of erectus, erect. See Erect. ¶ The phrase 'on the alert' contains a reduplication; it means 'on-the-at-the-erect.' Der. alert-ness.

ALGEBRA, calculation by symbols. (Low Lat., - Arab.) occurs in a quotation from Swift in Todd's Johnson. a. Bra-Tt a. Brachet (s. v. algebre) terms algebra a medieval scientific Latin form; and For the second second at medieval scientific Latin form; and Prof. De Morgan, in Notes and Queries, 3 S. ii. 319, cites a Latin poem of the 13th century in which 'computation' is oddly called 'ludus algebra almuegrabalaque.'  $\beta$ . This phrase is a corruption of al jabr wa al motabalah, lit. the putting-together-of-parts and the equation, to which the nearest equivalent English phrase is 'restoration and reduc-Y. In Palmer's Pers. Dictionary, col. 165, we find 'Arabic jabr, tion.' power, violence; restoration, setting a bone; reducing fractions to integers in Arithmetic; aljabr wa'lmukábalah, algebra.' – Arabic jabara, to bind together, to consolidate. Mukábalah is lit. ' comparison; ' from mukábil, opposite, comparing; Palmers Pers. Dict. col. 591. Cf. He-new gábbar, to be strong. Der. algebra-ic, algebra-ic-al, algebra-ist. ALGUAZIL, a police-officer. (Span., – Arab.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Span. Curate, v. 2. - Span. alguacil, a police-officer. - Arab. al, def. art., the; and wazir, a vizier, officer, lieutenant. See Vizier. ALGUM, the name of a tree; sandal-wood. (Heb., - Aryan.) Called algum in 2 Chron. ii. 8, ix. 10, 11; corrupted to almug in

I Kings, x. 11, 12. A foreign word in Hebrew, and borrowed from some Aryan source, being found in Sanskrit as valguka, sandal-wood. 'This valguka, which points back to a more original form valgu [for the syllable -ka is a suffix] might easily have been corrupted by Phenician and Jewish sailors into algum, a form, as we know, still further corrupted, at least in one passage of the Old Testament, into almug. Sandal-wood is found indigenous in India only. and there chiefly on the coast of Malabar;' Max Müller, Lectures, i. 232, 8th ed.

ALLAS, otherwise. (Lat.) Law Latin; alias, otherwise; from the same root as E. else. See Else.

ALIBI, in another place. (Lat.) Law Latin alibi, in another place, elsewhere, - Lat, ali-us, another; for the suffix, cf. Lat, i-bi, place, elsewhere, - Lat. an-as, another, i.e. the there, where. See above. ALLEN, strange; a stranger. (F., - L.) We find 'an aliene knyght;' K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 3919. Wyclif has alienys, i.e. strangers, Foolus vi 26. Aliens suld Matt. xvii. 25 ; also 'an alien womman,' Ecclus. xi. 36. 'Aliens suld sone fond our heritage to winne;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 140. - O. F. alien, allien, a stranger (Roquefort). - Lat. alienus, a stranger; or as adj., strange. - Lat. alius, another (stem ali-, whence ali-onus is formed). + Gk. dalos, another. + Goth. alis, other, another. + Old Irish aile, another. From European stem ALIA, another, Fick, i. 501; see Curtius, i. 445. See Else. Der. alien-able, alienate, alien-at-ion ; cf. al-ter, al-ter-nate, al-ter-c-at-ion.

ALIGHT, (1) to descend from; (2) to light upon. (E.) 1. M. E. alighten, alihten, particularly used of getting off a horse. 'Heo letten alle tha horsmen i than wude alihten '= they caused all the horsemen to alight in the wood; Layamon, iii. 59. 2. Also M.E. alighten, alikten; as in 'ur louerd an erthe alighte her'- our Lord alighted here upon earth; Rob. of Glouc., p. 468. β. The two senses of the word shew that the prefix a- has not the same force in both cases. It stands (1) for of-, i. e. oflikten, to alight from; and (2) for on-, i. e. onliken, to light upon; but, unfortunately, clear instances of these are wanting. v. The A.S. only has the simple form liktan or geliktan, and the ambiguous álíktan (apparently of-liktan), to get down, in Ælfric's Grammar, De Quarta Conj. § iii. The simple form liktan, to alight (from horseback), occurs in the Death of Byrhtnoth, ed, Grein, l. 23. [The radical sense of lihtan is to render light, to remove a burden from.] - Northumbrian likt, leht, West-Saxon leoht, light (i. e. unheavy); see A. S. Gospels, St. Matt. xi. 30. See Light, ALIKE, similar. (E.) M. E. alike, alyke, adj. and adv. 'Alyke or euynlyke, equalis; alyke, or lyke yn lykenes, similis;' Prompt. Parv. p. 10. Also olike, Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 2024. a. The forms alike, olike, are short for anlike, onlike; the adverbial form retains the final e, but the adj. is properly without it.  $\beta$ . The adj. form anlik is also written anlich, as in ' thet is him anlich' = that is like him ; Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 186. Y. The prefix is therefore a- or or, short for an- or on, and corresponding to A.S. on- - A.S. onlic, adj. like, Grein, ii. 348; also written anlie, Grein, i. 8. - A. S. on, prep.

on, upon; and lic, like. (The fullest form appears in the Gothic adv. analeiko, in like manner. See Like, and On. ALIMENT, food. (F., - L.) Milton has alimental, P. L. v. 424; Bacon has 'medicine and aliment,' Nat. Hist. sect. 67. - F. 'aliment, food, sustenance, nourishment ;' Cot. - Lat. alimentum, food ; formed with suffix -mentum from alere, to nourish. [This suffix is due to a combination of the Aryan suffixes -man and -ta, on which see Schlei-Rabelais à l'erte, on the watch; originally a military term, borrowed combination of the Aryan suffixes -man and -ia, on which see Schlei-from Italian in the 16th century (Brachet). - Ital. all'erta, on the cher.] - Lat. alere, to nourish. + Goth. alan, to nourish. + Icel. ala, to nourish, support. Cf. Old Irish altram, nourishment.  $-\sqrt{AL}$ , to grow; and, transitively, to make to grow, to nourish, from a still older  $\sqrt{AR}$ , to rise up. See Fick, i. 499, Curtius, i. 444. Der. aliment-al, aliment-ary, aliment-arion; cf. also alimony (from Lat. alimonium, sustenance, which from stem ali-, with suffixes -man and -ja).  $\P$  From the same root al- we have also ad-ult, old, elder, alder, ad others.

ALIQUOT, proportionate. (Lat.) Borrowed from Lat. aliquot, several; which from Lat. ali-us, other, some, and quot, how many. Aliquot nearly corresponds, in general force, to Eng. somewhat.

ALIVE, in life. (E.) A contraction of the M. E. phrase on line, in life, where on signifies in, and line or lyne (live, lyne) is the dat. case of lyf, life. 'Yf he haue wyt and his on lyne' = if he has wit, and is alive; Seven Sages, ed. Wright, l. 56. – A. S. on life, alive, Grein, ii. 184; where on is the preposition, and life is dat. case of lif, life. See On and Life.

ALKALI, a salt. (Arabic.) Chaucer has alkaly, C. T. Group G, 810. – Arabic al gali; where al is the def. article, and gali is the name given to the ashes of the plant glass-wort (Salicornia), which abounds in soda. ¶ By some, gali is derived from the Ar. verb galay, to fry (Rich. Dict. p. 1146); Palmer's Pers. Dict. gives 'gali, alkali,' and 'galiyah, a fricassee, curry;' col. 474. Others make gali the name of the plant itself. Der. alkaline, alkal-escent, alkal-oid, alkali-fy.

ALL, every one of. (E.) M. E. al, in the singular, and alle (disyllabic) in the plural : the mod. E. is the latter, with the loss of final e. Chaucer has al a, i.e. the whole of, in the phrase al a companye, C. T. Group G, 996; also at al, i.e. wholly, C. T. Group C, 633. The plural alle is very common. - A. S. eal, sing., ealle, plural; but the mod. E. follows the Northumb. form alle, a gloss to omnes in Mark, xiv. 30. + Icel. allr, sing., allir, pl. + Swed. all, pl. alle. + Dan. al, pl. alle. + Du. al, alle. + O. H. G. al, aller. + Goth. alls, allai. + Irish and Gael. wile. all, every, whole. + W. oll, all, whole, every ¶ When all is used as a prefix, it was formerly spelt with one. only one l, a habit still preserved in a few words. The A.S. form of the prefix is eal-, Northumbrian al-, Icel. al-, Gothic ala-. Hence al-mighty, al-most, al-one, al-so, al-though, al-together, al-ways; and M.E. al-gates, i.e. always. This prefix is now written all in later formations, as all powerful, &c. In all-hallows, i.e. all saints, the double l is correct, as denoting the plural. (BF In the phrase all to-brake, Judges, ix. 53, there is an ambiguity. The proper spelling, in earlier English, would be al tobrak, where al is an adverb, signifying 'utterly,' and tobrak the 3 p. s. pt. t. of the verb tobreken, to break in pieces; so that al tobrak means 'utterly brake in pieces.' The verb tobreken is common; cf. 'Al is tobroken thilke regioun; Chaucer, C. T. 2759.  $\beta$ . There was a large number of similar verbs, such as tobresten, to burst in twain, to cleave in twain, to divide in twain, &c.; see Stratmann's O.E. Dict. pp. 500, 501, 502. Y. Again, al was used before other prefixes be-sides to; as 'he was al awondred;' Will. of Palerne, I. 872; and again 'al biweped for wo;' id. 661. 8. But about A. D. 1500, this idiom became misunderstood, so that the to was often joined to al (misspelt all), producing a form all-to, which was used as an intensive prefix to verbs, yet written apart from them, as in 'we be fallen into the dirt, and be all-to dirtied; 'Latimer, Rem. p. 397. See the article on all to in Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook. B. The gen. pl. of A. S. eal was ealra, in later English written aller, and sometimes alder, with an inserted excrescent d. Hence Shakespeare's alderliefest is for allerliefest, i.e. dearest of all; 2 Hen. VI, i. 1. 28. See Almighty, Almost, Alone, Also, Although, Always, As, Withal; also Hallowmass.

ALLAY, to alleviate, assuage. (E.) [The history of this word as given in the first edition of this work is here repeated, but requires correction; see Errata.] The word itself and its sense is purely French, but its form is English, due to confusion with an older English word now obsolete. I first trace the sense of the word and its origin, and afterwards account for its change of form. GP [To make the confusion still worse, the word now spelt alloy was formerly spelt allay, but we need not here do more than note the fact; see further under Alloy. The modern form of the word should have been allege, but it has nothing to do with the word now so spelt; see Allege. Putting aside alloy and allege, we may now proceed.] a. Allay (properly allege) is the M. E. aleggen, to alleviate, and is really no more than a (French) doublet of (the Latin) alleviate, q. v. 1. 'Alleggyn, or to softe, or relese peyne, allevio; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 9. 2. 'To allege thair saules of payne' = to allay their souls with respect to pain; Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 3894. 3. 'Alle the surgyens of Salerne so sone ne couthen Haue your langoures allegget' = all the surgeons of Salerno could not so soon have allayed your langours; Will, of Palerne, 1033. 4. 'The sight

Si m'alegeoient ma douleur.' = O. F. alegier, aleger (mod. F. alleger), to alleviate, lighten, assuage, soften. - Lat. alleviare, to lighten (Brachet). See further under Alleviate. β. The confusion of form appears so early as in Gower's Confessio Amantis, iii. 273, where we find 'If I thy peines mighte alaie.' Here, instead of alegge, he has written alaie, which is a variant of the obsolete M. E. aleggen, to lay down, the direct descendant of A.S. álecgan, to lay down; a word in which the gg is hard, as in beggar, not softened as in the O. F. aleger, to alleviate. Cf. aleide = alleged, id. i. 91. It so happened that this pure old English aleggen was sometimes used in the sense of to put down, to mitigate, as in ' to allegge alle luther lawes,' i. e. to put down down, to may gate, as in to carge an even of the set o (with soft g) = to alleviate, lighten, soften. The forms and senses of these verbs ran into each other, with the result that the English form prevailed, just as English grammar prevailed over French grammar, whilst the various senses of the French word became familiar. 8. The word is, therefore, truly French in spirit, and a doublet of allevi-ate, whilst overpowered as to form by the A.S. áleegan, a verb formed are, whilst overpowered as to form by the A.S. diegan, a vero formed by prefixing the A.S.  $\dot{a} \cdot (= G. er., Goth. us.)$ , to the common verb leegan, to lay. The confusion first appears in Gower, and has con-tinued ever since, the true sense of A.S. diegan having passed out of mind.  $\P$  Observe another passage in Gower, C. A. iii. 11, viz. 'Which may his sory thurst alaye.'  $[\pi]$ ALLEGE, to affirm. (F., = L.) M.E. aleggen, alegen, to affirm. 'Alleggyn awtours, allego;' Prompt. Parv. p. 9. 'Thei wol aleggen before the true aread exercise to Polymera P  $rig = S^2 = F$  alleger

ALLEGE, to affirm. (F, -L.) M. E. aleggen, alegen, to affirm. 'Alleggyn awtours, allego;' Prompt. Parv. p. 9. 'Thei wol aleggen also, and by the gospel preuen;' P. Plowman, B. xi. 88. – F. alleguer, 'to alleadge, to urge, or produce reasons;' Cot. [I do not find an example in early French, but the word was surely in use, and Roquefort gives the deriv. allegances, signifying 'citations from a written authority.']-Lat. allegare, to send, despatch; also to bring forward, mention. – Lat. al-ad; and legare, to send, appoint. – Lat. lēg, stem of les, law. See Legal. Der. alleg-at-ion. ALLEGIANCE, the duty of a subject to his lord. (F, -G.)

ALLEGIANCE, the duty of a subject to his lord.  $(F_{..}-G_{.})$ Fabyan has allegeaunce, cap. 207. The older form is with one l. 'Of alegeaunce now lemeth a lesson other tweyne;' Richard the Redeles, i. 9. Spelt alegeauns in Wyntown, 7, 8, 14. Formed by prefixing a- (=F. a-, Lat. ad-) to the word legeaunce, borrowed from the O. F. ligance, homage. [The compound aligance does not appear in O. French, as far as I can find.] = O. F. lige, liege; with suffix annee (= Lat. -annie). Of Germanic origin : see Lideree.

-ance (= Lat. -antia). Of Germanic origin; see Liege. ALLEGORY, a kind of parable. (F., = Gk.) The pl. allegories occurs in Tyndal's Prol. to Leviticus, and Sir T. More's Works, p. 1041a. – F. allegorie, an allegory; Cot. – Lat. allegoria, borrowed from Greek, in the Vulgate version of Galat. iv. 24. - Gk.  $d\lambda\lambda\eta\gamma\rho\rhoia$ , a description of one thing under the image of another. – Gk.  $d\lambda\lambda$ -  $\eta\gamma\rho\rho\epsiloni\nu$ , to speak so as to imply something else. – Gk.  $d\lambda\lambda$ -, stem of  $d\lambda\lambda\sigma$ e, another; and  $d\gamma\rho\rho\epsiloniee\nu$ , to speak, a verb formed from  $d\gamma\sigma\rhoia$ , a place of assembly, which again is from  $d\gamma\epsiloni\rho\epsilon\nu$ , to assemble. The prefix d- appears to answer to Skt. sa, together, and - $\gamma\epsiloni\rho\epsilon\nu$  implies a root GAR; see Fick, i. 73. Der. allegor-ic, allegor-ic-al, allegoric-al-ly, allegor-ise, allegor-ist.

ALLEGRO, lively, brisk. (Ital., -Lat.) In Milton's L'Allegro, l'=lo, the Ital. def. article, from Lat. ille, he. The Ital. allegro, brisk, is from Lat. alacrum, acc. of alacer, brisk. See Alaority.

ALLELUIA, ATLELUJAH, an expression of praise. (Hebrew.) Better hallelujah. - Heb. halelú jáh, praise ye Jehovah. -Heb. halelú, praise ye, from halal, to shine, which signifies 'praise' in the Pial voice; and jáh, a shortened form of jehóvah, God. [*]

ALLEVIATE, to lighten, (Lat.) Used by Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead, c. I. Formed as if from alleuiatus, pp. of Low Lat. alleuiare, to alleviate; see note on Abbreviate. - Lat. alleuare, to lighten, which passed into the occasional form alleuiare in late times; Ducange. - Lat. al- = ad; and leuare, to lift up, to lighten. - Lat. leuis, light, of which an older form must have been leguis, cognate with Gk. Acayie, small, and E. light (i.e. un-heavy). - Stem LAGHU, light; Fick, i. 750. See Light, adj. Der. alleuiat-ion. See Allay.

Fick, i. 750. See Light, adj. Der. alleviat-ion. See Allay. ALLEY, a walk. (F., -L.) M. E. aley, alley. 'So long about the aleys is he goon; 'Chaucer, C. T. 10198.-O. See Benfey, and Fick, i. 828. The chief difficulties are (1) the transition from n to l, and (2) the rarity of O. F. aner, to come. a. However, other instances occur of the assumed change, viz. orphelin, Low Lat. orphaninus. (cf. E. orphan); Palerme, Palermo, formerly Panormus; Roussillon, from Lat. acc. Russinonem; Bologne, from Lat. Bononia. B. As to O. F. aner, Diez finds a few clear traces of it; and in Bartsch's Chrestomathie Française, p. 7, it appears in a very old poem on the Passion of Christ; of which the 9th line is 'E dunc orar cum el anned' = and then as He came to pray. This O. F. aner or anner is clearly the same as Ital. andare, to go, which (according to the above theory) is for Lat. anare or adnare. [Brachet instances arrive, q. v. as being similarly generalised from the sense of 'coming by water' to that of similarly generalised from the sense of 'coming by water' to that of 'coming.']  $\gamma$ . Another theory makes the Ital. andare a nasalised form of Lat. aditare, to approach. ALLIANCE, ALLTES. See Ally. ALLIGATION, a rule in arithmetic. (Lat.) 1. The verb alli-gate, to bind together, is hardly in use. Rich. shews that it occurs in Hale's Origin of Mankind (1667), pp. 305, 334. 2. The sb. is formed from this verb by the F. suffix -tion, answering to the Lat. suffix -tionem of the accusative case. - Lat. alligare, to bind together. - Lat. al-= ad; and ligare, to bind. See Ligament.

ALLIGATOR, a crocodile. (Span., -Lat.) Properly it merely means the lizard. In Shak. Romeo, v. 1, 43. A mere corruption from the Spanish. [The F. alligator is borrowed from English.]-Span. el lagarto, the lizard, a name esp. given to the American crocodile, or cayman. 'In Hawkins's Voyage, he speaks of these under the name of alagartoes;' Wedgwood, -Lat. ille, he (whence Ital. il, Span. el, the); and lacerta, a lizard. See Lisard. ALLITERATION, repetition of letters. (Lat.) The well-known line 'For apt alliteration's artful aid' occurs in Churchill's Prophecy of Famine. The stem alliterat- is formed as if from the pp. of a Lat. verb alliterare, which, however, did not exist. This verb is put together as if from Lat. ad literam, i. e. according to the letter. Thus the word is a mere modern invention. See Letter. Der. A verb, to alliterate, and an adj., alliterat-ive, have been invented to match the sb.

ALLOCATE, to place or set aside. (Lat.) Burke, On the Popery Laws, uses allocate in the sense of 'to set aside,' by way of maintenance for children. [On the suffix -ate, see Abbreviate.] -Low Lat. allocatus, pp. of allocare, to allot, a Low Latin form; see Ducange. - Lat. al- = ad; and locare, to place. - Lat. locus, a place. See Locus. Der. allocation. ¶ Allocate is a doublet of allow, to assign. See Allow (1).

ALLOCUTION, an address. (Lat.) Spelt adlocation by Sir G. Wheler (R.) Borrowed from Latin; with F. suffix -tion = Lat. acc. ALLOCUTION, an address. (Lat.) ending -tionem. - Lat. allocutio, adlocutio, an address. - Lat. ad, to; and locutio, a speaking .- Lat. locutus, pp. of loqui, to speak; see Loquacious.

ALLODIAL, not held of a superior ; used of land. (L.,-Scand.) Englished from Low Lat. allodialis, an adj. connected with the sb. allodium. 'The writers on this subject define allodium to be every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without owing any rent or service to any superior;' Blackstone, Comment. b. ii. c. 7. a. The word allocium is 'Merovingian Latin;' Brachet (s. v. alleu). It is also spelt alaudum, alaudium, alodium, alodum, alodis, and means a free inheritance, as distinguished from beneficium, a grant for the owner's life-time only. β. The word appears as alleu in French, which Brachet derives from O. H. G. alod (see Graff), said to mean 'full ownership;' where -od is to be explained as short for wodil, wodal, or odhil, a farm, homestead, or piece of inherited land; = Icel. 60al, a homestead. Y. The prefix al-does not mean 'full,' or 'completely,' but is to be accounted for in a different way ; its nearest equivalent in English is the nearly obsolete word eld, signifying 'old age; ' and the words whence allodium was composed are really the Icel. aldr, old age (E. eld), and obal, a homestead. 8. This is apparent from the following note in the 'Addenda' to Cleasby and Vigfusson's Icelandic Dictionary, p. 777. 'In the Old Norse there is a compound alda-óðal, a property of ages or held for ages or generations, an ancient allodial inheritance; "ok ef eigi er leyst innan priggja vetra, þá verðr sú jörð honum at alda óðali" - and if it be not released within three years, then the estate becomes his allodial property, Diplomatarium Norvagicum, i. 129; "til æfinlegrar eignar ok alda óðals" = for everlasting possession and allodial tenure, id. iii. 88. Then this phrase became metaphorical, in the phrase "at alda öðli "= to everlasting possession, i. e. for ever,' &c. See the whole passage. The transition from ald'obal to allodal or alodal is easy, and would at once furnish a Low Lat. form allodialis, by confusion with the Lat. adjectival form in -alis. e. This suggests, moreover, that the adj. allodialis is really older than the sb. allodium, and that the sb. was formed from the adjective, and not vice versa. See further on this subject s. v. Foudal. B. Having thus arrived at Icel. aldr and doal as the primary words, it remains to trace them further back. 1. The Icel. aldr = E. eld (Shakespeare and Spenser), a sb. from the adj. old; see Old. 2. The Icel. 60al = A. S. 68el, one's native inheritance or patrimony, and is from Icel. adal, nature, disposition, native quality, closely connected with A.S. adde, noble (whence Etheling, a prince), and O. H. G. adal (G. adel), noble. The remoter origin of the word is not clear; see Fick, iii. 14, who compares Gk. draλós, tender, delicate, and driráλλειν, to tend, cherish. [*]

ALLOPATHY, an employment of medicines to produce an effect different to those produced by disease ; as opposed to homeopathy, q. v. (Gk.) Modern. Formed from Gk. άλλο-, crude form of άλλοε, another; and wabos, suffering, from wabeiv, waoxeuv, to suffer. See Pathos. Der. allopath-ic, allopath-ist.

ALLOT, to assign a portion or lot to. (Hybrid; L. and E.) A clumsy hybrid compound; formed by prefixing the Lat. ad (becoming al-before l) to the English word lot. Cotgrave gives 'Allotir, to divide or part, to allot ; ' also ' Allotement, a parting, dividing ; an allotting, or laying out, unto every man his part.' [It is likely that the F. word was borrowed from the English in this case.] Shak. not only has allot, but even allottery, As You Like It, i. 1. 77; and allotted occurs much earlier, viz. in Lord Surrey's translation of the 2nd bk. of the Æneid, 1. 729. See Lot. Der. allot-ment, allott-ery. [+]

ALLOW (1), to assign, grant as a portion or allowance. (F., -L.) 1. Not to be confused with allow in the sense of ' to approve of,' ' to praise,' which is the common sense in old writers; see Luke, xi. 48. Shakespeare has both verbs, and the senses run into one another so that it is not always easy to distinguish between them in every case. Perhaps a good instance is in the Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 302, 'the law allows it,' i. e. assigns it to you. 2. This verb is not in early use, and Shakespeare is one of the earliest authorities for it. - F. allouer, formerly alouer, 'to let out to hire, to appoint or set down a proportion for expence, or for any other employment;' Cot. - Law Lat. allocare, to admit a thing as proved, to place, to use, expend, con-sume; see Ducange. [Blount, in his Law Dict., gives allocation as a term used in the exchequer to signify ' an allowance made upon an account.' See Allocate.] Der. allow-able, allow-able-ness, allowabl-y, allow-ance. Doublet, allocate.

ALLOW (2), to praise, highly approve of. (F., -L.) Sometimes confused with the preceding ; now nearly obsolete, though common in early authors, and of much earlier use than the former. See Luke, xi. 48. M. E. alouen. Chaucer rimes 'I aloue the '= I praise thee, with the sb. youth?, youth; C. T. 10988. -O. F. aloner, later allouer, 'to allow, advow [i. e. advocate], to approve, like well of;' Cot.-Lat. allaudare, adlaudare, to applaud. -Lat. ad, to; and lau-ALLOY, a due proportion in mixing metals. (F.,-L.) [The verb to alloy is made from the substantive, which is frequently spelt alay or allay, though wholly unconnected with the verb allay, to assuge.] M. E. sb. alay; Chaucer has the pl. alayes, C. T. 9043. The sing. alay is in P. Plowman. B. xv. 342; the pp. alayed, alloyed, is in P. Plowman, C. xviii, 79. – O. F. a lai, a lei, according to law or rule. -Lat. ad legem, according to rule, a phrase used with reference to the mixing of metals in coinage. 'Unusquisque denarius cudatur et fat ad legem undecim denariorum ; Ducange. See Law. ¶ In Spanish, the same word ley means both 'law' and 'alloy;' á la ley means 'neatly;' á toda ley means ' according to rule ;' and alear is ' to allov.' [*]

ALLUDE, to hint at. (Lat.) Used by Sir T. More, Works, p. 860. a. - Lat. alludere, to laugh at, allude to - Lat. al- ad; and ludere, to play, pp. lusus. See Ludicrous. Der. allus-ion, allus-ive, allus-ive-ly; from pp. allusus.

ALLURE, to tempt by a bait. (Hybrid.) Sir T. More has alewre, Works, p. 1276c [marked 1274]. From F. à leurre, to the lure or bait; a word of Germanic origin. See Lure. Der. allure-ment. ALLUSION, ALLUSIVE. See Allude.

ALLUVIAL, washed down; applied to soil. (Lat.) Not in early use; the sb. now used in connection with it is alluvium, prop. the neuter of the adj. alluvius, alluvial. In older works the sb. is alluvion, as in Blackstone, Comment. b. ii. c. 16, and in three other quotations in Richardson. This sb. = Lat. allunionem, acc. case of allunio, a washing up of earth, an alluvial formation. - Lat. al-= ad, to, in addition ; and luere, to wash. + Gk. Lober, to wash. - /LU, to wash, cleanse, expiate; Fick, ii. 223. See Lave: From the same root, lave, ab-lu-tion, di-luv-ial.

ALLY, to bind together. (F., -L.) M.E. alien, with one l. Alied to the emperor; Rob. of Glouc. p. 65. [The sh aliance, al-liance, occurs at p. 89. It is spelt alliance in Gower, C. A. i. 199.] = O. F. alier, to bind to. = O. F. a, to; and lier, to bind. = Lat. ad; and ligare, to bind. See Ligament. Der. ally, sb., one bound, pl. alies, allicance. From the same root, alig-arion, q. v. ALMANAC, ALMANACK, a calendar. (F., = Gk.) Spelt almanae by Blackstone, Comment. b. iii. c. 22; almanaek by Fuller, Worthies of Northamptonshire. - F. almanach, 'an almanack, or prognostication ;' Cot. - Low Lat. almanachus, cited by Brachet. -Gk. at µeraxá, used in the 3rd century by Eusebius for 'an almanac see his De Præparatione Evangelica, iii. 4. ed. Gaisford. ¶ This Gl word looks like Arabic, but Dozy decides otherwise; see his Glossaire des Mots Espagnols dérivés de l'Arabe, and ed. p. 154. 1. Mr. Wedgwood cites a passage from Roger Bacon, Opus Tertium, p. 36, shewing that the name was given to a collection of tables shewing the movements of the heavenly bodies; 'sed hæ tabulæ vocantur Almanach vel Tallignum, in quibus sunt omnes motus cœlorum certificati a principio mundi usque in finem.' 2. In Webster's Dictionary it is said that the Arabic word manakh occurs in Pedro de Alcalá (it is not expressly said in what sense, but apparently in that of almanac); and it is connected with 'Arab. manaha, to give as a present, Heb. mánáh, to assign, count; Arab. manayá, anything definite in time and manner, fate; ' This is not satisfactory. [+] time, fate; maniyat, pl. manaya, anything definite in time and manner, fate.' This is not satisfactory. [+] ALMIGHTY, all-powerful. (E.) In very early use. A. S. ealmihtig, Grein, i. 244; almihtig, id. 57. See Might. On the spelling with one l, see All. Der. almighti-ness.

ALMOND, a kind of fruit. (F., -Gk.) 'As for almonds, they are of the nature of nuts;' Holland's Pliny, bk. xv. c. 22. Wyclif has almaundis, almonds, Gen. xliii. 11; almaunder, an almond-tree, Eccles. xii. 5 (where the Vulgate has amygdalus). [The l is an inserted letter, possibly owing to confusion with M. E. and F. forms involving the sequence of letters -alm-, where the l was but slightly sounded. It is remarkable that the excrescent l appears likewise in the Span. almendra, an almond, almendro, an almond-tree.] - French amande, formerly also amende (Brachet); Cotgrave has 'Amande, an almond.' - Lat. amygdala, amygdalum, an almond; whence (as traced by Brachet) the forms amygd'la, amy'dla, amyndla (with excrescent n before d), amynda; and next O. F. amende, later amande. Cf. Prov. amandola. - Gk. dµwyddaN, dµiyddaNov, an almond. [*]

ALMONER, a distributer of alms.  $(F_{..}-L_{.}-Gk_{.})$  Spelt almoyners by Sir T. More, Works, p.  $a_{35}h_{-}O$ . F. almosnier, a distributer of alms; a form in which the s was soon dropped, as in F. aumône from O. F. almosne, alms. -O. F. almosne, alms; with the suffix ier of the agent. -Lat. eleemosyna; see Alms.

ALMOST, nearly. (E.) Chaucer has almost, C. T. 9274. Also M.E. almost, almest; the latter is especially common. 'He is almest dead;' Layamon, ii. 387 (later text). - A. S. calmost, almost; thus in the A.S. Chron. an. 1091, we have 'seo scipfyrde . . . almost earmlice forfór' = the fleet for the most part (or nearly all of it) miserably perished. - A.S. cal., prefix, completely; and most, the most. ¶ The sense is, accordingly, 'quite the greatest part,' or in other words 'nearly all.' Hence it came to mean 'nearly,' in a more general use and sense. It is therefore a different sort of word from the G. allermeist, which answers to A.S. salva mást, most of all. For the spelling with one l, see All.

ALMS, relief given to the poor. (Gk.) M. E. almesse, later almes. Wyclif has almes, Luke, xi. 41. Rob. of Glouc. has almesse, p. 330. Still earlier, we have the A. S. forms almasse and almesse, a word of three syllables. [Thus almasses first became almesse; and then, dropping the final syllable (-se), appeared as almess, in two syllables; still later, it became alms. The A. S. almasses is a corruption of eccles. Latin eleëmosyna, borrowed from Greek; the result being that the word has been reduced from six syllables to one.] = Gk.  $\lambda \lambda en \mu o$ orivn, compassion, and hence, alms. = Gk.  $\lambda \lambda en \mu o$ orivn, to pity. Der. alms-house. From the same root, almoner, q. v. ¶ The word alms is properly singular; hence the expression 'asked an alms;' Acts, iii. 3.

ALMUG, the name of a tree; see Algum.

ALOE, the name of a plant. (Gk.) 'Aloe is an hearbe which hath the resemblance of the sea-onion,' &cc.; Holland's Pliny, bk. xxvii. c.4. Cotgrave has 'Aloës, the herb aloes, sea-houseleeke, sea-aigreen; also, the bitter juyce thereof congealed, and used in purgatives.' In like manner we still speak of 'bitter aloes; ' and Wyclif has aloes, John, xix. 39, where the Vulgate has aloës, really the gen. case of the Lat. aloë, used by Pliny, and borrowed from the Gk. aloén, name of the plant, used by Plutarch, and in John, xix. 39. (Der. alos-wood; a name given to a totally different plant, the agallochum, because one kind (the Aquilaria secundaria) yields a bitter secretion. The word agallochum is of Eastern origin; cf. Skt. aguru, aloe-wood; also Heb. masc. pl. ahalim, formed from a sing. ahal, aloe-wood, or wood of aloes. [†]

The word digitation is of Eastern origin; cf. Sat.  $d_{gars}$ , alco-wood, , also Heb. masc. pl. abalim, formed from a sing. abal, alco-wood, or wood of alces. [+] ALOFT, in the air. (Scand.) 1. For on lofts. In P. Plowman, B. i. 90, we find 'agrounde and aloft;' but in the same poem, A. i. 88, the reading is 'on grounde and on lofts.' 2. On lofts signifies 'in the air,' i. e. on high. The A. S. prep. on frequently means 'in;' and is here used to translate the Icel.  $d_i$ , which is really the same word. 3. The phrase is, strictly, Scandinavian, viz. Icel. d lopt, aloft, in the air (the Icel. -pt being sounded like the E. -ft, to which it answers). The Icel. lopt = A. S. lyft, the air; whence M E. lift. the air, still preserved in prov. E. and used by Burns in his Winter Night, l. 4. Cf. G. luft, the air; Gothic luftus, the air. See Loft, Lift.

ALONE, quite by oneself. (E.) M. E. al one, written apart, and even with a word intervening between them. Ex. 'al himself one' = himself alone; Will. of Palerne, 3316. [The al is also frequently omitted. Ex. 'left was he one,' he was left alone id. 211.] The M. E. al is mod. E. all; but the spelling with one l is correct. See All and One. ¶ The word one was formerly pronounced own, riming with bone; and was frequently spelt oon. The M. E. one was dissyllabic (pron. own-y), the e representing A. S. -a in the word ana, a secondary form from A. S. án, one; see examples of ána in the sense of 'alone' in Grein, i. 31, 32. The old pronunciation is retained in al-one, al-one, on-ly. G Alone is further connected with lonely and lone; see Lone.

ALONG, lengthwise of. (E.) [The prefix here is very unusual, as the a- in this case arose from the A. S. and-; see A-, prefix; and see Answer.] M. E. along, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 760; earlier anlong, Layamon, i. 7. – A. S. andlang, along, prep. governing a genitive; 'andlang pæs westenes' = along the waste, Joshua, viii. 16. + O. Fries. ondlinga, prep. with gen. case; as in 'ondlinga thes reggis' = along the back (Richtofen). + G. entlang, prep. with gen. or dat. when preceding its substantive. – A. S. prefix and-, cognate with O. Fries. ond., O. H. G. ant- (G. ent-), Goth. and-, anda, Lat. ante, Gk. dwri, Skt. anti, over against, close to; and A. S. adj. lang, long. The sense is 'over against in length.' See Long. ¶ We may also compare Icei. adj. endilangr, whence the adv. endelong, lengthwise, in Chaucer, C. T. 1993. [†]

ALOOF, away, at a distance. (Dutch.) 1. Spelt aloofe in Sur-rey's Virgil, bk. iv; aloufe in Sir T. More's Works, p. 759g. The latter says ' But surely this anker lyeth too farre along's for thys shyppe, and hath neuer a cable to fasten her to it.' This suggests a nautical origin for the phrase. 2. The diphthong ou signifies the ou in soup, and is pronounced like the Du. oe, so that louf at once suggests Du. loef, and as many nautical terms are borrowed from that language, we may the more readily accept this. Cf. E. sloop from Du. sloep. 3. The prefix a- stands for on, by analogy with a large number of other words, such as abed, afoot, asleep, aground; so that aloof is for on loof, and had originally the same sense as the equivalent Du. phrase te loef, i. e. to windward. Compare also loef houden, to keep the luff or weather-gage; de loef afwinnen, to gain the luff, &c. So, too, Danish holde luven, to keep the luff or the wind; have luven, to have the weather-gage; lage laven fra en, to take the luff from one. to get to windward of one. Our phrase 'to hold aloof' is equivalent to the Du. loef houden (Dan. holde luven), and signifies lit. 'to keep to the windward.' The tendency of the ship being to drift on to the leeward vessel or object, the steersman can only hold aloof (i.e. keep or remain so) by keeping the head of the ship away. Hence to kold aloof came to signify, generally to keep away from, or not to approach. The quotation from Sir T. More furnishes a good example. He is speaking of a ship which has drifted to leeward of its anchorage, so that the said place of anchorage lies too farre aloufe,' i. e. too much to windward; so that the ship cannot easily return to it. Similar phrases occur in Swedish; so that the term is of Scandinavian as well as of Dutch use; but it came to us from the Dutch more immediately. See further under Luff.

ALOUD, loudly. (E.) Chieffy in the phrase 'to cry aloud.' M. E. 'to crye aloude;' Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 401. By analogy with abed, asleep, afoot, &c., the prefix must be on, from which it follows that loud is a substantive, not an adjective.  $\beta$ . It stands, then, for E. E. on lude, where lude is the dative case of a substantive signifying 'din,' 'loud sound;' cf. 'mid muchelen lude,' later text 'mid mochelere loude,' i. e. with a great 'loud,' with a great din; Layamon, l. 2501. - A. S. hlyd, sb. adin; closely related to adj. hlid, loud. + Icel. hljód, sb. a sound. + Dan. lyd, a sound. + Swed. ljud, a sound. + Du. luid, a sound, the tenor of a thing. + G. law, a sound, tone. ¶ Thus Eng. is the only one of these languages which no longer uses loud as a substantive. See Loud.

ALP, a high mountain. (Lat.) Milton has alp, P. L. ii. 620; Samson, 628. We generally say 'the Alps.' Milton merely borrowed from Latin. - Lat. Alpes, pl. the Alps; said to be of Celtic origin. 'Gallorum lingua alti montes Alpes uocantur; 'Servius, ad. Verg. Georg. iii. 474; cited by Curtius, i. 364. Cf. Gael. alp, a high mountain; Irish ailp, any gross lump or chaos; alpa, the Alps (O'Reilly). β. Even granting it to be Celtic, it may still be true that Lat. Alpes and Gael. alp are connected with Lat. albus, white, spelt alpus in the Sabine form, with reference to the snowy tops of such mountains. See Curtius, i. 364; Fick, ii. 27. Der. alp-ine. ALPACA, the Peruvian sheep. (Span., - Peruvian) Borrowed

ALPACA, the Peruvian sheep. (Span., – Peruvian.) Borrowed by us from Span. alpaca, a Span. rendering of the Peruvian name. See Prescott, Conquest of Peru, cap. v.

ALPHABET, the letters of a language. (Gk., – Heb.) Used by Shak. Titus And. iii. 2. 44. – Low Lat. alphabetum. – Gk.  $\delta\lambda\phi a$ ,  $\beta\eta\tau a$ , the names of a and  $\beta$  (a and b), the first two letters of the Gk. al-

ALREADY, quite ready; hence, sooner than expected. (E. or Scand.) Rich. shews that Udal (on Luke, c. 1) uses 'alreadie looked for' in the modern sense; but Gower, Prol. to C. A. i. 18, has al redy [badly spelt all ready in Richardson] as separate words. Al as an adverb, with the sense ot 'quite,' is common in Mid. English; and Chaucer has the phrase 'al reay was his answer; 'C. T. 6607. [So al clene = quite entirely, wholly, Rob. of Glouc. p. 407; see Matzner's Altengl, Worterbuch, p. 57.] The spelling with one l is correct enough; see All. And see Ready. [†]

ALSO, in like manner. (E.) Formerly frequently written al so, separately; where al is an adverb, meaning 'entirely;' see Already, and All. – A. S. eal swá, ealswá, just so, likewise, Matt. xxi. 30, where the later Hatton MS. has allswa. See So.  $\P$  As is a contracted form of also; see As.

ALTAR, a place for sacrifices. (F., -L.) Frequently written auter in Mid. Eng., from the O. French auter; so spelt in Wyclif, Acts, xvii. 23, Gen. viii. 20. Rob. of Brunne, p. 79, has the spelling altere, from the O. F. alter. And it occurs much earlier, in the Ormulum, 1. 1060. Beyond doubt, the word was borrowed from the French, not the Latin, but the spelling has been altered to make it look more like the Latin. -O. F. alter, auter (mod. F. autel). - Lat.altare, an altar, a high place. - Lat. altus, high. + Zend areta, ereta, $high (Fick, i. 21). - <math>\checkmark$  AR, to raise, exalt; cf. Lat. or-iri, to rise up; Fick, i. 19. See Altitude. ALTER, to make otherwise. (Lat.) Altered occurs in Frith's

ALITER, to make otherwise. (Lat.) Altered occurs in Frith's Works, Letter from Tyndall, p. 118. [Perhaps through the F. alterer, given by Cotgrave, and explained by 'to alter, change, vary;' but with at least equal probability taken directly from the Low Latin.] - Low Lat. alterare, to make otherwise, to change; Ducange. - Lat. alter, other. - Lat. al-, of the same source with alius, another, and Gk. άλλοs, other; with suffix -ter (as in u-ter, neu-ter), an old comparative ending answering to E. -ther, Gk. -refost, Skt. -tara. See Alien. Der. alter-able, alter-at-ion, alter-at-ive.

ALTERCATION, a dispute. (F, -L.) Used by Chaucer, C. T. 9349. -O. F. altercation, for which I can find no early authority; but Roquefort gives altercas, altergue, alterguie, a dispute; altercateur, disputer, and the verb alterguer, to dispute, whilst the E. pres. part. altercamed occurs in Rob. of Brunne, p. 314; so that there is a high probability that the sb. was in use in French at an early period. It is, moreover, given by Cotgrave, and explained by 'altercation, brabling, brawling, '&c. -Lat. altercationem, acc, of altercatio, a dispute. -Lat. altercari, to dispute. -Lat. alter, another; from the orion of speaking alternately. See above, and see below. [†]

ALTERNATE, adj. by turns. (Lat.) Milton has alternate, P. L. v. 657; and even coins altern, P. I., vii. 348.-Lat. alternatus, pp. of alternare, to do by turns.-Lat. alternus, alternate, reciprocal.-Lat. alter, another; with suffix -na (Schleicher, sect. 222). See Alter. Der. alternat-ion, alternat-ive; also the vb. to alternate (Levins).

Der. alternat-ion, alternat-ive; also the vb. to alternate (Levins). ALTHOUGH, however. (E.) M. E. al thagh, al thah, al though; Mandeville's Travels, p. 266; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 877. From al, adverb, in the sense of 'even; ' and though.  $\beta$ . We even find al used alone with the sense ' although,' as in 'Al telle I nat as now his observances; ' Chaucer, C. T. 2264.  $\gamma$ . On the spelling with one l, see All. And see Though.

ALTITUDE, height. (Lat.) It occurs frequently near the end of Chaucer's Treatise on the Astrolabe, to translate Lat. altitudo. - Lat. altitudo, height. - Lat. altus, high. See Altar.

ALTOGETHER, completely. (E.) Used by Sir T. More, Works, p. 914 b. Formed by prefixing M. E. al, adv. 'wholly,' to together. See All, and Together. [†] ALUM, a mineral salt. (F., -L.) M. E. alum, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1035; alom, Mandeville's Travels, p. 99; and used by

ÀLUM, a mineral salt. (F., -L.) M. E. alum, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1035; alom, Mandeville's Travels, p. 99; and used by Chaucer, C. T. 12741. -O. F. alum (mod. F. alum), alum; Roquefort. -Lat. alumen, alum, used by Vitruvius and others; of unknown origin. Der. alumin. a, alumin-ous, alumin-ium; all directly from Lat. alumine, the stem of alumen.

ALWAY, ALWAYS, for ever. (E.) Chaucer has alway, always, Prol. 275; sometimes written al way. 1. In O. Eng. Misc., ed. Morris, p. 148, we find alne way, where alne is an accus. case masc., A. S. ealne. The usual A. S. form is ealne wee, where both words are in the acc. sing.; Grein, ii. 655. This form became successively alne way, al way, and alway. 2. In Hali Meidenhad, p. 27, we find alles weis, where both words are in the gen. sing. This occasional use of the gen. sing., and the common habit of using the gen. sing. suffix -es as an adverbial suffix, have produced the second form always. Both forms are thus accounted for. See All, and Way.

AM, the first pers. sing. pres. of the verb to be. (E.) O. Northumbrian am, as distinct from A.S. com, I am. The full form of the word is shewn by the Skt. asmi, I am, compounded of the  $\sqrt{AS}$ , to be, and the pronoun mi, signifying me, i. e. I. The E. am thus retains the a of the  $\sqrt{AS}$ , and the m of the first personal pronoun. It is remarkable that the same form, am, is found in Old Irish, on which Schleicher remarks that the form am stands for am-mi, formed from as-mi by assimilation; after which the final -mi was dropped. This is, strictly, the correct view, but it is as well to divide the word as a-m, because the m is, after all, due to the final -mi. Thus a-m = a(m)m(i) = ammi= armi. See further under Are.

AMAIN, with full power. (E.) Used by Turberville, To an Absent Friend (R.) As in other words, such as abed, afoot, aground, asleep, the prefix is the A. S. on, later an, latest a, signifying 'in' or 'with,' prefixed to the dat. case of the sb. The usual A. S. phrase is, however, not on magene, but ealle magene, with all strength; Grein, ii. 217. See On, and Main, sb. strength. AMALGAM, a compound of mercury with another metal, a AMALGAM, a compound of mercury with another metal, a mixture. (F., - Gk.) [The restriction in sense to a mixture containing mercury is perhaps unoriginal; it is probable that the word properly meant 'an emollient;' that afterwards it came to mean 'a pasty mixture,' and at last 'a mixture of a metal with mercury.'] Chaucer has amalgaming, C. T. Group G, 771. – F. amalgame, which Cotgrave explains by 'a mixture, or incorporation of quicksilver with other metals.' B. Either a corruption or an alchemist's anagram of Lat. malagama, a mollifying poultice or plaster. – Gk.  $\mu a\lambda a \gamma \mu a$ .  $\lambda a \sigma \sigma \epsilon \nu$ , to soften (put for  $\mu a \lambda a - \sqrt{M}$  MAR, to pound. Der. amalgamate, n] ate, amalgam-at-ion. [†] AMANUEINSIS, one who writes to dictation. (Lat.) In Burton's Anat. of Melancholy; Dem. to the Reader; ed. 1827, i. 17. Borrowed from Lat. amanuensis, a scribe who writes to dictation, used by Suetonius. – Lat. a manu, by hand; with suffix -ensis, signifying belonging to, as in castrensis, belonging to the camp, from castra, a camp. See Manual.

AMARANTH, an everlasting flower. (L., -Gk.) Milton has amarant, P. L. iii. 352; and amarantine, P. L. xi. 78. The pl. amaraunz is in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1470; in which case it is not from the Gk. directly, but from Lat. amarantus. – Gk. dupdurros, unfading; or, as sb., the unfading flower, amaranth. [Cf. Gk. dupadur ruros, made of amaranth.] – Gk. d., privative; and µapaireuv, to wither. –  $\checkmark$  MAR, to die; cf. Skt. marámi, I die, Lat. morior. Curtius, i. 413; Fick, i. 172. Der. amaranth-ine. ¶ There seems no good reason for the modern spelling with final -th; Milton's forms are right, and taken directly from the Greek. From the root mar we have a great many derivatives; such as murder, mortal, &c. See Ambrosial, and Mar.

AMASS, to heap up. (F., -L., -Gk.) Used by Surrey, on Eccles. c. 3. -F. amasser, 'to pile, heap, gather;' Cot. -F. à masse, to a mass; so that amasser is 'to put into a mass.' - Lat ad, to; and massam, acc. of massa, a mass. [Curtius remarks concerning this word (ii. 326) that the Latin ss in the middle of a word answers to Gk.  $\zeta$ .] - Gk.  $\mu \hat{a} \zeta a$ ,  $\mu \hat{a} \zeta a$ , a barley-cake; lit. a kneaded lump. - Gk.  $\mu \hat{a} \sigma \sigma \epsilon i \nu$ , to knead. -  $\sqrt{MAK}$ , to knead: Curtius, i. 404; Fick, i. 180. Hence also Lat. macerare, whence E. macerote.

AMATORY, loving. (Lat.) Milton has amatorious, Answer to Eikon Basilike; amatory is used by Bp. Bramhall (died 1663) in a work against Hobbes (Todd). - Lat. amatorius, loving. - Lat. amator, a lover (whence the F. amateur, now used in English). - Lat. amare, to love, with suffix -tor denoting the agent. Der. from pp. amatus of the same Lat. verb, amat-ive, amat-ive-ness. Amatory is a doublet of Amorous, q. v.

AMAZE, to astound. (E. and Scand.) Formerly written amase. The word amased, meaning 'bewildered, infatuated,' occurs three times in the Ancren Riwle, pp. 270, 284, 288. The prefix can here hardly be other than the intensive AS. d = G. er = G oth. us: thus to amase is 'to confound utterly.' We also find the compound form bimased, Ancren Riwle, p. 270. On the rest of the word, see Maze. The prefix is English, the latter syllable is probably Scandinavian. Der. amaz-ed, amaz-ed-ness, amaz-ing, amaz-ing-ly, amaze-ment.

AMAZON, a female warrior. (Gk.) They were said to cut off the right breast in order to use the bow more efficiently. Shak. has Amazon, Mids. N. D. ii. 1. 70; and Amazonian, Cor. ii. 2. 95. – Gk.  $d\mu a \zeta (\omega r, pl. d\mu a \zeta (\omega rest), no of a warlike nation of women in Scythia. –$  $Gk. d., privative; and <math>\mu a \zeta (\omega, the breast. – <math>\sqrt{MAD}$ , to drip; cf. Gk.  $\mu a \Delta (\omega r, Lat. madere, to be wet: also Gk. <math>\mu a \sigma r \delta s$ , the breast;  $F^{i,\sigma}$ ii. 182, 183. Der. Amazonian. ¶ Perhaps fabulous. [\*] and shewn to be foreign by its ending -ade (unknown in Fr., which has -ée for -ade). It comes from Span. ambaxada, a word related to the Low Lat. ambaxiata. [Ducange only gives the forms ambaxata and ambassiata.] This word is derived from Low Lat. ambaxiare, ambactiare [to relate, announce], formed from ambactia, a very common term in the Salic Law, meaning 'a mission, embassy. This Lat. ambactia has given rise to E. embassy, q. v. - Low Lat. ambactus, a servant, especially one who is sent on a message; used once by Cæsar, de Bello Gallico, vi. 14. – O.H.G. ambahi, ampahi, a servant. + Goth. andbahis, a servant. + A.S. ambahi, ombihi, a servant; Grein, i. 2. + Icel. ambátt, a bondwoman, handmaid.  $\beta$ . The fullest form appears in the Gothic, and shews that the word is compounded of the Goth. prefix and-, anda-, and the sb. bahis, a servant. Y. The prefix answers to O. H. G. ant- (later ent-), Lat. ante, Gk. arri, Skt. anti, over against, and appears also in Along, and Answer. 8. The sb. bants only appears in Gothic in composition, but it meant 'devoted,' as is clear from the allied Skt. bhakia, attached, devoted, with the derivative bhakti, worship, devotion, service. Bhakta is the with the derivative on and, worship, devotion, service. Drawin is the pp. of the verb bha, to divide; from the  $\sqrt{BHAG}$ , to divide. See Benfey, p. 640; Fick, i. 154; iii. 16. Thus this curious word is fully accounted for, and resolved into the prefix which appears as and- in A.S. and Gothic, and a derivative from  $\sqrt{BHAG}$ . It may be observed that the O. H. G. ambahti, service, is still preserved in G. in the corrupted form amt. Der. ambassadr-ess. See Embassy. [+] AMBER, a fossil resin; ambergris. (Arabic.) The resin is named

A most is resemblance to ambergris, (Alabic.) The result and the substance, yet also called amber in early writers. 1. In Holland's Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 3, the word means the fossil amber. 2. When Beaumont and Fletcher use the word amber'a in the sense of 'scented' (Custom of the Country, iii. 2. 6), they must refer to ambergris. B. The word is Arabic, and seems to have been borrowed directly. — Ar. 'amber, ambergris, a perfume; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 433. ¶ Ambergris is the same word, with addition of F. gris, signifying 'gray.' In Milton, P. R. ii. 344, it is called gris amber. The F. gris is a word of German origin, from O. H. G. gris, gray, used of the hair; cf. G. greis, hoary. [\*] hair; cf. G. grees, hoary. [\*] AMBIDEXTROUS, using both hands. (Lat.) Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 5, § 10, has 'ambidexterous, or right-handed on both sides.' He also uses ambidexters as a plural sb. - Lat. ambidexter, using both hands equally; not used in classical Latin, and only given by Ducange with a metaphorical sense, viz. as applied to one who is equally ready to deal with spiritual and temporal business. - Lat. ambi-, generally shortened to amb-; and dexter, the right hand. See Dexterous. B. The prefix ambi- is cognate with Gk.  $d\mu\phi i$ , on both sides, whence E. amphi-; Skt. abhi (for ambhi), as used in the comp. abhitas, on both sides; O. H. G. umbi, mod. G. um, around; A. S. embe-, emb-, ymb-, around. It is clearly related to Lat. ambo, Gk.  $d\mu\phi a$ , both, and even to E. both. See Both.

AMBIENT, going about. (Lat.) Used by Milton, P. L. vi. 480. - Lat. ambient-, stem of Lat. ambiens, going about. - Lat. amb-(shortened form of ambi-), about; and iens, going, pres. pt. of ire, to go. 1. On the prefix, see Ambidextrous, above. 2. The verb ire is from 4 1, to go; cf. Skt. and Zend i, to go; Fick, i. 506. AMBIGUOUS, doubtful. (Lat.) Sir T. Elyot has ambiguous, The Governour, bk. iii. c. 4. The sb. ambiguite (printed ambiguite) occurs in the Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, 2577. [The adj: is formed with the suffix -ous, which properly represents the F. -eux, and Lat. -osus, but is also frequently used to express the Lat. -us merely; cf. pious, sonorous. &cc., from Lat. pius, sonorus.] - Lat. ambiguus, doubtful; lit. driving about. - Lat. ambigere, to drive about, go round about. - Lat. amb- ambi-, about; and agere, to drive. On the prefix, see Ambidextrous. And see Agent. Der. ambiguous-ly; also ambigu-it-y, from Lat. acc. ambiguitatem, nom. ambiguitas, doubt.

AMBITION, seeking for preferment. (F., -L.) Spelt ambition by Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 15; ambicion by Lydgate, Story of Thebes, pt. iii (R.) Ambicion also occurs in the Ayenbite of Inwyt, pp. 17, 22. - F. ambition, given by Cotgrave. - Lat. ambitionem, acc. of ambitio, a going round; esp. used of the canvassing for votes at Rome. - Lat. ambire, supine ambitum, to go round, solicit. [Note that Lat. ambitio and ambitus retain the short i of the supine turm of the simple verb.] - Lat. ambi-, amb-, prefix, about; and ire, to go. 1. On ambi-, see Ambient. Der. ambiti-ous, ambiti-ous-ly.

AMBLE, to go at a pace between a walk and a trot. (F., -L.)We find 'fat palfray amblant,' i.e. ambling; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 3461; and see Gower, C. A. i. 210. Chaucer has 'wel ambling,' C. T. 8265; and 'it goth an anmble'=it goes at an easy pace, said of a horse, C. T. 13815; and he calls a lady's horse an ambler, Prol. to C. T. 471.-O. F. ambler, to go at an easy pace.-Lat. ambulare, to walk. See Ambulation. Der, amble-r, pre-amble.

AMBROSIA, food of the gods. (Gk.) In Milton, P. L. v. 57; he frequently uses the adj. ambrosial.  $\neg$  Gk.  $d\mu\beta\rhoooia$ , the food of the gods; iem of adj.  $d\mu\beta\rho \rho \sigma ios$ .  $\neg$  Gk.  $d\mu\beta\rho\rho \sigma ia$ , a lengthened form (with suffix -ya) of  $d\mu\beta\rho \sigma ios$ , immortal.  $\neg$  Gk.  $d\nu$ -, negative prefix, cognate with E. un- (which becomes  $d\mu$ - before following  $\beta$ ); and  $\beta\rho \sigma r os$ , mortal: but Curtius (i. 413) rather divides the word as  $\check{a}$ - $\mu\beta\rho\sigma r os$ , where d- is the same negative prefix with loss of  $\nu$ , and  $\mu\beta\rho \sigma r os$ , is the full form of the word which was afterwards spelt  $\beta\rho \sigma r os$ , is the full form of the word which was afterwards spelt  $\beta\rho \sigma r os$ , signifying mortal.  $\neg \sqrt{MAR}$ , to die; see Curtius i. 413; Fick, i. 172. The Gk.  $\check{a}\mu\beta\rho\sigma r os$  has its exact counterpart in Skt. amrita, immortal, used also to denote the beverage of the gods. Southey spells this word amreeta; see his Curse of Kehama, canto xxiv, and note 93 on ' the amreeta, or drink of immortality.' Der. ambrosi-al, ambrosi-an.

AMBRY, AUMBRY, a cupboard. (F.,-L.) a. Nares remarks that ambry is a corruption of almonry, but this remark only applies to a particular street in Westminster so called. The word in the sense of 'cupboard' has a different origin. B. The word is now obsolete, except provincially; it is spelt aumbrie by Tusser, Five Hundred Points, ed. 1573, ii. 5 (Halliwell). Clearly a corruption of O. F. armarie, a repository for arms (Burguy), which easily passed into arm'rie, a'm'rie, and thence into ambry, with the usual excrescent b after m. The O.F. armarie became later armaire, armoire; Cotgrave gives both these forms, and explains them by 'a cupboord, ambrie, little press; any hole, box contrived in, or against, a wall, &c. Hence ambry is a doublet of armory; and both are to be referred to Low Lat. armaria, a chest or cupboard, esp. a bookcase. Another form is armarium, esp. used to denote a repository for arms, which is plainly the original sense. - Lat. arma, arms. See Arms. ' It is remarkable that, as the ambry in a church was sometimes used as a place of deposit for alms, it was popularly connected with alms instead of arms, and looked upon as convertible with almonry. Popular etymology often effects connections of this sort, which come at last to be believed in. [†] AMBULATION, walking about. (Lat.) Used by Sir T. Browne, AMBULATION, walking about. (Lat.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 1. § 4; but uncommon. Of the adj. ambulatory Rich. gives five examples, one from Bp. Taylor's Great Exemplar, pt. iii. s. 13. Formed with F. suffix-tion, but really directly from Latin. - Lat. acc. ambulationem, from nom. ambulatio, a walking about. - Lat. ambulatus, pp. of ambulare, to walk about.  $\beta$ . Curtius (ii. 74) seems right in taking ambulare as short for amb-bu-lare, where ambis the usual shortened form of ambi, around, and bu-lare contains the root ba, to go, which is so conspicuous in Gk. in  $\beta \acute{d}$ -ois, a going,  $\beta a - \delta(\xi_{eir}, to walk, \beta air-eir, to go, aorist <math>i\beta\eta r$ . 1. On the prefix ambi-, see Ambidextrous. 2. On the  $\sqrt{BA}$ , older form GA, see BaBe, substantive. Der. ambulat-ory (from ambulatus, pp. of ambulare). From the same root, amble, per-ambulate, pre-amble. See Ambie. Also F. ambul-ance, a movable hospital, now adopted into English.

AMBUSCADE, an ambush. (Span., - Low Lat., -Scand.) At first, spelt ambuscado; see Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ed. Wheatley, ii. 4. 16, and the note. Dryden has ambuscade, tr. of Æneid, vi. 698; Richardson, by a misprint, attributes the word to Spenser. -Span. ambuscado, an ambuscade; see ambush in Meadows, Eng.-Span. section; but the commoner form is emboscada. -Span. ambuscado, placed in ambush, usually spelt emboscada, pp. of emboscar, to set in ambush. - Low Lat. imboscare; see Ambush.

AMBUSH, a hiding in a wood.  $(F_{.,-}Low Lat.,-Scand.)$  In Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas. i. 3. 41. A corruption of an older embush or enbush, which was originally a verb, signifying 'to set in ambush. The corruption from e to a was due to Spanish influence; see above. Rob. of Brunne, in his tr. of P. Langtoft, has enbussement, p. 187, bussement, p. 242; also the pp. enbussed, set in ambush. p. 187, as well as the simple form bussed on the same page. In all these cases, se stands for sh, as in Rob. of Gloucester. Gower has embuisshed, embussement, C. A. i. 260, iii. 208, -O. F. embuscher, embuissier, to set in ambush. -Low Lat. imboscare, to set in ambush, lit. 'to set in a bush,' still preserved in Ital. imboscare. -Lat. in-, in (which becomes im-before b); and Low Lat. boscus, a bush, wood, thicket, whence O. F. bos, mod. F. bois. This word is really of Scandinavian origin. See Bush. Der. ambush.ment; and see above. AMELIORATE, to better.  $(F_{.,-}Lat.)$  Not in early use.

AMELIORATE, to better. (F., - Lat.) Not in early use. Formed with suffix -ate; on which see Abbreviate. - F. ameliorer, to better, improve; see Cotgrave. - F. prefix a - Lat. ad; and me liorer, to make better, also given by Cotgrave. - Lat. ad, to; and Low Lat. meliorare, to make better; Ducange. - Lat. ad; and melior, better. See Meliorate. Der. ameliorat-ion.

AMEN, so be it.  $(L_{.}, -Gk_{.}, -Heb.)$  Used in the Vulgate version of Matt. vi. 13, &c. -Gk.  $d\mu\eta\nu$ , verily. - Heb. ámen, adv. verily, so be it; from adj. ámen, firm, true, faithful; from vb. áman, to sustain, support, found, fix. [†]

AMENABLE, easy to lead. (F.,-L.) Spelt amesnable by Spenser, View of the State of Ireland (R.); but the s is superfluous; by the common F. suffix -able, from the F. verb. = F. amener, 'to bring or lead unto;' Cot. Burguy gives the O. F. spellings as amener and amenier. = F. a., prefix (Lat. ad); and F. mener, to conduct, to drive. - Low. Lat. minare, to conduct, to lead from place to place; also, to expel, drive out, chase away; Ducange. - Lat. minari, to threaten. - Lat. mina, projections; also, threats. - Lat. minere, to project. See Eminent and Monaco. Der. amen-abl-y. From the same root, de-mean, q. v.

AMEIND, to free from faults. (F.,-L.) M. E. amenden, to better, repair; Chaucer, C. T. 10510; Ancren Riwle, p. 420. Hence amendement, Gower, C. A. ii. 373. - O. F. amender (mod. F. amender), to amend, better. - Lat. emendare, to free from fault, correct. [For the unusual change from e to a, see Brachet's Hist. Grammar, sect. 28.] - Lat. e = ex, out out, away from; and mendum, or menda, a blemish, fault. 1. On the prefix ex, see Ex. 2. The Lat. menda has its counterpart in the Skt. mindai, a personal defect; Curtius, i. 418; Fick, i. 711. The remoter origin is unknown; but it is prob. connected with Lat. minor, less, minuere, to diminish. See Minor. Der. amend-able, amend-ment; also amends, q. v. And see Mond.

AMEINDS, reparation. (F., -L.) M. E. pl. amendes, amendis, common in the phr. to maken amendes, to make amends; Will. of Palerne, 3919; Ayenbite of Inwyt, pp. 113, 148. – O. F. amende, re-paration, satisfaction, a penalty by way of recompense. See See Amend AMEINITY, pleasantness. (F., -L.) The adj. amen, pleasant, occurs in Lancelot of the Laik, ed. Skeat, 1. 999; spelt amene in a quotation from Lydgate in Halliwell. Sir T. Browne has amenity, Vulg. Errors, b. vii. c. 6. § 3. – F. amenité, 'amenity, pleasantness;' Cot. – Lat. acc. amoenitatem, from nom. amoenitas, pleasantness. – Lat. amoenus, pleasant. The root appears in the Lat. amare, to love. See Amorous.

AMERCE, to fine. (F., -L.) M. E. amercien, amercen, to fine, mulct. 'And though ye mowe amercy hem, late [let] mercy be taxour;' P. Plowman, B. vi. 40. 'Amercyn in a corte or lete, amercio; Prompt. Parv. p. 11.-O. F. amercier, to fine; Roquefort. c. The a. The Low Latin form is amerciare, to fine (Ducange); observe the cita-tion of amercio above.  $\beta$ . The prefix is the O.F. a-, from Lat. ad, and the Lat. word should rather have been spelt ammerciare with double m, as ad- may become am- before a following m, and constantly does so in Italian. -O. F. mercier, sometimes 'to pay, acquit,' according to Roquefort, but the usual sense is 'to thank,' i.e. to pay in thanks; cf. Low Lat. merciare, to fix a fine; Ducange. -O.F. mercit, merchi (mod. F. merci), thanks, pity, compassion, pardon. [The corresponding Low Lat. mercia means (1) traffic; (2) a fine; (3) pity; but is merely the F. merci Latinised, though it is used in more senses.] The O. F. mercii corresponds to Ital. mercede, Span. merced, thanks, reward, recompence. - Lat. mercedem, acc. case of merces, reward, hire, wages; also used of reward in the sense of panishment; also of detriment, cost, trouble, pains; and so easily passing into the sense of fine. In late times, it acquired also the sense of 'mercy, pity,' as noted by Ducange, s. v. Merces. Even in good Latin, it approaches the sense of 'fine,' 'mulct,' very nearly. See, e.g. Virgil's use of mercede suorum, at the expense of their people, by the sacrifice of their people, An. vii. 316; and cf. Cicero, Tuscul. 3. 6. 12: 'nam istuc nihil dolere, non sine magnâ mer-orde continoit. immanitatis in animâ, stuporis in corpore.' The only cede contingit, immanitatis in animâ, stuporis in corpore.' other Lat. word with which mercia can be connected is merz, and perhaps in sense (1) it is so connected; but senses (2) and (3) must go together. See further under Morcy. [†] ¶ The etymology has been confused by Blount, in his Law Dictionary, s. v. Amerciament, and by other writers, who have supposed the F. merci to be connected with Lat. misericordia (with which it has no connection whatever), and who have strained their definitions and explanations accordingly. Der. amerce-ment, amercia-ment; the latter being a Latinised form.

AMETHYST, a precious stone. (Gk.) 'As for the amethyst, as well the herb as the stone of that name, they that think that both the one and the other is (sic) so called because they withstand drunken-ness, miscount themselves, and are deceived; Holland, tr. of Plu-tarch's Morals, p. 560. Boyle, Works, vol. i. p. 513, uses the adj. amethystine. - Lat. amethystus, used by Pliny, 37. 9. [Note: directly from the Latin, the F. form being ametiste in Cotgrave. However, the form amatiste, from the Old French, is found in the 13th century; Old. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 98, l. 171.] - Gk. autovoros, sb. a remedy against drunkenness; an amethyst, from its supposed virtue in that way. - Gk. duiouoros, adj. not drunken. - Gk. d-, privative ; and µeduew, to be drunken. - Ck. µédu, strong drink, wine; cognate with E. mead. See Mead. Der. amethyst-ine.

aimiable and fre;' Rom. Rose, 1226. 'The amiable tonge is the tree of life;' Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Ira. -O. F. aimiable, friendly; also loveable, by confusion with aimable (Lat. amabilis). - Lat. amicabilis, friendly, amicable. - Lat. amica-re, to make friendly; with suffix -bilis, used in forming adjectives from verbs. - Lat. amicus, a friend ; prop. an adj., friendly, loving. - Lat. ama-re, to love; with suffix -ka, Schleicher, Comp. sect. 231. See Amorous. Der. amiable-ness, amiabl-y; amiabil-i-ty, formed by analogy with amicability, &c. Amicability and amiability are doublets.

AMICABLE, friendly. (Lat.) In Levins, ed. 1570. Used by Bp. Taylor, Peacemaker (R.); he uses amicableness in the same work. [Formed with suffix -ble as if from French, but really taken directly from Latin.] - Lat. amicabilis, friendly; whence the O.F. aimiable. Thus amicable and amiable are doublets. See Amiable. Der. amicabley. amicable-ness.

AMICE, a robe for pilgrims, &c. (F., -L.) 'Came forth, with pilgrim steps, in amice gray;' Milton, P. R. iv. 427. - F. amict, 'an amict, or amice; part of a massing priest's habit;' Cot. The O.F. also has the forms amicte and amis (Burguy); the latter of which comes nearest to the English. - Lat. amuctus, a garment thrown about one. - Lat. amictus, pp. of amicire, to throw round one, wrap about. -Lat. am., short for amb., ambi., around; and iacere, to cast. [Cf. eiicere, to cast out, from e, out, and iacere.] For the prefix ambi., see Ambidextrous; for the Lat. iacere, see Jet.

AMID, AMIDST, in the middle of. (E.) Amidst is common in Milton, P. L. i. 791; &c. He also uses amid. Shak. also has both forms. a. Amidst is not found in earlier English, and the final t is merely excrescent (as often after s), as in unitst, amongst, from the older forms whiles, amonges. β. The M. E. forms are amiddes, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 82; in middes, Pricke of Conscience, 2038; amidde, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 143; on midden, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 87.  $\gamma$ . Of these, the correct type is the earliest, viz. on midden; whence on-midde, a-midde were formed by the usual loss of final n, and the change of on to a, as in abed, afoot, asleep. 5. The form amiddes change of on to a, as in abed, afoot, asleep. was produced by adding the adverbial suffix -s, properly the sign of a gen. case, but commonly used to form adverbs. - A. S. on middan, in the middle; see examples in Grein. ii. 249, s. v. midde. Here on is the prep. (mod. E. on), used, as often elsewhere, with the sense of 'in;' and middan is the dat. case of midde, sb. the middle; formed from the adj. mid, middle, cognate with Lat. medius. See Middle.

AMISS, adv. wrongly. (E. and Scand.) c. In later authors awkwardly used as a sb.; thus 'urge not my amiss;' Shak. Sonn. 151. But properly an adverb, as in 'That he ne doth or saith somtym amis;' Chaucer, C. T. 11092. The error was due to the fact that misse, without a-, meant 'an error' in early times, as will appear. B. Amiss stands for M. E. on misse, lit. in error, where on (from A. S. on) has the usual sense of 'in,' and passes into the form a-, as in so many other cases; cf. abed, afoot, asleep. y. Also misse is the dat. case from nom. misse, a dissyllabic word, not used as a sb. in A.S., but borrowed from the Icel. missa, a loss; also used with the notion of 'error' in composition, as in Icel. mis-taka, to take in error, whence E. mistake. The M. E. misse hence acquired the sense of 'guilt,' 'offence,' as in 'to mende my misse,' to repair my error; Will. of AMITY, friendship. (F.,-L.) Udal, Pref. to St. Marke, has amitie (R.)-F. amitie, explained by Cotgrave to mean 'amity, friendship,' &c. - O. F. amiste, amisted, amistied ; = Span. amistad, Ital. amistà (for amistate). - Low Lat. amicitatem, acc. of amicitas, friendship, a vulgar form, not recorded by Ducange, but formed by analogy with mendicitas from mendicus, antiquitas from antiquus; see Brachet. - Lat. amicus, friendly. - Lat. ama-re, to love, with suffix -ka. Sec Amiable, ¶ It is of course impossible to derive the old Ro-Amorous. mance forms from Lat. amicitia, friendship, the classical form. [†]

AMMONIA, an alkali. (Gk.) A modern word, adopted as a contraction of sal ammoniac, Lat. sal ammoniacum, rock-salt; common in old chemical treatises, and still more so in treatises on alchemy. [Chaucer speaks of sal armoniae, C. T. Group G, 798, 824; and in the Theatrum Chemicum we often meet with sal armeniacum, i.e. Armenian salt. This, however, would seem to be due to corruption or confusion.] – Gk. άμμωνιακόν, sal ammoniac, rock-salt; Diosco-rides. – Gk. άμμωνιάs, Libyan. – Gk. Άμμων. the Libyan Zeus-Ammon; said to be an Egyptian word; Herodotus, ii. 42. It is said that sal ammoniac was first obtained near the temple of Jupiter Ammon. [†] Modern. Formed AMMONITE, a kind of fossil shell. (Gk.)

by adding the suffix -ite to the name Ammon. The fossil is sometimes called by the Lat. name of cornu Ammonis, the horn of Ammon, because it much resembles a closely twisted ram's horn and was fancifully likened to the horns of Jupiter Ammon, who was represented as a man with the horns of a ram. See above.

Used by Bacon, AMMUNITION, store for defence. (Lat.) 'She was so Advice to Sir G. Villiers (R.) [Formed with F. suffix -tion, but borrowed from late Latin.] - Low Lat. admunitionem, acc. of admunition defence, fortification. [The change of adm- to amm- in Latin words is not uncommon, and is the rule in Italian.] - Lat. ad-, to; and munitio, defence. - Lat. munire, to fortify, esp. to defend with a wall; originally spelt moenire, and connected with Lat. moenia, walls forti-¶ Curtius connects this with Gk.  $d\mu$  iver, to keep off, fications. And suggests (MU, possibly meaning 'to bind;' i. 403. Otherwise Fick, i. 724. [\*]

(F.,-Gk.) Used in the Lat. form amnestia by Howell, b. iii. letter 6. Barrow has amnesty, vol. iii. serm. 41. - F. amnestie, which Cotgrave explains by 'forgetfulness of things past.' - Lat. amnestia, merely a Latinised form of the Gk. word. [Ducange gives amnescia, but this form is probably due to the fact that i is constantly mistaken for e in MSS., and is frequently so printed.] - Gk. durnaria, a forgetfulness, esp. of wrong ; hence, an amnesty. - Gk. aurnoros, forgotten, unremembered. - Gk. d-, privative; and µváoµaı, I remember; from a stem muá, which is a secondary form from an older MAN; cf. Lat. me-min-i, I remember. - MAN, to think; cf. Skt. man, to think, See Mean, v.

AMONG, AMONGST, amidst. (E.) a. The form amongst, like amidst, is not very old, and has assumed an additional final t, such as is often added after s; cf. whilst, amidst, from the older forms whiles, amiddes. Amongist occurs in Torrent of Portugal, l. 2126; but I suppose it does not occur earlier than near the end of the fourteenth century.  $\beta$ . The usual form is amonges, as in P. Plowman, B. v. 129; amonge is also common, id. v. 169. Earlier, the commonest form is among, Ancren Riwle, p. 158.  $\gamma$ . Amonges is formed by adding the usual adverbial suffix -es, properly a genitive form, and amonge by adding the adverbial suffix -e, also common, properly a dative form. - A. S. onmang, prep. among, Levit. xxiv. 10; occur, the last of the three being commonest. B. Thus the prefix is A. S. on, and the full form onmang, used as a preposition. Like most prepositions, it originated with a substantive, viz. A. S. (ge)mang, a crowd, assembly, lit. a mixture; so that on mang(e) or on gemang(e) meant 'in a crowd ;' cf. A. S. mengan, mængan, to mix; Grein, ii. 231. See Mingle.

AMOROUS, full of love. (F.,-L.) Gower has amorous, C. A. i. 89; it also occurs in the Romaunt of the Rose, 83.-O. F. amoros, mod, F. amoureux. - Low Lat. amorosus, full of love ; Ducange. Formed with the common Lat. suffix -osus from the stem amor .- Lat. amor ., stem of amor, love. - Lat. amare, to love. There seems little doubt that this Lat. word has lost an original initial k, and that Lat. am-are stands for cam-are; cf. Lat. carus, dear, which stands for camrus, cognate with Skt. kamra, beautiful, charming; Benfey, p. 158. Thus Lat. am-are is cognate with Skt. kam, to love; and Lat. amor with Skt. káma, love (also the god of love, like Amor in Latin). - /KAM, to love; Fick, i. 296. Gr A similar loss of initial & has taken place in the English word ape, q. v. Der. amorous-ly, amorous-ness. Also F. amour, love (now used in Eng.), from Lat. amorem, acc. case of amor, love.

AMORPHOUS, formless. (Gk.) Modern. Formed from Gk. α- privative; and Gk. μορφή, shape, form. Possibly from the

AMAPII, to grasp, in  $\mu a \rho \pi \tau i \nu$ ; Curtius, ii. 62. AMOUNT, to mount up to. (F., -L.) M. E. amounten, to mount up to, come up to, esp. in reckoning. Chaucer, C. T. 3890, 4989, 10423; Rob. of Glouc. 497. We find amountet, ascends, in Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 28. - O. F. amonter, to amount to. - O. F. a mont, towards or to a mountain, to a large heap. [The adv. amont is also common, in the sense of 'uphill,' 'upward,' and is formed by joining a with mont.]-Lat. ad montem, lit. to a mountain ; where montem is the acc. case of mons, a mountain. See Mount, Mountain. Der. amount, sb.

AMPHI., prefix. (Gk.) The strict sense is 'on both sides.'-Gk. dµ$$$$, on both sides; also, around. + Lat. ambi-, amb-, on both sides, around; see Ambidextrous, where other cognate forms are given. Der. amphi-bious, amphi-brach, amphi-theatre.

AMPHIBIOUS, living both on land and in water. (Gk.) In Sir T. Browne's Vulg. Errors, bk. iii. c. 13. § 8. – Gk.  $d\mu\phi/\beta\iota os$ , living a double life, i. e. both on land and water. – Gk.  $d\mu\phi/$ , here used in the sense of 'double;' and  $\beta$ ios, life, from the same root as the Lat. siuidus; see Vivid. On the prefix Amphi, see above.

AMPHIBRACH, a foot in prosody. (Gk.) A name given, in prosody, to a foot composed of a short syllable on each side of a long one (v - v). = Gk.  $d\mu\phi\beta\rho\alpha\chi\nu$ s, the same. = Gk.  $d\mu\phi\beta$ , on both sides; and Bpaxies, short; cognate with Lat. breuis, short, whence E. brief. See Amphi-, and Brief.

AMPHITHEATRE, an oval theatre. (Gk.) From Gk. dup. a theatre with seats all round the arena. [Properly neuter | violet. Lat. Galenus, Galen, transposed to angetus, an anget ^(arpos, i. e. seeing all round.] - Gk. dμφl, on both sides; Bunyan, who transposed his name to Nu hony in a B! [+] and Otarpor, a theatre, place for seeing shows. - Gk. Otdopau, I see.

 $-\sqrt{\Theta A_F}$  to look, stare at; Curtius, 1. 314. AMPLE, full, large. (F., -L.) Used by Hall, Hen. VIII, an. 31. Fox and Udal use the obsolete derivative ampliate, and Burnet has ampliation ; from Lat. ampliare, to augment. - F. ample, which Cotgrave explains by ' full, ample, wide, large,' &c. - Lat. amplus, large, spacious.  $\P$  Explained by Corssen (i. 308, ii. 575) as = ambi-pulus, i. e. full on both sides; where pulus = para, full; see Amphi- and Full. Der. ampli-tude ; ampli-fy (F. amplifier, from Lat. amplificare) ; ampli-fic-at-ion; see amplifier and amplification in Cotgrave. Also ampl-y, ample-ness.

AMPUTATE, to cut off round about, prune. (Lat.) Sir T. Browne has amputation, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 5. $1. On the suffix -ate, see Abbreviate. - Lat. amputare, to cut off round about, pp. amputatus. - Lat. am-, short for amb-, ambi-, round about (on which see Ambidextrous); and Lat. putare, to cleanse, also to lop or prune trees. - Lat. putus, pure, clean; from the same root as Pure, q. v. See Curtius, i. 349. Der. amputat-ion.

AMULET, a charm against evil. (F., -L., -Arabic.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5, part 3. - F. amulette, 'a counter-charm; 'Cot. - Lat. annuletum, a talisman, esp. one hung round the neck (Pliny). Of Arabic origin; cf. Arab. himáyil, a sword-belt; a small Korán suspended round the neck as an amulet; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 204; Richardson explains it as 'a shoulder sword-belt, an amulet, charm, preservative, Pers. and Arab. Dict., ed. 1806, p. 382. The literal sense is 'a thing carried.'- Arab. hamala, he carried; cf. Arab. hammál, a porter, haml, a burthen; Palmer's Pers. Dict. coll. 203, 204. And see Pihan, Glossaire des Mots Français tirés de l'Arabe, p. 38.

AMUSE, to engage, divert. (F.) Milton has amus'd, P. L. vi. 581, 623; it also occurs in Holland's Plutarch, p. 345. - F. amuter. to amuse, to make to muse or think of; wonder or gaze at; to put into a dump; to stay, hold, or delay from going forward by discourse, questions, or any other amusements; ' Cot. - F. a., prefix (Lat. ad), at; and O. F. muser, to stare, gaze fixedly, like a simpleton, whence E. muse, verb, used by Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 1033. See Muse, v. Dor. amus-ing, amus-ing-ly, amuse-ment ; also amus-ive, used in Thomson's Seasons, Spring, 216.

AN, A, the indef. article. (E.) The final n is occasionally preserved before a consonant in Layamon's Brut, which begins with the words 'An preost wes on leoden,' where the later text has 'A prest was in londe.' This shews that the loss of n before a consonant was taking place about A.D. 1200. - A.S. an, often used as the indef. article; see examples in Grein. i. 30; but properly having the sense of 'one,' being the very word from which mod. E. one is derived. See One.

AN-, A-, negative prefix. (Gk.) Gk. dv-, d-, negative prefix, of which the full form is dra-; see Curtius, i. 381. Cognate with the Skt. an-, a, Zend ana, an, a, Lat. in-, G. and E. un-, O. Irish an-, all negative prefixes. See Un-. The form an- occurs in several words in English, e.g. an-archy, an-ecdote, an-eroid, an-odyne, an-omaly, an onymous. The form a- is still commoner; e.g. a-byss, a-chromatic, a-maranth, a-symptote, a-tom, a-sylum. AN, if. (Scand.)

See And.

ANA-, AN-, prefix. (Gk.) It appears as an- in an-eurism, a kind of tumour. The usual form is ana-, as in ana-logy, ana-baptist. From Gk. dvá, upon, on, often up; also back, again; it has the same form ana in Gothic, and is cognate with E. on. See On.

ANABAPTIST, one who baptises again. (Gk.) Used by Hooker, Eccl. Polity, v. 62. Formed by prefixing the Gk. ard, again, to baptist. See above, and Baptist. So also ana-baptism.

ANACHRONISM, an error in chronology. (Gk.) Used by Walpole; Anecd. of Painting, vol. i. c. 2. From Gk. draxportorula, an anachronism. - Gk. draxporifeir, to refer to a wrong time. - Gk. dora, up. sometimes used in composition in the sense of 'backwards;' and  $\chi\rho\rho\sigma\sigma$ , time. See Ana- and Chronio.

ANÆSTHETIC, a substance used to render persons insensible to pain. (Gk.) Modern. Formed by prefixing the Gk. dr-, cognate with E. un-, a negative prefix, to Gk. alobyrikús, perceptive, full of perception. See Æsthetics.

ANAGRAM, a change in a word due to transposition of letters. (F., -Gk.) Ben Jonson, in his Masque of Hymen, speaks of 'IUNO, whose great name Is UNIO in the anagram.'-F. anagramme (Cotgrave). - Lat. anagramma, borrowed from Gk. - Gk. ἀνάγραμμα, an anagram. - Gk. dva, up, which is also used in a distributive sense; and γράμμα, a written character, letter. - Gk. γράφειν, to write, originally to cut, scratch marks; allied to E. grave. See Grave. Der. anagramm-at-ic-al, anagramm-at-ic-al-ly, anagramm-at-ist. ¶ Examples of anagrams. Gk. 'Apowon, Arsinoe, transposed to lov "Hpas, Hera's violet. Lat. Galenus, Galen, transposed to angelus, an angel. E. John ANALOGY, proportion, correspondence. (F.,-Gk.) Tyndal has analogie, Works, p. 473. – F. analogie; Cot. – Lat. analogia. – Gk. ἀναλογία, equality of ratios, correspondence, analogy. – Gk. ἀνά, up, upon, throughout; and a form  $\lambda o \gamma i a$ , made by adding the suffix -ya (=Gk. -ta) to the stem of λόγ-os, a word, a statement, account, proportion. -Gk. λέγειν, to speak. See Logio. Der. analog-ic-al, analog-ic-al-ly, analog-ise, analog-ism, analog-ist, analog-ous; also ana-logue (F. analogue, prop. an adj. signifying analogous, from Gk. adj.

Analyse, to resolve into parts. (Gk.) Sir T. Browne, Hydriotaphia, c. 3, says ' what the sun compoundeth, fire analyses, not transmuteth.' Ben Jonson has analysis, Poetaster, A. v. sc. 1. Cotgrave gives no related word in French, and perhaps the F. analyser is comparatively modern. Most likely the word analytic was borrowed directly from the Gk. analuration, and the verb to analyse may easily have been formed directly from the sb. analysis, i. e. Gk. dváluois, a loosening, resolving. - Gk. aralveur, to loosen, undo, resolve. - Gk. drá, back ; and Auer, to loosen. See Loosen. Der. analys-1 ; the words analysis and analytic are directly from the Gk.; from the last are formed analytic-al, analytic-al-ly.

ANAPEST, ANAPÆST, the name of a foot in prosody. (Gk.) Only used in reference to prosody. - Lat. anapassus. - Gk. dactyl. - Gk. dramaleir, to strike back or again. - Gk. dra; and maleir, to strike. - & PAW, to strike; cf. Lat. pawire, to strike, beat; Skt. pawi, the thunderbolt of Indra. Curtius, i. 333. Fick gives & PU, to strike; i. 146. ¶ There are, strictly, no anapests in English, our metre being regulated by accent, not by quantity. An anapest is marked  $\cup$   $\cup$  -, the reverse of the dactyl, or -  $\cup$   $\cup$ .

ANARCHY, want of government in a state. (F., -Gk.) Milton has anarch, P. L. ii. 988; and anarchy, P. L. ii. 896. - F. anarchie, 'an anarchy, a commonwealth without a head or governour;' Cot.-Gk. arapxia, a being arapxos. - Gk. arapxos, without head or chief. -Gk. do- (E. un-); and doxos, a ruler. -Gk. doxeuv, to rule, to be the first; cognate, according to Curtius (i. 233), with Skt. ark, to be worthy. Der. anarch-ic, anarch-ic-al, anarch-ism, anarch-ist.

ANATHEMA, a curse. (L.,-Gk.) Bacon, Essay on Goodness, refers to anathema as used by St. Paul.-Lat. anathema, in the Vulgate version of Rom. ix. 3. - Gk. avádeµa, lit. a thing devoted; hence, a thing devoted to evil, accursed. - Gk. drari $\theta\eta\mu$ , I devote. -Gk. ará, up; and τίθημι, I lay, place, put. - & DHA, to put, set; see Doom. Der. anathemat-ise (from stem dradepar- of sb. dradepa) in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 348. ANATOMY, the art of dissection. (F., - Gk.) Anatomy, in old writers, commonly means 'a skeleton,' as being a thing on which anatomy has been performed; see Shak. Com. Errors, v. 238. Gas-coigne has a poem on The Anatomys of a Lover. - F. anatomis, 'anatomy; a section of, and looking into, all parts of the body; also, an anatomy, or carkass cut up; 'Cot. - Lat. anatomia. - Gk. draτομία, of which a more classical form is ανατομή, dissection. - Gk. drarépreir, to cut up, cut open. - Gk. drá; and répreir, to cut. See ANCESTOR, a predecessor, forefather. (F., -L.) 1. M. E. ancessowr, ancestre, annestre. Chaucer has auncestre, C. T. 6713, 6741. Ancestre, Brunne's Cartestor, Charlestor, C. 1. 073, Ancestre, Rob. of Brunne's tr. of Langtoft, p. 9; ancessour, id. p. 177.  $\beta$ . Ancestor is formed from ancessour by the insertion of excrescent t, not uncommon after s; as in whilst, amongst, from the older whiles, anonges. - O. F. ancessour, a predecessor. - Lat. antecessorem, acc. case of antecessor, a fore-goer. - Lat. ante, before; and cedere, pp. cessus, to go. See Cede. Der. ancessir-al, ancessir-y, ancessir-ess. ANCHOB, a hooked iron instrument to hold a ship in its place.

 $(F_{.,-}L_{.,-}Gk_{.})$ M. E. anker, Havelok, 521. [The word was originally from the French, but the spelling has been modified to make it look more like the Latin.] -0. F. ancre (mod. F. ancre), an anchor. - Lat. ancora, sometimes spelt anchora, which is not so good a form. -Gk. ayavpa, an anchor; Max Müller, Lectures, i. 108, note; 8th ed. [Curtius, i. 160, cites a Lat. form ancus, having a crooked arm; which is, of course, closely related to Lat. uncus, a hook, Gk. öynos, a bend, Gk. dynáw, a bend; also to Skt. anch, to bend.] - AK, ANK, to bend, curve; Fick, i. 6. See Angle, a hook. Der. anchor, verb, anchor-age.

ANCHORET, ANCHORITE, a recluse, hermit.  $(F_{.,} - Gk_{.})$ The former is the better spelling. 1. The M. E. has the form ancre, which is rather common, and used by Wyclif, Langland, and others; esp. in the phrase Ancren Riwle, i. e. the rule of (female) anchorets, the tille of a work written early in the 13th century. Shak. has an-chor, Hamlet, iii. 2. 229. This M. E. word is modified from the A. S. ancra, or ancer, a hermit. 2. The A. S. ancer-lif, i. e. 'hermit-life' is used to translate the Lat. with anachoretica in Beda's Eccl. Hist. iv. 28; and the word ancer is no native word, but a mere corruption of the Low Lat. anachoreta, a hermit, recluse. 3. The more modern person; cf. Portuguese andas, 'a bier, or rather, the two poles belonging ANCHOVY, a small fish. (Span.) Formerly written anchove. Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, speaks of 'sausages, anchoves, tobacco, caveare; 'p. 106, ed. 1827. – Span. (and Portug.) anchova. ¶ Remoter origin uncertain. Mahn (in Webster) says 'a word of Iberian origin, lit. a dried or pickled fish, from Biscayan antzua, anchua, anchwa, dry.' I find the Basque forms anchóa, ánchua, ánchua, signifying 'anchovy,' in the Dict. François-Basque by M.-H.-L. Fabre. Again, in the Diccionaria Trilingue del padre Manuel de Larramendi, in Spanish, Basque, and Latin, I find : 'Seco, aplicado à los pechos de la muger, anizuta, anizutua, Lat. siccus,' i.e. dry, applied to a woman's breasts, Basque anizuta, anizutua, Lat. siccus. Perhaps Mahn's suggestion is correct.

ANCLENT (1), old. (F., -L.) Skelton has auncyently, Works, ed. Dyce, i. 7. The M. E. form is auncien, Mandeville, p. 93; thus the final t is excressent, as in tyrant. -O. F. ancien (mod. F. ancien), old; cognate with Ital. anziano, Span. anciano. - Low Lat. antianus, old, Ducange. Formed by Lat. suffix -anus from Lat. ante. - Lat. ante, before. See Anto-. Dor. ancient-ly, ancient-ness.

ANCIENT (2), a banner, standard-bearer. (F., -L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iv. 2. 34; cf. Oth. i. 1. 33. Here (as above) the t is excrescent, and ancient stands for ancient, prob. a corruption of O. F. enseigne, 'an ensigne, auncient, standard-bearer;' Cot. See Ensign. AND, copulative conjunction. (E.) Common from the earliest times. - A. S. and, also written ond + O. Sax. ende, and. + O. Fries. (rather differently used, but the same word). + O. H. G. anti, enti, inti, unti; mod. G. und.  $\P$  1. The remoter origin does not seem to have been satisfactorily traced, but it can hardly be separated from the A.S. prefix and- (occurring in along and answer), and the Gothic prefix and-, which are clearly related to the Lat. ante, before, Gk. deri, over against, Skt. anti, a Vedic form, equivalent to Gk. duri, over against; (see antika, vicinity, in Benfey's Skt. Dict. p. 28.) This sense of 'over against' is fairly well preserved in G. entgegen, and in the A.S. andswarian, E. an-swer; and from this sense to its use as a copulative conjunction is an easy step. See Answer. 2. The Icelandic use of enda in the sense not only of 'moreover,' but of 'if,' is the obvious origin of the use of the M. E. and in the sense of 'if.' Thus we have in Havelok, a poem with marked Scandinavianisms, the sentence, 'And thou wile my conseil tro, Ful wel shal ich with the do;' i.e. if you will trust my counsel, I will do very well by you; l. 2861. 3. In order to differentiate the senses, i.e. to mark off the two meanings of and more readily, it became at last usual to drop the final d when the word was used in the sense of 'if;' a use very common in Shakespeare. Thus Shakespeare's an is nothing but a Scandinavian use of the common word and. When the force of an grew misty, it was reduplicated by the addition of 'if;' so that an if, really meaning 'if-if,' is of common occurrence. Neither is there anything remarkable in the use of and if as another spelling of an if; and it has been preserved in this form in a well-known passage in the Bible: 'But and if,' Matt. xxiv. 48. 4. There is, perhaps, an etymological connection with end. See End.

ANDANTE, slow, slowly. (Ital.) A musical term. Borrowed from Ital. andanie, adj. going; sb. a moderate movement. It is pro-perly the pres. part. of the verb andare, to go. Probably from the same root as E. alley. See Alley.

ANDIRON, a kitchen fire-dog. (F.) The M. E. forms are numerous, as anderne, aunderne, aundirne, aundire, aundyern, &cc. In the Prompt. Parv. p. 19, we have 'Aunderne, aundyre, aundyren, occ. In the ipoporgium.' In Wright's Vocabularies, p. 171, we have 'Aundyrnes, les chenes;' and at p. 176, 'A aundyre, andena.' [It is clear that the ending -iron is a corruption, upon English soil, in order to give the word some sort of sense in English; such corruptions are not uncommon.] The form aundyre comes very near to the original French. - O. F. andier (mod. F. landier, i. e. l'andier, the article being prefixed as in lierre, ivy, from Lat. hedera), a fire-dog. The remoter origin is obscure; but it may be noted that the Low Lat. forms are numerous, viz. andasium, a fire-dog, prop for supporting the logs, and, with the same sense, andedus, andena (quoted above in the extract from the Prompt. Parv.), anderia, anderius. The F. form corresponds with the two last of these. The form andasium closely corresponds with Span. andas, a frame or bier on which to carry A to it,' Vieyra; also Port. andor, 'a bier to carry images in a procession, a sort of sedan; ' id. The various forms so persistently retain the stem and- as to point to the Span. and Port. andar, Ital. andare, O. F. aner, to go, walk, step, move, be carried about, as the source. See Alley. 2. No certain origin of this word has been given. We may, however, easily see that the E. iron formed, originally, no part of it. We can tell, at the same time, how it came to be added, viz. by confusion with the A.S. brand-isen, lit. a ' brand-iron,' which had the same meaning, and became, at a later time, not only brondiron but brondyre. The confusion was inevitable, owing to the similarity of form and identity of use. See references in Koch, Eng. Gram. iii. 161; but he fails to give a full account of the word. [+]

ANECDOTE, a story in private life. (F., -Gk.) Used by Sterne, Serm. 5. Not in early use. - F. anecdote, not in Cotgrave. -Gk. dvikooros, unpublished; so that our word means properly 'an unpublished story, ' a piece of gossip among friends.' - Gk. dw- (E. un-); and ékcoros, given out. - Gk. ék, out, and ólówµ, I give; from the same root as E. Donation, q. v. Der. anecdot-al, anecdot-ic-al.

ANEMONE, the name of a flower. (Gk.) It means the 'wind-flower;' in Greek ἀνεμώνη, the accent in E. being now wrongly placed on s instead of o. – Gk. ἄνεμοs, the wind. From the same root as Animate, q. v.

ANENT, regarding, near to, beside. (E.) Nearly obsolete, except in Northern English. M. E. anent, anende, anendes, anendis, &c. The forms anendes, anentis, were made by adding the suffix -es. -is. orig. the sign of a gen. case, but frequently used as an adverbial suffix.] Anent is a contraction of anefent, or onefent, which occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 164, as another reading for anonde. In this form, the t is excrescent, as commonly after n (cf. tyrant, ancient), and the true form is anefen or onefen. - A. S. on-efen, prep. near; sometimes written on-emn, by contraction ; Grein, i. 218, 225. - A. S. on, prep. in, and efen, even, equal; so that on-efen meant originally 'on an equality with,' or 'even with.' See Even. ¶ The cognate G. neben, beside, is similarly derived from G. in, in, and eben, even ; and, to complete the analogy, was sometimes spelt nebent. See Mätzner, Wörterbuch ; Stratmann, Old Eng. Dict., s. v. anefen, and esp. Koch, Engl. Gramm. v. ii. p. 389.

ANEROID, dry; without liquid mercury; applied to a barome-ter. (Gk.) Modern. - Gk. d-, privative; v7p6-s, wet; and elo-os, form. -Gk. vdew, to flow. + Skt. snu, to flow. - √ SNU, to flow; allied to √ SNA. to wash, bathe, swim. See Curtius, i. 396; Fick, i. 250.

ANEURISM, a tumour produced by the dilatation of the coats of an artery. (Gk.) Formed as if from aneurisma, put for aneurysma, a Latinised form of Gk. areupuo ua, a widening. - Gk. ard, up; and evolveue, to widen. - Gk. evolus, wide. + Skt. uru, large, wide. (Fick gives the Aryan form as varu, wide; i. 213.) - VWAR, to cover; cf. Skt. vri, to cover, to surround.

ANEW, newly. (E.) A corruption of M. E. of-newe, used by Chaucer, C. T. Group E, 938. Cf. adown for A. S. ofdúne. Here of is the A.S. of, prep., and new is our mod. E. new; the final -e being an adverbial suffix, as usual.

ANGEIL, a divine messenger. (L.,-Gk.) In very early use, A.S. angel, engel, an angel; Grein, i. 227; borrowed from Lat. angelus. - Gk. άγγελοs, lit. a messenger ; hence, an angel. Cf. άγγαροs, a mounted courier, which is an old Persian word. Fick, ii. 13. cites a Skt. form anjiras, a messenger from the gods to men, an angel. Der. angel-ic, angel-ic-al, angel-ic-al-ly.

ANGER, excitement due to a sense of injury. (Scand.) In Mid. Eng. the word is more passive in its use, and denotes 'affliction,' trouble,' sore vexation.' 'If he here thole anger and wa' = if he suffer here affliction and woe; Hampole's Pricke of Conscience, 3517. - Icel. angr, grief, sorrow. + Dan. anger, compunction, regret. + Swed. anger, compunction, regret. + Lat. angor, a strangling, bodily torture; also mental torture, anguish; from angere, to strangle. Cf. A. S. ange, oppressed, sad; Gk. ayxer, to strangle; Skt. anihas, pain, Benfey, p. 1, closely related to Skt. agha, sin. - ↓ AGH, and (nasalised) ↓ ANGH, to choke, oppress. See Curtius, i. 234; Fick, i. 9. Der. angr-y, angr-i-ly; from the same root, anguish, anxious, awe, ugly; also quinsy, q. v.; and Lat. angina.

ANGINA, severe suffering. (Lat.) Borrowed from Lat. angina, lit. 'a choking,' from angere, to strangle. See above. ANGLE (1), a bend, a corner. (F., = L.) Chaucer has angles, C. T. Group F. 230; also angle, as a term of astrology (Lat. angulus), id. 263. - O. F. angle (mod. F. angle), an angle. - Lat. angulus, an angle. + Gk. αγκύλου, crooked. From the same root as the next word. Der. angul-ar, angul-ar-ly, angul-ar-i-ty; all from the Lat. angul-aris, which from angulus.

ANGLE (2), a fishing-hook. (E.) In very early use. A. S. angel, Mat. xvii. 27. + Dan. angel, a fishing-hook. + G. angel, the same. -vs, a hook, Gk. δγκοs, άγκων, a bend; Skt. anch, to bend. IK, to bend, curve; Fick, i. 6. From the same root comes the word above; also Anchor, q. v. Der. angle, vb., angleer. angl-ing ANGRY, i. e. anger-y; Chaucer, C. T. 12893. See Anger.

ANGUISH, oppression; great pain. (F., -L.) M. E. anguis, anguise, angoise, &c. Spelt anguys in Pricke of Conscience, 2240; anguysse, Rob. of Glouc. p. 177; anguise, Ancren Riwle, p. 178. – O. F. anguisse, angoisse, mod. F. angoisse, anguish. – Lat. angustia, O. F. anguisse, anguisse, mod. T. anguisse, anguiss. - Lat. anguese, narrowness, poverty, perplexity. - Lat. angustus, narrow. - Lat. angere, to stifle, choke, strangle. + Gk.  $\delta\gamma\chi\epsilon\nu$ , to strangle. -  $\checkmark$  ANGH, nasalised form of  $\checkmark$  AGH, to choke. See Anger, which is from the same root. TFrom the same root we have also anxious, the Lat. angina, awe, ugly, and even quinsy ; see Max Müller, Lectures, i. 435, 8th edit.

ANILE, old-woman-like. (Lat.) Used by Walpole, Catalogue of Engravers; Sterne, Serm. 21, has anility. Not in early use. - Lat. anilis, like an old woman. - Lat. anus, an old woman. See Fick, i. 6.

ANIMADVERT, to criticise, censure. (Lat.) Lit. 'to turn the mind to.'- Lat. animaduertere, to turn the mind to, pp. animaduersus. - Lat. anim-us, the mind ; ad, to ; and uertere, to turn. For roots, see Animate and Verse. Der. animadvers-ion, in Berl Jonson's Discoveries, sect. headed Notæ domini Sti. Albani, &c.

ANIMAL, a living creature. (L.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 320.-Lat. animal, a breathing creature. - Lat. anima, breath. See below. Der. animal-ism, animal-cule.

ANIMATE, to endue with life. (Lat.) Used by Hall, Edw. IV. an. 8.-Lat. animatus, pp. of animare, to give life to .- Lat. anima, breath, life. - AN, to breathe; which appears not only in the Skt. an, to breathe, blow, live; but also in Goth, us-anan, to breathe out. expire, Mark xv. 37, 39; and in Icel. anda, to breathe, önd, breath, whence Lowland Scotch aynd, breath. Der. animat-ed, animat-ion. ANIMOSITY, vehemence of passion, prejudice. (F., -L.) Bp. Hall, Letter of Apology, has the pl. animosities. - F. animosité, 'ani-mosity, stoutness;' Cot. - Lat. acc. animositatem, from nom. animos sitas, ardour, vehemence. - Lat. animosus, full of spirit. - Lat. animus, mind, courage. + Gk. arepos, breath, wind. - AN, to breathe. See Animate. The Lat. animus is now used as an Eng. word. ANISE, a medicinal herb.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.,}-Gk_{.})$  In Matt. xxiii. 23, the Wycliffite versions have both anese and anese. In Wright's Lyric Poetry, p. 26, we find anys; and in Wright's Vocabularies, i. 227, is: 'Hoc anisium, anys.' - F. anis, anise; see Cotgrave. - Lat. anisum (or anisium), usually spelt anethum (whence Wychif's anete). - Gk. av.oor, avnoor, usually spelt arnoor, anise, dill. Perhaps the word is of Oriental origin ; on the other hand, the word anisun, given in Richardson's Arabic and Pers. Dict., is marked as being a Greek word.

ANKER, a liquid measure of 8 to 10 gallons. (Dutch.) Mentioned in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731, as in use at Amsterdam. - Du. anker, the same. + Swed. ankare. + G. anker. There is also a Low Lat. anceria, a keg, a small vat, which is plainly the same word. Probably the root is the same as that of anchor, viz. ANK, the nasalised form of AK, to bend, curve, Fick, i. 6; and the vessel has its name from its rounded shape. Both in Du. and Ger, the word anker signifies both 'anker' and 'anchor;' so too Swed. ankare. Cf. Gk. dyrahy, meaning (1) the bent arm, (2) anything closely enfolding.

ANKLE, the joint between leg and foot. (E.) M. E. anele, Chaucer, C. T. 1661. Also anclowe, Ellis's Specimens, i. 279 - A. S. ancleow, ankle, Ælfric's Gloss. ed. Somner, p. 71, col. 2. + O. Fries. onklef, ankel, the ankle. + Dan. and Swed. ankel. + Icel. ökkla (for önkla), ökli. + Du. enklaauw, enkel. + O. H. G. anchala, anchla, enchila, the ankle; mod. G. enkel. [The Du. klaauw means 'claw,' and the A. S. cleow seems to point to the same word, but these endings are probably mere adaptations in the respective languages, to give the words a more obvious etymology.]  $\beta$ . The word is clearly a diminutive, formed with suffix -el from a stem ank-. Indeed, the O. H. G. has the shorter form encha, meaning leg, ankle. The root is the same as that of Gk. dyntuk, the bent arm, and dyntur, a bend, viz.  $\checkmark$  ANK, a nasalised form of  $\checkmark$  AK, to bend, curve; cf. Skt. anish, to bend. See Angle, which is from the same root. The anthe is at the 'bend' of the foot. Der. ankle-joint, ankl-et (ornament for the ancle).

ANNALS, a relation of events year by year. (F., -L.) Grafton speaks of 'short notes in manner of annales; 'Ep. to Sir W. Cecil. -F. annales, s. pl. fem. 'annales. annual chronicles; 'Cot. - Lat. annales, pl. adj., put for libri annales, yearly books or chronicles; from nom. sing. ann-alis, yearly. - Lat. annus, a year, lit. the 'circuit' of a year; orig. a circle; supposed by Corssen to be a weakening of annus, from Lat. pref. am- (for ambi-), around, cognate with Gk. dupl, around. See Curtius, i. 365. Der. annal-ist.

ANNEAL, to temper by heat. ((1) E.; (2) F., -L.) Two distinct words have here been confused. 1. The word was originally applied to metals, in which case it was English, and denoted rather the heating of metals than the tempering process by gradual cooling. This is the M. E. anden, to inflame, kindle, heat, melt, burn. Gowen,

C. A. iii. 96. speaks of a meteoric stone, which the fire 'hath aneled' [melted] Lich unto slyme, which is congeled. Wyclif, Isaiah, xvi. 7 has 'anelid tyil 'as a translation of Lat. coeti lateris. Earlier, the word means simply 'to burn' or 'inflame.' Thus, in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 219, the word scraphim is explained to mean 'birninde other anhelend' [better spelt anelend] = burning or kind-ling; and again, at p. 97, it is said that the Holy Ghost 'onealde eorthlicen monnan heortan' = inflamed earthly men's hearts. - A.S. onalan, to burn, kindle, Grein, ii. 339; a compound verb. - A. S. on, prefix (answering to mod. E. prep. on); and alan, to burn, Grein, i. Cf. Icel. eldr, Swed. eld, Dan. ild, fire; corresponding to A.S. 55. eled, fire, a derivative of alan, to burn. - AL, to burn; Fick, i. 500, who ingeniously compares Skt. ar-una, tawny, ar-usha, tawny; with the suggestion that these words may have meant originally 'fiery. 3. But in the fifteenth century, a very similar word was introduced from the French, having particular reference to the fixing of colours upon glass by means of heat. This is the M. E. anelen, to enamel upon glass by means of neat. This is the M.E. aneien, to chamel glass. Thus Palsgrave has 'I aneel a potte of erthe or such lyke with a coloure, je plomme.' The word was also applied to the enamelling of metal, and is probably meant in the entry in the Prompt. Parv. at p. 11; 'Anelyn or enelyn metalle, or other lyke.' The initial a- is either the French prefix a- (Lat. ad), or may have been merely due to the influence of the very similar native word. – O. F. neeler, nieler, to enamel; orig. to paint in black upon gold or silver. - Low Lat. nigellare, to blacken. - Lat. nigellus, blackish; dimin. of niger, black. Probably connected with Aryan nak, night; Fick, i. 133. ¶ There is yet a third word not unlike these two, which appears in 'unaneled,' i.e. not having received extreme unction; Hamlet, i. 5. 77. This is from A.S. onelan, to put oil upon; from A.S. on, prefix, and ele, oil; see Oil.

ANNEX, to fasten or unite to. (F., -L.) The pp. annexed occurs in the Romaunt of the Rose, 4811. - F. annexer, 'to annex, knit, linke, join;' Cot. - Lat. annexus, pp. of annectere, to knit or bind to. - Lat. ad-, to (= an-before n); and nectere, to bind. Perhaps from  $\sqrt{NAGH}$ , to bind, Fick, i. 645; cf. Skt. nah, to bind. Der. annex-at-ion. ANNIHILATE, to reduce to nothing. (Lat.) Hall, Edw. IV,

ANNIHILATE, to reduce to nothing. (Lat.) Hall, Edw. IV, an. 1, has admihilate; Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 100, has annihilated. Formed with suffix -ate, on which see Abbreviate. - Lat. annihilatus, pp. of annihilare, to reduce to nothing. - Lat. ad, to (= an-before n); and nihil, nihilum, nothing, which is contracted from ne (or nec) hilum, not a whit, or more literally, not a thread; since hilum is, doubtless, a corruption of filum, a thread. See Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 379, 380; 8th ed.; and see File. Der. annihilat-ion.

ANNIVERSARY, the annual commemoration of an event. (Lat.) Fabyan, an. 1369, speaks of 'an annyuersarye yerely to be kept.' The pl. anniuersaries occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 22. It is properly an adjective, and so used by Bp. Hall, On the Obser. of Christ's Nativity, where he speaks of an 'anniversary memorial.' - Lat. anniuersarius, returning yearly. - Lat. anni-, for anno-, stem of annus, a year; and wertere. to turn. pp. wersus. See Annals, and Verse.

wertere. to turn. pp. wersus. See Annals, and Verse. ANNOTATE, to make notes upon. (Lat.) Richardson remarks that the verb is very rare; Foxe uses annotations in his Life of Tyndal, in Tyndal's Works, fol. B i, last line. Formed by the suffix -ate, on which see Abbreviate. - Lat. annotatus, pp. of annotare, to make notes. - Lat. ad, to (= an-before n); and notare, to mark. - Lat. sota, a mark. See Note. Der. annotat-or, annotat-ion.

ANNOUNCE, to make known to. (F., -L.) Milton has announc'd, P. R. iv. 504. [Chaucer has annunciat, C. T. 15501, but this is directly from Lat. pp. annunciatus.] - F. annoncer, to announce; Cot. - Lat. annunciare, annunciare, to announce; pp. annunciatus. - Lat. ad (=an- before n); and nunciare, nuntiare, to report, give a message. - Lat, nuncius, nuntius, a messager. (The earlier form seems to be nuntius; Peile, Gk. and Lat. Etym. 2nd ed. p. 246; which probably stands, according to Corssen. for nouentius, a bringer of news, from nouere *, a nominal verb formed from noues (nouus). new; id. p. 378. See New. Der. announce-ment; and, directly from the Latin, annunciation.

ANNOY, to hurt, vez, trouble.  $(F_{.,}-L.)$  M. E. anoien, anuien (with one n, correctly), to vex, trouble. See Alisaunder, ed. Weber, II. 876, 1287, 4158; Havelok, 1734; Chaucer's Boethius, pp. 23, 41. [The sb. anoi, anoy was also in very common use; see Romaunt of the Rose, 4404; Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 267, &c.; but is now obsolet, and its place to some extent supplied by annoyance and the F. ennui.] -O. F. anoier, anuier, ensier, verb, to annoy, trouble; formed from the O. F. sb. anoi, anui, enui (mod. F. ennui), annoyance, vexation, chagrin; cognate with Span. enojo. Old Venetian inodio. - Lat. in odio, lit. in hatred, which was used in the phrase in odio habui, lit. I had in hatred, i. e. I was sick and tired of, occurring in the Glosses of Cassel, temp. Charles the Great; see Brachet and Diez. Other phrases were the Lat. in odio esse and in odio usnire, both meaning to incur hatred, and used by Cicero; see Att. ii, 21. 2. Diez is quite satisfactory, and generally accepted. It proves that the O. F. sb. anoi arose from the use of Lat. in odio in certain common idiomatic phrases and that the O. F. verb anoier was formed from the sb. see Odium and Noisome. Der. annoy-ance; from O. F. anoiance, a derivative of vb. anoier.

ANNUAL, yearly. (F., -L.) M. E. annuel, an anniversary mass for the dead, is a special use of the word; see P. Plowman's Crede, l. 818; Chaucer, C. T. Group G, 1012, on which see my note, or that to Tyrwhitt's Chaucer, C. T. 12940. - F. annuel, annual, yearly; Cot. -Lat. annualis, yearly; formed with suffix -alis from stem annu-- Lat. annus, a year. See Annal. If It will be observed that the spelling was changed from annuel to annual to bring it nearer to the Latin; but the word really came to us through French. Der. annual-ly. From the same source is annu-i-ty, apparently a coined word, used by Hall, Hen. VIII, an. 17; and the more modern annu-i-can.

used by Hall, Hen. VIII, an. 17; and the more modern annu-it-ant. ANNUL, to nullify, abolish. (Lat.) Richardson quotes a passage containing annulled from The Testament of Love, bk. iii, a treatise of Chaucer's age; see Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. cocvili, back, col. I. Either from F. annuller, given by Cotgrave, or direct from Lat. annullare, to annul. - Lat. ad (= an- before n); and Lat. nullus, none, a contraction from ne ullus, not any. Ullus is a contraction for unulus, dimin. of unus, one, formed by help of the dimin. suffix -ul-. The Lat. unus is cognate with E. one. See Fick, ii. 30. And see One. Der. annul-mat.

See One. Der. annul-ment. ANNULAR, like a ring. (Lat.) Ray, On the Creation, p. 2, has both annular and annulary (R.) - Lat. annularis, like a ring; formed by suffix -aris from stem annul- (for annulo-). - Lat. annulus, a ring; diminutive of annus, a year, orig. 'a circuit;' perhaps formed from the prefix am- (for ambi-), round about, cognate with Gk. dµpi, around. See Annals. From the same source (Lat. annulus) we have annulat-ed. annul-et.

ANNUNCIATION, ANNUNCIATE ; see Announce.

ANODYNE, a drug to allay pain. (L., -Gk.) Used by Bp. Taylor, Epistle Dedicatory to Serm. to the Irish Parl., 1661 (R.) Cotgrave gives 'remedes anodins, medicines which, by procuring sleep, take from a patient all sence of pain.' But the spelling anodyns is Latin. - Low Lat. anodynus, a drug relieving pain; Ducange. -Gk. dwódwos, adj. free from pain; whence  $\phi d\rho \mu axov dw d d w ow$ , a drug to relieve pain. -Gk. dwa-, negative prefix; and  $\delta \delta w \eta$ , pain. [Curtius, i. 381, shews that dwa-, corresponding to Zend ana-, and cognate with E. un-, is the full form of the prefix; and this explains the long  $o(\omega)$ , produced by the coalescence of a and o.] Curtius, i. 300, refers  $\delta \delta - i \eta \eta$  to the verb  $\delta \delta \epsilon \epsilon v$ , to eat, as if it were 'a gnawing;' rightly, as it seems to me. See Elat.

ANOINT, to smear with ointment. (F., -L.) Wyclif has anoyntidist, Acts, iv. 27, from M. E. verb anointen or anoynten; see Prompt. Parv. p. 11. Chaucer has anoint as a past participle, Prol. 191. It is clear that anoint was orig. a past-participial form, but was after wards lengthened into anointed, thus suggesting the infin. anointen. Both forms, anoynt and anoynted, occur in the Wycliffite Bible, Gen. 1. 3; Numb. vi. 3. All the forms are also written with initial e, viz. enoint, enointed, enointen; and the true starting-point in Eng. is the pp. enoint, anointed. - O. F. enoint, anointed, pp. of enoindre, to anoint. O. F. en- (Lat. in-, upon, on); and oindre, to smear, anoint. - Lat. ungere, to smear, pp. unctus. See Ointment, Unotion.

ANOMALY, deviation from rule. (Gk.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 15. § 5. Cotgrave's French Dict. gives only the adj. anomal, inequal; so that the sb. was probably taken from Lat. anomalia, or directly from the Gk. = Gk.  $dwa\mu\alpha\lambda\alpha$ , irregularity, unevenness. = Gk.  $dw\omega\mu\alpha\lambda\alpha$ , uneven. = Gk. dwa, full form of the negative prefix (see Curtius). and  $\partial\mu\alpha\lambda\delta\alpha$ , even; the  $\omega$  resulting from coalescence of a and o. The Gk.  $\partial\mu\alpha\lambda\delta\alpha$  is formed by suffix  $-\alpha\lambda$ - from  $\partial\mu$ -, stem of  $\partial\mu\delta\alpha$ , one and the same, joint, common; closely related to E. same. See Same. Der, anomal-ous.

ANON, immediately. (E.) In early use. M. E. anon, anon, onan, anan. Rob. of Glouc. has anon, p. 6. The earliest M.E. forms are anon, Ancren Riwle, p. 14; and anan, Ormulum, 104. The a is convertible with o in either syllable. -A. S. on án, lit. in one moment (answering to M. H. G. in ein), but in A. S. generally signifying 'once for all;' see examples in Grein, i. 31, sect. 8 - A. S. on (mod E. on), often used with the sense of 'in;' and A. S. án, old form of 'one.' See On, and One.

ANONYMOUS, nameless. (Gk.) Not in early use. Used by Pope, Dunciad, Testimonies of Authors (R.) Formed directly from the Gk., by substituting -ous for the Gk. suffix -os, just as it is often substituted for the Lat. suffix -us. - Gk. àrávvµos, nameless. - Gk. àra-, full form of the neg. prefix (see Curtius); and ávoµa. Æolic åvuµa, a name, cognate with E. name; so that the  $\omega$  is due to coalescence of a and o. See Name. Der. anonymous-ly. ANOTHER, i. e. one other. (E.) Merely the words an and other phrases were the Lat. in odio esse and in odio wenire, both meaning to ANOTHER, i. e. one other. (E.) Merely the words an and other incur hatred, and used by Cicero; see Att. ii. 21. 2. The account in written together. In Mid. Eng. they were written apart. 'Hauelok thouthe al an other,' Havelok thought quite another thing; Havelok, 1395. See An and Other.

ANSERINE, goose-like. (Lat.) Not in early use. - Lat. anserinus, belonging to a goose. - Lat. anser, a goose, cognate with E. goose. See Goose.

ANSWER, to reply to. (E.) The lit. sense is 'to swear in opposition to,' orig. used, no doubt, in trials by law. M. E. andswerien, Layamon, ii. 518. – A. S. andswarian, andswerian, to reply to, lit. to swear in opposition to; Grein, i. 6. -A. S. and, in opposition to, cognate with Gk. drri (see Anti-); and swerian, to swear; see Swear. Der. answer-able, answer-abl-y.  $\P$  The prefix ant- in G. antworten, to answer, is cognate with the A.S. prefix and- in the E. word.

ANT, a small insect; the emmet. (E.) Ant is a contraction from A. S. amete (Lat. formica), an emmet; Ælf. Gloss., Nomina Insectorum; so that and and emmet are doublets. The form a mette became, by the ordinary phonetic changes in English, amette, amet, ami, and.  $\P$  Examples of the change of m to n before t occur in Hants as a shortened form of Hamptonshire (see Mätzner, Engl. Gram. i. 123); also in E. aunt from Lat. amita. See Emmet. Der. ant-hill. [+]

ANTAGONIST, an opponent. (Gk.) Ben Jonson has antagonistic, Magnetic Lady, iii. 4; Milton has antagonisi, P. L. ii. 509. They seem to have borrowed directly from the Gk. - Gk. ἀνταγωνιστήs, an adversary, opponent. - Gk. arrayarí(oµaı, I struggle against. -Gk. drr-, short for drri, against; and dyari (opan, I struggle. - Gk. ayów, a struggle. See Agony. Der. antagonist-ic, antagonist-ic-al-ly; also antagonism, borrowed from Gk. drrayúvioya, a struggle with another.

ANTARCTIC, southern; opposite to the arctic. (L. - Gk.) Mar-lowe, Faustus, i. 3. 3; Milton, P. L. ix. 79. [Wyatt spells the word antartike; see Richardson. The latter is French. Cotgrave has Antartique, the circle in the sphere called the South, or Antartick pole. ] - Lat. antarcticus, southern. - Gk. arraperinos, southern. - Gk. dur- = duri, against; and dourinos, arctic, northern. See Arctic.

ANTE-, prefix, before. (Lat.) Occurs in words taken from Latin, e.g. ante-cedent, ante-date, ante-diluvian, &c. - Lat. ante, before; of which an older form seems to have been anted, since Livy uses antid-ea for ant-ea; xxii. 20. 6. Anted is to be considered as an ablative form (Curtius, i. 254), and as connected with Skt. anta, end, border, boundary, cognate with E. end, q. v. Thus anted would seem to mean 'from the boundary,' and hence 'before.' The prefix anti- is closely ANTECEDENT, going before. (Lat.) Used by Sir T. More, Works, p. 1115, last line. [The suffix -ent is formed by analogy with prudent, innocent, &c. and is rather to be considered as F.] - Lat. antecedentem, acc. case of antecedens, going before. - Lat. ante, before ; and edens, going, pres. pt. of cedere, to go; see Code. Der. antecedent-ly; also antecedence (with F. suffix -ence). And see Ancestor. ANTEDATE, to date before. (Lat.) Used by Massinger in the sense of anticipate; 'Duke of Milan, i. 3. Formed by prefixing Lat.

ANTEDILUVIAN, before the flood. (Lat.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. vii. c. 3. § 2. A coined word, made by pre-fixing Lat. aute, before, to Lat. diluui-um, a deluge, and adding the di web and the before the second adj. suffix -an. See Deluge.

ANTELOPE, an animal. (Gk.) Used by Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 26. Said to be corrupted from Gk. άνθαλοπ-, the stem of άνθόλαψ (gen. dsθάλοπου), used by Eustathius (flor. circa 1160), Hexaëm., p. 36 (Webster's Dict.). 'The word Dorcas, the Gk. and Roman name of the gazelle, is derived from the verb olpropa, to see. The common English word antelope is a corrupt form of the name area (sic), employed by Eustathius to designate an animal of this genus, and literally signifying bright eyes' [rather, bright-eyed]; Eng. Cyclop. art. Antilopez. If this be right, the derivation is from Gk. dreeiv, to sprout, blossom, also to shine (cf. άνθοβάφοι, a dyer in bright colours); and  $\omega_{\ell}$  gen.  $\omega_{\pi\omega_{\ell}}$  the eye, which from  $\checkmark$  OII, to see, Aryan  $\checkmark$ AK, to see; Fick, i. 4. See Anther. [†] ANTENNAE, the feelers of insects. (Lat.) Modern and scientific.

Borrowed from Lat. antenna, pl. of antenna, properly 'the yard of a sail.' Remoter origin uncertain.

ANTEPENULTIMA, the last syllable but two. (Lat.) Used in prosody; sometimes shortened to antepenult. - Lat. antepenultima, also spelt antepanultima, fem. adj. (with syllaba understood), the last syllable but two. - Lat. ante, before; and panultima, fem. adj., the last syllable but one. - Lat. pane, almost; and ultimus, last. See Ultimate. Der. antepenultim-ate.

ANTERIOR, before more in front. (Lat.) Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 15. § 3, has anteriour; but this is ill spelt, and due to confusion between the suffixes -our and -or. The word is borrowed directly from Lat. anterior, more in front, compar. adj. from Lat. ante hefore. See Ante-use. M. E. aniym; cf. 'aniym, antiphona;' Prompt. Parv. p. 12. Chaucer has antem, C. T. Group B, 1850. Antem is a contraction from an older form antefn; 'biginneth these antefne' = begin this anthem, Ancren Riwle, p. 34. – A.S. antefn, an anthem; Ælfred's tr. of Beda, Eccl. Hist. i. 25. This A.S. form is a mere corruption from the Latin. - Late Lat. antiphona, an anthem; see Ducange. This is an ill-formed word, as the same word in Gk. is a plural. - Ck. drrfpara, pl. of driparor, an anthem; properly neut. of adj. artiparos, sounding in response to; the anthem being named from its being sung by choristers alternately, half the choir on one side responding to the half on the other side. - Gk. drri, over against; and party, voice. Anthem is a doublet of Antiphon, q. v.

ANTHER, the summit of a stamen in a flower. (Gk.) Modern and scientific. Borrowed from Gk. dronpoo, adj. flowery, blooming. -Gk. droeir, to bloom; aros, a young bud or sprout. The Gk. áveos is cognate with Skt. andhas, herb, sacrificial food. See Fick, i. 15; Curtius, i. 310.

ANTHOLOGY, a collection of choice poems. (Gk.) Several Gk. collections of poems were so called ; hence the extension of the name. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 9. § 2, refers to 'the Greek Anthology.'-Gk. άνθολογία, a flower-gathering, a collection of choice poems. - Gk. άνθολόγοs, adj. flower-gathering. - Gk. άνθο-, stem of άνθοs, a flower; and λέγειν, to collect. See Anther and Legend. ANTHRACITE, a kind of hard coal. (Gk.) Modern. Sug-gested by Gk. dupparirys, adj. resembling coals; formed by suffix urns, expressing resemblance, from dropan-, the stem of Gk. aropaf, coal, charcoal, also a carbuncle, precious stone. ¶ Apparently formed from Gk.  $\delta v \theta \epsilon i v$ , to sprout, also to shine, be bright; the latter sense would seem to explain  $\delta v \theta \rho a t$  in both its uses. However Curtius, ii. 132, says 'no etymology of aropat, at all probable, has indeed as yet been found.

ANTHROPOLOGY, the natural history of man. (Gk.) Modern and scientific. Formed by the ending -logy (Gk.  $\lambda \sigma \gamma i a$ , discourse, from  $\lambda \epsilon \gamma \epsilon \mu \nu$ , to speak) from Gk.  $\delta \mu \sigma \rho \omega \pi \sigma s$ , a man.  $\beta$ . This word from  $\lambda \epsilon \gamma \epsilon \iota \nu$ , to speak) from Gk.  $\delta \nu \theta \rho \omega \pi \sigma \sigma$ , a man.  $\beta$ . This word is to be divided  $\delta \nu \theta \rho - \omega \pi \sigma \sigma$ , see Curtius, i. 382. Here  $\delta \nu \theta \rho - i \sigma$  for drop-, a strengthened form of the stem drep-, of which the nom. is arbo, a strengthened form of the stem arbo, of which the hold. is arbo, a man; and wros is from Gk. άψ, gen. &rós, the face; so that δrθρωros means ' having a human face,' a human being. ANTHROPOPHAGI, cannibals. (Gk.) Used by Shak. Oth. i. 3. 144. Lit. 'men-eaters.' A Latinised plural of Gk. drθρωro-φάγοs, adj. man-eating. - Gk. άνθρωros, a man; and φαγεν, to eat. On ανθρωποs, see above; φαγείν is from BHAG, to eat; cf. Skt.

ANTI-, ANT-, prefix, against. (Gk.) Occurs in words taken from Gk., as antidote, antipathy, &c. In anticipate, the prefix is really the Lat. ante. In ant-agonist, ant-arctic, it is shortened to ant .- -Gk. drti, against, over against. + Skt. anti, over against; a Vedic form, and to be considered as a locative from the Skt. anta, end, boundary, also proximity, cognate with E. end, q. v. Cf. Skt. antika, vicinity, with the abl. antikát, used to mean 'near,' 'from,' ' close to,' 'in presence of;' Benfey, p. 28. ¶ This Gk. prefix is cognate with the A.S. and-, appearing in mod. E. along and answer, q. v. Also with Goth. and-; and with G. ant-, as seen in antworten, to answer.

ANTIC, fanciful, odd; as sb., a trick. (F., -L.) Orig. an adjective, and a mere doublet of antique. Hall, Henry VIII, an 12, speaks of a fountain 'ingrayled with anticke workes;' and similarly Spenser, F. Q. iii. 11. 51, speaks of gold 'Wrought with wilde antickes, which their follies played In the rich metall as they living were.' - F. antique, old. Cotgrave gives, s. v. Antique, ' taillé à antiques, cut with anticks, or with antick-works.' - Lat. antiquus, old ; also spelt anticus, which form is imitated in the English. See Antique.

ANTICHRIST, the great opponent of Christ. (Gk.) Gk. duriχριστοι; I John, ii. 18. From Gk. duri, against ; and Χριστόs, Christ. See Anti- and Christ. Der. antichrist-ian. [+]

ANTICIPATE, to take before the time, forestall. (Lat.) Used by Hall, Henry VI, an. 38. Formed by suffix -ate (on which see Abbreviate), from Lat. anticipare, to take beforehand, prevent; pp. anticipatus. - Lat. anti-, old form of ante, beforehand; and capere, to take. See Ante- and Capable. Der. anticipat-ion, anticipat-ory. ANTICLIMAX, the opposite of a climax. (Gk.) Compounded of Anti-, against ; and Climax. ANTIDOTE, a medicine given as a remedy. (F.-L.-Gk.) Used by Shak. Mach. v. 3. 43. - F. antidote, given by Cotgrave. - Lat.

antidotum, neut. and antidotus, fem., an antidote, remedy. - Gk. dridoros, adj. given as a remedy; hence, as sb. arridoror, neuter, an antidote, and deridoros, feminine, the same (Liddell and Scott). - Gk. deri, against; and borós, given, formed from biboum, I give. See Anti-, and Donation. Der. antidot-al, antidot-ic-al.

ANTIMONY, the name of a metal. (?) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 317. Englished from Low Lat. antimonium; EM, a piece of sacred music. (L., -Gk.) In very early Ducange. Origin unknown. Der. antimon-ial.

ANTINOMIAN, one who denies the obligation of moral law. (Gk.) Tillotson, vol. ii. ser. 50, speaks of 'the Antinomian doctrine.' Milton, Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce, b. ii. c. 3, uses the sb. antinomie. The suffix -an is adjectival, from Lat. -anus. The word is not from Gk. drrivouía, an ambiguity in the law, but is simply coined from Gk. drri, against, and vouos, law, which is from the verb véµew, to deal out, also to pasture. See Anti-, and Nomad.

ANTIPATHY, a feeling against another. (Gk.) Used by Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 479. Fuller has antipathetical, Worthies of Lincolnshire. Either from F. antipathie, explained as 'antipathy' by Cotgrave; or formed directly from Gk. drriwádeta, an antipathy, lit. 'a suffering against.'-Gk. drrí, against; and wadeiv, to suffer. See Anti-, and Pathos. Der. antipath-et-ic, antipath-et-ic-al.

suffering against: "Gk. dori, against; and radeus, an antipathy, it." as suffering against: "Gk. dori, against; and radeus, to suffer. See Anti-, and Pathos. Der. antipath-et-ic, antipath-et-ic-al. ANTIPHON, an anthem. (L., -Gk.) Milton has the pl. antiphonies, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 12. The book containing the antiphons was called an antiphone, a word used by Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 1709. - Low Lat. antiphona, an ill-formed word, as it represents a Gk. pl. rather than a sing. form. -Gk. drridowa, pl. of drridowor, an anthem; properly neut. of adj. drridowos, sounding in response to; the one half-choir answering the other in alternate verses. -Gk. drrid, contrary, over against (see Anti-); and dowrh, voice. -Gk. drui, I speak, say; which from ABHA, to speak; Curtius, i. 369. Antiphon is a doublet of anthem, q. v.

ANTIPHRASIB, the use of words in a sense opposed to their meaning. (Gk.) Borrowed directly from Gk. άντίφρασιs, lit. a contradiction; also the use of words in a sense opposed to their literal meaning. – Gk. άντιφράζειν, to express by negation. – Gk. άντί, against, contrary; and φράζειν, to speak. See Anti- and Phrase. Der. antiphras-t-ic-al.

ANTIPODES, men whose feet are opposite to ours. (Gk.) Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 55; Holland's tr. of Pliny, b. ii. c. 65. – Lat. antipodes; a borrowed word. – Gk. drrizodes, pl., men with feet opposite to us; from nom. sing. drrizous. – Gk. drri, opposite to, against; and zois, a foot, cognate with E. foot. See Anti- and Foot. Der. antipod-al.

ANTIQUE, old. (F., -L.) Shak. has 'the antique world;' As You Like It, ii. 3. 57. - F. antique; Cot. - Lat. antiquus, old; also spelt anticus, and formed with suffix -icus from ante-, before, just as Lat. posticus, behind, is formed from post, after. See Ante-. Der. antiqu-it-y, antiqu-ate, antiqu-ar-ed, antiqu-ar-y, antiqu-ar-i-an, antiqu-ar-ian-ism. ¶ Antique is a doublet of antic, which follows the spelling of the Lat. anticus. See Antic.

of the Lat. anticus. See Antic. ANTISEPTIC, counteracting putrefaction. (Gk.) Modern. Formed from Gk.  $d\nu\tau i$ , against; and  $\sigma\eta\pi\tau$ -ós, decayed, rotten, verbal adj. from  $\sigma\eta\pi\epsilon\nu$ , to make rotten. Probably connected with Lat. succus or succus, juice, and E. sap; Curtius, ii. 63. See Sap. ANTISTROPHE, a kind of stanza. (Gk.) Borrowed directly

ANTISTROPHE, a kind of stanza. (Gk.) Borrowed directly from Gk. duritor pooph, a return of a chorus, answering to a preceding  $\sigma r \rho o \phi h$ , or strophe. – Gk. d r t, over against; and  $\sigma r \rho o \phi h$ , a verse or stanza, lit. 'a turning;' from the verb  $\sigma r \rho i \phi \epsilon \omega r$ , to turn. See Antiand Strophe.

ANTITHESIS, a contrast, opposition. (Gk.) Used by Bp. Taylor, Dissuasive from Popery, bk. i. pt. ii. s. I(R.) - Gk. dvriθeous, an opposition, a setting opposite – Gk. dvri, over against; and θéous, a setting, placing. – Gk.  $\taui\theta\eta\mu$ , I place. See Anti-, and Thesis. Der, antithe-i-c. antithe-i-c. antithe-i-c. al-dy; from Gk. dvriθerusós, adj.

ANTITYPE, that which answers to the type. (Gk.) Bp. Taylor, Of the Real Presence, s. 12. 28, speaks of 'type and antitype.' The word is due to the occurrence of the Gk. derivator (A. V. 'figure') in I Pet. iii. 21, and the pl. derivator (A. V. 'figures') in Heb. ix. 24. This sb. derivator is the neut. of adj. derivator, formed according to a model. - Gk. deri, over against; and rivator, a blow, also a model, pattern, type, from the base of rivater, to strike. See Anti-, and Type. Der. antityp-ic-al.

ANTLER, the branch of a stag's horn. (F., -O. Low G.) Like r most terms of the chase, this is of F. origin. The oldest E. form is auntelere, occurring in Twety's treatise on Hunting, pr. in Reliquize Antiquæ, i. 151. The t stands for d, as in other words; cf. clot for clod, girt for gird, and several other examples given by Mätzner, i. 120. Thus auntelere stands for aundelere. -F. andouiller, or endouiller, both of which forms are given by Cotgrave, who explains the latter as 'the brow ankler [by corruption of anlter]. or lowest branch of a deer's head.' 1. The remoter origin of the word is, admittedly, a difficulty. I cannot explain the ending -ouiller, but we need not be at a loss for the source of the more material part of the word. It is plainly the (so-called) O. H. G. andi, M. H. G. ende, einde, the forehead, a word which belongs rather to O. Low German, though occurring in O. H. G. writings. This is suggested by the fact of the occurrence of the word in all the Scaucinavian dialects. In the Danish dialects it occurs as and, the forehead; Molbech's Dansk Dialektlexicon, cited by Rietz. The Swed. is arne, the forehead, by assimi-Lation for ande. The Icel. is enni, by assimilation for endi; and all point to an original form which Fick renders by anthja or andja, the forehead; iii. 17. [Fick further cites the Lat. fem. pl. antia, with the sense of 'hair on the forehead.] 2. And further, we may confidently connect all these words with the Low G. prefix and-, cognate with Gk. dvri, over against, Lat. ante, before, Skt. anti, over against, before; see Curtius, i. 253. 3. We may also observe that the double spelling and and ende in O. German accounts for the double spelling in F. as andouiller and endouiller; and that the Teutonic prefix and- is remarkably represented in A. S. andwlita, mod. G. antilitz, the face. countenance. [\*] the face, countenance. [\*] ANUS, the lower orifice of the bowels. (Lat.) In Kersey's Dict. Borrowed from Lat. anus. Both Fick (i 504) and Curtus (i. 472) give the derivation from the  $\sqrt{AS}$ , to sit, which would account for the long a by the loss of s. Cf. Skt. ds, to sit; Gk. for-rat, he sits. ANVIL, an iron block on which smiths hammer their work into shape. (E.) Anvil is for anvild or anvil, a final d or t having dropped off. In Wright's Vocabularies, i. 180, is the entry 'anfeld, incus." ln Chaucer's Book of the Duchess, 1163, we find anvelt. - A.S. anfilte, explained by Lat. incus, Ælf, Glos. ed. Somner, p. 65; also spelt onfilt (Lye). - A. S. on-, prefix, often written an-, answering to mod. E. on ; and fyllan, to fell, strike down, the causal of fall. ¶ The manner in which the sense arose is clearly preserved in Icelandic. The Icel. falla means (1) to fall, (2) to fall together, to fit, suit, a sense to some extent preserved in the M. E. fallen, to fall out fitly. The causal verb, viz. Icel. fella (mod. E. fell) means (1) to fell, (2) to make to fit; and was especially used as a workman's term. Used by joiners, it means 'to tongue and groove' work together; by masons, 'to fit a stone into a crevice; and by blacksmiths, fella jarn is 'to work iron into bars;' see Cleasby and Vigfusson's Icel. Dict. 151, col. 1. This accounts, too, for the variation in the second vowel. The A.S. onfilt is from A.S. fyllan, the M.E. anvelt answers to Icel. fella. The same change took place in the word fell itself, if we compare it with A.S. fyllan. Thus an anvil is ' that upon which iron is worked into bars,' or 'that on which iron is hammered out.' B. 1. Similarly, the Dutch aanbeeld, an anvil, is from Du. aan, on, upon; and beelden, to form, fashion. 2. The O. H. G. aneualz, an anvil (Graff, iii. 519) is (probably) from O. H. G. ane, on, upon; and O. H. G. valdan, to fold, fold up, hence, to fit. 3. The mod. G. amboss, an anvil, is from G. an, upon; and M. H. G. bozen, to beat, cognate with E. beat. 4. The Lat. incus, an anvil, is from Lat. in, upon; and cudere, to beat, hammer. T The Du. aanbeeld and O. H. G. aneualz are sometimes carelessly given as cognate words with E. anvil, but it is plain that, though the prefix is the same in all three cases, the roots are different. For the root of anvil, see Fall. [\*]

ANXIOUS, distressed, oppressed, much troubled. (Lat.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 185. Sir T. More, Works, p. 197e, has anxyete. [The sb. was probably taken from F. anxieté, given by Cotgrave, and explained by 'anxietie;' but the adj. must have been taken directly from Latin, with the change of -us into -ous as in other cases, e. g. pious, amphibious, barbarous.] = Lat. anxius, anxious, distressed. = Lat. angere, to choke, strangle. + Gk.  $a_{XXeiv}$ , to strangle. =  $\checkmark$ ANGH, nasalised form of  $\checkmark$ AGH, to choke, oppress; Curtius, i. 234; Fick, i. 9. Der. anxious-ly, anxious-ness; also anxie-ely, from F. anxieté, Lat. acc. anxietatem. From the same root we have anger, anguish, Lat. angina, aue, ugly, and even quinsy; see these words. ANY, indef. pronoun; some one. (E.) The indefinite form of one.

ANY, indef. pronoun; some one. (E.) The indefinite form of one. The Mid. Eng. forms are numerous, as aniz, ani, ani, oni, eni, &c. 1 aniz is in O. Eng. Homilies, i. 219. – A. S. ánig, formed by suffix-ig (cf. greed-y from A. S. gréd-ig, March, A. S. Grammar, sect. 228) from the numeral án, one. + Du. eenig, any; from een, one. + G. einiger, any one; from ein, one. See One. Der. any-thing, any-wise.

AORTA, the great artery rising up from the left ventricle of the heart. (Gk.) In Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, ed. 1827, p. 26. Borrowed directly from Gk. doprh, the aorta. – Gk. delper, to raise up; pass. delperoba, to rise up. See this verb discussed in Curtius, i. 441, 442.

APACE, at a great pace. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Marlow has 'gallop apace;' Edw. II, A. iv. sc. 3. 1. At an earlier period the word was written as two words, a pas, as in Chaucer, C. T. Group F, 388: 'And forth she walketh esily a pas.' 2. It is also to be remarked that the phrase has widely changed its meaning. In Chaucer, both here and in other passages, it means 'a foot-pace,' and was originally used of horses when proceeding slowly, or at a walk. The phrase is composed of the E. indef. article a, and the M. E. pas, mod. E. pace, a word of F. origin. See Pace.

F. origin. See Pace. APART, aside. (F., -L.) Rich. quotes from the Testament of Love, bk. iii, last sect., a passage concerning the 'five sundrie wittes, euerich aparte to his own doing.' The phrase is borrowed from the F. à part, which Cotgrave gives, and explains by 'apart, alone, singly.' &c. -Lat. ad, to: and partem, acc. case of pars, a part. See Part. APARTMENT, a separate room. (F., -Ital., -L.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 675. – F. appartement. – Ital. appartamento, a separation; Florio. – Ital. appartare, to withdraw apart, id.; also spelt apartare. – Ital. a parte, apart. See above.

APATHY, want of feeling. (Gk.) In Holland's Plutarch, p. 62, we have the pl. apathies; he seems to use it as if it were a new word in English. Drawn, apparently, directly from the Gk., with the usual suffix -y. - Gk. d#détea, apathy, insensibility. - Gk. d-, neg. prefix; and #a@eiv, to suffer. See Pathos. Der. apath-et-ic.

APE, a kind of monkey. (E.) M. E. ape. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 4344; Ancren Riwle, p. 248. – A.S. apa, Alif. Glos., Nomina Ferarum. + Du. aap. + Icel. api. + Swed. apa. + Irish and Gael. ap. apa. + G. affe. + Gk. signos. + Skt. kapi, a monkey. ¶ The loss of the initial k is not remarkable in a word which must have had far to travel; it is commonly supposed that the same loss has taken place in the case of Skt. kam, to love, as compared with Lat. amare. Max Müller notes that the Heb. koph, an ape (1 Kings, x. 22), is not a Semitic word, but borrowed from Skt.; Lectures, i. 233, 8th ed. The Skt. kapi stands for kampi, from Skt. kamp, to tremble, vibrate, move rapidly to and fro.

- A KAP, to vibrate; Fick, i. 295. Der. op-ish, ap-ish-y, ap-ish-ness. APERIENT, a purgative. (Lat.) The word signifies, literally, 'opening.' Used by Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 961. – Lat. aperient-, stem of aperiens, pres. pt. of aperire, to open. Referred by Corssen to VPAR, to complete; see Curtius, ii. 170; with prefix a = ab. From same source, aperture, Lat. apertura, from aperturus, fut. part. of aperire.

APEX, the summit, top. (Lat.) Used by Ben Jonson, King James's Entertainment; description of a Flamen. Mere Latin. - Lat. apex, summit. Origin uncertain.

APH-, prefix. APH-, prefix. APH-ÆRESIS, the taking away of a letter or syllable from the beginning of a word. (Gk.) Borrowed directly from Gk. doalpeole, a taking away. – Gk. doalpeole, to take away. – Gk. dwo, from (do-before an aspirate); and alpeir, to take. Root uncertain. APHELION, the point in a planet's orbit furthest from the sun.

(Gk.) Scientific. The word is to be divided ap-helion. - Gk. dw-, short for  $d\pi d$ , from; and  $\beta \lambda \cos$ , the sun. Curtius discusses  $\beta \lambda \cos$ , and derives it from  $\checkmark$  US, to burn, shine; cf. Lat. urere, to burn, Skt. ush, to burn; see Curtius, i. 497. ¶ Since 4wo ought to become d $\phi$ -before the following aspirate, the E. spelling is incorrect, and should have been aphhelian. But this was not adopted, because we object to double h; cf. eighth, a misspelling for eight-th, in order to avoid th.

APHORISM, a definition, brief saying. (Gk.) Aphorismes is in Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, ed. 1827, p. 85. [Perhaps mediately, through the French. Cf. ' Aphorisme, an aphorisme or generall rule in physick; 'Cot.' -Gk. doporotations, an aphonismic of generation in physick; 'Cot.' -Gk. doporotation, a short pithy sentence. -Gk. doporotation, a short pithy sentence. -Gk. doporotation, of (doporotation) before an aspirate); and opifer, to divide, mark out a boundary. -Gk. opos, a boundary. See Horizon. Der. aphoris-t-ic, aphoris-tic-al, aphoris-t-ic-al-ly.

APIARY, a place for keeping bees. (Lat.) Used by Swift (R.) Formed, by suffix -y for -ium, from Lat. apiarium, a place for bees, neut, of apiarius, of or belonging to bees. The masc. apiarius means 'a keeper of bees.' = Lat. apis, a bee. + Gk.  $k\mu\pi is$ , a gnat. + O. H. G. imbi, a bee. See Curtius, i. 328. ¶ The suggestion that Lat. apis is cognate with E. bee is hardly tenable; the (old) Skt, word for bee is bha; see Böthlingk and Roth's Skt. Dict.

APLECE, in a separate share. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Often written a-piece; Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 160. Here a- is the common E. prefix, short for an, the M. E. form of on, which in former times was often used with the sense of 'in'. Cf. a-bed, a-sleep, a-foot, &cc. Thus a-piece stands for on piece. See Piece. APO-, prefix, off. (Gk.) Gk. dro, off, from + Lat. ab, abs, from.

+ Skt. apa, away, forth; as prep. with abl., away from. + Zend apa, with abl., from. + Gothic af, from. + A. S. of; whence E. of, prep., and of, adv., which are merely different spellings, for convenience, of the same word. + G. ab, from. Thus the Gk. and is cognate with E. of and off, and in composition with verbs, answers to the latter. See Of, Off. Der. apo-calypse, &c.; see below. ¶ Since dwd becomes  $d\phi$ -before an aspirate, it appears also in aph-æresis, ap(k)-helion, and aph-orism.

APOCALYPSE, a revelation. (Gk.) A name given to the last book of the Bible. M. E. apocalips, used by Wyclif. - Lat. apocalypsis, Rev. i. I (Vulgate version). - Gk. dronáhuyus, Rev. i. I; lit. 'an uncovering.'-Gk. ἀποκαλύπτειν, to uncover.-Gk. ἀπό, off (cognate with E. off); and maliwrew, to cover. Cf. Gk. malusy, a hut, cabin, cell, cover; which is perhaps allied to Lat. elupeus, elypeus, a shield: Fick, ii. 72. Der. apocalyp-t-ic, apocalyp-t-ic-al. [+]

APOCOPE, a cutting off of a letter or syllable at the end of a word. (Gk.) A grammatical term; Lat. apocope, borrowed from Gk. drowown, a cutting off. - Gk. dπo, off (see Apo-); and κόπτων, to ~ut. - A SKAP, to cut, hew; Curtius, i. 187; Fick, i. 807. v., is from the same root. [†]

APOCRYPHA, certain books of the Old Testament. (Gk.) 'The other [bookes] folowing, which are called apocripka (because they were wont to be reade, not openly and in common. but as it were in secrete and aparte) are neyther founde in the Hebrue nor in the Chalde; 'Bible, 1539; Pref. to Apocrypha. The word means 'things hidden.' - Gk. dron pupa, things hidden, neut. pl. of dron pupos, hidden. - Gk. anonpúnreuv, to hide away. - Gk. ano, off, away (see Apo-); and spirreir, to hide. See Crypt. Der. aporryph-al. APOGEEE, the point in the moon's orbit furthest from the earth.

(Gk.) Scientific. Made up from Gk. dro (see Apo-); and Gk.  $\gamma\hat{\eta}$ , the earth, which appears also in geography, geology, and geometry, q.v.

APOLOGUE, a fable, story. (F., -Gk.) Used by Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 35. - F. apologue, which Cotgrave explains by 'a pretty or significant fable or tale, wherein bruit beasts, or dumb things, are fained to speak. -Gk,  $d\pi\delta\lambda\gamma\sigma_s$ , a story, tale, fable. -Gk,  $d\pi\delta$ ; and  $\lambda\epsilon\gamma\epsilon_s$ , to speak. See Apo- and Logic.

APOLOGY, a defence, excuse. (Gk.) Sir T. More, Works, p. 932 a, speaks of 'the booke that is called mine apology.' [He probably Englished it from the Lat. apologia, used by St. Jerome, rather than from the Gk. immediately.] - Gk. drología, a speech made in one's defence. - Gk. dwo (see Apo-); and hiven, to speak; see Logic. -Der. apolog-ist, apolog-ist, apolog-et-ic (Gk. dwolowyn, the soft for a defence), apologet-ic-al, apolog-et-ic-al-ly. And see above. APOPHTHEGM, APOTHEGM, a terse saying. (Gk.) Bacon wrote a collection of apophthegms, so entitled. The word is sometimes shortened to apothegm. – Gk.  $d\pi\phi\phi\theta\epsilon\gamma\mu a$ , a thing uttered; also, a terse saying, apophthegm. – Gk.  $d\pi\phi\phi\theta\epsilon\gamma\gamma\mu a$ , a thing uttered; also, a terse saying, apophthegm. – Gk.  $d\pi\phi\phi\phi\epsilon\gamma\gamma\rho\mu a$ , I speak out my mind plainly. – Gk.  $d\pi\phi$  (see Apo-); and  $\phi\theta\epsilon\gamma\gamma\rho\mu a$ , I cry out, cry aloud, utter. Referred by Fick to  $\checkmark$  SPANG or  $\checkmark$  SPAG, to make a clear and loud sound; he compares Lith. spengiu, to make a loud clear sound.

APOPLEXY, a sudden deprivation of motion by a shock to the system. (Low L., - Gk.) Chaucer, near the beginning of The Nun's Priest's Tale, has the form poplexye; like his potecarie for apothecary. - Low Lat. apoplexia, also spelt poplexia; see the latter in Ducange. -Gk. ἀποπληξία, stupor, apoplexy. -Gk. ἀποπλήσσειν, to cripple by a stroke. - Gk. dro, off (see Apo-); and πλήσσειν, to strike. See Plague. Der. apoplec-ic. APOSTASY, APOSTACY, a desertion of one's principles or line of conduct. (F., -Gk.) In rather early use. M. E. apostasie, Wyclif's Works, ii. 51. - F. apostasie, 'an apostasie;' Cot. - Low Lat. apostasia; Ducange. - Gk. anogragia, a later form of anooracis, a defection, revolt, lit. 'a standing away from.' - Gk. άπό, off, from (see Apo-); and στάσιs, a standing. - Gk. έστην, I placed myself, iornµu, I place, set; words from the same root as E. stand; see Stand. And see below.

APOSTATE, one who renounces his belief. (F.,-Gk.) The sb. apostate occurs in the Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 19, and is often spelt apostata (the Low Lat. form), as in P. Plowman, B. i. 104, and indeed very much later, viz. in Massinger's Virgin Martyr, A. iv. sc. 3.-O. F. apostate, later apostat, as given by Cotgrave, and explained 'an apostata.'- Low Lat. apostata (also a common form in English). - Gk. ἀποτάτης, a deserter, apostate. - Gk. ἀπό; and ἔστην, I placed mvself. ἴστημ. I place. set: see above. Der. apostat-ise. ¶ The myself, iornym, I place, set; see above. Der. apostat-ise. The Lat. form apostata occurs even in A.S.; see Sweet's A.S. Reader,

p. 109, l. 154. APOSTLE, one sent to preach the gospel; especially applied to the earliest disciples of Christ. (L., -Gk.) Wyclif has apostle, The initial e was often dropped in M. E., as in posteles, Homilies, i. 117. The earlier writers use apostel, as in O. Eng. Homilies, i. 117. The A. S. form was apostol, Matt. x. 2. - Lat. apostolus. - Gk. droorohos, an apostle; Matt. x. 2, &c. Lit. 'one who is sent away.'-Gk. droote ALE. to send away. -Gk. dro (see Stall. Der. apostle-ship; also apostol-ic, apostol-ic-al, apostol-ic-al-ly, apostol-ate; from Lat. apostolus.

APOSTROPHE, a mark showing that a word is contracted; also an address to the dead or absent. (L., - Gk.) Ben Jonson, Engl. Gram. b. ii. c. 1, calls the mark an apostrophus; Shak. apostropha, L. L. L. iv. 2. 123. These are Latinised forms; the usual Lat. form is apostrophe. - Gk. dποστροφή, a turning away ; dπόστροφοs, the mark called an apostrophe. 'Anorrpooth also signifies a figure in rhetoric, in which the orator turns away from the rest to address one only, or from all present to address the absent. - Gk. dno, away (see Apo-);

APOTHECARY, a seller of drugs. (Low Lat., = Gk.) Lit. 'the keeper of a store-house or repository.' M. E. apostecarie, Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 427; sometimes shortened to pothecarie or potecarie, id., Group C, 852.-Low Lat. apothecarius, apotecarius; Wright's Vocabularies, i. 129. - Lat. apotheca, a storehouse. - Gk. droothen, a storehouse, in which anything is laid up or put away. - Gk. ano, away (see Apo-); and  $\tau i \cdot \theta \eta \mu$ , l place, put. See Thesis. APOTHEGM. See Apophthegm.

APOTHEOSIS, deification. (Gk.) Quotations (without references) from South and Garth occur in Todd's Johnson. Modern. - Gk. άποθέωσιε, deification. - Gk. άποθεόω, I deify ; lit. ' set aside as a God.' -Gk. dró (see Apo-); and beos, a god, on which difficult word see Curtius, ii. 122-130.

APPAL, to terrify. (Hybrid; Lat. and Celtic.) Lit. 'to deprive of vital energy,' to 'weaken.' Formed from E. pall, a word of Celtic origin, with the prefix ap-, the usual spelling of Lat. ad- before p. a. This odd formation was probably suggested by a confusion with the O. F. apalir, to become pallid, a word in which the radical idea may easily have seemed, in popular etymology, to be somewhat the same. However, apalir is neuter (see Koquelort), whilst M. E. appallen is transitive, and signifies 'to weaken, enfeeble,' rather than to 'make pale.'  $\beta$ . See the examples in Chaucer: 'an old appalled wight' = an old enfeebled creature, Shipman's Tale; 'whan his name appalled is for age, 'Knight's Tale, 2195. And Gower, C. A. ii. 107, says: 'whan it is night, min hede appalleth,' where he uses it, however, in a neuter y. The distinction between pall and pallid will best appear sense. by consulting the etymologies of those words. Cf. Welsh pall, loss of energy, failure; Cornish palch, weak, sickly. [\*]

APPANAGE, provision for a dependent; esp. used of lands set apart as a provision for younger sons. (F., -L.) A French law term. Cotgrave gives 'Appanage, Appennage, the portion of a younger brother in France; the lands, dukedomes, counties, or countries assigned by the king unto his younger sons, or brethren, for their entertainment; also, any portion of land or money delivered unto a sonne, daughter, or kinsman, in lieu of his future succession to the whole, which he renounces upon the receit thereof; or, the lands and lordships given by a father unto his younger sonne, and to his heires for ever, a child's part.' [Mod. F. apanage, which in feudal law meant any pension or alimentation; Brachet. The Low Lat. forms apanagium, appanagium are merely Latinised from the French.] 8. Formed with F. suffix -age (Lat. -aticus, -aticum), from O. F. apaner, to nourish, lit. to supply with bread, written apanare in Low Latin; Ducange. - O. F. a., prefix (Lat. ad, to); and pain, bread. - Lat. panem, acc. of panis, bread. See Pantry. APPARATUS, preparation, provision, gear. (Lat.) Used by preparation. - Lat. apparents, pp. of apparare, to prepare. - Lat. ad (= ap- before p); and parare, to make ready. See Prepare. APPAREL, to clothe, dress. (F., -L.) The verb aparailen, to make ready, occurs in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 26. [The sb. is M.E. apparent, apparent; Wyclif, I Macc. iz. 35, 52; 2 Macc. xii. 14.= O. F. aparail, apareil, aparel, apparel, dress.] = O. F. aparailler, to dress, to apparel. - O.F. a, prefix (Lat. ad); and pareiller, parail-ler, to assort, to put like things together with like. - O.F. pareil, parail, like, similar; mod. F. pareil. - Low Lat. pariculus, like, similar, found in old medieval documents: 'hoc sunt pariculas cosas,' Lex Salica; Brachet. - Lat. par, equal; with suffixes -ic- and -wl-, both diminutive. See Par, Pair, Peer. Der. apparel, sb. APPARENT, APPARITION ; see Appear.

APPEAL, to call upon, have recourse to. (F., -L.) M.E. appelen, apelen. Gower, C. A. iii. 192, has appele both as verb and sb. The sb. apel, appeal, occurs in Rob. of Glouc., p. 473.-O. F. apeler, to invoke, call upon, accuse; spelt with one p because the prefix was regarded as a, the O. F. form of Lat. ad. - Lat. appellare, to address, call upon; also spelt adpellare; a secondary or intensive form of Lat. appellere, adpellere, to drive to, bring to, incline towards. -Lat. ad, to; and pellere, to drive. Cf. Gk. πάλλειν, to shake, brandish. See Impel. Der. appeal, sb., appeal-able; and (from Lat. appellare) appell-ant, appell-ate, appell-at-ion, appell-at-ive.

APPEAR, to become visible, come forth visibly. (F., -L.) M.E. apperen, aperen; spelt appiere, P. Plowman, B. iii. 113; apere, Cov. Myst. p. 291. - O. F. apparoir, aparoir, to appear. - Lat. apparere, to appear. - Lat. ad, to (which becomes ap- before p); and parere, to appear, come in sight; a secondary form of parere, to produce. Ċf. Gk. inopor, I gave, brought. ¶ E. part is probably from the same root, viz. √ PAR, to apportion, bring, produce ; Fick, iii. 664 ; Curtius, i. 350. Der. appear-ance; and (from Lat. apparere) appar-ene, appar-ene-ly, appar-ene-ness, appar-it-ion, appar-it-or. The phrase heir apparaunt = heir apparent, is in Gower, C. A. i. 203.

APPEASE, to pacify, quiet. (F., -L.) M. E. apaisen, appesen, appesen. 'Kacus apaised the wraththes of Euander;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 7, p. 148. Gower has appesed, C. A. i. 341. - O. F. apaisier, mod. F. apaiser, to pacify, bring to a peace. - O. F. a pais, to a peace. - Lat. ad pacem, to a peace. - Lat. ad, to; and pacem, acc. of pax, peace. See Peace, and Pacify. Der. appear-able.

APPELLANT, &c.; see Appeal.

APPEND, to add afterwards.  $(F_{\cdot,-}L_{\cdot})$  Often now used in the sense 'to hang one thing on to another;' but the verb is properly intransitive, and is lit. 'to hang on to something else,' to depend upon, belong to. The M. E. appenden, apenden always has this in-transitive sense. 'Telle me to whom, madam, that tresore appendeth,' i. e. belongs; P. Plowman, B. i. 45.-O. F. apendre, to depend on, belong to, be attached to, lit. 'hang on to.'-F. a (Lat. ad), to; and pendre, to hang. - Lat. pendere, to hang. See Pendant. Der. append-age (F.), append-is (Lat.). APPERTAIN, to belong to. (F., -L.) M. E. apperteinen, aper-tenen; Chaucer, C. T. Group G, 785; tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 4, p. 73. -O. F. apartenir (mod. F. appartenir), to pertain to. -O. F. a, prefix (Lat. ad); and O. F. partenir, to pertain. - Lat. pertinere, to pertain. -Lat. per, through, thoroughly; and tenëre, to hold. See Pertain.

Der. appurten-ance (O. F. aburtenamse, apartenance), appurten-ant. APPETITE, strong natural desire for a thing. (F. - L.) M. E. appetyt, appetit; Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 3390; Mandeville's Travels, p. 157.-O. F. appetit, appetite.-Lat. appetitus, an appetite, lit. 'a flying upon,' or 'assault upon.' - Lat. appetere, to fly to, to attack. -Lat. ad-, to (= ap before p); and petere, to fly, rush swiftly, seek swiftly.  $-\sqrt{PAT}$ , to fall, fly. Cf. Ck. wer-opan, I fly; Skt. pat, to fly, fall upon; and E. find. From the same root we have feather and pen. See Find. Der. appet-ise ; Milton has appet-ence, desire, P. L. хі. бід APPLAUD, to praise by clapping hands. (Lat.) Shak. Macb. v. 3. 53. Either from F. applaudir, given by Cotgrave, or directly from Lat. applaudere, pp. applausus. The latter is more likely, as from Lat. applaudere, pp. applausus. The latter is more likely, as Shak. has also the sb. applause, evidently from Lat. applausus, not from F. applaudissement. The Lat. applaudere means 'to clap the hands together.'- Lat. ad, to, together (= ap-before p); and flaudere, to strike, clap, also spelt plodere (whence E. ex-plode). See Explode.

Der. applause, applaus-ive, from Lat. pp. applausus. APPLE, the fruit of the apple-tree. (E.) The apple of the eye (Deut, xxxii, 10) is the eye-ball, from its round shape. M. E. appel, appil; spelt appell in the Ormulum, 8116. - A.S. apl, appel; Grein, i. 58. + O. Fries. appel. + Du. appel, apple, ball, eye-ball. + Icel. epli. + Swed. äple, öpple. + Dan. æble. + O. H. G. aphol, aphul; G. apfel. + Irish abhal, Gæel. ubhall. + W. afal, Bret. aval. Cf. also Russian iabloko, Lithuanian obolys, &c.; see Fick, i. 491, who arranges all under the European form ABALA. β. It is evident that the ending -ala is no more than a suffix, apparently much the same as the Lat. -ul-, E. -el, gen. used as a diminutive. We should expect the sense to be 'a little ball,' and that European ab- meant a ball. This Fick connects with Lat. umbo, a boss, with the orig. sense of 'swelling;' and strives to connect it further with Lat. amnis, a river, I suppose with the orig. sense of 'flood.' Cf. Skt. ambhas, ambu, water; afon, a river (E. Avon, obviously a very old Celtic word). y. Others have attempted a connection between apple and Avon, but it has not been fairly made out. S. Grimm observed the resemblance between apple and A. S. ofet, of at, fruit of trees, O. H. G. opaz, mod. G. obst, fruit of trees; and the consideration of these words suggests that, after all, 'fruit' is the radical sense of Europ. ab-. The true origin remains unknown.

APPLY, to fix the mind on; to prefer a request to.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$ M. E. applyen. 'Applyyn, applico, oppono;' Prompt. Parv. p. 13. It occurs in the Wycl. Bible, Numb. xvi. 5, &c. - O. F. aplier, Roquefort. Lat. applicare, to join to, attach; turn or direct towards, apply to, pp. applicatus. — Lat. ad, to (= ap-before p); and plicare, to fold or lay together, twine together. Cf. Gk. where, to plait; perhaps E. fold. - VPLAK, to plait, twine together. Curtius, i. 202; Fick, i. 681. Der. appli-able, appli-ance; and (from Lat. applicare), applicable, applic-ant, applic-at-ion. APPOINT, to fix, settle, equip. (F., -L.) M. E. appointen, a-pointen; 'apointed in the news mone;' Gower, C. A. ii. 265. - O. F. apointer, to prepare, arrange, settle, fix. - Low Lat. appunctare, to repair, appoint, settle a dispute; Ducange. - Lat. ad-, to (=ap- before p); and Low Lat. punctare, to mark by a prick. - Low Lat. puncta, a prick (F. pointe). - Lat. punctus, pp. of pungere, to prick, pt. t. pupugi; the orig. Lat. root pug- being preserved in the reduplicated perfect tense. See Point. Der. appoint-ment ; Merry Wives, ii. 2. 272.

APPORTION, to portion out.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$  Used by Bp. Taylor, Of Repentance, c. 3. s. 6 (R.)-F. apportioner, 'to apportion, to give a portion, or child's part;' Cot. Formed by prefixing F. a- (which in later times was written ap- before p, in imitation of the Lat. prefix ap-, the form taken by ad-before p) to the F. verb portionner, 'to apportion, part, share, deal;' Cot. - F. portion, a portion. - Lat. portionem, acc. of portio, a portion, share. See Portion. Der. apportion-ment.

APPOSITE, suitable. (Lat.) The M. E. verb apposen was used in the special sense of ' to put questions to,' ' to examine by questions;"

Jumby, p. 111, l. 22. - Lat. appositus, adj. suitable. - I.at. appositus, pp. of apponere, to place or put to, join, annex to. - Lat. ad, to (=apbefore p); and powere, to place, put; gen. regarded as a contraction of posinere, on which see Curtius, i. 355. See Pose. Der. apposite-ly, apposite-ness, apposit-ion. APPRAISE, to set a price on, to value. (F.,-L.) Sometimes spelt apprize, as in Bp. Hall's Account of Himself, quoted by Richard-son. The M. E. forms (with one p) apreisen, apraisen, aprisen signify to value, to esteem highly, as in 'Hur enparel was apraysyt with princes of myste<sup>2</sup> - her apparel was highly prized by mighty princes; Anturs of Arthur, st. 29. In P. Plowman, B. v. 334, the simple verb preised occurs with the sense of 'appraised.' - O. F. apreiser, to value (no doubt the best form, though Roquefort only gives apretier, apris-ier). = O. F. a, prefix (Lat. ad); and preiser, presser, to ap-preciate, value, set a price on. = O. F. preis, a price, value. = Lat. precium, a price. See Price. ¶ The E. words price and praise being doublets, the words apprize, in the sense of to 'value,' and appraise are also doublets. To apprize in the sense 'to inform' is a different word. Der. apprais-er, appraise-ment. And see below. APPRECIATE, to set a just value on. (Lat.) Richardson gives a quotation from Bp. Hall containing the sb. appreciation. Gibbon uses appreciate, Rom. Empire, c. 44. Formed by suffix -ate (see Abbreviate) from Lat. appretiates, pp. of appreniare, to value at a price. [The spelling with c instead of t is due to the fact that the sb. appreciation seems to have been in earlier use than the verb, and was borrowed directly from F. appreciation, which Cotgrave explains by a praising or prizing; a rating, valuation, or estimation of.'] The Lat. appretiare is a made up word. from Lat. ad (becoming ap-before p) and pretium, a price. See Price; and see Appraise above.

APPREHEND, to lay hold of, to understand; to fear. (Lat.) Hall, Henry IV, an. I, has apprehended in the sense of attached, taken prisoner. - Lat. apprehendere, to lay hold of. seize. - Lat. ad, to (becoming  $a_p$  before p); and prehendere, to seize, pp. prehensus.  $\beta$ . In the Lat. prehendere, the syllable pre is a prefix (cf. Lat. pra, before); and the Lat. root is hend-, which again is for hed-, the n being an insertion; and this is cognate with Goth. gitan, E. get. So too the Gk. form xavdávew has for its real root the form xad-, as in the aorist i-xad-or. See Fick, i. 576; Curtius, i. 242. - V GHAD, to grasp, seize. See Get. Dor. apprehens-ion, apprehens-ible. apprehens-ive, apprehens-ive-ness ; from Lat. pp. apprehensus. And see below.

APPRENTICE, a learner of a trade. (F., -L.) 'Apparailled hym as apprentice;' P. Plowman, B. ii. 214, in MS. W.; see the footnote; other MSS. read a prentice in this passage. The forms apprentice and prentice were used indifferently in M.E., and can be so used still. It is remarkable that the proper O. F. word was apprentif (see Brachet), whence mod. F. apprenti by loss of final f Thus the English word must have been derived from a dialectal F. word, most likely from the Rouchi or Walloon form apprentiche, easily introduced into England from the Low Countries; cf. Provençal apprentiz, Span. and Port. aprendiz. - Low Lat. apprenticius, a learner of a trade, novice; Ducange. - Lat. apprendere. the contracted form of apprehendere, to lay hold of, which in late times also meant 'to learn,' like mod. F. apprendre. See Apprehend. Der. apprentice-ship

APPRIZE, to inform, teach. (F.,-L.) Richardson rightly remarks that this verb is of late formation, and founded on the M.E. apprise, a substantive denoting 'information,' 'teaching.' The sb. is now obsolete, but frequently occurs in Gower, C. A. i. 44, 51, 372.-O. F. apprise, apprenticeship, instruction. - O. F. appris, apris, pp. of aprendre, to learn. - Low Lat. apprendere, to learn; contr. form of apprehendere, to apprehend, lay hold of. See Apprehend.

APPROACH, to draw near to. (F.,-L.) M.E. approchen, aprochen; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 7; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 1, p. 6. - O. F. aprochier, to approach, draw near to. - Lat. appropiare, to draw near to; in Sulpicius Severus and St. Jerome (Brachet). - Lat. ad, to (becoming ap- before p); and prope, near, which appears again in E. prop-inquity. Der. approach-able. APPROBATION; see Approve.

APPROPRIATE, adj. fit, suitable ; v. to take to oneself as one's own. (Lat.) (The sb. appropriation is in Gower, C. A. i. 240). pp. appropriated is in the Bible of 1539, 3rd Esdras, c. 6 (Richardson). Tyndal, Works, p. 66, col. I, has appropriate as an adjective, adopted from Lat. pp. appropriatus. [This is how most of our verbs in -ate were formed; first came the pp. form in -ate, used as an adj., from Lat. pp. in-atus; this gradually acquired a final d, becoming -ated, and at once suggested a verb in -ate.]-Lat. appropriatus, pp. of appropriare, to it is not obsolete, being preserved in the mutilated form pose. Bacon<sup>67</sup> vb. appropriate arose from the adj. appropriate, which afterwards took speaks of 'ready and apposite answers;' Life of Henry VII, ed. the meaning of 'fit.' Der. appropriate-ly, appropriate-ness, appropriat-ion

APPROVE, to commend; sometimes, to prove. (F., -L.) M.E. approven, appreven (with u for v). Chaucer has 'approved in coun-seilling;' C. T. Group B, 2345.-O. F. approver, to approve of, mod. F. approver. [Burguy omits the word, but gives prover, and several compounds.] - Lat. approbare, to commend; pp. approbatus. -Lat. ad, to (becoming ap-before p); and probare, to test, try; to ap-prove, esteem as good. - Lat. probas, good. See Prove. Der. approving-ly, approv-able, approv-al; also approbat-ion (Gower, C. A. ii. 86), from Lat. approbatio.

APPROXIMATE, adj. near to; v. to bring or come near to. (Lat.) Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 21. § 9, has approximate as an adjective; hence was formed the verb; see note on Appropriato. - Lat. approximatus, pp. of approximare, to draw near to. - Lat. ad, to (becoming ap-before p); and proximus, very near, superlative formed from prope, near. See Approach. Der. approximately, approximat-ion.

APPURTENANCE, in P. Plowman, B. ii. 103; see Appertain.

APRICOT, a kind of plum. (F., -Port., -Arab., -Gk., -Lat.) [Formerly spelt apricock, Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 169; Rich. II, iii. 4. 29; from the Port. albricogue, an apricot.] Cotgrave has abricov, of which apricot is a corruption. - F. abricov, which Cotgrave explains by ' the abricot, or apricock plum.' - Port. albricoque, an apricot ; the F. word having been introduced from Portuguese; see Brachet. Cf. Span. albaricoque, Ital. albercocca. B. These words are traced, in Webster and Littre, back to the Arabic al-barying (Rich. Dict. p. 263), where al is the Arabic def. article, and the word barying is no true Arabic word, but a corruption of the Mid. Gk. *painónior, Dioscorides, i. 165 (see Sophocles' Lexicon); pl. #painónia; borrowed from the Lat. præcoqua, apricots, neut. pl. of pracoquus, another form of pracox, lit. precocious, early-ripe. They were also called præcocia, which is likewise formed from the Lat. pracos. They were considered as a kind of peach (peaches were called persica in Latin) which ripened sooner than other peaches; and hence the name. 'Maturescunt æstate præcocia intra triginta annos reperta et primo denariis singulis uenundata;' Pliny, Nat. Hist. xv. 11. Ullia maternis fueramus præcoqua ramis Nunc in adoptiuis persica cara sumus; Martial, 13. 46. The Lat. præc », early-ripe, is from præ, beforehand, and coquere, to ripen, to cook. See Precocious and Cook. C. The word thus came to us in a very round-about way, viz. from Lat. to Gk.; then to Arab.; then to Port.; then to French, whence we borrowed apricot, having previously borrowed the older form apricock from the Portuguese directly. I see no reason to doubt this account, and phonetic considerations confirm it. We require the Greek form, as intermediate to Lat. and Arabic; and the Arabic form, because it is otherwise wholly impossible to account either for the initial al- in Portuguese, or for the initial a- in English. D. The supposition that the Lat. word was an adaptation of the Arabic or Persian one (supposed in that case to the original) is the only alternative; but barquq is not an original Pers. word; see Vullers' Lexicon Persico-Latinum.

APRIL, the name of the fourth month. (F., -L.) M.E. Aprille, April; Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 1; also Aueril [Averil], Rob. of Glouc. p. 506. This older form is French; the word was afterwards conformed to Latin spelling .- O. F. Avril.-Lat. Aprilis, April; so called because it is the month when the earth opens to produce new fruits. - Lat. aperire, to open. See Aperient.

APRON, a cloth worn in front to protect the dress. (F., -L.) In the Bible of 1539, Gen. iii. 7. Formerly spelt napron or naprun, so that an initial n has been lost. 'Naprun or barm-clothe, limas; Prompt. Parv. p. 351. 'Hir napron feir and white i-wassh;' Prol. to Tale of Beryn, l. 33. - O. F. naperon, a large cloth; Roquefort. Formed with suffix -er- (appearing in O. F. nap-er-ie, a place for keeping cloths), and augmentative suffix -on (answering to Ital. -one), from O. F. nape, a cloth : mod. F. nappe, a cloth, table-cloth. - Low Lat. napa, a cloth; explained 'mappa' by Ducange, of which word it is a corruption; cf. F. natte, a mat, from Lat. matta. - Lat. mappa, a cloth. The Lat. mappa is said in Quinctilian, i. 5. 57, to have been originally a Punic word.  $\P$  On the loss of n in napron, see remarks prefixed to the letter N.

APROPOS, to the purpose. (F., -L.) Mere French; viz. à propos, to the purpose, lit. with reference to what is proposed. - Lat. ad propositum, to the purpose. - Lat. ad, to; and propositum, a thing proosed, neut. of proposities, proposed, pp. of proponere, to propose. See Propose and Purpose.

APSE, an arched recess at the E. end of a church. (L.,-Gk.) Modern and architectural; a corruption of apsis, which has been make one's own.-Lat. ad, to (becoming ap-before p); and proprius, -hence E. Proper, q. v. ¶ It will be observed that the points of a planet's orbit, when it is nearest to or farthest from the sun. 'The astronomical term is also now often written apse.-Lat. apsis, gen. spelt absis, a bow, turn; pl. apsides. - Gk. aufis, a tying, fastening, hoop of a wheel; hence, a wheel, curve, bow, arch, vault. -Gk. arrew, to fasten, bind. - AP, to seize, fasten, bind; whence also Lat. aprus and E. apt, ad-apt, ad-apt, ad-opt. See Curtius, ii. 119; Fick, ii. 17. See Apt.

APT, fit, liable, ready. (F., -L.) 'Flowring today, tomorrow apt to faile; 'Lord Surrey, Frailtee of Beautie. - F. apre, explained by Cotgrave as 'apt, fit,'&c. - Lat. apres, fit, fitted; properly pp. of obsolete verb apere, to fasten, join together, but used in Lat. as the pp. of apisci, to reach, seize. Apere is cognate with Gk. άπτειν, to fasten. Cf. Skt. dpta, fit; derived from the verbal root dp, to reach, attain, obtain. The Lat. ap-ere, Gk. an-rew, Skt. ap, are all from a common AP, to reach, attain, fasten, bind. See Fick, ii. 17; Curtius, ii. 110. Dor. api-ly, api-ness, api-i-tude; also ad-api, q. v. AQUATIC, pertaining to water. (Lat.) Used by Ray, On the Creation. Holland has aquaticall, Plutarch, p. 692. Ray also uses aqueous (Todd's Johnson). Addison has aqueduct (id.). - Lat. aquaticus, pertaining to water. - Lat. aqua, water. + Goth. ahwa, water. + O. H. G. aha, M. H. G. ahe, water (obsolete). See Fick, i. 473. From Lat. aqua are also derived aqua-fortis, i. e. strong water, by the addition of fortis, strong; aqua-rium, Aqua-rius, aque-ous, aque-duct.

AQUILINE, pertaining to or like an eagle. (F., -L.) 'His nose was aquiline;' Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, 1. 1350. Perhaps from Lat. direct ; but Cotgrave gives F. aquilin, of an eagle, like an eagle, with the example ' nez aquilin, a hawkenose, a nose like an eagle.'-Lat. aquilinus, belonging to an eagle. - Lat. aquila, an eagle; supposed to be the fem. of the Lat. adj. aquilus, dark-coloured, swarthy, brown; whence perhaps also Aquilo, the 'stormy' wind. Fick compares Lith. alla., blind, &c.; i. 474. ARABESQUE, Arabic, applied to designs (F.,-It.,-Ar.) In Swinburne's Travels through Spain, lett. 31, qu. in Todd's Johnson, we find 'interwoven with the arabesque foliages.' - F. Arabesque, which Cotgrave explains by 'Arabian-like; also rebesk-worke, a small and curious flourishing; 'where rebesk is a corruption of the very word in question. - Ital. Arabesco, Arabian. The ending -esco in Italian answers to E. -ish. Der. From the name of the same country we have also Arab. Arab-ian, Arab-ic. [+]

ARABILE, fit for tillage. (F., -L.) North speaks of 'arable land; 'Plutarch, p. 189. -F. arable, explained by Cotgrave as 'ear-able, ploughable, tillable.' - Lat. arabilis, that can be ploughed. - Lat. arare, to plough. + Lithuanian aria, to plough. + Gk. appense, to plough. + Goth. arjan. + A. S. erian. + O. H. G. eren, M. H. G. eren, ern, to plough (given by Wackernagel under the form ern). + Irish araim, I plough. This widely spread verb, known to most European languages, is represented in Eng. by the obsolete ear, retained in our Bibles in Deut. xxi. 4, 1 Sam. viii. 12; Is. xxx. 24. Ear is a native word (A.S. erian), not derived from, but only cognate with arare.

ARBITER, an umpire, judge of a dispute. (Lat.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 909. Some derivatives, borrowed from the French, are in much earlier use, viz. the fem. form arbitres (i. e. arbitress), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 154; arbitrour, Wyclif, 3 Esdras, viii. 26; arbitre, arbitree (Lat. arbitrium, choice), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 6, l. 5201. arbitracion, Chaucer's Tale of Melibeus; arbitratour, Hall, Henry VI, an. 4; arbitrement, Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 286. - Lat. arbiter, a witness, judge, umpire; lit. ' one who comes to look on.' B. This curious word is compounded of ar- and biter. Here ar- is a variation of Lat. ad, to, as in ar-cessere (Corssen, Ausspr. i. 2. 239); and biter means 'a comer,' from the old verb betere (also written bætere and bitere), to come, used by Pacuvius and Plautus. The root of betere is be-, which is cognate with the Gk. root Ba-, whence Baivew, to come, and with the Goth. kwa(m), whence kwiman, to come, allied to A. S. cuman and E. come. See Curtius, i. 74, who discusses these words carefully. - & GÅ, nasalised as & GAM, to come. See Come. Der. arbitr-ess; see also below.

ARBITRARY, depending on the will; despotic. (Lat.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 334. - Lat. arbitrarius, arbitrary, uncertain ; lit. ' what is done by arbitration,' with reference to the possible caprice of the umpire. - Lat. arbitrare, to act as umpire. - Lat. arbitro-, crude form of arbiter, an umpire. See further under Arbiter. Der. arbitrari-ly, arbitrari-ness; and see below.

ARBITRATE, to act as umpire. (Lat.) Shak. Macb. v. 2. 40. He also has arbitrator, Troilus, iv. 5. 225; which appears as arbitratour (F. arbitrateur, Cotgrave) in Hall, Henry VI, an. 4; Chaucer has arbitracion (F. arbitration), Tale of Melibeus, C. T. Group B, 2943. Formed by suffix -ate (see Appropriate) from Lat. arbitrare, to act as arbiter, to be umpire. - Lat. arbiter, an umpire. - & GA, to go; see the explanation under Arbiter. Der. arbitrat-or, arbitrat-ion; also arbitra-ment (F., from Lat. arbitrare). And see above. ARBOREOUS, belonging to trees. (Lat.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6, § 20. Milton has arborets, i. e. groves (Lat. ar-i. 233. See below.

boretum, a place planted with trees), P.L. ix. 437; and the same word occurs in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 12; but we now use the Lat. arboretum in full. - Lat. arboreus, of or belonging to trees, by the change of -us into -ous, as in pious, strenuous; a change due to F. influence. - Lat. arbor, a tree. Root undetermined. Der. (from the same source) arbor-et, arbor-etum, arbor-escent; also arbori-culture, arbori-cultur-ist.

ARBOUR, a bower made of branches of trees. (Corruption of harbour; E.) Milton has arbour, P. L. v. 378, ix. 216; arbours, iv. 626. Shak, describes an arbour as being within an orchard; 2 Hen. IV, v. 3. 2. In Sidney's Arcadia, bk. i, is described 'a fine close arbor, [made] of trees whose branches were lovingly interbraced one with the other.' In Sir T. More's Works, p. 177e, we read of 'sitting in an arber,' which was in 'the gardine.' a. There is no doubt that this word is, however, a corruption of harbour, a shelter, place of shelter, which lost its initial h through confusion with the M. E. herbere, a garden of herbs or flowers, O. F. herbier, Lat. herbarium.  $\beta$ . This latter word, being of F. origin, had the initial h weak, and sometimes silent, so that it was also spelt erbare, as in the Prompt. Parv. p. 140, where we find 'Erbare, herbarium, viridarium, viridare.' y. This occasioned a loss of h in harbour, and at the same time suggested a connection with Lat. arbor, a tree; the result being further forced on by the fact that the M. E. herbere was used not only to signify 'a garden of herbs,' but also 'a garden of fruit-trees' or orchard. [+] ¶ See this explained in the Romance of Thomas of Erceldoune, ed. J. A. H. Murray, note to 1. 177, who adds that E. orchard is now used of trees, though originally a wort-yard. Mr. Way, in his note to the Prompt. Parv., p. 140, is equally clear as to the certainty of arbour being a corruption of harbour. See Harbour.

ARC, a segment of a circle.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  Chaucer has ark, Man of Law's Prologue, 1. 2; and frequently in his Treatise on the Astrolabe. In the latter, pt. ii. sect. 9, 1. 2, it is also spelt arch, by the common change of k into ch in English; cf. ditch for dyke. - O. F. are, an arc. -Lat. arcus, an arc, a bow. Cf. A. S. earh, an arrow, dart; Grein, i.

ARCADE, a walk arched over. (F., - Ital., -Lat.) Pope has arcades, Moral Essays, Ep. iv. 35. - F. arcade, which Cotgrave explains by 'an arch, a half circle.' - Ital. arcada, lit. arched; fem. of pp. of arcare, to bend, arch. - Ital. arco, a bow. - Lat. arcus, a bow. see Arc. (See Brachet, Etym. Dict. pref. § 201.) ARCANA; see Ark.

ARCH (1), a construction of stone or wood, &c. in a curved or vaulted form. (F., -L.) 'Arch in a wall, arcus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 14. 'An arche of marbel;' Trevisa, i. 215. A modification of O. F. arc, a bow; so also we have ditch for dyke, crutch for crook, much as compared with mickle, &c. See Aro. Der. arck-ing, arch-ed. ARCH (2), roguish, waggish, sly. (E.) 'Dogget . . . spoke his request with so arch a leer; 'Tatler, no. 193. A corruption of M. E. argh, arh, ar; [i.e. argh], arws, feeble, fearful, timid, cowardly; whence the meaning afterwards passed into that of 'knavish,' 'roguish.' 'If Elenus be argh, and owrnes for ferde ' = if Helenus be a coward, and shrinks for fear; Allit. Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton, l. 2540. This word was pronounced as ar- followed by a guttural somewhat like the G. ch; this guttural is commonly represented by gh in writing, but in pronunciation has passed into various forms; cf. through, cough, and Scot. lock. This is, perhaps, the sole instance in which it has become ch; but it was necessary to preserve it in some form, to distinguish it from are, and to retain its strength. - A. S. earg, earh, timid, slothful; Grein, i. 248. + Icel. argr, effeminate; a wretch, craven, coward. + M. H. G. arc, arch, bad, niggardly; mod. G. arg, mischievous. arrant, deceitful. See Fick, iii. 24. ¶ But see another suggestion in Errata. [†] Der. arch-ly, arch-ness.

ARCH-, chief; almost solely used as a prefix. (L., -Gk.) Shak. has 'my worthy arch and patron,' Lear, ii. 1. 61; but the word is harshly used, and better kept as a mere prefix. In arch-bishop, we have a word in very early use; A. S. erce-bisceop, arce-bisceop (Bosworth).  $\beta$ . Thus area- is to be rightly regarded as descended from A.S. area-, which was borrowed from Lat. area- (in archi-episcopus), A. S. arter, which was boltowing the property of the second seco arch-duchy, &c. (F) In the word arch-angel, the prefix is taken directly from the Greek; see Archi.

ARCHÆOLOGY, the science of antiquities. (Gk.) Modem. Made up from Gk. do xalos, ancient, and suffix -logy (Gk. - Loyia), from Gk. Nóyos, discourse, which from Néyew, to speak. See Archaic.

Der. archaeolog-ist. ARCHAIC, old, antique, primitive. (Gk.) From Gk. άρχαϊκόs, primitive, antique. – Gk. άρχαῖοs, old, ancient, lit. ' from the beginning.'-Gk. dpxt, beginning. Cf. Skt. arh, to be worthy; Curtius, ARCHAISM, an antiquated phrase. (Gk.) From Gk. doxato phis, an archaism. – Gk.  $d\rho\chi affer$ , to speak antiquatedly. – Gk.  $d\rho\chi affer$ , old. – Gk.  $d\rho\chi \eta$ , beginning. See above. ARCHER, a bowman. (F., – L.) In early use. Used by Rob. of Glouc., p. 199; and still earlier, in King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1. 6344. -O. F. archier, an archer. - Low Lat. arcarius. Formed with Lat.

suffix -arius from Lat. arcus, a bow. See Arc. Der. arch-er-y. ARCHETYPE, the original type. (F., -L., -Gk.) Used by Bp. Hall, The Peacemaker, s. 23. - F. archetype, 'a principall type, figure, form; the chief pattern, mould, modell, example, or sample, whereby a thing is framed;' Cot. - Lat. archetypum, the original pattern. -Gk. doxérvnov, a pattern, model; neut. of doxérvnos, stamped as a model. = Gk.  $dp_{\chi e_1}$ , another form of  $dp_{\chi e_1}$ , predix, stamped as a river even to beat, stamp. See Type. Der. archetyp-al. ARCHI-, chief; used as a prefix. (L., -Gk.) The older form is arch-, which (as explained under Arch-) was a modification of A.S. arce-, from Lat. archi-. The form archi- is of later use, but borrowed from the Lat. directly. -Gk.dpxl-, prefix. See Arch-. Der. archi-epis-copal, archi-episcopy, archi-diaconal. ¶ In the word arch-angel, the final i of the prefix is dropped before the vowel following. In the word arche-type, the prefix takes the form arche-; sce Archetype. The same prefix also forms part of the words archi-pelago, archi-tect, archi-trave, which see below.

ARCHIPELAGO, chief sea, i. e. Ægean Sea. (Ital., -Gk.) Ital. arcipelago, modified to archipelago by the substitution of the more familiar Gk. prefix archi- (see Archi-) for the Ital. form arci-. -Gk. doxi-, prefix, signifying 'chief;' and #thayos, a sea. Curtius (i. 345) conjectures  $\pi i \lambda a \gamma os$  to be from a root  $\pi \lambda a \gamma$ -, to beat, whence also  $\pi\lambda \gamma\gamma \eta$ , a blow,  $\pi\lambda \eta \sigma \sigma \epsilon v$ , to strike,  $\pi\lambda \delta \langle \epsilon v$ , to strike, drive off; this would make  $\pi \epsilon \lambda a \gamma o s$  to mean 'the beating' or 'tossing.' This ARCHITECT, a designer of buildings. (F., -L., -Gk.) Lit. 'a chief builder.' Used by Milton, P. L. i. 732. -F. architecte, an architect ; Cotgrave. - Lat. architectus, a form in use as well as architecton, which is the older and more correct one, and borrowed from Gk. -Gk. dpxiterrow, a chief builder or chief artificer. - Gk. dpxi-, chief (see Archi-); and rearrow, a builder, closely allied to reyry, art, and rister, to generate, produce. - ATAK, to hew, work at, make; cf. Skt. taksh, to hew, hew out, prepare ; Lat. texere, to weave, whence E. texture. See Technical, Texture. Der. architect-ure, architect-ur-al.

ARCHITRAVE, the part of an entablature resting immediately on the column. (F., - Ital., - hybrid of Gk. and Lat.) Used by Milton, P. L. i. 715. Evelyn, On Architecture, remarks: 'the Greeks named that epistilium which we from a mungril compound of two languages  $(dp\chi \eta)$ -trads, or rather from arcus and trads) called architrave. His second derivation is wrong; the first is nearly right. His observation that it is 'a mungril compound' is just. Lit. it means 'chief beam.'-F. architrave, 'the architrave (of pillars, or stonework); the reeson-peece or master-beam (in buildings of timber); ' Cotgrave. -Ital. architrave. - Gk. doxi-, prefix, chief, adopted into Lat. in the form archi-; and Lat. acc. trabem, a beam, from the nom. trabs, a beam. Cf. Gk. τράπηξ, τράφηξ, a beam. The connection of the latter with Gk. referen, to turn, suggested in Liddell and Scott, is a little doubtful, but may be right.

ARCHIVES, s. pl. (1) the place where public records are kept; (2) the public records.  $(F_{\cdot}, -L_{\cdot}, -Gk_{\cdot})$  The former is the true sense. The sing is rare, but Holland has 'archive or register;' Plutarch, p. 116. - F. archives, archifs, 'a place wherein all the records, &c. [are] kept in chests and boxes;' Cot. - Lat. archivum (archi-vum), also archium, the archives. - Gk. άρχειον, a public building, residence of the magistrates. - Gk.  $d\rho\chi\eta$ , a beginning, a magistracy, and even a magistrate. Cf. Skt. arh, to be worthy.

ABCTIC, northern. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Marlowe's Edw. II, A. i. sc. 1, l. 16. Milton has arctick, P. L. ii. 710. - F. arctique, northern, northerly; Cot.-Lat. arcticus, northern.-Gk. dowrinde, near the bear, northern. - Ck. dowros, a bear; esp. the Great Bear, a constellation situate not far from the northern pole of the heavens. + Lat. ursus, a bear. + Irish art, a bear; O'Reilly, p. 39. + Skt. riksha (for arksa), a bear. ¶ Root uncertain; see Curtius, i. 163. riksha (for arksa), a bear. However, Max Müller shews that the Skt. riksha originally meant 'shining;' Lect. ii. 304; see Skt. arch, to beam, to shine; Benfey, p. 48. - ARK, to beam; Fick, i. 22. The word is connected, as seen above, with ursine. Der. ant-arctic, q. v.

ARDENT, burning, fiery. (F., -L.) Chaucer has 'the most ardaunt love of his wyf;' tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 12. The spelling has, at a later time, been conformed to Latin. - O. F. ardant, burning, pres. pt. of arder, ardoir, to burn. - Lat. ardere, to burn. Root uncertain. Der. ardent-ly, ardenc-y; ardour, Tempest, iv. 56 (O.F. ardor, Lat. acc. ardorem, from nom. ardor, a burning). RDUOUS, difficult to perform. (Lat.) In Pope, Essay on into -ous, by analogy with pious, &c. - Lat. arduus, steep, difficult, high. + Irish, Gaelic, Cornish, and Manx ard, high, lofty. The connection suggested by Bopp with Skt. ridh, to flourish, is not quite clear; see Curtius, i. 310. Der. arduous-ly, arduous-ness.

ARE, the pres. pl. of the verb substantive. (Northern E.) whole of the present tense of the verb substantive is from the same root, viz. AS, to be. I here discuss each person separately. The singular is I am, thou art, he is ; pl. we, ye, they are.

AM is found in the Northumbrian glosses of the Gospels, Luke, xxii. 33, and frequently elsewhere. It is an older form than the Wessex com. It stands for as-m, the s having been assimilated to m, and then dropped. Here as is the root, and -m is short for -mi or -ma, and signifies the first personal pronoun, viz. me. The Northumbrian retains this -m in other instances, as in geneo-m, I see, Mark, viii. 24; doa-m, I do, Mk. xi. 33; beo-m, I be, Mk. ix. 19. β. The original form of the 1 p. sing. in the Aryan languages was as-ma, from which all other forms are variously corrupted, viz. Skt. as-mi, Zend ah-mi, Gk. el-µl, Lat. s-u-m (for as-(u)-mi), Lithuan. es-mi, Goth. i-m, Icel. e-m, Swed. ær (for as, dropping the pronoun), Dan. er, O. Northumbrian a-m, A.S. (Wessex) co-m, Old Irish a-m. It is the only word in English in which the old suffix -ma appears. The O. H. G. and mod. G. use the verb to be  $(\checkmark BHU)$  for the present tense sing. of the verb substantive, except in the third person.

ART. We find O. Northumbrian aro (Luke, iv. 34); but art answers to A.S. (Wessex) eart. Hence the final -t stands for answers to A.S. (Wessex) ear. Hence the infinit -i status for an older - $\delta$ , the contraction of  $\delta u$ , thou. The Icel. form is er-i; and E. and Icel. are the only languages which employ this form of the and personal pronoun. The ar- stands for as-, so that ar-i stands for as- $\delta u$ .  $\beta$ . The general Aryan formula is as-si (si meaning thow), whence Skt. as-i, Zend a-hi, Doric Gk.  $i\sigma$ - $\sigma i$  (Attic  $\epsilon$ ), Lat. es (pron. dropped), Lithuan. es-si, Goth. i-s (or is), Swed. ær, Dan. er.

IS This is the same in Northumbrian and Wessex, viz, is, as at present. β. The gen. Aryan formula is  $a_{1-4a}$ , meaning 'is he;' whence Skt.  $a_{3-4i}$ , Zend  $a_{3h-4i}$ , Gk.  $i\sigma$ -τi, I.at.  $e_{3-4i}$ , Lith.  $e_{3-4i}$ , Goth. is-t, Icel. er, Swed. ær, Dan. er, Germ. is-t. The English form has lost the pronoun, preserving only is, as a weakened form of AS.

ARE. This is the O. Northumbrian aron (Matt. v. 14) as distinguished from A. S. (Wessex) sindon; but the forms sindon and sint are also found in Northumbrian. All three persons are alike in Old English; but the Icel. has er-um, er-ud, er-u. B. The gen. Aryau formula for the 3rd pers. plu. is as-anti, whence Skt. s-anti, Gk. elo-iv, Lat. s-unt, Goth. s-ind, G. s-ind, Icel. er-u (for es-u), Swed. er-e (for æs-e), Dan. er-e (for es-e), O. Northumb. ar-on (for as-on), M.E. ar-en, later are, A.S. s-ind(on). In the A.S. s-indon, the -on is a later suffix, Y. Thus E. are is short for aren, and stands peculiar to English. for the as-an of the primitive as-anti, whilst the A.S. sind stands for s-and of the same primitive form. As the final e in are is no longer sounded, the word is practically reduced to ar, standing for the original root AS, to be, by the common change of s into r.

The AS, to be, appears in Skt. as, to be, Gk. to- of Doric to-or, Lat. es-se, to be, G. s-ein, to be, and in various parts of the verb in various languages, but chiefly in the present tense. It may be related to  $\checkmark$  ÅS, to sit; cf. Skt. ás, to sit. The original sense was probably 'sit, remain.'

sit, remain.' ¶ For other parts of the verb, see Be, Was. AREA, a large space. (Lat.) Used by Dryden, Ded. to Span. Fryar (R.). - Lat. area, an open space, a threshing-floor. Root uncertain ; see Fick, ii. 22.

AREFACTION, a drying, making dry. (Lat.) Used by Bacon, Adv. of Learning, b. ii. ed. Wright, p. 124, l. 14. A coined word, from Lat. arefacere, to make dry. - Lat. are-re, to be dry (cf. aridus, dry); and facere, to make. See Arid. Der. By adding -fy, to make, to the stem are-, dry, the verb arefy has also been made; it is used by Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 294.

ARENA, a space for disputants or combatants. (Lat.) It occurs in Hakewill, Apologie, p. 396; and Gibbon, Hist. vol. ii. c. 12. - Lat. arena, sand; hence, a sanded space for gladiators in the amphitheatre. Better harena; see Errata. [†] Der. arena-ce-ous, i.e. sandy. AREOPAGUS, Mars' hill; the supreme court at Athens. (Gk.)

From Lat. areopagues, which occurs in the Vulgate version of Acts, xvii. 22, where the A. V. has 'Mars' hill.'-Gk. 'Apsidrayos, a form which occurs in no good author (Liddell and Scott); more commonly. Aperos wayos, which is the form used in Acts, xvii. 22. - Gk. Aperos, for the root stay of the set of the set in Acts, which is the form used in Acts, which is the form used in Acts, which is a process, a rock, mountain peak, hill.  $\P$  Perhaps connected with Gk.  $\pi/\gamma \nu \mu$ , I fasten, and the root PAK, to fix, as suggested by Liddell and Scott. Der. Areopag-ite, Areopag-ite-ic-a (Milton's treatise).

ARGENT, white, in heraldry; silvery. (F., -L.) In Milton, iii. 460; as an heraldic term, much earlier. - F. argent, silver; also, 'argent in blason;' Cot. - Lat. argentum, silver; of which the old Oscan form was aragetom ; connected with Lat. arguere, to make clear, im, l. 95. Not in early use. Formed by change of Lat. -us argutus, clear, plain, argilla, white clay. + Gk. άργυροs, silver; con5 a 👔 🖓 nected with apyoe, white. + Skt. rajata, white, silver, from raj, to shine; also Skt. arjuna, white. - ARG, to shine; Fick, i. 497; Curtius, i. 211. Der. argent-ine (F. argentin, Cotgrave; Low Lat. argentinus).

ARGILLACEOUS, clayey. (Lat.) Modern. - Lat. argillaceus, clayey. - Lat. argilla, white clay. + Gk. άργιλοs, white clay. - ARG, to shine. See Argent.

ARGONAUT, one who sailed in the ship Argo. (Lat., -Gk.) Lat. argonauta, one who sailed in the Argo. -Gk. 'Αργοναίντης, an Argonaut. -Gk. 'Αργώ, the name of Jason's ship (meaning 'the swift;' from dργός, swift); and ναίντης, a ship-man, sailor, from ναῦς, a ship. 'Der. Argonaut-ic. ARGOSY, a merchant-vessel. (Dalmatian.) In Shak. Mer. of Ven. i.

ARGOBY, a merchant-vessel. (Dalmatian.) In Shak. Mer. of Ven.i. 1.9; on which Clark and Wright note: 'Argosy denotes a large vessel, gen. a merchant-ship, more rarely a ship of war. The word has been supposed to be a corruption of Ragosie, "a ship of Ragusa," but more probably is derived from the Low Lat. argis from the classical Argo.' The former is surely the more correct view.  $\beta$ . The etymology of this word has been set at rest by Mr. Tancock, in N. and Q. 6. S. iv. 490. See The Present State of the Ottoman Empire, by Sir Paul Ricaut, 1675, c. 14, p. 119; Lewis Roberts's Marchants Map of Commerce, 1638, c. 237, where he speaks of the great ships 'vulgarly called Argoses, Froperly Raguses;' and especially the earlier quotation about "Ragusyes, Hulks, Caravels, and other rich laden ships,' in The Petty Navy Royal, by Dr. John Dee, 1577, pr. in Arber's English Garner, ii. 67. See also Wedgwood (Contested Etymologies); Palmer (Folk-Etymology'. The O. F. argousin is unrelated; see Palmer, Brachet. Ragusa is a port in Dalmatia, on the E. coast of the Gulf of Venice.

ARGUE, to make clear, prove by argument. (F., -L.) 'Aristotle and other moo to argue I taughte; 'P. Plowman, B. x. 174. – O. F. arguer. - Lat. arguers, to prove, make clear; cf. argutus, clear. - ARG, to shine; Fick, i. 497; Curtius, i. 211; whence also Gk. dpros, Skt. arjuna, white. See Argont. Dor. argu-ment, Chaucer, C. T. 11198; argument-at-ion, argument-at-ive, argument-at-ive-ly, argument-at-ive-mess.

ARID, dry, parched. (Lat.) Not in early use; Rich. quotes from. Swift's Battle of the Books, and Cowper's Homer's Iliad, bk. xii. It was therefore probably taken immediately from Lat. aridus, dry, by merely dropping -us. - Lat. arere, to be dry. Possibly related, as suggested by Fick, to Gk. ager, to dry up, to parch. Der. arid-it-y, arid-ness: and see Arena, Arefaction.

ABIGHT, in the right way. (E.) We find in Layamon, l. 17631, 'ær he mihte fusen a riht,' i.e. ere he might proceed aright. The a, thus written separately, is (as usual) short for an, the M. E. form of A. S. on, often used in the sense of 'in.' Thus aright is for 'on right,' i.e. in right: right being a substantive. Cf. abed, asleep, afoot, &c. See Right.

ARISE, to rise up. (E.) M. E. arisen, Old Eng. Homilies, p. 49; very common. – A.S. árísan, to arise; Grein, i. 38; in common use. – A.S. á-, and rísan, to rise. The prefix á- in this case is equivalent to Goth. us-, and mod. G. er-; cf. Goth. ur-reisan, to arise, Mat. viii. 15, where wr- is the prefix which commonly appears as us-, but becomes ur-before a following r. ¶ The Goth. us is used separately as a preposition, with the meanings 'out, out of, from, forth from;' as 'us himinam,' out of heaven, Mark, i. 11. The O. H. G. had the same preposition, spelt ar, ir, ur, but it is wholly lost in mod. G. except in the prefix er-, and its place has been supplied by ans, which is the E. out and Goth. ut, really a different word. In Icelandic the prep. remains in full force, spelt or or in old MSS., and sometimes yr; in later MSS. it is spelt ur, generally written as úr in mod. Icelandic. As a prefix in Icelandic, it is a little difficult to determine in every case the value of the prefix a-. In this case we are certain. See A-, prefix, and see Rise.

ARISTOCRACY, a government of the best men; a government by a privileged order; the nobility. (Gk.) Holland speaks of 'an aristocracy, or regiment [i.e. government] of wise and noble senate; 'Plutarch, p. 276. – F. aristocratie, 'an aristocracy; the government of nobles, or of some few of the greatest men in the state;' Cot. [Or the word may have been taken directly from Gk.] – Gk.  $d\mu\sigma\sigma\sigma\sigma$ , the rule of the best-born or nobles. – Gk.  $d\mu\sigma\sigma\sigma\sigma$ , crude form of  $d\mu\sigma\sigma\sigma\sigma$ , best; and  $s\mu\sigma\taue\partial$ , to be strong, to rule, govern. A. The Gk.  $d\mu\sigma\sigma\sigma$ , best; is a superlative from a form  $d\mu\epsilon$ , proper, good, which does not occur, but is abundantly illustrated by allied words, such as  $d\rho-\tau\iotao\sigma$ , fit, exact,  $d\rho-e\tau\eta$ , excellence,  $d\rho-\mu\sigma\sigma\sigma$ , fit, suiting; all from a root  $a\rho$ , to fit, suit. See other numerous related words in Curtius, i. 424. –  $\sqrt{AR}$ , to hit upon a thing, to fit; these are the roots numbered 2 and 3 by Fick, i. 19, 20; and more suitable than that which he numbers as 4. B. The Gk. apareîc, to complete, and Lat. creare (whence E. create); from  $\sqrt{KAR}$ , to make, which Fick lengthens to shar, i. 239. See Curtius, i. 189. Der. aristocrat-ic, aristocrat-ic-al, aristocrat-ic-al-ly, and even aristocrat (not a very good form); all from the Gk. stem dριστοκρατ-.

ARITHMETIC, the science of numbers. (F. - Gk.) In M. E. we find the corrupt form arsmetike, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 790; further altered to arsmetik, Chaucer, C. T. 1900, 7804; these are probably from the Prov. arismetica, where s is a corruption of th. At a later period the word was conformed to the Gk. We find arithmetick in Holland's Pliny (concerning Pamphilus), b. xxxv. c. 10; and in Shak. Troil. i. 2. 123. – F. arithmetique, explained as 'arithmetick' by Cotgrave. – Gk.  $dol \mu u ruch$ , the science of numbers, fem. of  $dol \theta u ruch's$ , belonging to numbers. – Gk.  $da \theta u \phi s$ , number, reckoning. –  $\sqrt{AR}$ , to hit upon a thing, fit; Curtius, i. 424. See Aristocracy. Der. arithmetic-al-iy, arithmetic-al-iy, arithmetic-ian.

ARK, a chest, or box; a large floating vessel. (Lat.) In very early use as a Bible word. In the A. S. version of Gen. vi. 15, it is spelt arc. – Lat. arca, Gen. vi. 15 (Vulgate). – Lat. arcere, to keep. + Gk. daseiv, to keep off, suffice,  $d\lambda a x eiv$ , to keep off, whence Gk.  $d\lambda \kappa f_i$ , defence, corresponding to Lat. arca. –  $\sqrt{ARK}$  (or ALK), to keep, protect. Fick, i. 49; Curtius, i. 162. Der. arcana, Lat. neut. pl., things kept secret; screts; from Lat. arcanus, hidden, from arcere, to protect, keep, enclose.

ARM (1), s., the limb extending from the shoulder to the hand. (E.) M. E. arm, Layamon, iii. 207; also earm, arm. - 0. Northumbrian arm, Luke, i. 51; A. S. earm, Grein, i. 248. + Du. arm. + Icel. arm. + Dan. and Swed. arm. + Goth. arms. + G. arm. + Lat. armus, the shoulder; cf. Lat. artus, a limb. + Gk. dpubs, joint, shoulder; cf. Gk.  $d\rho\rho\rho\sigma\nu$ , a joint, limb. All from  $\sqrt{AR}$ , to fit, join; expressive of the articulation of the limb, and its motion from the joint. See Curtius, i. 424. Der. arm-ful, arm-ful, arm-les, ar-i, q. v.

ARM (2), v., to furnish with weapons.  $(F_n - L_n)$  M. E. armen, to arm; Rob. of Glouc. p. 63. -0. F. armer, to arm. -Lat. armare, to furnish with weapons. -Lat. arma, weapons. See Arms. Der. arma-da, arma-dillo, arma-ment, armour, army; all from Lat. arma-re; see these words. Armistics is from Lat. arma, s. pl.

ARMADA, an 'armed' fleet; a large fleet. (Span., - Lat.) Well known in the time of Elizabeth. Camden speaks of the 'great armada; 'Elizabeth, an. 1588. - Span. armada, a fleet; fem. of armado, armed, pp. of armar, to arm, equip. - Lat. armare, to arm. See Arm, v. Doublet, army, q. v.

Arm, v. Doublet, army, q. v. ARMADILLO, an animal with a bony shell. (Span., -L.) A Brazilian quadruped; lit. 'the little armed one,' because of its protecting shell. -Span. armadillo, dimin. with suffix -illo, from armado, armed, pp. of armar, to arm. -Lat. armare, to arm. See Arm, verb. ARMAMENT, armed forces; equipment. (Lat.) Modern. Direct from the Lat. armamentum, gen. used in pl. armamenta, tackling. -Lat, armare, to arm; with suffix -mentum. See Arm, verb.

ARMISTICE, a short cessation of hostilities. (F., -L.) Not in early use. In Smollet's Hist. of England, an. 1748. - F. armistice, a cessation of hostilities. - Lat. armistitium *, a coined word, not in the dictionaries; but the right form for producing F. armistice, Ital. armistizio, and Span. armisticio; cf. Lat. solstitium, whence E. solstice. -Lat. arma, arms, weapons; and -stitum, the form assumed in composition by stätum, the pp. of sistere, to make to stand, to place, fix; a secondary verb, formed by reduplication from stare, to stand, cognate with E. stand. See Arms and Stand.

with E. stand. See Arms and Stand. ARMOUR, defensive arms or dress. (F., -L.) M. E. armour, armoure, armure. Rob. of Glouc. has armure, p. 397.-O. F. armure, armeure.-Lat. armatura, armour; properly fem. of armaturus, fut. part. act. of armare, to arm. See Arm, verb. Der. armour-er, armour-y: also armorial (F. armorial, belonging to arms: Cotorave).

armoury; also armorial (F. armorial, belonging to arms; Cotgrave). ARMS, sb. pl., weapons. (F., -L.) M. E. armes, Havelok, 2024. -O. F. armes, pl.; sing. arme. - Lat. arma, neut. pl., arms, weapons, lit. 'fittings,' equipments. Cf. Gk.  $d\rho\mu\nu\nu\alpha$ , the tackling of a ship, tools of a workman. -  $\sqrt{AR}$ , to fit, join. See Arm. Der. arm, verb, q. v.; also arm-i-stice, q. v. ARMY, a large armed body of men. (F., -L.) In Chaucer's

ARMY, a large armed body of men. (F., -L.) In Chaucer's C. T. Prol. 60, many MSS. read armee, but it is doubtful if it is the right reading, and the word is very rare at so early a time. It is spelt army in Udal on St. Matt. c. 25. - O. F. armee, fem. of arme, pp. of armer, to arm. - Lat. armere, to arm, of which the fem. pp. is armata, whence Span. armada. Doublet, armada, q.v. ABOINT THEE: begone! (Scand.) 'Aroint thee, witch!'

AROINT THEE 1 begone 1 (Scand.) 'Aroint thee, witch 1' Macbeth, i. 3. 36. The lit. sense is 'get out of the way,' or 'make room,' i. e. begone 1 It is a corruption of the prov. E. rynt ye, or rynt you. 'Rynt thee is used by milkmaids in Cheshire to a cow, when she has been milked, to bid her get out of the way;' note in Clark and Wright's edition. Ray, in his North-Country Words, gives: 'Rynt ye, by your leave, stand handsomly [i. e. more conveniently for me]. As; "Rynt yow, witch," quoth Besse Locket to her mother; Cheshire Proverb.' - Icel. ryma, to make room, to clear the way; cf.

Swed. rymma, to remove, clear, get out of the way, decamp; Dan. römme, to make way, get out of the way, decamp. [Similarly, the tool called a rimer, used for enlarging holes in metal, signifies 'enlarger,' that which makes more room;' and corresponds to a verb to rime.] Rynt ye is an easy corruption of rime ta, i. e. do thou make more room; where ta is a form frequently heard instead of 'thou' in the North of England. See Dialect of Mid-Yorkshire, by C. Clough Robinson, Pref. p. xxiv (E. D. S.), for remarks on the forms of thou.

AROMA, a sweet smell. (Lat., -Gk.) The sb. is modern in use; but the adj. aromatic is found rather early. Fabyan has 'oyntmentis and aromatykes;' c. 166. – Late Lat. aroma, borrowed from Gk. – Gk.  $\delta \rho \omega \mu a$ , a spice, a sweet herb. Etym. unknown; but the word 'occurs not only in the sense of sweet herbs, but likewise in that of field-fruits in general, such as barley and others;' Max Müller, Lect. on the Science of Language, 8th ed. ii. 293. There is thus a probability, strengthened by the very form of the word, that it is derived from  $d\rho \delta w$ , to plough, cognate with E. ear, to plough. See Elar, verb. Der. aroma-t-ic, aroma-t-ise, from the Gk. stem  $d\rho \omega \mu ar$ .

AROUND, prep. and adv., on all sides of, on every side. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Spenser has around, F. Q. i. 10. 54. M. E. around, Life of Beket, ed. Black, l. 2162. The prefix is the common E. a-, in its commonest use as short for an, the M. E. form of A. S. prep. on; so that a-round is for on round, i. e. in a round or circle. Round is from O. F. roond, rond, Lat. rotundus. Cf. abed, asleep, afoot, &c. See Round.

AROUSE, to rouse up. (Scand.) In Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 3. The prefix is a needless addition; no doubt meant to be intensive, and imitated from that in arise, which is the A.S. á-, answering to Gothic us-; see Arise. For further remarks, see Rouse.

to cothic us-; see AFIBO. For further remarks, see KOUBO. ARQUEBUS, a kind of gun. (F., -Du.) Used by Nicholas Breton, an Elizabethan poet, in A Farewell to Town (R.) - F. arquebuse, 'an harquebuse, caleever, or hand-gun; 'Cot. He also gives the spelling harquebuse, which is older and better. – Walloon harkibuse, in Dict. de la langue Wallonne, by Grandgagnage, i. 266, 278, qu. by Diez, who traces the word. This Walloon word is a dialectal variation of Du. haakbus, which is a significant word. - Du. haak, a hook, clasp, and bus, a gun-barrel, gun; exactly parallel to G. hakenbüchse, an arquebuse, from haken, a hook, and buchse, a gunbarrel, gun. B. The word means 'gun with a hook,' alluding to some peculiarity in the make of it. In Webster's Dict. the 'hook' is said to have been the name given to the forked rest upon which the gun, of a clumsy make, was supported ; but the arquebuse was an unsupported hand-gun, and the reference seems to be rather to the shape of the gun, which was bent or hooked, whereas the oldest hand-guns had the barrel and butt all in one straight line, so that it was difficult to take aim. Another suggestion is that the hook was a trigger, previously unused. See Hackbut. ¶ Brachet derives F. arquebuse from Ital. archibugio, but this will not account for the O. F. harquebuse; besides, archibugio is itself a borrowed word. See Diez's account, which is clear and sufficient.

ARRACK, the name of an ardent spirit used in the East. (Arab.) Better spelt arack or arac, as in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 45, 241, 348. From the Arabic word 'araq, juice, the more literal signification being 'sweat; ' in allusion to its production by distillation. In Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 425, is the entry: 'Arab. 'araq, juice, essence, sweat; distilled spirit.' – Arab. 'araqa, he sweated. The word is sometimes shortened to Rack. ARRAIGN, to call to account, put on one's trial. (F., – L.)

ARRAIGN, to call to account, put on one's trial. (F.,-L.) M. E. arainen, areinen, areinen (with one r). 'He arayned hym ful runyschly, what raysoun he hade,' &cc.; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 191.-O. F. aranier, aragnier, areisnier, to speak to, discourse with; also, to cite, arraign.-O. F. a., prefix (Lat. ad); and reisner, reisoner, to reason, speak, plead.-O. F. reson, raison, reason, advice, account. -Lat. acc. rationem, from nom. ratio, reason. See Beason. ¶ The Low Lat. form of arraign is arrationare; similarly the Low Lat. derationare, to reason out, decide, produced the now obsolete darraign, to decide, esp. used of deciding by combat or fighting out a quarrel; see Chaucer, Kn. Ta. 775. Der. arraign-ment.

ARRANGE, to range, set in a rank. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. arayngen, as in 'he araynged his men;' Berners, Froissart, c. 325; orig. spelt with one r. -O. F. arengier, to put into a rank, arrange. -O. F. a., prefix (Lat. ad, to); and rangier, renger, to range, put in a rank. =O. F. rene, mod. F. rang, a rank, file; orig. a ring or circle of people. =O. H. G. hrinc, mod. G. ring, a ring, esp. a ring or circle of people; cognate with E. ring. See Rank, Ring. Der. arrangement.

ARRANT, knavish, mischievous, notoriously bad. (E.) Also (better) spelt arrand, Howell, bk. iv. let. 9 (R.) 'So arrant a thefe;' Grafton Hen. IV, an. I. a. It stands for arghand, i.e. fearing, a word closely allied to Arch, q. v., which has similar change of meaning, from 'cowardly' to 'knavish.' We find, e.g. 'arwe coward'=arch (or arrant) coward, in K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 3340. B. Arghand is the pres. pt., in the Northumbrian dialect, of the Northern E. verb argh, to be cowardly. 'Antenor arghet with austerne wordes, Had doute of the duke and of his dethe fere ' = Antenor turned coward at his threatening words, had fear of the duke, and was afraid to die; Destruction of Troy, 1946. For pres. participles in -and, see Barbour's Bruce and the Pricke of Conscience. They are even found as late as in Spenser, who has glitterand, F. Q. ii. 11. 17; &c. Y. This North. E. pres. pt. in -and was easily confused with the F. pres. pt. in -ant, so that arghand became arrant; used 16 times by Shakespeare. In the same way, plesand in Barbour's Bruce = mod. E. fleasant. 8. Next, its root being unrecognised, it was confused with the word errant, of French origin, first used in the phrase 'errant knights ; ' Sir. T. Malory's Morte Arthur, bk. iv. c. xii; or 'knight errant,' id. bk. iv. c. xxiv. Chapman, in his Byron's Tragedy, Act v. sc. 1, shews the confusion complete in the line 'As this extravagant and errant rogue.' - A. S. eargian, to be a coward: 'hy ondredon ... pæt hy to rade á-sláwedon and á-eargedon '= they feared, lest they might too soon become very slow (slothful) and become very timid; where a- is an intensive prefix. -A.S. earg, eark, timid; Grein, i. 248. See further under Arch. ¶ For further examples of the verb argh, Southern M. E. arsien, see Ergh in Jamieson's Scot. Dict., and arsien in Stratmann and Maitmer; and cf. Icel. ergjask, to become a coward. [*] ARRAS, tapestry. (F.) In Shak. Haml. iv. 1, 9. So named from Argas, in Artois, N. of France, where it was first made.

ARRAY, to set in order, get ready. (F., - hybrid of Lat.and Scand.) M. E. arraien, araien, to array; common in 14th century; Chaucer, Kn. Ta. 1188; Rob. of Glouc. p. 36. - O. F. arraier, arroier, to array, prepare, arrange. - O. F. arrai, arroi, preparation. B. Formed by prefixing ar- (imitation of the Lat. prefix ar-, the form assumed by ad, to, before a following r) to the sb. roi, rai, order, arrangement, according to Burguy; though I suspect roi may rather have meant 'tackle.' The simple sb. roi seems to be rare, but we have the compounds arroi, preparation, baggage; conroi, equipage, conroier, to equip. which point to the special arrangements for a journey. Y. Of Scandi-navian origin; Swed. reda, order, Dan. rede, order, Icel. reida, implements, an outfit, tackle, rigging, service, affairs; Icel. reid; implements, rigging of a ship; also, tackle, harness of a horse, &c. It seems to me clear that the Icel. word is the real origin, as the soft & would so easily drop out. However, the word is certainly Scandinavian. The 0 or d is preserved in Low Lat. arredium, warlike apparatus, implements or equipage of war; Ital. arredo, furniture, rigging, apparel; both of which come close to the Icel, use. 8. These Scandinavian words are closely allied to A. S. rede, prepared, mod. E. ready; A. S. gerade, trappings, equipment (Grein. ii. 440); cf. Scottish graithe, to make ready, graith, ready, graith, apparatus, all words directly borrowed from Icel. greida, to equip, greidr, ready, and greidi, arrangement. Hence to array, to graithe, and to make ready, are three equivalent expressions containing the same root. See Boady, Curry. ¶ It will be observed that the sb. array is really older than the verb.

ARREARS, debts unpaid and still due.  $(F_{.,-L})$  The M. E. arere is always an adverb, signifying backward, in the rear; e.g. 'Some tyme aside, and somme arrere' = sometimes on one side, and sometimes backward; P. Plowman, B. v. 354. It is more commonly spelt arere (with one r), or a rere (in two words), id. C. vii. 405. – O. F. arier, ariere, backward. – Lat. ad, towards; and retro, backward. [Similarly O. F. deriere (mod. F. derrière) is from Lat. de, from, and retro, backward; and we ourselves use the word rear still.] See Rear; and see arrière in Brachet. ¶ What we now express by arrears is always expressed in M. E. by arrearages or arerages, a sb. pl. formed from M. E. arere by the addition of the F. suffix -age. For examples of arrearages, see Rich. s. v. arrear; and cf. P. Plowman, C. xii. 207.

ARREST, to stop, to seize.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  M. E. arresten, or commonly aresten; Chaucer, Prol. 829 (or 827).-O. F. arester, aresteir, to stay (mod. F. arrêter); given by Burguy s. v. steir (Lat. stare).-Lat. ad, to (which becomes a in O. F.); and restare, to stay, compounded of re- (older form red-), back, and stare, to stand, remain, cognate with E. stand. See Re- and Stand; and see Rest.

AREIVE, to come to a place, reach it.  $(F_{.}, -L_{.})$  Gen. followed by at in modern E.; but see Milton, P. L. ii. 409. M. E. aryuen, ariuen, (u for v); Rob. of Glouc. p. 18. -O. F. ariver, arriver, -Low Lat. adripare, to come to the shore, spelt arripare in a 9th cent. text, and arribare in an 11th cent. chartulary; Brachet. See the note also in Brachet, shewing that it was originally a seaman's term. -Lat. ad ripam, towards the shore, to the bank. -Lat. ad, to; and ripa, the bank, shore. Fick, i. 742, ingeniously suggests that the orig. sense of Lat. ripa is 'a rift, a break;' cf. Icel. rifa, whence E. rive. See Rive. Der. arrival, spelt arrivale in Gower, C. A. ii. 4.

ARROGATE, to lay claim to, assume. (Lat.) Used by Barnes,

Works, p. 371, col. 1. The sb. arrogance is much older; Chaucer, C. T. 6694; so is the adj. arrogant, C. T. Persones Tale, De Superbia. Formed with suff. -ate (see Abbreviate) from Lat. arrogare, to ask of, to adopt, attribute to, add to, pp. arrogatus. - Lat. ad, to (= arbefore r); and rogare, to ask. See Rogation. Der. arrogat-ion; also (from Lat. arrogare, pres. pt. arrogans, acc. arroganiem) arrogant, arrogani-4y, arrogance, arrogane-y.

ARBOW, a missile shot from a bow. (E.) M. E. arewe, arwe (with one r); Chaucer, Prol. 107; Ancren Riwle, pp. 60, 62. – A. S. arewe, A. S. Chron. an. 1083; older form earh, Grein, i. 248; akin to A. S. earu, swift, and arod, prompt, ready. + Icel.  $\ddot{o}r$ , an arrow, pl.  $\ddot{o}rvar$ ; akin to Icel.  $\ddot{o}r$ , swift. –  $\checkmark$  AR, to go; which appears in Skt. ri, to go, Gk.  $\acute{e}r_{20}au$ , I come,  $l-\dot{a}\lambda au$ , I hasten, send, shoot; Fick, iii. 21; Curtius, ii. 171. The Skt. arvan means a horse. From the same root is E. errand, q. v. Der. arrow-y. Gr Another view of the word is to connect A. S. earh, an arrow, Icel.  $\ddot{o}r$  (pl.  $\ddot{o}rvar$ ) with Goth. arhwazna, a dart, Eph. vi. 16; and these again with Lat. arcus, a bow; the supposed root being  $\checkmark$  ARK, to keep off, defend; Fick, iii. 24. See Aro.

Fick, iii. 24. See Aro. ABROW-BOOT, a farinaceous substance, made from the root of the Maranta Arundinacea, and other plants. (E.) From arrow and root; if the following note be correct. 'The E. name of this preparation is derived from the use to which the Indians of S. America were accustomed to apply the juice extracted from another species of Maranta—the Maranta galanga, which was employed as an antidote to the poison in which the arrows of hostile tribes were dipped;' Eng. Cyclopsedia, Arts and Sciences, s. v. Arrow-root. Observe the Lat. name, 'Maranta arundinacea.'

ARSE, the buttocks. (E.) M. E. ars, ers; P. Plowman, B. v. 175, and footnote. – A. S. ærs; Bosworth. + Du. aars. + Icel. ars, also spelt rass. + Swed. and Dan. ars. + M. H. G. ars; mod. G. arsch. + Gk. öppos. the rump; cf. obpd, the tail; Curtius, i. 434.

ARSENAL, a magazine for naval stores, &c. (Span., - Arnb.) Holland speaks of 'that very place where now the arsenall and shipdocks are ;' Livy, p. 106; and see Milton, P. R. iv. 270. [Perhaps rather from Span. than from F. arcenal, which Cotgrave, following the F. spelling, explains by 'an Arcenall.'] - Span. arsenal, an arsenal, magazine, dock-yard; a longer form appears in Span. atarazanal, an arsenal, a rope-walk, a cellar where wine is kept; also spelt atarazana. [So in Italian we find arzanale or arzana, an arsenal, a dockyard; and darsena, a wet dock. The varying forms are due to the word being foreign, viz. Arabic. The final -l is merely formative, and no part of the original word. The Span. atarazana and Ital. darsena are the best forms.] - Arab. dár, a house, and eina'at, art, trade; Palmer's Pers. Dict. coll. 248, 403. The two words together signify 'a house of art or construction, 'a place for making things.' Mr. Wedgwood says: 'Ibn Khaldoun quotes an order of the Caliph Abdalmelic to build at Tunis a dár-ciná'a for the construction of everything necessary for the equipment and armament of vessels. Pedro de Alcala translates atarazana by the Arab. dár a ciná'a; see Engelmann and Dozy.'

ABSEINIC, a poisonous mineral. (Gk.) Chaucer speaks of arsenik, C. T. Group G, 778. It was one of the four 'spirits' in alchemy. – Lat. arsenicum. – Gk. dorewick', arsenic, a name occurring in Dioscorides, 5. 121. [This Gk. word lit. means 'male;' in allusion to the extraordinary alchemical fancy that some metals were of different sexes. Gold, e.g. also called Sol, the sun, was masculine, whilst silver, also called luna, the moon, was feminine. Others suppose the word simply refers to the strength of the mineral.] – Gk.  $d\rho\sigma ev$ , base of  $d\rho\sigma pv$ , a male; also, strong, mighty. Cf. Zend arshan, a man, male; Skt. rishaba, a bull; Curtius, i. 427. Der. arsenic-al.

a man, male; Skt. rishaba, a bull; Curtius, i. 427. Der. arsenic-al. ARSON, the crime of burning houses. (F., -L.) Old Law French; see Blackstone's Comment. b. iv. c. 16. -O. F. arson, arsun, arsun, incendiarism. -O. F. ardoir, arder, to burn. -Lat. ardere, to burn; pp. arsus. See Ardent. [+] ART (1), 2 p. s. pres. of the verb substantive. (E.) O. Northum-

ART (1), 2 p. s. pres. of the verb substantive. (E.) O. Northumbrian  $ar\delta$ , later art; A.S. eart. The ar- stands for as-, from  $\sqrt{AS}$ , to be; and the -4, O. Northumb. - $\delta$ , is the initial letter of  $\delta$ -w, i.e. thou. See further under Are.

ART (2), skill, contrivance, method. (F., -L.) M. E. art, arte; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of P. Langtoft, p. 336; and in Floriz and Blauncheflur, ed. Lumby, l. 521. -O. F. art, skill. -Lat. acc. artem, from, nom. $ars, skill. <math>-\sqrt{AR}$ , to ft. Cf. Gk. äpros, ft; exact, Lat. artus, a limb (lit. joint), &cc.; see Fick, i. 493; Curtius, i. 423. From the same root we bave arm, the shoulder-joint, hence, the arm; articulation, i. e. a 'fitting,' articulate, article, artichmetic. Dex. artiful, articulations, artistic, artistic-al, artistic-al-ly, articles, articlessmess; also artific, articulate, articular, and which are treated of separately.

ARTERY, a tube or pipe conveying blood from the heart.  $(L_{..} = Gk.)$  Shak. L. L. Liv. 3. 306. - Lat. arteria, the windpipe; also, an artery. [The F. form is artere, which is shorter than the E., and consequently the E. word is not from French.] - Gk. dρτηρία, an artery; but orig. the windpipe. Perhaps connected with dρτάω, I fasten to, hang from; see Curtius, i. 442. Der. arteri-al, arteri-al-ise. ARTESIAN. adi., applied to a well. (F.) These wells are made

ARTEBIAN, adj., applied to a well. (F.) These wells are made by boring till the water is found; and the adj. is properly applied to such as are produced by boring through an impermeable stratum, in such a way that the water, when found, overflows at the outlet. Englished from F. Artésien, of or belonging to Artois, a province in the N. of France, where these wells were first brought into use at an early period. See Enc. Cvcl. s. v. Artesian well.

the N. of France, where these wells were first brought into use at an early period. See Eng. Cycl. s. v. Artesian well. ARTICHOKE, an esculent plant; Cynara scolymus. (Ital., – Arab.) 'A artochocke, cynara;' Levins, 159. 4. Holland has the odd spelling artichoux for the plural; Pliny, b. xx. c. 23. [He seems to have been thinking of F. choux, cabbage.] – Ital. articiocco, an artichoke; cf. F. artichaut, spelt artichaut by Cotgrave, and explained by him as 'an artichock.' A corrupt form. Florio gives the spellings archieiocco, archieioffo; also carciocco, carcioffo. Cf. Span. alcachofa, Port. alcachofra. – Arab. al harshaf, an artichoke; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 562. ¶ The pretended Arab. ar'di shauki, cited by Diez, is a mere corruption from Italian.

ARTICLE, a small item; a part of speech. (F., -L.) M. E. aritele, Ayenbite of Inwyt, pp. 11, 12. – F. article, 'an article; a bead, principall clause, title or point of a matter; . . also, a joint or knuckle; 'Cot. – Lat. articulus, a joint, knuckle, member of a sentence, an article in grammar; the lit. sense being 'a little joint.' Formed, by help of suffix --- (Aryan -ka) and dim. suffix -ul, from Lat. arius, a joint, a limb. –  $\sqrt{AR}$ , to fit. See Max Müller, Lect. i. 104. (8th ed.) See Arm, Art. Der. article, verb. And see below.

ARTICULATE, adj., jointed, fitted; also, distinct, clear. (Lat.) Speech is articulate when distinctly divided into joints, i. e. into words and syllables; not jumbled together. – Lat. articulatus, distinct, articulate; pp. of articulare, to supply with joints, or divide by joints, chiefly applied to articulate speaking. – Lat. articulaus, a little joint; dimin. of artus, a joint, limb. See Article. Der. articulate, verb; articulate-ly, articulat-ion.

ARTIFICE, a contrivance. (F., -L.) Gower has artificer, C. A. iii. 142. Shak. has artificer, K. John, iv. 2. 201; and artificial, Romeo, i. 1. 146. Artifice is in Milton, P. L. ix. 39. - F. artifice, skill, cunning, workmanship; Cot. - Lat. artificium, a craft, handicraft. - Lat. artifici-, crude form of artifex, a workman. - Lat. arti-, crude form of ars, art; and facere, to make, the stem fac- being altered to fic- in forming compounds. See Art and Fact. Der. artifici-al, artifici-al-ly; also artific-er, in Gower, C. A. iii. 142.

ARTISAN, a workman. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Bacon and Ford use artsman (R.)-F. artisan, an artisan, mechanic; older spelling artisien; Roquefort.-Ital. artigiano, a workman; whence it was introduced into F. in the 16th century; Brachet.  $\beta$ . This corresponds, according to Diez, to a late Lat. form artitianus (not found), formed in its turn from Lat. artitus, cunning, artful (a dubious word), which from Lat. arten, acc. of ars, art. The Lat. ars is, in any case, the obvious source of it. See Art.

AS (1), conjunction and adverb; distinct from the next word. (E.) M.E. as, als, also, also, also; al advarb; and alvarb, alvarb, written separately. That these are all one and the same word, has been proved by Sir F. Madden, in remarks upon Havelok, and is a familiar fact to all who are acquainted with Middle English. In other words, as is a corruption of also.  $\beta$ . The successive spellings are: A.S. eal swa, Grein, i. 239; al swa, Layamon, I. 70; al so, Sev. n Sages, 560, ed. Weber; also, P. Plowman, A. v. 144; als, id. B. v. 230 (where als means 'also', als main as a smany as, Mandeville's Travels, p. 209. The A.S. eal swa means both 'just so' and 'just as.' See Also. AS (2), relative pronoun. (Scand.) Considered vulgar, but ex-

AS (2), relative pronoun. (Scand.) Considered vulgar, but extremely common provincially. 'Take the box as stands in the first fire-place;' Pickwick Papers, c. xx. It is found in M. E.; 'The firste soudan [sultan] was Zaracon, as was fadre to Salahadyn;' Mandeville, p. 36; and see Mätzner, Gram. ii. 2. 495. It is a corruption of es, rel. pron. signifying 'which,' due to confusion with the far commoner and native E. as, which was used in phrases like 'as long as,' and so seemed to have also somewhat of a relative force. -O. Icel. es, mod. Icel. er, rel. pron., used precisely as the mod. prov. E. as is used still. See examples in Cleasby and Vigfusson's Icel. Dictionary, p. 131, where the prov. E. as is duly alluded to. 'Hann átti dóttur eina, er Unnr het' = he had a daughter as was named Unnr. 'Hann gékk til herbergis þess er konungr var inni ' = he went to the harbour (shelter, house) as the king was in.  $\P$  It is also by means of this relative that we can account for the -ee at the end of sim-es, and the -s at the end of the corresponding M. E. sithen-s; cf. Icel. siden er. O. Icel. siden es, after that. 'The Icelandic has no relat. pron. but only the relat. particles er and sem, both indeclinable;' Cl. and Vigf. Icel. Dict.

ASAFCETIDA, ASSAFCETIDA, a medicinal gum. (Hybrid; Pers. and Lat.) It is the Ferula assafatida, an umbelliferous plant, growing in Persia. The Persian name is ázá (Rich. Dict. p. 65); the Lat. fatida, stinking, refers to its offensive smell. See Fetid.

ASBESTOS, a fibrous mineral. (Gk.) In Holland's Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 10. So called because it is incombustible.  $-Gk. & \sigma\beta e \sigma \tau o e$ , incombustible, or lit. 'unquenchable.' -Gk. & c, negative prefix; and  $-\sigma\beta e \sigma \tau o e$ , quenchable, from  $\sigma\beta e \tau v u \mu$ , I quench, extinguish. See remarks by Curtius on this curious verb. Der. asbest-ine, adj.

ASCEIND, to climb, mount up. (Lat.) Chaucer has ascension and ascended, C. T.  $14^{9}61$ , 14863. [There is a F. sb. ascension, but no verb ascendre, though the form descendre is used for 'to descend.] -Lat. ascendere, to climb up to, ascend; pp. ascensus. -Lat. ad., to (reduced to a-before sc); and scandere, to climb. +Skt. skand, to jump; also, to jump upwards, ascend. - $\checkmark$ SKAND, to jump. Curtius, i. 207, who also points out the connection with Gk. oxávčalov. See Soandal. Der. ascendent, Chaucer, Prol. 417 (now foolishly spelt ascendency; ascension, from Lat. pp. ascensus; ascent (Shak.), coined to pair off with descent, the latter being a true F. word.

ASCERTAIN, to make certain, determine. (F, -L.) The s is an idle addition to the word, and should never have been inserted. Yet the spelling ascertaym occurs in Fabyan, c. 177. Bale has assartened; Image, pt. i. -O. F. acertainer, a form which Burguy notes (s. v. cert) as having been used by Marot. Cotgrave has 'acertener, to certifie, ascertaine, assure.'  $\beta$ . Acertener is a coined word, used in the place of the older F. acerter, to assure ; it is made up of F. prefix a- (Lat. ad), and the adj. certain, certain, sure. Again, certain is a lengthened form, with suffix -ain (Lat. -anus) from the O. F. cert, sure. - Lat. certus, sure. See Cortain. Der. ascertain-able.

ASCETIC, adj. as sb., one who is rigidly self-denying in religious observances; a strict hermit. (Gk.) Gibbon speaks of 'the ascetics; Hist. c. 37. In the Life of Bp. Burnet, c. 13, we find: ' he entered into such an ascetic course.' The adjective was 'applied by the Greek fathers to those who exercised themselves in, who employed themselves in, who devoted themselves to, the contemplation of divine things: and for that purpose, separated themselves from all company with the world;' Richardson. – Gk. downyness, industrious, lit. given to exercise. – Gk. downyn, one who exercises an art, esp. applied to an athlete. – Gk. downyn, to work, adorn, practise, exercise; also, to mortify the body, in Ecclesiastical writers. Root unknown. Der. ascetic-ism.

ASCITITIOUS, supplemental, incidental. (Lat.) Little used. 'Admittious, added, borrowed;' Kersey's Dict. 'Homer has been reckoned an ascititious name, from some accident of his life;' Pope, qu. in Todd's Johnson. Coined, as if from Lat. ascititius (not used), from ascitus, received, derived from others, not innate; pp. of assissers, to take in, admit, receive from without, also written adscissers. - Lat. ad, to; and scissere, to learn, find out, ascertain, which is formed from scire by the addition of the ending -sco, common in forming 'inchoative' or 'inceptive' verbs in Latin. - Lat. scire, to know; closely related to Gk. sciw, sca(w, I split, cleave; see Curtius, i. 178. See Science.

ASCRIBE, to attribute, impute. (Lat.) It occurs in the Lamentation of Mary Magdeleine, st. 37; a poem later than Chaucer, but sometimes printed with his works, - Lat. ascribere, to write down to one's account; pp. ascriptus. - Lat. ad, to (which becomes a before sc); and scribere, to write. See Soribe. Der. ascrib-able, ascript-ion. ASH, the name of a tree. (E.) M. E. asch, esch, assch; Chaucer, C. T. 2924. 'Esche, tre, fraxinus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 143. - A. S. asc, Grein, i. 58. + Du. esch. + Icel. askr. + Dan. and Swed. ask. + O. H. G. asc; M. H. G. asch; G. esche. Origin unknown. Der. ask-med., often written a-schamed. 'Aschamyd, or made ashamyd, uerecundatus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 15. But we also find M. E. ofschamed, ashamed; 'horeham's Poems, p. 160; Owl and Nightingale, l. 934. Hence, in this instance, we may consider the prefix a- as equivalent to of-, as it is in the case of the word adown,  $q.v. \beta$ . This would point back to an A. S. form of scamad, which is not recorded, but was probably in use.  $\gamma$ . The form discamian, to make ashamed, occurs once in poetry. Grein, i. 39, and the prefix  $\acute{a}$ - commonly answers to G. er-, Goth. us-, an intensive prefix. 5. Hence ashamed answers either to A.S. of scamod, pp. ot of scamian, or discamod, pp. of discamian, to make ashamed; the prefix being indeterminate. The verb scamian, to affect by shame, is derived from the sb. scamus, shame. See Shame.

ASHES, the dust or relics of what is burnt. (E.) The pl. of ash, which is little used. M. E. asche, axe, aske, a dissyllabic word, the usual pl. being aschen, axen, asken, but in Northern Eng. asches, axes, askes. Thus asken appears in the (Southern) Ancren Riwle, p. 214, while askes is in Hampole's Pricke of Conscience, 424. – A. S. askee, axe, asce, pl. ascan, axan, ascan; Grein, i. 10, 11, 58. + Du. asch. + Icel. aska. + Swed. aska. + Dan. aske. + Goth. azgo, sing., asgon, pl.; Luke, x. 13. + O. H. G. asgá, ascá; M. H. G. asche, aske, eiche; G. asche. Origin unknown. Der. ask-y; Ask-Wednesday, so called from the use of ashes by penitents, the Lat. name being dies cinerum.

the use of ashes by penitents, the Lat. name being dies cinerum. ASHLAR, ASHLER, a facing made of squared stones. (F., L.) 'In countries where stone is scarce, ashler principally consists of thin slabs of stone used to face the brick and rubble walls of buildings; Eng. Cycl. s. v. Ashler. Again, Ashlering is used in masonry to sig-nify 'the act of bedding in mortar the ashler above described;' id. It is also used in carpentry 'to signify the short upright pieces of wood placed in the roof of a house to cut off the acute angle between the joists of the floor and the rafters ; almost all the garrets in London are built in this way;' id. are built in this way;' id.  $\beta$ . The clue to understanding the word is to remember that the use of wood preceded that of stone. This is remarkably exemplified by the entry in Cotgrave's Dictionary : 'Aissil, a single, or shingle of wood, such as houses are, in some places, covered withall.' He also gives: 'Aisselle, an arm-hole; also, a little boord, plank, or shingle of wood.' It is clear that the facings of stone, called ashlers, were preceded by similar facings of square shingles of wood, called in French aisselles; and the square shape of these pieces gave rise to the notion of transferring the term asl ler to squared stone.  $\gamma$ . Again, Cotgrave gives: 'Bouttice, an ashler, or binding stone, in building.' Here too it is clear that the term was previously used in carpentry of the small upright pieces which, as it were, bind together the sloping rafter and the horizontal joist, as shewn in the woodcut in the Eng. Cycl. s. v. asklering. In this case also, the orig. sense is a small board or plank, as given by Cotgrave for aisself.  $\delta$ . The Scot. spellings are essler, aislair. Jamieson quotes houses biggit a' with estler stane '= houses all built with squared stone, from Ramsay's Poems, i. 60. And again, he quotes from Abp. Hamilton's Catechism, fol. 5 a: 'A mason can nocht hew ane euin aislair without directioun of his rewill ' = cannot hew a straight ashlar without drawing a line with his rule to guide him. - O. F. aiseler, a word for which Mr. Wedgwood quotes the following sentence from the Livre des Rois: 'Entur le temple ... fud un murs de treis estruiz de aiselers qui bien furent polis,' i. e. around the temple was a wall of three rows of well-polished asklars. B. This word is evidently an extension, by suffix -er, from O. F. aiselle, aisiele (Burguy), aisselle (Cotgrave), aissele (Bartsch, Chrest. Franc. p. 341, l. 25), meaning 'a little board, a little plank;' the dim. of F. ais, a plank. - Lat. assis, sometimes spelt axis, a strong plank or board. Cf. the Lat. assula, dimin. of assis, which means a chip, shaving, thin piece or 'shingle' of wood; also, a shingle for roofing; also, a spar, or broken piece of marble (Vitruvius). The way in which the use of Lat. assula has been transferred to F. aisselle and to the derivative ashlar is interesting and conclusive. C. The Lat. assis is also sometimes spelt axis, and appears to be the same word as axis, an axle-D. Hence observe that Cotgrave has mixed the two forms tree. together in his explanation of aisselle; aisselle, an armpit, is from Lat. axilla, dimin. of axis, an axle-tree; but aisselle, a little board, is for a Lat. assella, equivalent to assula, and a diminutive of assis, a board. This confusion on Cotgrave's part has somewhat thrown out Mr. Wedgwood, after he had succeeded in tracing back the word to F. aisselle. ¶ Ashlar is sometimes used to denote stones in the rough, just as they come from the quarry. This is pro-bably because they are destined to be used as ashlar-stones. It is to be suspected that the popular mind had an idea that the stones, being hewn, must be named from an axe, unsuited as it is for stonecutting

ASHORE, on shore. (E.) Shak. has on shore, Temp. v. 209, where we might say ashore. Ashore is for a shore, where a is short for an, M. E. form of on. So also in a-bed, a-sleep, &c.

ASIDE, to one side, on one side. (E.) For on side. Wyclif has asydis-hond in Gal. ii. 2, but on sidis hond in Mk. iv. 34: 'he expounyde to his disciplis alle thingis on sidis hond, or by hemself.' See above.

ASININE ; sec Ass.

ASK, to seek an answer, to request. (E.) M. E. asken, aschen, axien, &cc. Asken is in Ancren Riwle, p. 338. Axien in Layamon, i. 307. - A. S. úscian, áhsian, ácsian, Grein, i. 14, 24, 40. The form ácuan is not uncommon, nor is M. E. axien uncommon ; hence mod. prov. E. ax, as a variation of ask. + Du. eischen, to demand, require. + Swed. æska, to ask, demand. + Dan. æske, to demand. + O. H. G. eiscon, eisgon; M.H.G. eischen; mod. G. heischen, to ask. B. The A.S. acsian, like others in -ian, is a secondary or derived verb; from a sb. arce, an inquiry, which is not found, but may be inferred. All the above Teutonic words are related to Skt. ichchha, a wish, desire, eshana, a wish, esh, to search; to Gk. lorns, wish, will; to Sabine aisos, prayer, with which cf. Lat. astimare (E. esteem); and to Lith. jeskóti, Russ. is kate, to seek. The root is seen in Skt. ish, to desire, wish. - VIS, ISK, to seek, wish; Fick, i. 29, Curtius, i. 500. ¶ It is remarkable that the Icel. askja does not mean 'to ask,' but 'to wish;' for which reason it is, in Cleasby and Vigfusson's Dict., supposed to be allied to G. wünschen and E. wish. And this is certainly correct; eskja stands for an older form a kia, which has lost an initial w or v. See Wish.

ASKANCE, obliquely. (F., - Ital., - Teutonic.) Cowper, Homer's Iliad, bk. xi, writes 'with his eyes askant.' The older form seems to be askance or ascance. Sir T. Wyatt, in his Satire Of the Means to be analytic of actance. If wyart, in this states, the Means and Sure Fistate, 1, 53, says: 'For, as she lookt a scance, Under a stole she spied two stemying eyes; '&c. = O. F. a scanche, de travers, en lorgnant, i.e. obliquely; Palsgrave's French Dict. p.831. The lit. sense is 'on the slope,' so that a stands for Lat. ad, to, towards ; and scanche is 'slope.' - Ital. schiancio, slope, direction ; cf. Ital. schiancire, to strike obliquely; schianciana, the diagonal of a square figure. B. The Ital. schi- is sometimes equivalent to sl-, as in schiavo, a slave. And here, the word schiancio, evidently not of Latin origin, but rather Teutonic, points back to a Teutonic slank-, with the sense of 'slope.' And since k is sometimes represented by t, we see here the familiar E. word slant, with the very sense required. That is, the Ital. schiancio, slope, is derived from a Teutonic root, which appears in E. as slant. Askance is thus little else than another form of a lant, so that the alternative form askant is easily accounted for. (But see the Errata.) ¶ We should make a great mistake, were we to mix up with the present word the totally different word askaunce, 'perchance, perhaps,' used by Chaucer, and related to O. F. escance, 'ce qui échoit, tombe en partage' (Burguy), and to our own word chance. See it fully explained in my Glossary to Chaucer's Man of Law's Tale, in the Clarendon Press Series. [*]

ASKEW, awry. (Scand.) ' But he on it lookt scornefully askewi' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 10. 29. As usual, the prefix a- stands for an, M. E. form of on, and askew means 'on the skew.' But in this case, the phrase was probably suggested by the use of Icel. a ska, on the skew; where  $\dot{a}$  answers to E. on; yet  $\dot{ska}$  is not quite the E. skew, though a related word, and near it. The real Icel. equivalent of E. skew is the adj. skeifr, skew, oblique; of which the Dan. form, viz. skjev, wry, oblique, is still nearer to the English. I may add here that these words are near akin to A. S. seech, whence E. shy. See Skow, Shy.

ASLANT, on the slant, obliquely. (See Slant.) A-slonte occurs in the Prompt. Parv. p. 6, as equivalent to acyde (aside) and to the Lat. oblique, obliquely. It stands for on slonte, on the slant, a form which occurs in the Anturs of Arthur, st. xlviii. 6; cf. abed, afoot, asleep. It appears as o slante in the Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2254. Aslant is related to askant and askance, with the same meaning of 'obliquely.' See Askance. Slant is from a root which is best preserved in the Swed. slinta, to slip, slide, miss one's footing, glance; whence Swed. dial. adj. slant, slipperty (Rietz). See Slant. ASLEEP, in a sleep. (E.) For on sleep; a being short for an,

M.E. form of on. 'David ... fell on sleep;' Acts, xiii. 36. See Sleep. ASLOPE, on a slope, slopingly. (See Slope.) For 'on slope,' as in many other instances. See above. In the Romaunt of the Rose, 1. 4464, a slope occurs in the sense of 'contrary to expectation,' or 'amiss.' See Blope. See Slope.

ASP, ASPIC, a venomous serpent. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) Shak. has a pick, Antony, v. 2. 290, 354. Gower speaks of 'A serpent, which that aspidis Is cleped; C. A. i. 57. The form aspic is French; Cotgrave gives: 'Aspic, the serpent called an aspe.' The form asp is also French; see Brachet, who notes, s. v. aspic, that there was an O. F. form aspe, which existed as a doublet of the Provençal aspic; both of them being from Lat. acc. aspidem, from nom. a pis. The false form in Gower is due to his supposing that, as aspides is the nom. pl., it would follow that aspidis would be the nom. singular. - Gk. donis, gen. donidos, an asp. Origin undetermined.

ASPARAGUS, a garden vegetable. (Lat., -Gk., -Pers. (?)) Formerly written sperage; Holland's Pliny, bk. xix. c. 8. Also sparage or sparagus; thus Cotgrave explains F. asperge by ' the herb sparage or sparagus.' But these are mere corruptions of the Lat. word. 37

-Lat. asparagus. - Gk. do rápayos, Attic do pápayos, asparagus. Cur-tius, ii. 110, compares it with the Zend sparegka, a prong, and the Lith. spurgas, a shoot, sprout, and thinks it was a word borrowed from the Persian. He adds that asparag is found in modern Persian. If so, the orig. sense is 'sprout.' See also Fick, i. 253, s. v. sparga; ii. 281, s. v. spargo. Cf. Skt. sphur, sphar, to break out, swell.

ASPECT, view, appearance, look. (Lat.) In old authors, often aspect : ' In thin aspect ben alle aliche ;' Gower, C. A. i. 143. Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, p. 19, uses aspectys in the old astrological sense, of the 'aspects' of planets. [Probably from Lat. directly. Whilst known in English in the 14th century, the F. aspect does not seem to be older than the 16th, when it was used by Rabelais, Pant. iii. 42, in the astrological sense.] - Lat. aspectus, look. -Lat. aspectus, pp. of aspicere, to behold, see. - Lat. ad, to, at (which becomes a- before sp); and specere, to look, cognate with E. sfy. See Spy

ASPEN, ASP, a kind of poplar, with tremulous leaves. (E.) The an adjective, like gold-en, wood-en, and the sb is asp. The tree is still called the asp in Herefordshire, and in the S. and W. of England it is called aps. The phrase 'lyk an aspen leef,' in Chaucer, C. T. 7249, is correct, as aspen is there an adjective. M. E. asp, aspe, espe. Chaucer has asp. C. T. 2023. 'Aspe tre, Espe tre;' Prompt. Parv. pp. 15, 143. — Å. S. asp, also aps; Bosworth. + Du. esp, sb, espen, adj. = Long set & Dong and Swed cards in the C. and W. of England it is called aps. adj. + I.cel. ösp. + Dan. and Swed. asp. + G. aspe, äspe (Ö. H.G. aspa; M. H. G. apse). See Fick, iii. 29, who adds Lettish apsa, Lithuanian apuszis; Polish and Russ. osina. Origin unknown.

ASPERITY, roughness, harshness, (F., -L.) Sir T. More has asperite, Works, p. 1218 c. Chaucer has asprenesse, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 4, p. 127. The contracted O. F. form asprete occurs in Ancren Riwle, p. 354, as an E. word. - O. F. asperiteil, later asperiter, roughness. - Lat. acc. asperitatem; nom. asperitas, roughness. - Lat.

ASPERSE, to cast calumny upon. (Lat.) Milton, P. L. ix. 296. Formed from aspersus, the pp. of aspergere, to besprinkle; also, to bespatter. - Lat. ad, to (which becomes a- before sp); and spargere, to sprinkle, scatter; allied to E. sprinkle. See Sprinkle. Der.

aspers-ion. ASPHALT, ASPHALTUM, a bituminous substance. (Gk.) 'Blazing cressets fed With naphtha and asphaltus;' Milton, P. L. i. 728, 729. A: pali occurs in Mandeville's Travels, p. 100, and aspaltoun in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1038. - Gk. aspatros, aspatror, asphalt, bitumen. The Gk. word is probably of foreign origin; in Webster's Dict., it is said to be Phœnician. Der. asphalt-ic; Milton,

ASPHODEL, a plant of the lily kind. (Gk.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 1040. – Gk.  $d\sigma\phi\delta\delta\epsilon\lambda\sigma$ , a plant of the lily kind. In English, the intervention of the lily kind. In English, the dilly (Halliwell). Cotgrave gives : ' Aspl.odile, the daffadill, affodill, or asphodill flower.'

ASPHYXIA, suspended animation, suffocation. (Gk.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. - Gk. asopufia, a stopping of the pulse. - Gk. asopurroe, without pulsation. - Gk. d-, privative ; and oquifew, to throb, pulsate ;

cf. Gk. σφυγμόs, pulsation. ASPIRE, to pant after, to aim at eagerly. (F.,-L.) Generally followed by to or unto. 'If we shal ... desyrously aspyre unto that countreye of heauen with all our whole heartes ;' Udal, I Peter, c. 3 (R.) = F. aspirer, 'to breathe, . . . also to desire, covet, aim at, aspire unto;' Cot. = Lat. a pirare, to breathe towards, to seek to attain. = Lat. ad, to, towards (which becomes a- before sp); and spirare, to breathe, blow. Root uncertain; see Curtius, i. 117, 118; Fick, ii. 282. Der. a: pir-ing, aspir-ing-ly, aspir-ant, aspir-ate (i. e. to

ASS, a well-known quadruped of the genus Equus; a dolt. (E.) M. E. asse; Ancren Riwle, p. 32-A. S. assa, Grein, i. 10. The origin of the word is unknown, and to what extent one language has borrowed it from another is very uncertain; the Icel. asni, e. g. seems to be merely the Lat. asinus contracted. What is most remarkable about the word is that it is so widely spread. The Celtic languages have W. a.yn, Corn. asen, B:et. azen, Irish and Gael. asal, Manx essyl (Williams). Cf. Du. ezel, an ass, also, a dolt, blockhead, G. esel, Dan. esel, æsel, Goth. asilus, Lith. asilus, Polish osiel, all apparently diminutives, like Lat. asellus. Also Lat. asinus, Icel. asni, Swed. å:na, Gk. övos. Most likely the word is of Semitic origin; cf. Heb. athón, she-ass; see Curtius, i. 501. ASSAFCETIDA; see Asafostida.

ASSAIL, to leap or spring upon, to attack. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. assailen, asailen ; Ancren Riwle, pp. 246, 252, 362. – O. F. assailler, asailir, asalir, to attack ; cf. Lat. assilire. – O. F. a., prefix (Lat. ad, which becomes as- in Lat. before s); and saillir, sallir, to leap, rush forward. - Lat. salire, to leap, rush forth. + Gk. άλλομαι, ✓ SAR, to flow, stream out. See Curtius, i. 167; Fick, i. 796. Der. assail-able, assail-ant; also assault (O. F. assalt, Lat. ad, to, and solius, a leap; from salius, pp. of salire, to leap); whence assault, verb. ASSASSIN, a secret murderer. (F., - Arabic.) Milton has assassin-like, P. L. xi. 219; and assassinated, Sams. Agon. 1109.-F. assassin, given by Cotgrave, who also gives assassiner, to slav, kill, and assassina, sb., a murther. ['Assassin, which is assacis in Joinville, in the 13th cent., in late Lat. kassessin, is the name of a well-known sect in Palestine who flourished in the 13th century, the Haschischin, drinkers of haschisch, an intoxicating drink, a decoction of hemp. The Scheik Haschischin, known by the name of the Old Man of the Mountain, roused his followers' spirits by help of this drink, and sent them to stab his enemies, esp. the leading Crusaders; ' Brachet. See the whole account.]-Arab. hashish, an intoxicating preparation of Cannabis indica; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 199. Der. assassin-ate, assassin-al-ion.

ASSASSIN.

ASSAULT; see under Assail.

ASSAY, sb., examination, test, trial; chiefly used of the trial of metal or of weights.  $(F_{.,} - L_{.,} - Gk.)$  In the sense of 'attempt,' it is generally spelt essay in mod. E.; see Acts, 1x. 26, xvi. 7; Heb. xi. 29. Chaucer uses assay to denote the 'trial of an experiment;' C. T. Group G, 1249, 1338. Gower uses assay for 'an attempt,' C. A. i. 68. [The spelling assay came in through the use of O. F. verb asaier as another spelling of essaier, to judge of a thing, derived from the sb. essai, a trial.] = O. F. essai, a trial. = Lat. exagium, a weighing, a trial of exact weight. See further under Essay, which is the better spelling. Cf. amend = emend. Der. assay, verb; assay-er.

ASSEMBLE, to bring together, collect. (F., -L.) M. E. assemblen, asemblen ; Will. of Palerne, 1120, 1288. Chaucer has ' to assemble moneye ; ' tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 7, p. 80. The sb. asemblaye, assembly, is in K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 3473.-O. F. assembler, to assemble, approach, come together, often with the sense of ' to engage in battle,' as frequently in Barbour's Bruce. - Low Lat. assimulare, to collect, bring together into one place; different from classical Lat. assimulare, to pretend, feign - Lat. ad, to; and simul, together; so that Low Lat. assimulare is 'to bring together;' the Lat. ad becoming as- before s, as usual. [The class. Lat. assimulare is from ad, to, and similis, like ; and similis is from the same source as simul.] The Lat. simul and similis are from the same source as E. same, Gk. δμα, at the same time, Skt. sam, with, together with, sama, same. – √SAM, together; Fick, i. 222; Curtius, i. 400, 401. See Same. Der. assembl-y, assembl-age. From the same source are similar, simulate, assimilate, same, komaso-pathy, and some others. Doublet, assimilate ASSENT, to comply, agree, yield. (F.,-L.) M. E. assenten; Chaucer, C. T. 4761, 8552. 'They assentyn, by on ascent,' i. e. they assent with one consent ; K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 1480. – O. F. assentir, to consent, acquiesce. - Lat. assentire, to assent to, approve, consent. - Lat. ad, to (which becomes as before s); and sentire, to feel; pp. sensus. See Sense. Der. assent, sb., in early use; Ham-pole, Pricke of Conscience, 8390.

ASSERT, to affirm, declare positively. (Lat.) In Milton, P. L. i. 25. Sir T. More has assertation, Works, p. 141 e; and assertion, p. 473 e. The E. word is formed from the Lat. pp. assertus. - Lat. asserere, to add to, take to one's self, claim, assert. - Lat. ad, to (which becomes as- before s); and serere, to join or bind together, connect, to range in a row. + Gk. eipew, to fasten, bind; cf. Gk. oupd, a rope. Cf. Skt. sarit, thread. - VSAR, to bind; Curtius, i. 441. Der. assert-ion ASSESS, to fix a rate or tax. (Lat.) 'I will make such satisfaction, as it shall please you to assess it at ;' North's Plutarch, p. 12; repr. in 'Shakespeare's Plutarch,' ed. Skeat, p. 289. Hall has assessement, Hen. VIII, an. 24. Both verb and sb. are coined words, due to the use of the Law Lat. assessor, one whose duty it was to assess, i. e. to adjust and fix the amount of, the public taxes ; 'qui tributa peræquat vel imponit ; ' Ducange. The title of assessor was also given to a judge's assistant, in accordance with the etymological meaning, viz. ' one who sits beside ' another. - Lat. assessus, pp. of assidere, to sit beside, to be assessor to a judge .- Lat. ad, to, near (which becomes as- before s); and sedere, to sit; cognate with E. sit. See Sit. Der. assess-ment ; assessor is really an older word, see above. Doublet, assize, q. v.

ASSETS, effects of a deceased debtor, &c. (F.,-L.) So called because sufficient 'to discharge that burden, which is cast upon the heir, in satisfying the testator's debts or legacies; Blount's Law Dict. In early use in a different form. 'And if it sufficith not for aseth; P. Plowman, C. xx. 203, where another reading is assetz, B.

I spring, leap. + Skt. sar, sti, to flow, chiefly used of water, as salire  $\stackrel{\oplus}{}$  In the Romaunt of the Rose, 5600, the E. asseth is used to translate often is in Latin; cf. Skt. salia, water, from root sal = sar. = the F. asset.  $\beta$ . The common M.E. form is asseth, asseth, meaning restitution, compensation, satisfaction; evidently modified (probably by confusion with the O. F. assez) from the original Scandinavian word represented by Icel. setja, to satiate; cf. Goth. saths, full; cognate with Lat. satis, enough. But our modern assets is no more than a corruption of O. F. assez, which took the place of the older Scandinavian seth; though the form syth or sith long remained in use in Scotland. Jamieson quotes: 'Yit the king was nocht sithit [satisfeed) with his justice, but with mair rigour punist Mordak to the deith;' Bellenden, Chron. B. ix. c. 28. We may, accordingly, regard aseth, assyth, syith, sithe (see assyth in Jamieson) as Scandinavian, at the same time treating assets as French. Y. The final -ts is a mere orthographical device for representing the old sound of the O. F. z, employed again in the word fitz (son) to denote the O. F. z. This z was certainly sounded as ts; cf. F. avez with Lat. habetis, shortened to 'abet's, and cf. F. assez with Lat. ad satis, shortened to a' sat's. The G. z is pronounced as ts to this day. - Lat. ad satis, up to what is enough; from ad, to, and satis, enough. The Lat. satis is allied to Goth. saths, full, noted above. See Satisfy, Satiate. ¶ It will be observed that assets was originally a phrase, then an adverb, then used adjectively, and lastly employed as a substantive. Of course it is, etymologically, in the singular, like alms, riches, eaves, &c.; but it is doubtful if this etymological fact has ever been distinctly recognised.

ASSEVERATE, to declare seriously, affirm. (Lat.) Bp. Jewel has asseveration, Defence of the Apology, p. 61. Richardson shews that the verb to assever was sometimes used. The verb asseverate is formed, like others in -ate, from the pp. of the Lat. verb.-Lat. asseveratus, pp. of asseverare, to speak in earnest. - Lat. ad, to (which becomes as- before s); and severus, adj., earnest, serious. See Severe. Der. asseverat-ion

ASSIDUOUS, sitting close at, diligent. (Lat.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 310. Dryden has ' asiduous care ; ' tr. of Virgil, Georg. iii. 463. Englished by putting -ous for Lat. -us, as in abstemious, &c. - Lat. assiduus, sitting down to, constant, unremitted. - Lat. assidere, to sit at or near. - Lat. ad, to, near (=as-before s); and sedere, to sit, cog-nate with E. sit. See Sit. Der. assiduous-ly, assiduous-ness; also assidu-i-ty, from Lat. acc. assiduitatem, nom. assiduitas, formed from the adj. assiduus.

ASSIGN, to mark out to one, to allot, &c. (F.,-L.) M. E. assignen, asignen; Rob. of Glouc. p. 502. - O. F. assigner, to assign. - Lat. assignare, to affix a seal to, to appoint, ascribe, attribute, consign. - Lat. ad, to (which becomes as- before s); and signare, to mark. -Lat. signum, a mark. See Sign. Der. assign-able, assign-at-ion, assign-er, assign-ment (spelt assignement, Gower, C. A. ii. 373); assign-ee

(from Law French assigne, pp. of assigner). ASSIMILATE, to make similar to, to become similar to. (Lat.) Bacon has assimilating and assimilateth; Nat. Hist. sect. 899. Sir T. Browne has assimilable and assimilation ; Vulg. Errors, bk. vii. c. 19. § last; bk. iii. c. 21. § 9. Formed, like other verbs in -a'e, from the pp. of the Lat. verb. - Lat. assimilare, also assimulare, to make like.-Lat. ad, to (which becomes as- before s); and similis, like.

See Similar. Dor. assimilat-ion, assimilat-ive. Doublet, assemble. ASSIST, to stand by, to help. (F., -L.) 'Be at our hand, and frendly vs assist; 'Surrey, Virgil, Æn. bk. iv. - F. assister, to assist, defend; Cot. - Lat. assistere, to step to, approach, stand at, help. stand by, assist.-Lat. ad, to (which becomes as- before s); and sistere, to place, to stand, a secondary form from stare, to stand, which is cognate with E. stand. See Stand. Der. assist-ant, adj., Hamlet, i. 3. 3; sb., id. ii. 2. 166; assist-ance, Macbeth, iii. 1. 124.

ASSIZE, (1) a session of a court of justice ; (2) a fixed quantity or dimension. (F., -L.) In mod. E. mostly in the pl. assizes; the use in the second sense is almost obsolete, but in M. E. we read of 'the assise of bread,' &c. It is still, however, preserved in the contracted form size; cf. sizings. See Size. M. E. assise, in both senses. (1) 'For to loke domes and asise;' Rob. of Glouc, 1.430, (a) 'To dom trewleche the assys to the sellere and to the byggere [buyer]; Eng. Guilds, ed. T. Smith, p. 359. [We also find M. E. verb assisen, to appoint; Gower, C. A. i. 181. But the verb is derived from the sb.] -O. F. assis, assise, an assembly of judges; also, a tax, impost; see Burguy, s. v. seair. Properly a pp. of the O. F. verb asseoir, not much used otherwise. - Lat. assidere, to sit at or near, to act as assessor to a judge; pp. assessus. - Lat. ad, to, near (= as- before s); and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit. See Sit. Der. assize, verb, to assess : assiz-er. Doublet, assess, q. v. [†]

ASSOCIATE, a companion. (Lat.) Properly a past participle. Cf. 'vf he intend to be associate with me in blisse; ' Udal, S. Mark, Cf. 'yf he intend to be associate with me in blisse; 'Udal, S. Mark, c. 8; where we should now rather use associated. A mere sb. in Shak. Hamlet, iv. 3. 47.-Lat. associatus, joined with in company; xvii. 237; see my note on the passage, Notes to P. Plowman, p. 390. pp. of associare, to join, unite. - Lat. ad, to (=as- before s); and sociare, to join, associate. - Lat. socius, a companion, lit. a follower. - Lat. sequi, to follow; cf. toga, cloak, from tegere, to cover, procus, a wooer, from precari, to pray; see Peile, Gk. and Lat. Etymology, and ed. p. 188. See Sequence. Der. associate, verb; associat-ion. ASSONANT, adj., applied to a (certain) resemblance of sounds.

ABBONANT, adj., applied to a (certain) resemblance of sounds. (I.at.) [Chiefly used in prosody, esp. in discussing Spanish poetry, in which assonance, or a correspondence of vowel-sounds only, is a marked feature. Thus the words beholding, rosebud, boldly, glowing, broken, are said to be assonant, all having the accented vowel o in common in the penultimate syllable. So, in Spanish, are the words ervelse, times, fuerie, tems.] = Lat. assonantem, acc. of assonans, sounding like; whence also Span. asonante (with one s). Assonans is the pres. pt. of assonare, to respond to. - Lat. ad, to, near (which becomes as- before s); and sonare, to sound. - Lat. sonus, sound. See Sound. Der. assonance.

ASSORT, to sort, dispose, arrange; to be companion with. (F., - Ital., -L.) Not much used formerly. -F. assortir, 'to sort, assort, suit, match, equall; 'Cot. -F. prefix as-, imitated from Lat. as-(the form assumed by ad, to, before s); and sb. sorts, 'sort, manner, form, fashion, kind; 'Cot. Thus assortir is to put together things of like kind. The sb. sorts was introduced in the 16th cent. from Ital. sorta, a sort, kind, species; Brachet. The Ital. sorta is of Lat. origin, but a little difficult to trace. See Sort. Der. assortment (cf. F. assortiment). [*]

ASSUAGE, to soften, allay, abate, subside. (F., -L.) M. E. assuagen, assuagen, assuagen. 'His wrath forto assuage;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 300. - O. F. assuager, assager, to soften, appease, assuage, console; a word of which the Provençal forms are assuasiar, assuasiar. Formed (as if from a Lat. verb assuasiare, to sweeten) from the O. F. prefix a. (Lat. ad), and Lat. suasis, sweet, a word cognate with E. sweet. See Sweet. Der. assuage-ment. Gr In all but the prefix, to assuage is a doublet of to sweeten.

ASSUASIVE, softening, gentle [?]. (Lat.) Pope, in his Ode on St. Cecilia's day, i. 25, has the line: 'Music her soft, assuative voice applies;' and the word has been used also by Johnson and Warton in a similar way; see Todd's Johnson. This queer word seems to have been meant to be connected with the verb to assuage, and to have been confused with persuasive at the same time. It is a mistaken formation, and, if allied to anything, would point to a nonexistent Lat. assuadere, as if from ad and suadere. See Persuasive. The word is to be utterly condemned.

ASSUME, to take to one's self, to appropriate; take for granted. (Lat.) The derived sb. assumption was in use in the 13th century as applied to the Assumption of the Virgin Mary. It is spelt assumeium in the Ancren Riwle, p. 412. The use of the verb is later. It is used by Hall, Hen. VIII, an 1.-Lat. assumere, to take to one's self; pp. assumptus.-Lat. ad, to (which becomes as-before s); and sumere, to take.  $\beta$ . The Lat. sumere is a compound verb, being a contraction of subimere, from sub, under, and emsre, to take, buy. See Curtius, ii. 247; Fick, i. 493. The same root occurs in Bedeem, q. v. Der. assumption, assumptive, assumptive, assumptive-ly.

Q. V. Der. assumption, and assumption, and assumption, and assumption, b. i. pr. 4, l. 330.–0. F. assumption, to make secure, assume, warrant; Burguy, s. v. segur. –0. F. prefix a-(Lat. ad, to); and adj. seür, also spelt segur, secure. – Lat. securus, secure, sure. See Secure and Sure. Der. assumed, assumed, assumed, assumed.

ASTER, the name of a genus of flowers. (Gk.) A botanical name, from Gk.  $d\sigma\tau\eta\rho$ , a star; owing to the star-like shape of the flowers. See Astorisk, Astoriam, Astoroid.

ASTERISK, a little star used in printing, thus *. (Gk.) Spelt asterisque in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – Gk. doreploneos, a little star, also an asterisk *, used for distinguishing fine passages in MSS. (Liddell and Scott). Formed, with dimin. suffix -toxos, from dorep, base of dorthp, a star, a word cognate with E. war. See Star. Ger An asterisk is sometimes called a star.

ASTERISM, a constellation, a cluster of stars. (Gk.) In Drayton, Barons' Wars, b. vi (R.) A coined word, made by adding the Gk. suffix  $-\sigma\mu\omega o$  (E. -ism) to the stem  $d\sigma\tau i\rho$  of the Gk.  $d\sigma\tau n\rho$ , a star. ASTERN, on the stern, behind. (E.) Sir. F. Drake, in The World Encompassed, 1578, has: 'Having left this strait a stern.' It stands for on stern; see abed, afoot, asleep, and other words in which the prefix a stands for an, M. E. form of on.

ASTEROID, a term applied to the minor planets situate between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter. (Gk.) Modern, and astronomical. Properly an adj., signifying 'star-like,' or 'star-shaped.' = Gk.  $d\sigma\tau\epsilon\rho$ econs, star-like. = Gk.  $d\sigma\tau\epsilon\rho$ -, base of  $d\sigma\tau\rho\rho$ , a star (cognate with E. star, q. v.); and eid-os, form, figure, from eideuv, so see (cognate with E. wit, q. v.). Der. asteroid-al.

ASTRMA, a difficulty in breathing. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in the Life of Locke, who suffered from it; p. 22.-Gk.  $\delta\sigma\theta\mu a$ , short-drawn breath, panting. – Gk.  $\delta\delta\zeta\epsilon\nu$ , to breathe out, breathe through the mouth. – Gk.  $\delta\epsilon\nu$ , to breathe. + Goth. waian, to blow. + Skt.  $\nu a$ , to blow. –  $\checkmark$  WÅ, to blow; Curtius, i. 483; Fick, i. 202. From the same root come Lat. uentus, E. wind. Der. asthma: ic, asthmat-ic-al, from Gk. adj.  $\delta\sigma\theta\mu arus \delta a$ .

ASTIR, on the stir. (E.) For on stir. 'The host wes all on steir' = the army was all astir; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, vii. 344. 'Var on steir,' i. e. they were on the move, id. xix. 577. See Stir. ASTONISH, to astound, amaze. (E., modified by F.) Cf. M. E.

ASTONISH, to astonia, amaze. (E., modified by F.) Ci. M. E. astonian, astunian, astonen. 1. The addition of the suffix -ish (as in extinguish) is due to analogy. Rich. quotes 'Be astonyshed, O ye heauens,' from the Bible of 1539, Jerem. ii. 12; and 'astonishment hathe taken me,' from the Geneva Bible, 1540-57, Jerem. viii. 21. It occurs, too, in Holland's Livy, p. 1124, and Holland's Pliny, i. 261; see Trench's Select Glossary. In Webster's Dict. a quotation is given from Sir P. Sidney: 'Musidorus..., had his wits astonished with sorrow;' the date of which is about 1580. 2 The suffix -isk is, in most other words, only added where the derivation is from a French verb ending in -ir, and forming its pres. pt. in -iscani; so that the addition of it in the present case is unauthorised and incorrect. It was probably added merely to give the word a fuller sound, and from some dislike to the form astony, which was the form into which the M. E. astonien had passed, and which occurs in Holland's Livy, p. 50, &c. 3. For like reasons, the word astony was sometimes altered to astonnd, so that astound and astonish are both incorrect variants from the same source. See further under Astound. Der. astonish-ment, astonish-ing.

ASTOUND, to astonish, amaze. (E., modified by F.) Astownd and astonish are both corruptions from the M.E. astonien, astunien, later astony, astoun. 1. Astonish is the older corruption, and occurs in Shakespeare, and as early as 1539 (Bible). Astound is in Milton, Comus, 210, and astounded in the same, P. L. i. 281. It is remarkable that Milton also uses both astonish'd, P. L. i. 266, and astonied, P. L. ix. 890. 2. Thus the final -d in astound is excrescent, like the d in sound, from M. E. soun. 'Verai much astouned' occurs in Udal, Luke, c. 2; which is the pp. of astoun. 'Astoynyn, or brese werkys, quasio, et al. Prompt. Parson a the provided of the state of t were astoned and as hi were dede; St. Margarete, 291, 192. 'If he be slowe and astoned and lache, he lyueth as an asse; 'Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 3. B. The derivation is commonly given from the O. F. estonner (mod. F. étonner), but this alone is inadequate to account either for the ending -ien in the M. E. astonien, or for the peculiar meaning of 'stunned' so often found, and sufficiently obvious in the quotation from St. Margarete, which means: 'the folk that stood around fell down for fear, and lay there as if they were stunned and as if they were dead.' Cf. 'Who with the thund'ring noise of his swift courser's feet Astunn'd the earth;' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 18. It is obvious that the true old form of astonien must needs be the A.S. ástunian, to stun completely; for, though this word is not found in the extant A.S. literature hitherto printed, its component parts occur, viz. the intensive prefix a- and the verb stamian, given in Grein (ii. 490) and in Bosworth, and preserved in the mod. E. stam. Moreover, the A.S. prefix a- answers to mod. G. er-, and the whole word occurs in G. in the form erstaunen, to amaze. C. At the same time, the O. F. estonner has undoubtedly much influenced the word and extended its use and meanings. We conclude that astound stands for an older astoun, another form of astonie or astony, and that the derivation is, as regards form, from A.S. ástunian, to stun or amaze completely, intimately confused with the O.F. estonner, to amaze. D. To continue the tracing of the word further back, we note (1) that ástunian is from á-, prefix, and stunian; see A-, prefix, and Stun. And (2) that O. F. estonner stands for Low Lat. exconare, to thunder out, a form not found, but inferred from the form of the O. F. verb and from the occurrence in classical Latin of attonare, to thunder, amaze, astonish, a compound of ad and tonare, to thunder; see Brachet. Extonare is, similarly, from Lat. ex, out, and tonare, to thunder, a word cognate with E. thunder; See Ex-, prefix, and Thunder. And see Astoniab.

ASTRAL, belonging to the stars; starry. (Lat.) Seldom used. Rich. quotes from Boyle's Works, vol. v. p. 161. – Lat. astralis, belonging to the stars. – Lat. astrum, a star, cognate with E. star. See Star.

ASTRAY, out of the right way. (See Stray.) 'His people goth about astray;' Gower, C. A. iii. 175. 'They go a straye and speake lyes;' Bible, 1539, Ps. lviii. 3. A corruption of on stray (cf. abed, asleep). 'Thair mycht men se mony a steid Fleand on stray;' Barbour's Bruce, 13. 195.

ASTRICTION, a binding or contraction. (Lat.) It occurs in Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 342. The verb to astrict is in Hall, Hen. VI, an. 37; and to astringe in Holland's Plutarch, p. 819.-Lat. acc. astrictionem, from nom. astrictio, a drawing together, contracting. -Lat. astrictus, pp. of astringere, to bind or draw closely together. See Astringe.

ASTRIDE, on the stride. (E.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. ii. ASTRINGE, to draw closely together. (Lat.)

In Holland's Plutarch, p. 819; now almost obsolete; we should say 'acts as an astringent. Astringent is in Holland's Pliny, bk. xxiv. c. 13. - Lat. astringere, pp. astrictus, to bind or draw closely together. - Lat. ad, to, closely (which becomes a- before st); and stringers, to bind closely. See Stringent. Der. astring-ent, astring-enc-y, astriction, q. v. (from pp. astrictus)

ASTROLOGY, the knowledge of the stars. (Gk.) A pretended and exploded science. In Chaucer, Treat. on the Astrolabe, Prol. 1. 70. - Lat. astrologia, used to denote 'astronomy' also. - Gk. άστρολογία, astronomy. - Gk. dorpo-, for dorpor, a star, cognate with E. star, q. v.; and hiryev, to speak about, whence horos, a discourse. Der. astrolog-ic-al, astrolog-ic-al-ly, astrolog-er. ASTRONOMY, the science of the stars. (Gk.) In early use.

M. E. astronomie, Layamon, ii. 598. - O. F. astronomie. - Lat. astronomia. - Gk. dorpovopla. - Gk. dorpo-, for dorpov, a star, cognate with E. star, q. v. ; and répeir, to distribute, dispense, whence Gk. rópos, law. See Nomad. Der. astronom-ic-al, astronom-ic-al-ly, astronom-er.

ASTUTE, crafty, sagacious. (Lat.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -Lat. astutus, crafty, cunning. -Lat. astus, craft, craftiness. Per-haps from an amplified form aks of the root AK, to pierce; Curtius, i. 161. Dor. astute-ly, astute-ness.

ASUNDER, apart. (E.) For on sunder, a form which occurs in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 3909; in l. 116, we have the form o sunder. - A. S. onsundran, adv. 'And lædde hi sylfe onsundran '= and led them apart by themselves; Mark, is. 2. See Sunder. ASYLUM, a place of refuge. (L., -Gk.) 'A sanctuarie, or asylum;' Holland's Livy, p. 7.-Lat. asylum, a sanctuary, place of refuge. -Gk. δαυλον, an asylum; neut. of adj. δαυλοs, safe from refuge. -Gk. δαυλον, an asylum; neut. of adj. δαυλοs, safe from violence, unharmed. - Gk. d-, negative prefix; and σύλη, a right of seizure, συλάω, I despoil an enemy, words akin to Gk. σκύλον, Lat. spolium, and E. spoil. See Curtius, i. 207, ii. 358.

ASYMPTOTE, a line which, though continually approaching a curve, never meets it, (Gk.) Geometrical. Barrow, in his Math. Lectures, lect. 9, has ' asymptotical lines. - Gk. doupararoe, not fall-ing together. - Gk. d-, negative prefix ; our, together (written oup before  $\pi$ ); and  $\pi \tau \omega \tau \delta s$ , falling, apt to fall, a derivative of  $\pi i \pi \tau \epsilon \iota \tau$ , to fall (perf. tense  $\pi \ell \cdot \pi \tau \omega \kappa a$ ). The Gk.  $\pi i \pi \tau \epsilon \iota \tau$  (Dor. a orist  $\ell \cdot \pi \epsilon \tau - \sigma \upsilon$ ), is from the  $\checkmark$  PAT, to fly, to fall. Cf. Skt. pat, to fly, to fall. From the same root are E. find, feather, and Lat. im-pet-us. Curtius, i. 259. Der. asymptot-ic-al.

AT, prep. denoting nearness. (E.) In earliest use. A. S. at, Grein, i. 59. + Icel. at. + Dan. ad. + Swed. d'. + Goth. at. + O. H. G. az (obsolete). + Lat. ad, which enters largely into English. See Ad.

ATHEISM, disbelief in the existence of God. (Gk.) Bacon has an essay 'On Atheism.' Milton has atheist, P.L. i. 495; and atheous, P.R. i. 487. All are coined words from the Gk. 60000, denying the gods, a word introduced into Latin by Cicero in the form atheos. – Gk. á-, neg. prefix; and  $\theta\epsilon\delta s$ , a god; on which difficult word see Curtius, ii. 122. From Gk.  $\delta\theta\epsilon os$  come atheous, athe-ism, athe-ist, athe-ist-ic, athe-ist-ic-al.

ATHIRST, very thirsty. (E.) Athirst, now an adj., is properly a past participle; and the prefix a- was originally of-. The M. E. forms are of thurst, of thyrst, corrupted sometimes to athurst, and sometimes to afurst. See P. Plowman, B. x. 59; King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1120; and the Ancren Riwle, p. 240, where the form is ofthurst. This form is contracted from ofthursted = made exceedingly thirsty. - A.S. of pyrsted, very thirsty, Grein, ii. 321; pp. of of pyrstan. - A.S. of , intensive prefix, signifying 'very;' and pyrsted, pp. of pyrstan, to thirst ; Grein, ii. 614. See Thirst.

ATHLETE, a contender for victory in a contest; a vigorous person. (Gk.) Bacon speaks of the 'art of activity, which is called athletic; Advancement of Learning, ed. Wright, p. 133. We should now say athletics. The use of athlete seems to be later. – Gk.  $d\theta\lambda\eta\tau\eta$ s, a combatant, contender in athletic games. - Gk. dox eiv, to contend. -Gk. addos, a contest, contracted from deddos; addor, the prize of a (e0-) as the E. wed. See Curtius, i. 309. See Wed. Der. athle:-ic, athlet-ics.

ATHWART, across. (See Thwart). Orig. an adverb, as in Shak. Meas. i. 3. 30; later a prep., as in L. L. L. iv. 3.145. Athirt, across, occurs in the Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, l. 169. It stands for on thirt, a translation or accommodation of Icel. um pvert, across. (neuter lowers), transverse, and the A.S. powerh, with the same meaning. A more usual phrase in M. E. is overthwart, as in Chaucer, Kn. Tale. 1133. See Thwart.

ATLAS, a collection of maps. (Gk.) Named after Atlas, a Greek demi-god who was said to bear the world on his shoulders, and whose figure used to be given on the title-page of atlases. Cf. Shak. 3 Hen. VI, v. 1. 36. 'Atlas (gen. 'Atlartos) probably means 'bearer' or 'sustainer,' from the  $\checkmark$  TAL, to bear, sustain, which appears in Gk. τλήναι, to endure, Lat. tollere, to lift, and tolerare, to endure; see Curtius, i. 395, who remarks that in this word there is 'no evidence of any origin for the [initial] vowel but the phonetic.' See Tolerate. Der. Atlantes, in arch., figures of men used instead of columns or pilasters; from the Gk. form for the pl. of Atlas; also Atlantic, the name of the ocean, with reference to Mount Atlas, in the N.W. of Africa.

ATMOSPHERE, the sphere of air round the earth. (Gk.) In Pope's Dunciad, iv. 423. A coined word ; from Gk. aruo-, stem of άτμόs, vapour; and σφαίρα, a sphere. The Gk. άτμόs is cognate with Skt. átman, breath, and G. athem, breath. And see Sphere. Der. atmospher-ic, atmospher-ic-al.

ATOM, a very small particle. (L., - Gk.) Lit. 'indivisible,' i. e. a particle so small that it cannot be divided. Cudworth, in his Intellectual System, p. 26, speaks of atoms, atomists, and ' atomical physiology." Milton has atom, P. L. viii. 18; Shak. has pl. atomies, As You Like It, iii. 2. 245.-[F. atome; Cotgrave.]-Lat. atomus, an atom.-Gk. άτομοι, sb. fem., an indivisible particle; άτομοι, adj., indivisible.-Gk. d-, neg. prefix ; and répreir (aor. érapor), to cut, divide. See Anatomy. Der. atom-ic, atom-ic-al, atom-ist. ATONE, to set at one; to reconcile. (E.) Made up of the two words at and one; so that atone means to 'set at one.' This was a clumsy expedient, so much so as to make the etymology look doubtful; but it can be clearly traced, and there need be no hesitation about it. a. The interesting point is that the old pronunciation of M.E. oon (now written one, and corrupted in pronunciation to wun) is here exactly preserved; and there are at least two other similar instances, viz. in alone (from M. E. al, all, and one), and only (M. E. oonly), etymologically one-ly, but never pronounced wunly in the standard speech. In anon, lit. 'on one,' the -on is pronounced as the prep. 'on, never as anwun. See Anon. B. The use of atone arose from the frequent use of M. E. at oon (also written at on) in the phrases ' be at agree, to reconcile. The easiest way is to begin with the oldest examples, and trace downwards to a later date. 1. 'Heo maden certeyne couenaunt that heo were al at on' = were all agreed; Rob. of Glouc. p. 113. 'Sone they weren at one, with wille at on assent'= they were soon agreed, with will in one concord; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of P. Langtoft, p. 220. 'If gentil men, or othere of hir contree Were wrothe, she wolde bringen hem atoon; 'Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 437. where the two words are run into one in the Ellesmere MS., as printed. They are similarly run together in a much earlier passage: 'Aton he was wip be king;' King Horn, ed. Lumby, 925. 2. Particularly note the following from Tyndal, who seems to have been the inventor of the new phrase. 'Where thou seest bate or strife between person and person, . . leaue nothing vnsought, to set them at one;' Works, p. 193, col. 2. 'One God, one Mediatour, that is to say, aduocate, intercessor, or an atonemaker, between God and man; ' Works, p. 158. 'One mediatour Christ, . . and by that word vnderstand an attonemaker, a peacemaker;' id. p. 431 (The Testament of M. W. Tracie). 'Hauyng more regarde to their olde variaunce then their new atton, 'ment;' Sir T. More, Rich. III, p. 41 c (written in 1513, pr. in 1557). See also his Works, p. 40 f (qu. in Richardson). 'Or els.. reconcile hymself, and make an onement with God; 'Erasmus on the Com-mandments, 1553, fol. 162. 'And lyke as he made the Jewes and the Gentiles at one betwene themselues, euen so he made them both at one with God, that there should be nothing to breake the atonement, but that the thinges in heaven and the thynges in earth, should be ioyned together as it were into one body;' Udal, Ephesians, c. 2. 'Attonement, a louing againe after a breache or falling out ;' Baret, Alvearie, s. v. 'So beene they both at one ;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 29. 8. See also Shak. Rich. II, i. 1. 202; Oth. iv. 1. 244; Ant. ii. 2. 102; Cymb. i. 4. 42; Timon, v. 4. 58; As You Like It, v. 4. 116; Cor. iv. 6. 72; also atomement, Merry Wives, i. 1. 53; 2 Hen. IV, iv. 1. 221; Rich. III, i. 3, 36. Also Ben Jonson, Epicœne, Act iv. sc. 2 (Truewit to La Foole); Beaumont and Fletcher, Span. Curate A. ii. sc. 4; Massinger, Duke of Milan, Act iv. sc. 3 (Pescara); Milton, P. L. iii. 384. Bp. Hall says: 'Ye.. set such discord 'twixt agreeing hearts Which never can be set at onement more;' Sat. iii. 7. And Dryden: 'If not atton'd, yet seemingly at peace;' Aurungzebe, Act iii. To complete the history of the word, more quotations are required from Tyndal, Erasmus, and More, or authors of that time. The word spelling with w is due to confusion between the Icel. pverr came into use somewhere about A.D. 1530. 4. The simple verb onen, to unite, pp. oned, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 7550; see also Prompt. Parv. p. 365. ¶ It is to be added that, strangely enough, the phrase at once was for a long period written as one word, spelt atones, or quite as often attones, attonis, or attonys. See examples in Gloss. to Specimens of English from 1394 to 1579, ed. Skeat. By introducing the sound of w into once (wunce), we have again made at once into two words. Der. atone-ment.

ATROCITY, extreme cruelty. (F.,-L.) The adj. atrocious, an ill-formed word, apparently founded on the F. adj. atroce, he nous, does not appear to have been used till the 18th century. But atrocity is much older, and occurs, spelt atrocyte, in Sir T. More's Works, c. 2 (sic; R.)-F. atrocité, 'atrocity, great cruelty;' Cotgrave.-Lat. acc. atrocitatem, from nom. atrocitas, cruelty. - Lat. atroci-, crude form of atrox, cruel; more lit. raw, uncooked, applied to meat. Root unknown. From the same source, atroci-ous, atroci-ous-ly, atroci-ous-ness.

ATROPHY, a wasting away of the body. (Gk.) Medical. It means lit. 'want of nourishment.' In Evelyn's Memoirs, v. ii. p. 277. Holland writes of 'no benefit of nutriment of meat, which they call in Greek atropha; Pliny, bk. xxii. c. 25. – Gk.  $d\tau popla$ , want of food, hunger, atrophy. – Gk.  $d_r$ , neg. prefix; and  $\tau p d \phi e u$ , to nourish (perf. t.  $\tau \ell - \tau p o \phi - a$ ); no doubt connected with Gk.  $\tau \ell p \pi e u$ , to delight, from  $\sqrt{TARP}$ , to satisfy, satiate, content. See Fick, i. 599; Curtius, i. 276.

ATTACH, to take and hold fast; to apprehend. (F., - Celtic.) M. E. attachen, to take prisoner, arrest, much in use as a law term. Attache tho tyrauntz, apprehend those cruel men; P. Plowman, B. ii. 199.-O. F. attacher, to attach, fasten; a word marked by Brachet as being of unknown origin, as well as the verb détacher, to detach, unfasten, which is obviously from the same root.  $\beta$ . But, as Diez remarks, the root is to be found in the word which appears in English as tack, with the signification of 'peg' or 'small nail;' so that to attach is to fasten with a tack or nail, whilst to detach is to unfasten what has been but loosely held together by such a nail. The prefix is, of course, the O. F. prep. a, to = Lat. ad, so that attacher stands for an older atacher; and in Bartsch's Chrestomathie Française the three forms atachier, atacier, ataquer all occur.  $\gamma$ . The only difficulty is to determine whether the source is Celtic or Old Low German, but the sense determines this. Cf. Breton tach, a nail, tacha, to fasten with a nail; Irish taca, a peg, pin, nail, fastening; Gaelic tacaid, a tack or small nail, a peg, a stab. The cognate Old Low German words are Du. tak, a bough, branch, properly a prong; Dan. takke, a jag, tooth, cog of a wheel, branch or antler of a horn, properly a prong; Swed. tagg, a prong, prickle, point, tooth; cf. also Icel. tak, a hold, grasp, a stitch in the side. 8. All these words are further allied to Icel. taka, to take (whence E. take), Lat. tangere, to touch, attack, prick slightly, the orig. sense being that of puncturing or stabbing, or pricking lightly. See Curtius, i. 269, who acutely remarks that the reason why the Lat. tangers and the Goth. tekan, to touch (as well as all the words hitherto mentioned), begin with the same letter, in opposition to Grimm's law, is simply that an initial s is dropped, and the real root is stag, whence E. stick, as in 'sticking a pig.' The Latin terigi, I touched, is obviously the Goth. taitok, I touched, both being reduplicated perfect tenses. . And when it is once seen that the root is stag, represented in E. both by sting and stick, as well as by the Gk. stigma, we see at once that the fuller form of Irish taca, a peg, appears in the Irish stang, a peg, a pin, and the Gaelic staing, a peg, a cloak-pin. It is curious that the Gothic actually has the compound verb attekan, but only in the sense of 'touch with the hand.' Fick also correctly gives the of STAG for tangere, i. 823. Cf. Skt. tij, to be sharp, where again Benfey remarks, 'cf. A. S. stician, to sting; attach-ment, attach-d (F. p. p.). Doublet, attack. See Tack. ATTACK, to assault. (F., -C.) Rich. remarks that it is not an old word in the language. It occurs in Milton, P. L. vi. 248; Sams. Agon. 1113 .- F. attaquer, explained by Cotgrave as 'to assault, or set on; ' he does not use the word attack. Attaquer was a dialectal F. form of the standard F. attacher, see Brachet. Hence attack and attach are doublets; for the etymology, see Attach. Der. attack, sb.

ATTAIN, to reach to, obtain. (F., - L.) M. E. attainen, atteinen; ' they wenen to atteine to thilke good that thei desiren ; ' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 2, p. 118. - O. F. ateindre, ataindre, to reach to, attain. - Lat. attingere, to touch upon, to attain. - Lat. ad, to (= atbefore t); and tangere, to touch. See Tangent. Der. attain-able. attain-able-ness, attain-ment.

ATTAINT, to convict. (F., -L.) The similarity in sound between attaint and taint has led, probably, to some false law; see the remarks about it in Blount's Law Dictionary. But etymologically, and without regard to imported senses, to attaint is to convict, and at tainder is conviction. As a fact, attaint is a verb that has been made out of a past participle, like convict, and abbreviate, and all verbs in technical sense in law. The Prompt. Parv. has : ' Alleyntyn, convinco;' p. 16. Palsgrave even has 'I atteynt, I hyt or touche a thyng,' i. e. attain it. In the 14th century, we find M. E. atteynt, atteint, ateynt in the sense of 'convicted,' and the verb atteyn in the sense of 'convict.' 'And justice of the lond of falsnes was atteynt' = and the justice administered in the land was convicted of falseness; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 246. 'To reprove tham at the last day, and to attegn tham,' i. e. to convict them; Hampole, Prick of Conscience, 5331. Cf. P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 162. See Attain. Der. attainder, from O. F. ateindre, F. atteindre, to attain, used substantively; see above.

ATTAR OF ROSES, perfumed oil of roses. (Arabic). Often called, less correctly, 'otto of roses.' From Arab. 'ir, perfume ; from 'atira, he smelt sweetly. See Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1014.

ATTEMPER, to temper, qualify. (F., -L.) Now little used. M. E. attempren, atempren. 'Attemprith the lusty houres of the fyrste somer sessoun;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. met. 2, p. 8.-O. F. atemprer, to modify. = O.F. a, to (Lat. ad); and temprer, to temper. -Lat. temperare, to moderate, control. See Temper.

ATTEMPT, to try, endeavour.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  'That might attempt his fansie by request ;' Surrey, tr. of Æneid, bk. iv. [Not in Gower, C. A. i. 287.]-O. F. atempter, to undertake; Roquefort. The simple verb tempter was also spelt tenter, tanter, tempteir; Burguy. Hence atempter is a corruption of an older form atenter. - Lat. attentare, to attempt. - Lat. ad (becoming at-before t); and tentare, to try, endeavour; so that 'attempt' is to 'try at.' Tentare is a frequentative of tendere, to stretch, and means 'to stretch repeatedly till it fits; ' Curtius, i. 268. Tendere has an inserted or excrescent d, so very common after n, so that the root is Lat. ten, Aryan tan. Cf. Gk. reireir, to stretch, roros, strain, tension, whence E. tone; and from the same root we have E. thin and thunder. Cf Skt. tan, to stretch. - V TAN, to stretch; Curtius, i. 268; Fick, i. 591. See Thin. Der. attempt, sb.

ATTEND, to wait upon, to heed. (F., -L.) 'The Carthage lords did on the quene attend; 'Surrey, Virgil, Æn. b iv. The sbs. attencioun and attendaunce occur in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 1, p. 29; C. T. 6514. - O. F. atendre, to wait. - Lat. attendere, pp. attentus, to stretch towards, think upon, give heed to. - V TAN, to stretch. See Attempt, and Thin. Der. attend-ance, attend-ant; and, from Lat. pp. attentus, we have attent, adj. (2 Chron. vi. 40, vii. 15), attent-ion, attent-ive, attent-ive-ly, attent-ive-ness.

ATTENUATE, to make thin. (Lat.) It occurs in Elyot, Castel of Health, bk. ii. c. 7; Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 299. Formed, like other words in -ate, from a past participle. - Lat. attenuatus, thin, pp. of altenuare, to make thin. - Lat. ad (-at. before i); and tenuare, to make thin. - Lat. tenuis, thin. - I TAN, to stretch. See Attempt, and Thin. Der. attenuat-ion.

ATTEST, to bear witness to. (Lat.) In Shak. Hen. V, iii. 1. 22. - Lat. attestari, to bear witness to; pp. attestatus. - Lat. ad (=a'before i); and testari, to be witness. Lat. testis, a witness. See Testify. Der. attest-at-ion. ATTIC, a low-built top story of a house, or a room in the same.

(Gk.) 'A term in architecture, comprehending the whole of a plain or decorated parapet wall, terminating the upper part of the façade of an edifice. The derivation of the word is uncertain. It appears to have been a generally received opinion that the word was derived from the circumstances of edifices in Attica being built after this manner; 'Eng. Cyclopædia, s. v. 'Attick, in arch., a kind of order, after the manner of the city of Athens; in our buildings, a small order placed upon another that is much greater;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - Gk. 'Arrino's, Attic, Athenian, See Curtius, ii. 321. (3) The attique. an attic, similarly coincides with F. Attique, Attic.

ATTIRE, apparel, dress; vb., to adorn, dress. (F., - L. and G.) In early use. a. The sb. is M. E. atyr, atir (wi h one t), and is later (?) than the verb. 'Mid his fourti cnihtes and hire hors and hire atyr' - with his forty knights and their horses and their apparel. In William of Paleme, l. 1725, it is spelt ir; in l. 1174, it is air; so again, we have 'in no gay tyr; 'Alexander, frag. B. 883.  $\beta$ . The verb is M. E. atyren, airen (mostly with one t). 'Hii... newe knightes made and armede and attired hem' = they made new knights and armed and equipped them; Rob. of Glouc. p. 547. The sb. does not appear in French, but only the verb -O. F. atirer, to adom; not in Burguy, but Roquefort has: 'Attiré, orné, ajusté, paré, decoré;' also : 'Attirer, atirier, attirer, ajuster, convenir, accorder, omer, dé-corer, parer, préparer, disposer, régler.' 'L'abbé ne doit enseignier, ne attirier [appoint?], ne commander contre le commandement de Nostre Seigneur ;' Règle de Seint Benoît ; chap. 2. - O. F. a-, prefix (Lat. ad); and a sb. tire, a row (cf. Prov. tieira, a row) which is to be considered as quite distinct from the common F. tirer, to draw. B. Sce further in Errata; I now withdraw my statement that the source of O. F. atirer is the Low G. sb. tir, glory, amply -ate. It is merely the past participle of the verb to attain, used in a vouched for by the Old Saxon tir, glory, tirliko, honourably, gloriously, the Icel. tirr, glory, renown, fame, praise (a very common word), and the well-known A. S. tir, glory, honour, splendor, which was a word in open word in common use, and forming numerous compounds; see Grein, ii. 534, 535. The true source of this O. F. sb. tire is seen in O. H. G. ziarf, mod. G. zier, ornament. [The rest of this article 1 now withdraw; see Errata.] O. Now the verb atirer and only the set of the all traces of it have so utterly died out in French, and this too so long ago, that we can hardly suppose otherwise than that the O.F. verb atirer was really formed in England, and that the particular Low German dialect which furnished the word tir was, in fact, ENGLISH. I regard the M. E. atir or atyr, attire (accented on the second syllable, and pronounced ateer), as nothing but a Norman adaptation of the A.S. tir, splendor, with a new sense of 'splendor of dress.' See Koch, iii. 157. D. The most remarkable point is that this change of meaning actually took place also in O. H. German. The cognate word to A.S. tir is the O.H.G. ziari, M. H. G. ziere, mod. G. zier, ornament, grace, honour, whence the G. verb zieren, 'to adom, set off, decorate, grace, trim up, embellish, garnish, attire; 'Flügel's Germ. Dict. E. Moreover, as the prefix a- was an unnecessary F. addition, we need not wonder that it was often thrown off in English, as in the well-known text : 'she painted her face, and tired her head ; 2 Kings, ix. 30. The sb. tire, a head-dress, is very common in the Bible (Isaiah iii. 18; Ezek. xxiv. 17, 23; Judith, x. 3, xvi. 8), and is nothing but the A.S. tir, which some have most absurdly connected with the Persian tiara. Cotgrave explains the F. attiffers by ' attires, or tires, dressings, trickings, attirals." F. The A.S. tir, glory, is in fact, an extremely old word, connected with the A.S. adj. In fact, an extremely old word, connected with the A.S. adj. torht, bright, shining, which is undoubtedly connected with the Gk.  $\delta \epsilon \rho wopau$ , I see, and the Skt. drig, to see; Curtius, i. 164; Fick, i. 618; Benfey's Skt. Dict. p. 414. These words are from  $\checkmark$  DARK, to see, but A. S. tir goes back to the older  $\checkmark$  DAR, from which  $\checkmark$  DARK, is but a secondary formation. The O.F. atour, apparel, some-times confused with attire, is quite a different word; see Brachet. [\*] ATTITUDE, position, posture. (Ital., -L.) "Tis the business of a pointer in bit choice of attinuity to forware the affect and here.

of a painter in his choice of attitudes to foresee the effect and harmony of the lights and shadows;' Dryden, Dufresnoy, sect. 4. This, being a word connected with the painter's art, came from Italy. - Ital. attitudine, aptness, skill, attitude. - Lat. ap:itudinem, acc. of aptitudo, aptitude. Thus attitude is a doublet of aptitude. See Apt. Italian assimilates pt into tt, dm to mm, &c. Der. attitud-in-al, attitud-in-ise

ATTORNEY, an agent who acts in the 'turn' of another. (F., -L.) M. E. attourneie, aturneye. 'Atturneye, suffectus, attornatus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 17. 'Allourneis in cuntre thei geten silver for noht;' Polit. Songs, p. 339. - O. F. atorne, pp. of acorner, to direct, turn, prepare, arrange or transact business. - Q. F. a, to (Lat. ad); and torner, to turn. - Lat. tornare, to turn, esp. to turn in a lathe. See Turn. Der. attorney-ship

ATTRACT, to draw to, allure. (Lat.) Used by Grafton, Rich. III, an. 2. Formed, like convict and some others, from a past participle. - Lat. attractus, pp. of attrahere, to draw to, attract. - Lat. ad (= at- before t); and trahere, to draw. See Trace. Der. attract-able, attract-ib-il-it-y, attract-ion, attract-ive, attract-ive-ly, attract-ive-ness. ATTRIBUTE, to assign or impute. (Lat.) Formed, like attract, from a past participle. Yet the verb to attribute seems to have been in use before the sb. attribute, contrary to what might have been expected. The sb. is in Shak. Merch. iv. 1. 191; the verb in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1121 d. - Lat. attributus, pp. of attribuere, to assign. - Lat. ad, to ( = at- before 1); and tributere, to give, bestow. See Tribute. Der. attribute, sb., attribut-able, attribution, attribut-ive ATTRITION, a wearing by friction. (F., -L.) Formerly in use in a theological sense, as expressing sorrow for sin without shrift; after shrift, such sorrow became contrition; see Tyndal, Works, p. 148, col. 2. [Perhaps from Latin directly.] - F. attrition, 'a rubbing, fretting, wearing; Cotgrave. - Lat. acc. attritionent, from nom. attritio, a rubbing, wearing away. - Lat. attritus, rubbed away, pp. of atterere. - Lat. ad (= at- before i); and terere, to rub. Cf. Gk. reipeuv, to rub.

- V TAR, to bore; Curtius, i. 274. ATTUNE, to make to harmonise, put in tune. (Hybrid.) A coined word. In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 7. Made by prefixing Lat. ad (which in composition becomes at before t) to the sb. tune, so that attune is to 'bring to a like tune or tone.' See Tune. AUBURN, reddish brown. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) M. E. auburne, auburne. 'Auburne coloure, citrinus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 17. Thus the old sense was 'citron-coloured' or light yellow. The modern meaning was probably due to some confusion in the popular mind with the word brown; indeed, Hall, in his Satires, bk. iii. Sat. 5, speaks of 'abron locks,' which looks like an attempt to 'improve'

we find in French the closely related aubier, sap-wood, inner bark of trees, and (in Cotgrave) aubourt, 'a kind of tree tearmed in Latin alburnus.'] - Ital. alburno, of which one of the old meanings, given by Florio, is 'that whitish colour of women's hair called an alburn or aburn colour.' [The change in spelling from alb- to aub- occurs again in the F. aube, meaning the clerical vestment called an 'alb,' from Low Lat. alba, a white garment.] - Low Lat. alburnus, whitish, light-coloured; Ducange. Cf. Lat. alburnum, the sap-wood, or inner bark of trees (Pliny). - Lat. albus, white. See Alb.

AUCTION, a public sale to the highest bidder. (Lat.) A 'sale by auction ' is a sale by ' increase of price,' till the article is knocked down to the highest bidder. Auction occurs in Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 119. – Lat. auctionem, acc. of auctio, a sale by auction, lit. an 'increase.' - Lat. auctus, pp. of augere, to increase; cognate with A. S. écan, to eke. See Eke. Der. auction-ser.

AUDACIOUS, bold, impudent. (F.,-L.) Ben Jonson has 'audacious ornaments;' The Silent Woman, A. ii. sc. 3. Bacon has audacity, Nat. Hist. sect. 943. - F. audacieus, 'bold, stout, hardy, ... audacious,' &c.; Cot. Formed as if from a Lat. form audaciosus, which again is from Lat. audaci-, crude form of audax, bold, daring. - Lat. audere, to be bold, to dare. Root uncertain. Der. audacious-ly, audacious-ness; also audacity, from Lat. acc. audacitatem, nom. audacitas, boldness.

AUDIENCE, hearing, an assembly of listeners. (F.,-L.) Īn Chaucer, C. T. 5093 ; and tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 7, p. 59. Sir T. More has audible, Works, p. 1259 c. - F. audience, 'an audience or hearing ; Cot. - Lat. audientia, attention, hearing. - Lat. audiente of hearing. tus, to hear; cf. Lat. auris, the ear. + Gk. diw, I hear, perceive; cf. Gk. obs, the ear. Cf. Skt. av, to be pleased. -  $\checkmark$  AW, to be satisfied with; Curtius, i. 482; Fick, i. 501. Der. From Lat. audire, to hear, we have also audi-ble, audi-ble-ness, audi-bly. From Lat. Audite, auditus, we have audit-or (spelt auditour in Gower, C. A. ii. 191), audit-or-y, audit-or-ship. I should suppose audit to be from the sb. auditus, hearing, but in Webster's Dict. it is said to have arisen from the use of the 3rd pers. sing. pres. tense, audit, he hears, attends. AUGER, a centre-bit, a tool for boring holes. (E.) 'An augoure, terebrum;' Levins, 222. 38. A corruption of nauger. Like adder, and some other words, it has lost an initial n. It is spelt nauger in Wright's Vol. of Vocabularies, 1st Series, p. 170. In Halliwell's Dict. we find : 'Navegor, an auger, a carpenter's tool. This word occurs in an inventory dated A. D. 1301, and in Nominale MS.' – A. S. nafegár, an auger, ' foratorium telum, terebellum; ' Ælfric's Glossary (Bosworth). It means, literally, a nave-piercer, being used for boring the hole in the centre of a wheel for the axle to pass through. - A. S. nafu, nafa, the nave of a wheel (see Nave); and gár, a piercer, that which gores (see Gore). + O. H. G. napag'r, an auger; from O. H. G. napa, nave, and ger, a spear-point. ¶ The Du. avegaar, an auger, has lost the initial n like English, being derived from naaf, the nave of a wheel, and an old word gaar, a spear-point (A. S. gár), now obsolete except in as far as it is represented by geer, a gore. But the Du, also has the word naafboor, an auger, in which the n is preserved, the derivation being from naaf, nave, and boren, to bore. Cf. Iccl. nafarr. AUGHT, a whit, anything. (E.) Very variously spelt in M. E., which has awint, eawint, eawit, ewt, ant, aght, aught, out, ought, out, oht, oght. 'Yif he awiht delan wule' = if he will give aught ; O. Eng. Homilies, p. 103. Aught is for 'a whit,' and 'ought' is for 'o whit,' where o, like a, is a M. E. form of one. - A. S. awiht, aught, Grein, i. 48. - A. S. á, short for án, one; and wiht, a wight, creature, thing, whit. See Whit.

AUGMENT, to increase. (F., - L.) 'My sorowes to augment; Remedie of Love (15th cent.), anon. poem in old editions of Chaucer's Works, st. 13. [Perhaps directly from Latin.] - F. augmenter, 'to augment, increase; ' Cot. - Lat. augmentare, to enlarge, pp. augmentatus. - Lat. augmentum, an increase, augment. - Lat. augere, to increase; with suffix -mentum. See Auction. Der. augment-able, augment-at-ion, augment-at-ive. The sb. augment is (etymologically) older than the verb, as seen above.

AUGUR, a soothsayer, a diviner by the flight and cries of birds. (Lat.) Gower has augur, C. A. ii. 82. Chaucer has augurie, Troil. and Cress. b. v. l. 380. - Lat. augur, a priest at Rome, who foretold events, and interpreted the will of the gods from the flight and singing of birds. Hence the attempt to derive augur from auis, a bird; but this is not quite clear. If it be right, the etym. is from auis, a bird, and -gur, telling, 'gur being connected with garries, garrulus, and the Skt. gar or gri, to shout;' Max Müller, Lect. on Science of Lang. ii. 266 (8th ed.). Fick divides the word aug-ur, and makes it mean 'assistant,' or 'helper,' from ang-ere, to increase, furnish; ii. 3. Der. augur-y (Lat. augur-ium), augur-al, augur-ship; also in-augur-ate, q. v. And see Auspice. [+] AUGUST', adj., venerable. (Lat.) Dryden, Virgil, Æn. b. i, 1.825, the spelling. The spelling with u shews that the word passed AUGUST', adj., venerable. (Lat.) Dryden, Virgil, Æn. b. i, 1.825, 'French, though the precise form auburn is not found. [Yet has: 'August in visage, and serenely bright.' - Lat. augustus, honoured, venerable .= Lat. augere, to increase, extol, magnify, promote to honour. See Eke. Der. August, the 8th month, named after Augustus (i.e. the honoured) Cæsar; August-an, august-ly, august-ness.

AUNT, a father's or mother's sister. (F., -L.) M. E. aunte, Rob. of Glouc. p. 37.-O. F. ante (corrupted to tante in mod. F.).-Lat. amila, a father's sister. Cf. Icel. amma, a grandmother, O. H. G. ammá, mother, mamma; the mod. G. amme means 'nurse.' ¶ For the change of m to n before i, see Ant. [+]

AUREATE, golden. (Lat.) Formerly aureat, a word common in some of the older Scotch poets. 'The aureat fanys,' the golden streamers; G. Douglas, Prol. to Æn. bk. xii. l. 47.-Low Lat. aureatus, golden; a corrupted form. - Lat. auratus, gilded, pp. of aurare, to gild, a verb not in use. - Lat. aurum, gold; old form, ausum. Probably named from its bright colour; from  $\checkmark$  US, to burn; cf. Skt. ush, to burn, Lat. urere, to burn. Fick, i. 512; Benfey, Skt. Dict. p. 132. Der. From Lat. aurum we have aur-elia, the gold-coloured chrysalis of an insect; aur-e-ola, aur-e-ole, the halo of golden glory in paintings; aw-ic, golden; aw-i-ferous, gold-produc-ing, from Lat. ferre, to produce, cognate with E. bear. [†] AURICULAR, told in the ear, secret. (Lat.) Well known in AURICULAR, told in the ear, secret. (Lat.) Well known in the phrase 'awriewlar confession.' Udal speaks of it, Reuel. of St. John, c. 21; and Grafton, K. John, an. 14; cf. Shak. K. Lear, i. 2. 99. - Low Lat. auricularis, in the phr. auricularis confessio, secret con-fession. - Lat. auricula, the lobe of the ear; dimin. formed by adding - (Aryan suffix -ka) and -ul- (dimin. suffix) to the stem auri- of Lat. auris, the car. See Ear. Der. From Lat. auricula we have auricle, the outer ear; pl. auricles, two ear-like cavities of the heart; auricula, the 'bear's ear,' a kind of primrose, named from the shape of its leaves; auricul-ar, auricul-ar-ly, auricul-ate. From Lat. auris we have auri-form, aur-ist.

AURORA, the dawn. (Lat.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 1. 142. - Lat. awrora, the dawn, the goddess of the dawn; which stands for an older form ausosa. + Gk. nos, Æolic abas, Attic las, dawn; abpior, morrow. + Skt. ushdid, dawn; ushda, shining; from ush, to burn. - VUS, to burn. Curtius, i. 498; Fick, i. 32. Cf. Aurora-borealis, i. e. northern dawn or dawn-like halo; from Lat. Boreas, the North wind.

AUSCULTATION, a listening. (Lat.) Modern; chiefly medical, applied to the use of the stethoscope. - Lat. auscultationem, acc. of auscultatio, a listening. - Lat. auscultatus, pp. of auscultare, to listen.  $\beta$ . A contracted form for ausiculitare, a frequentative form from ausicula, old form of auricula, dimin. of auris, the ear. See Auricular.

AUSPICE, favour, patronage. (F., -L.) Used by Dryden in the sense of 'patronage;' Annus Mirabilis, st. 288. Shak. has auspicious, Temp. i. 2. 182; v. 314. - F. auspice, 'a sign, token . . of things by the flight of birds ; also, fortune, lucke, or a luckie beginning of matters;' Cot. - Lat. auspicium, a watching of birds for the purpose of augury. A contraction of auispicium. - Lat. aui-, stem of axis, a bird; and spicere, more usually specere, to spy, look into, cognate with E. spy. See Aviary and Spy. Der. pl. auspices; and (from Lat. auspicium), auspici-ous, auspici-ous-ly, auspici-ous-ness. AUSTERE, harsh, rough, severe. (F., -L., -Gk.) In early use. 'He was fulle austere;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 54.-O. F. austere, which Cotgrave explains by 'austere, severe, stern,' &c. -Lat. austerus, harsh, tart, sour to the taste; also, harsh, severe, rigorous. - Gk. abornpos, making the tongue dry, harsh, bitter. - Gk. abos, dry, withered, parched; aver, to parch, dry. Curtius, i. 490, shews that the breathing is an aspirate, and that the word is related to A. S. seár, dry, E. sere, dry, rather than to the root us, to burn. See Soro. Dor. austere-ly, austere-ness, auster-i-ty.

AUSTRAL, southern. (Lat.; or F.,-L.) The use of Lat. Auster for the South wind occurs in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 3, p. 39. The adj. austral does not appear to be used till late times. [Perhaps directly from Latin.] - F. australe, southerly; Cot. -Lat. Australis, southerly. - Lat. Auster, the South wind. It probably meant 'burning,' from the VUS, to burn. See Aurora. Der. Austral-ia, Austral-ian, Austral-asia (from Asia), Austral-asian.

AUTHENTIC, original, genuine. (F., -L., -Gk.) In early use. M. E. autentik, autentique, auctentyke. Spelt auctentyke in Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 7115 .- O. F. autentique, auctentique, later authentique, which is the form in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'authen-tick, authenticall, of good authority;' the English and F. words having been alike modified by reference to the original Greek.-Lat. anthenticus, original, written by the author's own hand. - Gk. abdevrenós, authentic, vouched for, warranted. - Gk. avdérrys, one who does things with his own hand; of uncertain origin. Perhaps and air-os, himself, before an aspirate; and irr-= sant- = asant, being, existing, pres. part. from &AS, to be. Der. authentic-al, authentical-ly, authentic-ate, authentic-at-ion, authentic-i-ty.

AUTHOR, the originator of a book. (Lat.) M. E. autor, autour, have been used in early French; but we find the O. F. derivative autoritet, whence was derived the M. E. autorite, authority, Ancren Riwle, p. 78.]-Lat. auctor, an originator, lit. 'one who makes a thing to grow.'-Lat. augere, to make to grow. See Auction. Der. author-ess, author-ship, author-i-ty, author-i-tat-ive, author-i-tat-ive-ly, author-ise (spelt auctorise in Gower, C. A. iii. 134); author-is-at-ion. AUTOBIOGRAPHY, a life of a man written by himself. (Gk.) Modern. Made by prefixing auto-, from Gk. auro-, stem of auros, self, to biography, q. v. Der. autobiograph-ic, autobiograph-ic-al, autobiograph-er.

AUTOCRACY, self-derived power, absolute and despotic government by one man. (Gk.) Spelt autocrasy in South's Sermons, vol. viii. ser. 10. - Gk. auronpáreia, absolute government. - Gk. auro-, base of abros, self; and apáros, strength, might, from apartis, strong, cognate with E. hard; and derived, according to Curtius, i. 189, from / KAR, to make, create. Der. autocrat (Gk. abroxpárup), autocrat-ic-al

AUTOGRAPH, something in one's own handwriting. (F.,-Gk.) Used by Anthony à Wood to denote an original MS. ; see the quotation in Richardson from his Athenæ Oxonienses. - F. autographe, written with his own hand; ' Cot. - Gk. airoypaqos, written with one's own hand ; auróypapor, an original. - Gk. auro-, stem of aurós, self; and ypaquer, to write. Der. autograph-ic, autograph-y.

AUTOMATON, a self-moving machine. (Gk.) In Boyle's Works, vol. v. p. 251. Browne, in his Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 18, § 1. uses the adj. automatous. - Gk. autoparor, neut. of autoparos, selfmoving. - Gk. airo-, stem of airós, self; and a stem par-, which appears in par-eve, I seek after, strive to do, and in the Skt. mata, desired, pp. of man, to think; see Benfey, s. v. man. - & MAN, to think. See Mean, verb. Der. pl. automatons or automata; automatic, automat-ic-al, automat-ic-al-ly.

AUTONOMY, self-government. (Gk.) Modern. - Gk. auroropúa, independence. - Gk. abróropos, free, living by one's own laws. - Gk. abro-, stem of abros, self; and νέμομαι. I sway, middle voice of νέμω, I distribute; whence E. nomad. See Nomad. Der. autonomous, from Gk. autóvopos.

AUTOPSY, personal inspection. (Gk.) Used by Ray, On the Creation; and by Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 160 (R.)-Gk. auropia, a seeing with one's own eyes. - Gk. auro-, stem of auros, self; and dyie, sight, from Gk.  $\checkmark$  OII, to see, Aryan  $\checkmark$  AK, to see; Fick, i. 473. Der. autoptic-al; see Optic. AUTUMIN, the harvest time of the year. (Lat.) Spelt autumpne in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. met. 2, l. 118. [It seems to have been taken from Latin immediately.]-Lat. autumnus, auctumnus, autumn. By some connected with augere (pp. auctus), to increase, as being the season of produce. Der. autumn-al.

AUXILIARY, ad., helping; sb., a helper. (Lat.) Holland, Livy, p. 433, speaks of 'auxiliaris or aid soldiers lightly armed.'-Holland. Lat. auxiliarius, auxiliaris, assisting, aiding. - Lat. auxilium, help, assistance. - Lat. augers, to increase. See Austion.

AVAIL, to be of value or use.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$  M. E. auailen (u for v). 'Awaylyn or profytyn ;' Prompt. Parv. p. 17. Hampole has availes, Pricke of Conscience, l. 3586. The compound verb was not used in the French of the continent; it was made by prefixing the O.F. a (=Lat. ad, to) to the O. F. valoir, valer, to be of use. - Lat. ualere, to be strong. - WAL, to be strong; Fick, i. 777. Cf. Skt. bala, strength, balin, strong. Der. avail-able, avail-abl-y. The simple form appears in valiant, q. v. AVALANCHE, a fall of snow. (F.,-L.) Modern. In Coleridge's Hymn in the Vale of Chamouni, and in Byron's Manfred, Act i. sc. 2. - F. avalanche, a descent of snow into the valley; given by Cotgrave in the form avallanche, 'a great falling or sinking down, as of earth, &c.'-F. avaler, which in mod. F. means 'to swallow,' but Cotgrave also gives, s. v. avaller, the senses 'to let, put, cast, lay, fell down, to let fall down.'-F. aval, downward; common in O. F. as opposed to amont, upward (Lat. ad montem, towards the hill).-O. F. a val, from Lat. ad uallem, towards the valley; hence, downward. See Valley. [†]

AVARICE, greediness after wealth. (F., -L.) M. E. awarice (u as v); used by Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 5, p. 45; Wyclif, I Kings, viii. 3. - O. F. avarisce, avarice. - Lat. avaritia, avarice. - Lat. auarus, greedy; cf. Lat. auidus, greedy. - Lat. auere, to wish, desire. Curtius, i. 482, hesitates about this connection with Lat. auere; see Fick, ii. 27. If it be correct, there is a further connection with Skt. av, to be pleased, to desire; cf. also Gk. dtew, to regard, perceive. - AW, to be pleased, desire, regard. Der. avarici-ous, avaricious-ly, avarici-ous-ness.

AVAST, hold fast, stop. (Dutch.) It occurs in Poor Jack, a sea-song by C. Dibdin, died A. D. 1814. Like many sea-terms, it is mere Dutch. – Du. houd vast, hold fast. Houd (short form hou) is the imp. auc:or, auctour; Chaucer, C. T. 9017. [The word does not seem to s. of houden, cognate with E. hold. Vast is cognate with E. fast. [+]

AVATAR, the descent of a Hindu deity in an incarnate form.  $\overset{\bullet}{\overset{\bullet}{\overset{\bullet}{\overset{\bullet}{\overset{\bullet}}}}}$  The Low Lat. averium was also spelt avere and aver, in accordance Sanskrit.) Modern. An English modification of Skt. avatúra, with the French. Also note, that the O. F. aver was so particularly (Sanskrit.) descent; which stands for ava-:ri-a, where ava means ' down,' tri is 'to pass over,' and -a is a suffix.

AVAUNT, begone! (F., -L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, i. 3. 90, &c. Shortened from the F. phrase en avant, forward ! on ! march ! The F. avant is from Lat. ab ante. See Advance.

AVE, hail! (Lat.) As mostly used, it is short for Ave, Maria, i.e. hail, Mary! alluding to St. Luke, i. 28, where the Vulgate version has: 'Ave gratia plena.' Spenser Englishes the phrase by Ave-Mary, F. Q. i. 1. 35. - Lat. aue 1 hail 1 imp. sing. of auere, which perhaps had the sense to be propitious.' Cf. Skt. av, to be pleased. - AW, to be pleased. See Curtius, i. 482.

AVENGE, to take vengeance for an injury. (F.,-L.) • This sinne of ire . . . is wicked will to be avenged by word or by dede ; Chancer, Pers. Tale, De Ira. - O. F. avengier, to avenge. - O. F. a, prefix (Lat. ad, to); and vengier, to revenge, take vengeance. - Lat. windicare, to lay claim to; also, to punish, revenge. An older spelling is wendicare, which is perhaps connected with wenia, leave, pardon, remission: see Peile's Introd. to Gk. and Lat. Etymology, and ed., p. 281. If so, I suppose vendicare to have meant 'to appoint the terms of pardon,' hence, to punish. The Lat. uenia is connected with Skt. van, to ask; Fick, i. 208. Dicare is the frequentative of dicere, to say; see Vengeance and Diction. Der. aveng-er.

AVENUE, an approach, esp. an alley shaded by trees forming The approach to a house.  $(F_{..}, =L)$  Spelt advenue in Holland's Livy, p. 413, but avenue at p. 657 (R.) = F. avenue, also spelt advenue by Cotgrave, and explained by 'an access, passage, or entry into a place.' It is the fem, form of the pp. of the verb avenue to ' advenir (Cotgrave), used in the original sense of 'to come to.' - Lat. advenire, to come to. - Lat. ad; and venire, to come, cognate with E. come, q. v.

AVER, to affirm to be true. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Cymb. v. 5. 203. - F. averer, ' to aver, avouch, verifie, witness; ' Cotgrave. - Low Let. averare, adverare, to prove a thing to be true; Ducange. A coined word, from Lat. ad, prep. to, and verum, truth, a true thing, neut. of verus, true. See Vority. Der. aver-ment; in Blackstone, Comment. b. iv. c. 26.

AVERAGE, a proportionate amount. (F., -L.) a. The modern sense is 'an amount estimated as a mean proportion of a number of different amounts.' This has been easily developed out of an older and original meaning, viz. a proportionate contribution rendered by a tenant to the lord of the manor for the service of carrying wheat, turf, &c.  $\beta$ . It was used, originally, solely with reference to the employment of korses and carts. Later, it meant 'a charge for carri-age,' according to the weight and trouble taken. Richardson quotes from Spelman to the effect that average meant 'a portion of work done by working beasts (averiis) yoked in carriages or otherwise; also, a charge upon carriage. [His odd translation of averiis by 'working beasts' is due to an odd notion of connecting the Low Lat. averium with Lat. opera, work 1] Y. Average is not in early use in E. literature; it occurs in Adam Smith, Wealth of Nations, bk. i. c. s. In Blount's Law Dict. (A. D. 1691), we find : 'Average (Lat. averagium, from averia, i. e. cattle) signifies service which the tenant owes the king or other lord, by horse or ox, or by carriage with either; for in ancient charters of priviledges, we find quietum esse de averagiis . . . In the Register of the Abby of Peterborough (in Bibl. Cotton.) it is thus explicated ; Averagium, hoc est quod nativi deberent ex antiqua servitute ducere bladum [to carry wheat] annuatim per unum diem de Pillesgate apud Burgum, vel cariare turbas [to carry turf] de marisco ad manerium de Pillesgate cum carectis et equis suis; Anno 32 Hen. 8, c. 14; and 1 Jacob. cap. 32.' He adds: 'it is used for a contribution that merchants and others do proportionably make towards their losses, who have their goods cast into the sea for the safeguard of the ship, or of the goods and lives of them in the ship, in time of tempest. And it is so called, because it is proportioned after the rate of every man's average, or goods carried. In this last sence, it is also used in the Statute 14 Car. 2, cap. 27. B. The development of senses is easy, viz. (1) a contribution towards the work of carrying the lord's wheat; (2) a charge for carriage; (3) a contribution towards loss of things carried. -Low Lat. averagium, 'vecturse onus quod tenens domino exsolvit cum averiis, seu bobus, equis, plaustris, et curribus; (2) detrimentum quod in vectura mercibus accidit. His adduntur vecturæ sumptus et necessariæ aliæ impensæ;' Ducange. - Low Lat. averium, 'omnia quæ quis possidet, F. avoir, fortune; (1) pecunia; (2) equi, oves, jumenta, cæteraque animalia quæ agriculturæ inserviunt' &c.; Ducange.-O.F. aver, also avoir, (1) to have; (2) as sb., goods, possessions, cattle. [For, in this case, the Low Lat. averium is nothing but the O. F. aver turned into a Latin word, with the suffix -ium added to make it a neuter collective substantive.]-Lat. habere, to have. Chaucer uses only the simple form voiden, and in senses that are all used of horses that a horse was called an aver, and we even find in Burns, in a poem called 'A Dream,' st. 11, the lines: 'Yet aft a ragged cowt's been known To mak a noble aiver;' see aiver in Jamieson's Scot. Dict., and see Aver, Aver-corn, Averland, Average, Averpenny, in Halliwell's Dict. It is surprising that the extremely simple etymology of Average is wrongly given by Wedgwood, after a correct explanation of Aver and a reference to one of the right senses of Average; also by Mahn (in Webster's Dict.), who, after correctly referring to Averpenny, actually cites the verb to aver, to affirm to be true; and by Kichardson, who refers to the F. œuvre, a work. The very simplicity of the explanation seems hitherto to have, secured its rejection; but quite unnecessarily. An aver-age was estimated according to the 'work done by guers,' i.e. cart-horses;

AVERT, to turn aside. (Lat.) 'I averie, I tourne away a thyng;' Palsgrave, French Dict. - Lat. averiere, to turn away. = Lat. a, short form of ab, abs, away, from; and nerters, to turn. See Verse. Der. (From Lat. auersus, pp. of auertere) averse, Milton, P. L. ii. 763. averse-ly, averse-ness, avers-ion. ¶ The F. avertir = Lat. advertere, and is therefore a different word, AVIARY, a place for keeping birds. (Lat.) 'For aviaries, I like them not; 'Bacon, Essay 46; On Gardens. - Lat. aviarium, a place for birds; neut. of adj. aviarius, belonging to birds. - Lat. avis, a bird. From the Aryan stem avi, a bird ; whence also, by loss of the initial vowel, Skt. vi, a bird, Zend vi, a bird; also the Gk. ol-avós, a large bird, with augmentative suffix. Curtius, i. 488; Fick, i. 503.

AVIDITY, greediness, eagemess.  $(F_{..}, -L_{.})$  Not in early use; in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The pl. avidities is in Boyle's Works, ii. 317. [Perhaps immediately from Latin.] – F. avidité, 'greedinesse, covetousnesse, extreame lust, ardent affection, eager desire; 'Cotgrave (who, it will be seen, has not 'avidity' as an English word). - Lat. acc. aviditatem, from nom. aviditas, eagerness. - Lat. avidus, greedy, desirous. See Avarice. AVOCATION, pursuit, employment, business. (Lat.) Used by Dryden (Todd's Johnson); also in Boyle, Occas. Reflections, s. 2. med. 6. Not found in French, but formed with the common F. suffix -tion (Lat. acc. -tionem), from Lat. auocatio, a calling away of the attention, a diverting of the thoughts; hence, a diversion, amusement. It is in this sense that Boyle uses it. He says: 'In the time of health, visits, businesses, cards, and I know not how many other avocations, which they justly stile diversions, do succeed one another so thick, that in the day there is no time left for the distracted person to converse with his own thoughts.' Dryden (in Todd's Johnson) speaks of the 'avocations of business.' B. The word has gradually  $\beta$ . The word has gradually changed its meaning from 'diversions' to 'necessary employments,' evidently by confusion with vocations, with which it should never have been confused. A false popular notion of the etymology has probably assisted in this; the prefix seems to have been mistaken for the common F. prefix a- (Lat. ad, to), the Lat. a(=ab) being very rare as a prefix, occurring only in this word and avert. - Lat. awocare, to call away. - Lat. a, short for ab, abs, away; and wocare, to call; from Lat. nox (stem noc-), a voice. See Vocal.

AVOID, to get out of the way of, to shun. (F., -L.) M. E. auoiden (u for v), anoyden. 'Auoyden, evacuo, devacuo; avoyded, evacuatus ; ' Promp. Parv. p. 19. In M. E. it is generally transitive, meaning (1) to empty, (2) to remove, (3) to go away from; but also intransitive, meaning (1) to go away, (2) to flee, escape. Of these, the true original sense is 'to empty,' as in 'avoid though the true chere' = empty your plate, Babees Book, p. 33. In Ecclesiasticus, xiii. 6 (xiii. 5 in A. V.) the Vulgate version has: 'Si habes, conuiuet tecum, et euacrabit te;' where the A. V. has: 'If thou have anything, he will live with thee, yea, he will make thee bare;' but Wyclif has: He shal lyue with thee and avoids thee out,' which is exactly equivalent to the modern slang expression 'he will clean you out." ▲. It is obvious that the word is closely connected with the adj. void, empty, as stated in E. Müller. It seems almost incredible that, in some dictionaries, it appears to be connected with the F. fuiter, with which the word cannot, etymologically, have any connection. The same extraordinary confusion seems to have been a popular blunder of long standing, and has no doubt materially influenced the sense of the word. Cotgrave gives: Evilar, to avoid, eschew, shun, shrink from.' And Shak., though he has 'avoid the house (Cor. iv. 5. 25), and 'how may I avoid [get rid of ] the wife I chose ' Troil. ii. 65), most commonly uses it in the sense of 'shun' (Merry Wives, ii. 2. 289, &c.). In Palsgrave's French Dict., we have : Never have to do with hym, if thou mayst avoyde him (escheuer or eniter). B. But, as we trace the word still further backwards, this confusion disappears, and only the correct use of the word is found.

connected with the adj. void. O. The prefix a- is a corruption of O. F. es- (Lat. ex, out), as in abash, q.v.; this prefix was extremely common in O. F., and Burguy gives the forms envidier, esveuidier, esveuidier, to empty out, to dissipate, compounded of es-, prefix, and vuidier, voidier, to empty, make void. Our E. word, however, follows the Norman spelling, viz. voider, to empty, which see in Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson, l. 751. – Lat. ex, out; and viduare, to empty. – Lat. uiduus, empty. See Void. Der. avoid-able, avoid-ance. ¶ In a word, avoid = evoid; just as amend = emend. AVOIRDUPOIS, a particular way of estimating weights, viz.

AVOLRDUPOIS, a particular way of estimating weights, viz. by a pound of 16 oz.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.})$  Shak. uses avoirdupois (spelt haberdepois in old edd.) in 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 277 simply with the sense of weight.' Lit. the signification is 'to have some weight,' or 'having some weight.' -F. avoir du pois, to have some weight, to weigh. – Lat. habere, to have, whence F. avoir; de illo, of that, of the, whence F. du; and Lat. pensum, that which is weighed out, from pensus, pp. of pendere, to weigh. The spelling pois is correct; the word is misspelt poids in mod. P. from a false notion of a connection with Lat. pondus, weight; see Brachet. [*]

AVOUCH, to declare, confess. (F, -L.) M. E. avouchen, Gower, C. A. i. 295. Sometimes in the sense 'to make good,' 'maintain,' or 'answer for it,' as in Macb. iii. 1. 120. Grafton has avouchment in the sense of 'maintenance,' K. John, an. 14. Formed, in imitation of the older word avow, by prefixing the F. a (= Lat. ad, to) to the verb vouch; M. E. vouchen, used by Chaucer in the phrase vouchen sauf, to vouchsafe, C. T. 11355, 11885. Thus Cotgrave gives: 'Advour, to advow, avouch, approve,' &c. The M. E. vouchen is from O. F. vocher, to call. - Lat. wocare, to call. - Lat. uox (stem voci-), a voice. See Vouchsafe and Voice. Gr Avouch is quite distinct from avou.

AVOW, to confess, declare openly. (F., -L.) M.E. avouen, avouen, to promise, swear, make a vow; also, to maintain. 'I dewouldy avoue... Sobrely to do the sacrafyse;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 333. 'Awowyn, or to make avowe;' Prompt. Parv. p. 19. 'I avoue it,' in the sense 'I declare it;' Palsgrave. = O. F. avor, mod. F. avouer, to avow, confess, a word which has much changed its meaning; see Brachet. The orig. sense was 'to swear fealty to.' It appears in Low Latin as advoare; Ducange. = F. prefix a (Lat. ad, to); and O. F. vor, vouer, to make a vow (Low Lat. volare). = O. F. vo, vou, weu, mod. F. varu, a vow. = Lat. volum, a vow, lit. 'a thing vowed;' neut. of votus, pp. of uouere, to vow. See Vow. Der. avou-al. [*]

AWAIT, to wait for. (F., -O. H. G.) In early use. M. E. awaiten, to wait for; also, to lie in wait for. 'Me awaiteth ou' = people lie in wait for you; Ancren Riwle, p. 174.-O. F. awaiter, awaitier, the original spelling of O. F. agaiter, agaitier, to lie in wait for, watch for; see gaiter in Burguy, and waiter in Roquefort.-O. F. prefix a (Lat. ad); and O. F. waiter, waitier, later gaiter, gaitier (mod. F. gwetter), to watch.-O. H. G. wahtan, to watch (mod. G. wachten), a verb not given in Wackemagel's Handwörterbuch, though wahtari, a watcher, and wahta, a watch, are recorded. However, the verb is a mere formation from the sb. wahta, a watch, a word corresponding to O. F. waite, a sentinel, and accurately preserved in the E. wait, as used in the phrase 'the Christmas waits.'-O. H. G. wahhan (mod. G. wachen), to wake, to be awake; cognate with A. S. wacian, to wake. Thus wait is a secondary verb, formed from an older verb corresponding to E. wake. See Awake.

ÅWAKE, to rouse from sleep; to cease sleeping. (E.) In M. E. we find both awaken, strong verb, answering to mod. E. awake, strong verb; and awakien, a weak verb, which accounts for the pt. t. and pp. awaked as used by Shakespeare (Timon, ii. 2. 21) and others. The latter seems to be obsolete; we will consider only the former. 'Tha awac Brutus'=then Brutus awoke, Layamon, i. 53. -A.S. dwacan, pt. t. dwace, to awake; Grein, i. 48.-A.S. dw., prefix, answering to G. er., Goth. us., an intensive prefix; and wacan, to wake, Grein, ii. 635. See Wake. Cf. G. erwachen, O. H. G. urwahhen, irwachen, weak verb, to awake. Der. awake, adj., as used in Milton, 'ere well awake, 'P. L. i. 334. This was originally a past participle, viz. the M. E. awake, short for awaken, A.S. áwacen, pp. of dwacan, to awake. Similarly, we have broke for broken, bound for baunden, and the like. And see below.

AWAKEN, to awake. (E.) Strictly speaking, this is an intransitive verb only, and never used transitively in early authors; it is thus distinguished from awake, which is used in both senses; and it is slightly different in its origin. M. E. awakeese, awakees, 'I awakee therwith;' P. Plowman, B. xix, 478. – A. S. dwacenan, dwacnian, to awake; Grein, i. 46, 47.  $\beta$ . Note that the word awakee is thus seen to stand for awake, the e being merely inserted to render the word easier to sound; and the final -n answers to the first n in the A. S. suffix -nan. In this suffix, the first n is formative, and conspicuous in both Moeso-Gothic and Scandinavian, in which languages it is used to render a verb intransitive or reflexive. Thus the verb awaken is radically and essentially intransitive, and only to be so used. Shakespeare misuses it more than once; Meas. for Meas. iv. 2. 119; Tam. Shrew, v. 2. 42; Cor. v. 1. 23.

AWARD, to adjudge, determine. (F., -O. H. G.) 'Thus I awards' - thus I decide, Chaucer, C. T. 13617. -O. F. eswardeir, old spelling of O. F. esgardeir, to examine, to adjudge after examination; see garder in Burguy. -O. F. prefix es., modified from Lat. es., out; and O. F. warder, old spelling of garder, to observe, regard, guard. [The word is thus a hybrid; for, while the prefix is Latin, the rest is O. H. G.] -O. H. G. warten, sometimes warden, to regard, look at, guard. -O. H. G. warten, a watching, guarding; wart, warto, a guard. -O. H. G. warjan (M. H. G. wern, weren), to protect; O. H. G. wars, heed, care. + Goth. warjas, to bid beware; from adj. wars, wary. See Ward, Wary. - & WAR, to protect; Fick, i. 211. See below.

AWARE, adj, informed of, in a watchful state. (E.) In this particular word, the prefix a- has a very unusual origin; it is a corruption of M. E. prefix i-, or y-, which again is a corruption of A. S. ge-. The spelling aware occurs in Early Eng. Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 16, 1. 9, but is very rare, the usual spelling being iwar, ywar, or iwar; see Layamon, ll. 5781, 7261; Ancren Riwle, p. 104; Owl and Nightingale, l. 147; P. Plowman, B. i. 42; Rob. of Glouc. p. 168, l. 11; Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 100. – A. S. gewar, aware; a form not recorded, but the addition of A. S. ge as a prefix to a word is as common as possible, and makes no appreciable difference; moreover, the verb gewarian, to protect, is recorded in a gloss; see Leo, A. S. Glossar, col. 15, l. 31. Gewar is thus equivalent to war, aware, Cf. also G. gewahr werden, to be aware; where gewal r is from O. H. G. giwar, from the prefix gi-(A. S. ge) and war, cognate with A. S. war. –  $\sqrt{WAR}$ , to protect; whence also Gk. byda, I see, waa, cartion, Lat. wereri, to respect, revere, fear. Curtius, i. 432; Fick, iii. 290.

AWAY, out of the way, absent. (E.) The proper sense is 'on the way,' though now often used as if it meant 'off (or out of) the way.' To 'go away' meant 'to go on one's way.' M. E. awei, owri, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 21; spelt oway in Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 2269.— A. S. onweg, away, Grein, i. 354; from A. S. on, on, and weg, way. See Way. It was sometimes spelt dweg, Grein, i. 47; but the prefix d- is probably the same, the a being lengthened to compensate for the loss of n in an, another form of on. [†] 47; but the prenk a- is probably the same, the a being lengthened to compensate for the loss of n in an, another form of on. [†] AWIB, fear. (Scand.) M. E. azi, agki, awi, properly a dissyllabic word; Ormulum, 7185. [Another form is M. F. ezi, egki, eyi, also dissyllabic, Ormulum, 4481. We also meet with A. S. oga, fear, dread, and A. S. ege, fear. Both words occur in the same passage: 'And beó eówer ege and óga ofer calle nitenu' = and let the fear of you and the dread of you be over all animals, Gen. ix. 2. Both can be referred to a common base ag, to dread.] = lcel. agi, awe, terror. + Dan. awe, check, control, restraint; awe, to control. + Goth. agis, fear, anguish, + Irish and Gael. eaghal, fear, terror. + Gk. 6xoe, anguish, affliction. + Lat. angor, choking, anguish. + Skt. agha, sin. -  $\sqrt{AGH}$ , to choke. See Curtius, i. 234; Fick, i. 9. Der. aw-ful.g, aw-ful-dy, aw-ful-mess. From the same root we have anguish, anxious, anger, &c. ¶ The final e in awe, now quite unnecessary, records the fact that the word was once dissyllabic.

AWKWARD, clumsy. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) a. The modern sense of 'clumsy' is seldom found in old authors; though it means this or something very near it in 'ridiculous and awkward action;' Shak. Troil. i. 3, 149. We also find: 'tis no sinister nor no awkward claim,' Hen. V, ii. 4. 85; and again, 'by awkward wind,' i. e. by an adverse wind, 2 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 83; and again, 'awkward casualties,' i. e. adverse chances, Per. v. 1. 94.  $\beta$ . In tracing the word backwards, its use as an adjective disappears; it was, originally, an adverb, like forward, backward, onward. Its sense was 'transversely,' 'sideways,' especially used with regard to a back-handed stroke with a sword. 'As he glaid by, awkwart he couth him ta' = as he glided by, he took him a back-handed stroke; Wallace, iii. 175. 'The world thai all awkeward sett' - they turn the world topsy-turvy, Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 1541.  $\gamma$ . The suffix -ward, as in onward, forward, means 'in the direction of,' towards,' like the cognate Lat. wersus. The prefix awk is the M. E. awk, auk, adj., signifying 'contrary,' hence 'wrong.' 'Awke or angry, contrarius, bilosus, perversus. Awke or wronge, sinister. Awkely or wrawely [angrily], perverse, contrarie, bilose;' Prompt. Parv. p. 18. Auk is a contraction of Icel. afg- or öfg-, like hawk form A. S. kafoc. - Icel. öfgr, öfwr, afgr, often contracted to  $\delta fgu$ ,  $\delta fgri$  in old writers, adj. turning the wrong way, back foremost; as in ' $\delta fgurn$ , with the butend of a weapon; ' við hendi  $\delta fgri$ , 'with the back of the hand; see examples in Cleasby and Vigfusson. 8. Here  $\delta'$ - stands for d, from ; and -wg- is a suffix. Cognate forms appear in O. Sax. awk, perverse, evil (from af, from, and suffix -uh); in O. H. G. abuh, M. H. G. ebich, turned away, perverse, evil (from O. H. G. ap = G. ab, off, from, and suffix -uh); and in O. Skt. apak or apanch, turned away, cited by Fick, i. 17, and derived from apa, off, away, and aneh, to bend, of which the original form must have been ank, or (without the nasal) ak. . The Skt. form explains the word awk as meaning 'bent away,' from Aryan APA, away, and AK, to bend; whence the sense of awkward was originally 'bent-away-ward,' hence back-handed, perverse. The root ANK occurs in E. anchor, q. v. Der. awkward-ly, awkward-ness. [+]

AWL, a pointed instrument for piercing holes in leather. (E.) M. E. aul, eaul, owel, awel, al, el. 'Mid heore scherpe aules' = with their sharp awls; Ancren Riwle, p. 212. [Sometimes an aul or an all is corrupted to a naul or a nall; see Wyclif, Deut. xv. 17. Hence nall as a provincial E. word for awl.]-A.S. al, Exod. xxi. 6. The full form is awel, cited from Ælfric's Glossary in Lye and Manning's A. S. Dict. + Icel. alr, an awl. + O. H. G. ála, M. H. G. ále, G. akle.

A Skt. ard, an awl. Cf. Skt. arpaya, to pierce, causal of ri, to go. AWN, a beard of corn or grass. (Scand.) M. E. aum. 'Hec arista, an aum;' Wright's Vocabularies, i. 233. An older (13th-century) form agun appears at p. 155 of the same volume. – Icel. ögn, chaff, a husk. + Dan. avne, chaff. + Swed. agn, only in pl. agnar, husks. + Goth. ahana, chaff; Luke, iii. 17. + O. H. G. agana, M. H. G. agene, agene, chaff. Cf. Lat. acus, gen. aceris, chaff, husk of corn; Gk.  $\delta \chi v \rho \sigma r$ , chaff, husk of corn.  $\beta$ . The letter-changes are rather confused. The Low German forms are from a primitive ahana, preserved in Gothic. Here ak- answers to Lat. ac-, by rule, and the root is clearly AK, to pierce, hence, sharp, which appears in several other words, e.g. ac-ute, ac-unen, ac-me; the syllables -ana are a mere suffix, equivalent to common E. dimin. -en, as seen in kitten. Thus awn stands for ak-ana, i. e. a little sharp thing. ¶ In some parts of England (e.g. Essex) beards of barley are called ails; here ail is from A.S. egla, egle, a beard of corn, a prickle, mote, Luke, vi. 41, 42. This stands, in a similar manner, for ak-la, with a like meaning of 'a little sharp thing,' the suffix being here equivalent to the common E. dimin. -el, as in kernel, a little corn. Hence awn and ail merely differ in the suffixes; the stem ak- is the same. [†]

AWNING, a cover spread out, to defend those under it from the sun. (Persian?) The earliest quotation I can find is one given from Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 7, in Todd's Johnson : 'Our ship became sulphureous, no decks, no awnings, nor invention possible, being able to refresh us.' Four editions of this work appeared, viz. in 1634, 1638, 1665, and 1667; in the ed. of 1665, the ref. is to p. 8. The proper sense seems to be 'a sail or tarpauling spread above the deck of a ship, to keep off the heat of the sun.' Origin uncertain. I suspect it to be Eastern. Cf. Pers. awan, awang, anything suspended, awang any find the bastern. Cf. rets. awan, awang, any find superiod, awang án, pendulous, hanging; awnang, a clothes-line; Rich. Dict., p. 206. Hence probably, Low Lat. auvana, O. F. auvan, which Cotgrave explains by 'a penthouse of cloth before a shop-window.' AWORK, to work. (E.) Used by Shak., only in the phr. 'to set a-work; 'a Hen. IV, iv. 3, 124; Troil. v. 10, 38; Haml. ii. 2, 50; K. Lear, iii. 5, 8. Also in Chaucer: 'I sette hem so a worke, by my for us'. (T. T. 750; Hera a probably stands for ar. M. F. form of fay; 'C. T. 5797. Here a probably stands for an, M. E. form of A. S. on; as in so many other instances. Cf. abed, asleep, &c. The phrase 'he fell on sleep' is similar in construction. See Work. AWRY, obliquely, distortedly, sideways. (E.) In Shak. Tam. Shr. iv. I. 150. M. E. awrie (better awry), Romannt of the Rose, 291. Aurry is properly an adverb, and compounded of on and urry; cf. abed, asleep, &c. 'Owthir all evin, or on urry' = either all even or awry; 'Barbour's Bruce, 4. 705.  $\beta$ . The lit. sense is 'on the twist; ' and thus wry is, in this phrase, a sb., though no instance of its use as a sb. occurs elsewhere. We may conclude that it is the adj. wry (cf. a sb. occurs elsewhere. We may conclude that it is the adj. wry (cf. 'wry nose,' wry neck') used substantively to form the phrase. The adj. wry is not in very early use, and is merely developed from the M. E. verb wryen or wrien, to twist, now obsolete but once common. In Chaucer, C. T. 3283, most MSS. read : 'And with her heed she wryed fast away; 'where Tyrwhitt prints writhed, which is not the same word, though related to it. The M. E. wrien, to twist, is the A.S. wrigian, to tend to, work towards, strive, Grein, ii. 473. Cf. 'swa deo ælc gesceaft, wrigao wip his gecyndes ' = so does every creature, it wries (i. e. tends) towards its kind; Boethius, b. iii. met. 2 (c. 25). The diminutive of the verb wry, to tend, twist, is wriggle. Cf. Du. wrikken, wriggelen, to move about, Swed. wricka, to turn to and fro, Dan. wrikke, to wriggle; Skt. wrij, orig. to bend, twist. See Wry

AXE, AX, an implement for cutting trees. (E.) M. E. ax, ease, ex; also am, exe. Spelt ax, Havelok, 1894; Layamon, i. 196. – A.S. eax, ax. In Luke, iii. 9, the A.S. version has ax, where the North-mattock, trowel. + Gk. definy, an axe. + Russ. ose. Origin uncertain; perhaps from a root AKS, an extended form of AK, to pierce; cf. Gk. of ús, sharp. And see Adse.

AXIOM, a self-evident truth. (Gk.) In Burton, Anat. of Melan. ed. 1827, i. 316; and in Locke, On the Human Understanding, bk. is, c. 7. – Gk. déloua, gen. délouaros, worth, quality, resolve, de-cision ; in science, that which is assumed as the basis of demonstration, an assumption. - Gk. dfiow, I deem worthy, esteem. - Gk. dfioe, worthy, lit. 'weighing as much as.'-Gk. ayew, to lead, drive, also 'to weigh as much.' - AG, to drive. See Agent. Der. From the stem diwar-, axiomat-ic, axiomat-ic-al, axiomat-ic-al-ly.

AXIS, the axle on which a body revolves. (Lat.) In Pope, Essay on Man, iii. 313. In earlier writers, the word used is generally aste, or axletree, as in Marlowe's Faustus, A. ii. sc. 2. – Lat. axis, an axletree, axis. + Gk. afor, an axle. + Skt. aksha, an axle, wheel, cart. + O. H. G. alsa, G. achse, an axle. + A. S. eax, an axle; Grein, i. 250. [Curtius, i. 479, considers the Gk. stem af- as a secondary form from AF, to drive. Benfey likewise connects Skt. akska, with Skt. aj, to drive.]- AG, to drive. Der. axi-al. Gr Anle is the diminutive form, but a native word ; see Axle.

AXLE, the axis on which a wheel turns. (E.) M.E. axel, exel, which is common in the compound axeltree; the latter is word aml generally means 'shoulder' in early writers. 'He hit berd on his eaxlus '= he bears it on his shoulders; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 245. 'On his exle' = on his shoulder ; Layamon, i. 96. -A. S. east, the shoulder, Grein, i. 250. + Icel. öst, the shoulder-joint; öxull, an axis. + Swed. and Dan. assel, a shoulder, axle, axle-tree. + O.H.G. ahsala, G. achsel, the shoulder; O.H.G. ahsa, G. achse, an axis, axle. + Lat. ax-la, only used in the contracted form āla, a shoulderjoint, a wing. B. The change in signification from 'shoulder' to 'axis' was no doubt due to confusion with the Old F. aissel, essel, β. The change in signification from 'shoulder mod. F. essieu, from Lat. axiculus, a small axle-tree. But this did not affect the etymology. Y. The Swed. and Dan. forms for 'shoulder' and 'axle' are alike, and the O. H. G. ahsala, the shoulder, is a mere diminutive of O H. G. ahsa, axis, just as the Lat. ala (i. e. ax-la) is a diminutive of the Lat. axis. The explanation is, no doubt, the old one, viz. that the shoulder-joint is the axis on which the arm turns. Hence the root is AG, to drive, See Axis. Der. axle-tree, where tree has its old meaning of 'block,' or 'piece of wood.' AY 1 interjection of surprise. (E.) Probably distinct from aye, yes; see below. M. E. ey, interjection. 'Why ryse ye so rath? ey! ben'cite;' Chaucer, C. T. 3766; cf. l. 10165. Modified, by confu-sion with O. F. ay (in aymi) from A. S. ea, interj. signifying 'ay!' chiefly used in the compound sálá, compounded of sá, ay, and lá, lo, look. B. There has also probably been confusion with the O. F. he l in the compound kélas, alas. It is hardly possible to give a clear account of the origin of ay I and ek I nor is it of much consequence. The Lowland Scotch hech | corresponds to A. S. hig | used to trans-late Lat. o l in Ælfric's Colloquy. ¶ The phrase 'ay me !' is cer-tainly French, viz. the O. F. aymi, ah ! for me; Burguy. Cf. Ital. ahimé, alas for me! Span. ay di mi! alas for me! Gk. olµoi, woe's me! See also Ah !

AY, AYE, yea, yes. (E.) In Shak. frequently; Temp. i. 2. 268, &c.; always spelt I in old editions. The use of the word in this form and with this sense is not found in early authors. We may conclude that aye is but a corruption of yea. See Yes. The corruption was probably due to confusion with the interjection ay!

which is perhaps a different word. See above. AYE, adv., ever, always. (Scand.) The p The phr. ' for ay' occurs in Iwain and Gawain, l. 1510; in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. i. We also find 'ay withouten ende,' Li Beaus Disconus, l. 531, in Ritson's M. R., vol. ii. [Also 'a buten ende,' Ancren Riwle, p. 396; where a = A.S. a.] - Icel. ei, ever. + A. S. d, aye, ever, always; Grein, i. 11; used in various phrases, such as á foro, á on worlda foro, á tó wordde, &c. It also appears in the longer forms awa, awo, Grein, i. 46, of which  $\dot{a}$  is merely a contraction. It is an adverbial use of a substantive which meant 'a long time,' as shewn by the Gothic. + Goth. aiw, ever; an adverb formed from the sb. aiws, time, an age, a long period, eternity, Luke, i. 70. Cf. Lat. anno, an age; Gk. alwr, an age, alei, dei, ever, always, aye; Skt. eva, course, conduct. See Age. AZIMUTH, an arc of the horizon intercepted between the meridian of the place and a vertical circle passing through any celestial body. (Arabic.) Briefly, azimuthal circles are great circles passing through the zenith; whereas circles of declination pass through the poles. 'These same strikes [strokes] or divisiouns ben cleped [called] Azymuthz; and they deuyden the Orisonte of thin astrelable in 24 deuisiouns;' Chaucer, tr. on Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pt. i. sect. 19. umbrian glosses have the fuller forms acasa, acass. + Icel. öz, özi. + Swed. yza. + Dan. özz. + Goth. akwisi. + O. H. G. acchus, M. H. G. ackes, mod. G. azt (with excrescent t). + Lat. ascia (for acsia), an axe, samt, sing., the way, or point or quarter of the horizon; cf. 'Arab. somet, a road, way, quarter, direction; 'Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 360. From the same Arabic word is derived the E. zenith. See Zonith.

AZOTTE, nitrogen. (Gk.) Modern. So called because destructive to animal life. – Gk.  $d_{\alpha}$ , negative prefix; and  $\zeta wrucos,$  fit for preserving life. – Gk.  $\zeta d\omega$ , I live, 'The Gk.  $\zeta d\omega$  stands for  $\partial d\omega$ , and its most natural derivation is from the root gi, Zend ji, to live; 'Curtius, ii. 96. So in Fick, i. 74, who gives  $\checkmark$  GI, and derivatives. From the same root we have Gk.  $\beta los$ , life, Lat. uivere, to live; also E. guick, vivid, vital, &c.; as also zoo-logy. Cf. Skt. jiv, to live. See Quick.

AZURE, adj., of a light blue colour. (Arabic.) M. E. asur, Joseph of Arimathie, ed. Skeat, ll. 194, 198. 'Clad in asure;' Chaucer, Queen Anelida, l. 233. – O. F. azur, azure; a corrupted form, standing for lazur. The initial l seems to have been mistaken for the definite article, as if the word were lazur; we see the opposite change in F. lierre, ivy, a corruption of l'hierre, from Lat. hedera, ivy. – Low Lat. lazur, an azure-coloured stone, known also as lapis lazuli; also, the colour itself. – Arabic lájward, lapis lazuli, azure; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 500. So called from the mines of Lajwurd; see Marco Polo's Travels, ed. Yule. [†]

Β.

BAA, to bleat like a sheep. (E.) Chapman uses baaing in his tr. of Homer, Iliad, bk. iv. 1. 463; see quotation in Richardson s. v. bleat. Shak. has the verb to ba, Cor. ii. 1. 12, and the sb. baa, 2 Gent. i. 1. 98. An imitative word, and may be considered as English. Cf. G. bā, the lowing of sheep.

BABBLE, to gossip, prate. (E.) M. E. babelen, to prate; Ancren Riwle, p. 100; to mumble, say repeatedly, P. Plowman, B. v. 8. Though not recorded in A.-S. MSS., it may be considered as an English word, being found in O. Low German. + Du. babbelen, to chatter. + Dan. bable, to babble. + Icel. babbla. + G. bappeln, bappern, to babble; Grimm's Dict.  $\beta$ . The suffix -le is frequentative, and the verb means 'to keep on saying ba ba,' syllables imitative of the efforts of a child to speak. Cf. F. babiller, to chatter. Der. babble, sb., babble-ment, babbl-ing, babbl-er, A. V. Acts, xvii. 18. [†] BABE, an infant. (C.) M. E. babe, Gower, C. A. i. 200; bab,

BABE, an infant. (C.) M. E. babe, Gower, C. A. i. 200; bab, Towneley Myst. p. 140; the full form being baban, Ancren Riwle, p. 234; and even Levins has: 'Babbon, pupus, 163.12.-Welsh, Gaelic, Irish, Cornish, baban. + Manx bab, baban, a babe, child. 'This is a mutation of maban, dimin. of mab, a son; but [also] used primarily in Cornish and Welsh, as is the case in other instances;' Lexicon Corna-Britannicum, by R. Williams.-W. mab, a son. + Gael.. Irish, and Manx mac, a son, the young of any animal. [The forms mab and mac are modifications of Early Welsh maqui, a son; Rhys, Lect. on Welsh Philology, pp. 23, 419.]+Goth. magus, a boy.- A MAGH, to augment; Fick, i. 708. See May. Instead of babe being formed from the infantine sound ba, it has been modified from maqui; probably by infantine influences. Baby is a diminutive form; like lassie from lass. Der. bab-y, baby-ish, baby-hood.

BABOON, a large apc. (F. or Low Lat.) Probably borrowed, in its present form, from F. babouin. The form bavian in the Two Noble Kinsmen, is Du. bavian. Other spellings, babion, babian, may be modifications of M. E. babewine; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 210; Prompt. Parv. p. 20. The last is from Low Lat. babewynus. 'In an English inventory of 1295, in Ducange, we read --"Imago B. V. .. cum pede quadrato stante super quatuor paruos babewynos;" and the verb bebuinare signified, in the 13th century, to paint grotesque figures in MSS.; Brachet. Remoter origin unknown. BACOHANAL, a worshipper of Bacchus. (L.,-Gk.) Properly, BAČOHÁNÁL, a worshipper of Bacchus.  $(L_{,-}Gk_{,-})$  Properly, an adjective. 'Unto whom [Bacchus] was yearely celebrated the feast bacchanal;' Nicolls, Thucydides, p. 50 (R.) 'The Egyptian Bacchanals,' i. e. revels, Shak. Ant. ii. 7. 110. 'The tipsy Bacchanals,' i. e. revellers, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 48. – Lat. Bacchanalis, adj., devoted to Bacchus. – Lat. Bacchus, the god of wine. – Gk. Báxxos, the god of wine; also spelt 'Iaxxos, and said to be so named from the shouting of worshippers at his festival. – Gk. láxcos, to shout; a verb apparently formed by onomatopœia, to express an interjectional lax ! Der. Bacchanal-ian.

BACHELOR, a young man. (F., -L.) M. E. bacheler, Chaucer, Prol. 80; Rob. of Glouc. pp. 77, 228, 453. -O. F. bacheler. -LowLat. baccalarius, a farm-servant, originally a cow-herd; from baccalia, a herd of cows; which from bacca, a cow, a Low Lat. form of wacca (Brachet). [Cf. F. brébis from Lat. werwex.] Lat. wacca is the Skt. sesó, a cow; which Fick interprets as 'the lowing animal;' cf. Skt. sesó, to speak.  $-\checkmark$  WAK, to speak; Fick, i. 204. Der. bachelorship. ¶ The usual derivation, from W. back, little, is possible; see Errata. [#]

BACK, a part of the body. (E.) M. E. bak, A. S. bæc (in common use). + Icel. bak.  $\beta$ . Fick suggests  $\checkmark$  BHAG, to turn; i. 154; iii. 198.  $\gamma$ . M. E. derivatives are : bacbon, backbone; bacbine, to backbite (P. Plowman, B. ii. 80); bacward, backward (Layamon, ii. 578). Der. back-bite, back-bit-er, back-bit-ing, back-bone, back-side, back-side, back-side, back-bit-er, back-ward, back-wards, back-ward-ness.

BACKGAMMON, a kind of game. (Danish?) Spelt baggamon in Howell's Letters, ii. 66 (Todd's Johnson). A quotation from Swift in the same dict. has the spelling backgammon. It is backgammon in Butler's Hudibras, c. iii. pt. 2; ed. Bell, ii. 163. The game seems to have been much the same as that formerly called 'tables.'  $\beta$ . Origin unknown. Mr. Wedgwood guesses it to mean 'tray-game,' i.e. game played on a tray or board; cf. Dan. bakke, a tray (see BaBin), and gammen, game. In any case, we may be sure that the latter part of the word signifies 'game,' and is nothing but the very common M. E. word gamen, a game. See Game; and see Blot. ¶ A common etymology is from W. bach, little, and cammon, a conflict, given in Todd's Johnson; but, in Welsh, the more usual position of the adjective is after its substantive. It is a worthless guess. [†] BACON, swine's flesh prepared for eating. (F.,=O.C.) M. E.

BACON, swine's flesh prepared for eating. (F., -O.G.) M. E. bacon, Chaucer, C. T. 5799. -O. F. bacon. - Low Lat. acc. baconem, from nom. baco; from a Teutonic source. -O. Du. baken, bacon (Oudemans). -O. Du. bak, a pig (Oudemans). Cf. M. H. G. backe, O. H. G. packo, pakko, a flitch of bacon. [†]

BAD, evil, wicked. (C.?) M. E. bad, badde; Chaucer has badder, i. e. worse, C. T. 10538. Not in use much earlier in English. Rob. of Glouc. has badde, evil, p. 108, l. 17; and this is perhaps the earliest instance. B. The word has hitherto remained unaccounted for; it is clear that the G. bose, Du. boos, bad, evil, is too unlike it to help us. The Pers. bad, wicked, has a remarkable resemblance to the Eng. word, but can hardly have been known to Rob. of Glouc. Y. I think we may rather account for it by supposing it to be Celtic. The Cornish bad, foolish, stupid, insane, occurs in the miracle-play of the Resurrectio Domini, 11, 1776, 1886 (fifteenth century). Mr. R. Resurrectio Domini, II. 1776, 1886 (fifteenth century). Mr. R. Williams says: 'this word is not extant in this sense in Welsh, but is preserved in the Armoric bad, stupidity.' He might have added that it is plainly the Gael. baodh, vain, giddy, foolish, simple; baoth, foolish, stupid, profane, wicked, wild, careless; with numerous derivatives, such as baoth-bheus, immorality, misbehaviour. This account seems sufficient. 8. May we go so far as to connect the word further with the Lat. ped-us*, bad, supposed by Corssen to be the root of Lat. peior (ped-ior), worse, and pessimus (ped-timus), worst? If so, the root is PAD, to fall. [†] ¶ The nearest Teutonic form is the Goth. bauths, deaf, dumb, insipid (said of salt); but I see no clear proof that E. bad is connected with it. On the contrary, the Goth. bauks, deaf, is obviously the Gael. bothar, deaf; and Fick (i. 156) also cites Skt. badkira, deaf, from A BHADH, to bind. Der. bad-ly, bad-ness. The words worse, worst, are from a different root.

BADGE, a mark of distinction. (Low Lat., -O. Low G.) Occurs in Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 2. The Prompt. Parv. has: 'Bage, or bagge, or badge, of armys, banidium.'-Low Lat. bagea, bagia, 'signum, insigne quoddam;' Ducange.-Low Lat. bagea, a ring, collar for the neck (and prob. ornament), a word of O. Low G. origin; as is seen by comparison with O. Saxon bog (also spelt bág), a ring; see bóg-gebo in gloss. to Heliand, ed. Heyne. This word is cognate with A. S. bedh, a ring, ornament.- $\checkmark$  BHUGH, to bow, bend; see Fick, i. 162; iii. 213.

BADGER, the name of an animal. (F., -L.) Spelt bageard in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1183g; but the final d is there excrescent. a. In M. E., the animal had three familiar names, viz. the brock, the gray, and the bawson, but does not seem to have been generally called  $\beta$ . The name is a sort of nickname, the true sense the badger. of M. E. badger or bager being a 'dealer in com;' and it was, presumably, jocularly transferred to the animal because it either fed, or was supposed to feed, upon corn. This fanciful origin is verified by the fact that the animal was similarly named blaireau in French, from the F. blé, corn; see blaireau in Brachet. y. The M. E. badger stands for bladger, the l having been dropped for convenience of pronunciation, as in baberlipped (P. Plowman, B. v. 190) compared with blabyrlyppyd (Digby Mysteries, p. 107). - O. F. bladier, explained by Cotgrave as a merchant, or ingrosser of corn.'-Low Lat. bladarius, a seller of corn. - Low Lat. bladum, corn; a contraction of abladum, abladium, used to denote 'corn that has been carried,' 'corn gathered in; these words being corruptions of Lat. ablatum, which was likewise used, at a late period, to denote 'carried corn.'- Lat. ablatum, neut. of ablatus, carried away. - Lat. ab; and latus, borne, carried; a corruption of an older form tlatus, pp. of an old verb tlao, I lift. - / TAL, to lift; Fick, i. 601. [†]

BADINAGE, jesting talk. (F., -L.) Modern, and mere French; F. badinage, jesting talk. -F. badiner, to jest. - Prov. badiner, to jest (Brachet). A secondary form from Prov. bader, to gape; see bayer in Brachet. - Lat. badare, to gape; used by Isidore of Seville. Probably an imitative word; from the syllable ba, denoting the opening of the mouth. Cf. babble, q. v.

BAFFLE, to foil, disgrace. (Scand.) The history of the word is recorded by Hall, Chron. Henry VIII, anno 5. Richardson quotes the passage to shew that to baffull is 'a great reproach among the Scottes, and is used when a man is openly periured, and then they make of him an image paynted reuersed, with hys heles vpwarde, with his name, wondering, cryenge, and blowing out of [i.e. at] hym with hornes, in the moost despitefull manner they can.' The word is clearly a corruption of Lowland Scotch bauchle, to treat contemptu-ously; see the poem of Wallace, ed. Jamieson, viii. 724. For change of ch to  $f_1$  cf. tough, rough, &c.  $\beta$ . Bauchle is a verb, formed by suffix -le, from adj. bauch, tasteless, abashed, jaded, &c. This was probably borrowed from Icel. bágr, unensy, poor, or the related sb. bágr, a struggle; from which is formed, in Icelandic, the vb. bægja, to push, or metaphorically, to treat one harshly, distress one, or, in a word, to baffle. ¶ Fick (iii. 198) gives a theoretical Teutonic form bága, strife, to account for Icel. bágr, a struggle ; M.H.G. bágen, O.H.G.

págan, to strive, to brawi; O. Sax. bág, boasting. BAG, a flexible case. (E.) M.E. bagge, P. Plowman, B. prol. 41; Ancren Riwle, p. 168. – O. Northumbrian Eng. met-bælig (Lindisfarne MS.) or met-balg, i.e. meat-bag (Rushworth MS.), a translation of Lat.  $\beta ra$ , Luke, xvii. 35. + Goth. balgs, a wine-skin. + G. balg, a skin.  $\beta$ . It is often considered as a Celtic word, but it is really a word common to the Celtic and Teutonic branches, and connecting the two. Cf. Gaelic balg, sometimes bag, of which Macleod and Dewar say that it is a common Celtic vocable. Y. The M.E. form is doubtless due to the influence of Icel. baggi, a bag, formed from balgi by the assimilation so common in Icelandic. The older form is clearly balg. from the root appearing in bulge. See Bulge. Bag is a doublet of belly, q. v.; and the pl. bags is a doublet of bellows, q. v. Der. bag, vb., bag-gy, bag-pipe (Chaucer, C. T. 567), bag-piper. [+] BAGATELLE, a trifle; a game. (F., - Ital.) A modern word.

- F. bagatelle, a trifle; introduced in the 16th cent. from Ital. bagattella, a trifle (Brachet). T Diez thinks it is from the same root as baggage. Bagattella he takes to be the dimin. of Parmesan baga!a, a little property; and this to be formed from the Lombard baga, a BAGGAGE (1), tavellers' luggage. (F., -C.) M. E. baggage, bagage; occurring in the piece called Chaucer's Dream, by an anonymous author, 1, 1555; and in Hall, Chron. Rich. III, an. 3, -O. F. bagage, a collection of bundles, from O. F. bagwe, a bundle. From a Celtic root, appearing in Breton beac'h, a bundle, W. baich, a burden, Gael. bag, balg, a wallet; cognate with E. bag. See Bag. ¶ Diez also cites Span. baga, a rope used for tying bundles; but this Span. word is (perhaps) itself from the same Celtic root. It again appears in the Lombard baga, a wine-skin, a bag.

BAGGAGE (2), a worthless woman. (F.) Corrupted from O. F. bagasse. Cotgrave explains bagasse by 'a baggage, quean, jyll, punke, flirt.' Burguy gives the forms baiasse, bajasse, bagasse, a chambermaid, light woman. Cf. Ital. bagaseia, a worthless woman. B. Etym. doubtful. Perhaps originally a camp-follower; and derived from O. F. bague, a bundle, of Celtic origin; see above.

BAIL, security; to secure. (F.,-Lat.) Shak. has both sb. and verb; Meas. iii. 2. 77, 85. c. Bail as a verb is the O. F. bailler, introduced as a law-term. = O. F. bailler, to keep in custody. = Lat. baiulare, to carry about or take charge of a child. – Lat. bâiūlus, a porter, a carrier. Root obscure.  $\beta$ . Bail as a substantive is the porter, a carrier. Root obscure.  $\beta$ . Bail as a substantive is the O. F. bail, an administrator, curator; whence 'to be bail.'-Lat. baiulus, as above.

BAILIFF, a deputy, one entrusted with control. (F.,-L.) Chaucer has bailif; Prol. 603. - O. F. baillif (Cotgrave); written as baillinus or ballinus in Low Latin. - O. F. bailler, to keep in custody. See above.

BAILIWICK, the jurisdiction of a bailiff. (F. and E.) Fabyan speaks of 'the office of ballywycke;' Rich. II, an. 1377. A hybrid word; from M E. bailie, short for bailif (see above), and M. L. wike, A. S. wike or wice, office, duty, function, &c. The M. E. wike occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 91, l. 19, ii. 183, l. 1; St. Juliana. p. 24; Layamon, l. 29752, &c.; see Stratmann. The A.S. word occurs in the pl. wican or wican in the A.S. Chron. an. 1120, and an. 1137; see Earle's note at p. 370 of his edition. See also Ælfric's Hom. i. 242, l. 13, and ii. 592, p. 28. This sb. is probably a derivative of A.S. wican; see Week and Weak.

BAILS, small sticks used in the game of cricket.  $(F_{..} = L.?)$  The history of the word is obscure. Roquefort gives O. F. bailles, in the sense of barricade, palisade, with a quotation from Froissart : "Il fit charpenter des bailles et les asseoir au travers de la rue;' which I suppose to mean, he caused sticks to be cut and set across the street. Perhaps from Lat. baculus, a stick, rod, used in many senses; cf. F.

baillon, a gag, from Lat. baculonem, a deriv. of baculus (Brachet).

But the history of the word remains dark. [\*]BAIRN, a child. (E.) M. E. barn, P. Plowman, A. ii. 3.-A. S. bearn, Grein, i. 103. + Icel. barn, a child. + Swed. and Dan. barn. + Goth. barn. + Skt. blruna, an embryo; bharna, a child.  $-\checkmark$  BHAR, to bear. See Bear. BAIT, to make to bite. (Scand.) M. E. baiten, to feed, Chaucer, Troilus, i. 192. 'And shoten on him, so don on bere Dogges, that wolden him to-tere, Thanne men doth the bere bey/e' = and rushed upon him like dogs at a bear, that would tear him in twain, when people cause the bear to be baited ; Havelok, 1838. To bait a bear is to make the dogs bite him. To bait a horse is to make him eat. -Icel. beita, to make to bite, the causal of Icel. bita, to bite. See Bite. Der. bait, sb., i. e. an enticement to bite. [+]

BAIZE, a coarse woollen stuff. (F., -L.) An error for bayes, which is a plural form; viz. the pl. of the F. baye. -F. baye, a lie, fib. . . a cozening trick, or tale; also, a berry; also, the cloth called bayes, &c.; Cotgrave; cf. F. bai, bay-coloured.  $\beta$ . That the -ze is no part of the original word, and that the word is closely connected with bay, i. e. bay-coloured, reddish brown, is clear by comparison. Cf. Du. baa, baize; Swed. boi, bays, baize (Tauchnitz); Dan. bai, baize. Also Span. bayo, bay, bayeta, baize; Ital. bajo, bay, chesnut-coloured; bajetta, baize. See Bay (1). Hécart, cited by Wedgwood, guessed it to be named from its being dyed with 'graines d'Avignon;' from F. baie, Lat. bacca, a berry. But note the difference between Bay (1) and Bay (2). Perhaps the Portuguese is the clearest ; it has baio, bay-coloured,

Pernaps the Portuguese is the clearest; it has baio, bay-coloured, basta, baize; but baga, a berry. [+]
BAKE, to cook by heat. (E.) M. E. baken, Chaucer, Prol. 384.

er-y, bake-house. BALANCE, a weighing-machine. (F., - Lat.) Shak. has balance, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 324; the pl. form used by him is also balance, Merch. iv. 1. 255. M. E. balance, Ayenbite of Inwyt, pp. 30, 91. – F. balance, 'a ballance, a pair of weights or ballances; 'Cot. – Lat. acc. bilancem, from nom. bilanz, having two scales; see Brachet. -Lat. bi-, double (for bis, twice); and lanz, a platter, dish, scale of a balance; prob. so named because of a hollow shape; from the same root as Lake. See Fick, i. 748. Der. balance, verb. BALCONY, a platform outside a window. (Ital.) Milton has balcone's (:ic) as a plural; Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 24. 'The penult is long with Sherburne (1618-1702), and with Jenyns (1704-87), and in Cowper's John Gilpin; Swift has it short; see Richard-son; 'Hales. - Ital. balcone, an outjutting corner of a house, also spelt balco (Florio). Ital. palco or palcone, a stage, scaffold, also occurs.  $\beta$ . Hence Diez well suggests a derivation from O. H. G. balcho, pale<sup>1</sup>o, a scaffold, cognate with Eng. balk, a beam, rafter. See Balk. The term. -one is the usual Ital augmentative; cf. balloon. ¶ The ¶ The word has a remarkable resemblance to Pers. bálákhána, an upper chamber, from Pers. bálá, upper, and khána, a house (Palmer, col. 68, 212); but the connection thus suggested is void of foundation, and the sense hardly suits.

BALD, deprived of hair. (C.) M. E. balled, ballid, a dissyllable; P. Plowman, B. xx. 183. Chaucer has: 'His head was balled, and schon as eny glas; ' Prol. 198. The final -d thus stands for -ed, like the -ed in spotted, and serves to form an adj. from a sb. 'The original meaning seems to have been (1) shining (2) white, as a baldfaced stag; ' note in Morris's Glossary. A bald-faced stag is one with a white streak on its face; cf. Welsh bal, adj., having a white streak on the forehead, said of a horse; bali, whiteness in the forehead of a horse. Cf. also Gk. φαλακρόs, bald-headed; φαλαρόs, having a spot of white, said of a dog,  $\phi a \lambda_1 \delta s$ , white,  $\phi a \lambda_1 \rho \delta s$ , shining. - Gael. and Irish bal or ball, a spot, mark, freckle; whence the adj. ballach, spotted, speckled. + Bret. bal, a white mark on an animal's face. + Welsh bali, whiteness in a horse's forehead. B. Cf. also Lith. balu, balti. to be white; Fick, ii. 422, iii. 208. The root is probably bhá, to shine ; whence also the O. Irish ban, white. See Curtius, i. 369, 370. Der. bald-ness (M. E. ballednesse or ballidnesse, Wyclif, Levit. xiii. 42), bald-head-ed.

BALDERDASH, poor stuff. (Scand.) Generally used now to signify weak talk, poor poetry, &c. But it is most certain that it formerly was used also of adulterated or thin potations, or of frothy • It water; and, as a verb, to adulterate drink so as to weaken it. is against my freehold, my inheritance, . . To drink such balderdash, or bonny-clabber; 'Ben Jonson, New Inn. Act i; see the whole passage. 'Mine is such a drench of balderdash;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, iv. 5. "What have you filled us here, balderdash?" Chapman, May-day, iii. 4. 'Can wine or brandy receive any sanction by being balderdashed with two or three sorts of simple waters?' Mandeville, on Hypochond. Dis. 1730, p. 279 (Todd's Johnson). B. To dash is, in one sense, to mix wine with water (see Webster's Dictionary), and this accounts for the latter part of the word. Dash is Scandinavian; and we may therefore look to Scandinavian for the other part of the word. We find Dan. balder, noise, clatter; Swed. dial. ballra, to bellow, also to prattle, tattle; Icel. baldrast, ballrast, to make a clatter. The Dan. daske is to slap, to flap; and dask is a slap, a dash. Hence balderdash was most probably compounded (very like slap-dash) to express a hasty or unmeaning noise, a confused sound; whence, secondarily, a 'hodge-podge,' as in Halliwell; and generally, any mixture. Still, if more were known of the word's history, its etydistribution of the second of the balder has an excressent d; the older form is shewn by Icel. ballrost, which is from the same source as bellow. See Bellow and Dash.

source as bellow. See Ballow and Daan. BALDRIC, BALDRICK, a girdle, belt. (F.,=O. H. G.) M. E. baudrie, baudrik, Chaucer, Prol. 116; bauderyke, Prompt. Parv. p. 27. But a form baldrie must have co-existed; Shak. has baldrick, Much Ado, i. 1. 244.=O. F. baldrie*, a form which must have pre-ceded the forms baldret, baldrei, given by Burguy; cf. Low Lat. bald-ringus in Ducange.=O. H. G. balderich, a girdle; (not given by Wackerscel, but cited in Webster E. Miller Koch and others:) Wackernagel, but cited in Webster, E. Müller, Koch, and others;) formed with suffixes -er and -ik, from O. H. G. balz, palz, a belt, allied to E. belt. See Belt.

BALLE (1), a package. (F., -M. H. G.) Bale of spycery, or other lyke, bulga; Prompt. Parv. p. 22. - F. bale, a ball; also, a pack, as of merchandise; Cot.-Low Lat. bala, a round bundle, package. Probably merely an adaptation of M. H. G. balle, a ball, sphere, round body. The Swed. bal (as well as F. bale above, which Cotround body. The Swed. out (as wen as F. out above, when Cor-grave gives as a variant of balle) means, likewise, both a ball and a bale. See Ball. [†] BALE (2), evil. (E.) Shak. has baile (1st folio), Cor. i. 1. 166; and baleful, Romeo, ii. 3. 8. M. E. bale, Havelok, 325 (and very common); balu, Layamon, 1455, 259.-A. S. bealu, bealo, balu, Grein, i. 101. + Icel. bol, misfortune. + Goth. balws*, evil; only in comp. balwa-wesei, wickedness, balweins, torment, balwjan, to torment. + O. H. G. balo, destruction; lost in mod. G. The theoretical Tent. form is balwa, Fick, iii. 209. ¶ Fick compares Lat. fallere, but this seems to be wrong, as explained in Curtius, i. 466. Der. baleful, bale-ful-ly.

BALE (3), to empty water out of a ship. (Dutch?) Not in early use. We find : ' having freed our ship thereof [of water] with baling ; Hackluyt's Voyages, v. ii. pt. ii. p. 109. It means to empty by means of bails, i. e. buckets, a term borrowed from the Dutch or Danish; more probably the former. - Du. balie, a tub; whence balien, to bale out (Tauchnitz, Dutch Dict. p. 23). + Dan. balle, ballie, a tub. + Swed. balja, a sheath, scabbard; a tub. + G. balje, a half-tub (nautical term); Flügel's Dict.  $\beta$ . By comparing this with Swed. balg, balj, a pod, shell, G. balg, a skin, case, we see that bail is, practically, a dimin. of bag. Probably pail is different from bail. See Bag.

BALK (1), a beam; a ridge, a division of land. (E.) Not much in use at present; common in old authors. M. E. balke. Balke in a howse, trabe; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 22; balkes, rafters, Chaucer, C. T. 3625; ' balke of lond, separaison; ' Palsgrave. - A. S. balca, a heap; in the phr. 'on balcan legan '= to lay in heaps, Boeth. xvi. 2; which explains Shak. 'balked,' laid in heaps, 1 Hen. IV, i. 1. 61. + O. Saxon balko, a beam; Heliand, l. 1708. + Du. balk, a beam, rafter, bar, + Icel. bálkr, a partition. + Swed. balk, a beam, partition. + Dan. bjælke, a beam. + G. balken, a beam, rafter. + Gael. bale, a boundary, ridge of earth between two furrows (perhaps borrowed from E. or Scandinavian). B. Balk stands for bar-k, derivative of the form bar as seen in M. H. G. bar, O. H. G. para, a balk, beam, enclosed field; earth; cf. Gk.  $\phi d \rho a \gamma e$ , a ravine,  $\phi a \rho \delta a$ , I plough,  $\phi d \rho \sigma \sigma e$ , a piece; from the  $\checkmark$  BHAR, to cut, cognate with E. bore, to pierce. The idea of 'ridge' easily follows from that of trench, as the plough causes both at once; in the same way as a dyke means (1) a trench, and (2) a rampart. See Bar, Bore. [†]

BALK (2), to hinder. (E.) Shak. has balked, Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 26. Balkyn or ouerskippyn, omitto;' Prompt. Parv. And again, Balkyn, or to make a balke in a londe, porco;' Prompt. Parv. p. 22. A balk also means a bar, a beam, see above ; and to balk means to bar one's way, to put a bar or barrier in the way; cf. Icel. bálkr, a beam of wood, also a piece of wood laid across a door ; also, a fence (Cleasby and Vigfusson). The force of the verb is easily understood by read-

b. ii. 1. 20. - F. bal, a dance; from O. F. baler, to dance. - Low Lat. ballare, to dance. + Gk. Balliferr, to dance; Fick, ii. 177. Of uncertain origin; the connection with Gk. Bannew, to throw, is not clearly made out. See Ballet, Ballad.

BALL (2), a spherical body. (F., -G.) M. E. balle, Alisaunder, 6481; Layamon, ii. 307.-O. F. balle.-M. H. G. balle, O. H. G. palla, pallo, a ball, sphere. + Icel. böllr, a ball, globe. The root is probably seen in our verb to bulge; see Bulge. From the same source, ball-oon, ball-ot; and cf. bole, bowl, bolt, bolster; boil, balled, &c. BALLIAD, a sort of song. (F., = Prov., = Low Lat.) M. E. balade, Gower, C. A. i. 134.= F. ballade, of which Brachet says that it 'came, in the 14th century, from the Provençal ballada.' Ballada seems to have meant a dancing song, and is clearly derived from Low Lat. (and Ital.) ballare, to dance. See Ball (1). ¶ In some authors ¶ In some authors the form ballat or ballet occurs; in this case, the word follows the Ital. spelling ballata, 'a dancing song,' from Ital. ballare, to dance. BALLIAST, a load to steady a ship. (Dutch.) Ballasing occurs in Cymbeline, iii. 6. 78; balast or ballast in Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 504; ii. pt. ii. 173. - Du. ballast, ballast; ballasten, to ballast. (Many of our sea-terms are Dutch.) + Dan. ballast, ballast; ballast; to ballast; also spelt baglast, baglaste. + Swed. barlast, a corrupted form, the U. Swed. being ballast (Ihre). B. The latter syllable is, as all agree, the Du., Dan., and Swed. last, a burden, a word also used in English in the phr. 'a last of herrings;' see Last. The former syllable is dis-puted; but, as the Swed. is corrupt, we may rely upon the Danish forms, which shew both the original baglast and the later form ballast, due to assimilation. The Dan. bag means 'behind, at the back, in the rear;' and we find, in the Swed. dialects, that the adj. baklässt, i.e. back-loaded, is used of a cart that is laden heavily behind in comparison with the front (Rietz). Hence 'ballast' means 'a load be-hind,' or 'a load in the rear;' and we may conclude that it was so called because the ballast was stowed more in the after part of the ship than in front, so as to tilt up the bows; a very sensible plan. See Back. O. Another etymology is given in the Wörterbuch der Ostfriesischen Sprache, by J. ten D. Koolman. The E. Friesic word Back. is also ballast, and may be explained as compounded of bal (the same word with E. bale, evil), and last, a load. In this case ballast = baleload, i. e. useless load, unprofitable lading. This view is possible, yet not convincing; it does not account for the Dan. baglast, which looks like an older form. [*]

BALLLET, a sort of dance. (F.) Modern; from F. ballet, a little dance; dimin. of F. bal, a dance. See Ball (1). BALLOON, a large spherical bag. (F., -G.) Formerly balowne, baloon: see quotations in Richardson from Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, pt. ii. sec. 2, and Eastward Hoe, Act i. sc. 1. In both instances it means a ball used in a game resembling football. Not from Span. balon, a football, but from F. ballon; the ending -on is augmentative; the sense is 'a large ball.' See Ball (2). The game of baloon is better known by the Italian name pallone, which Diez says is from the O. H. G. form pallá, pallo, the earlier form of G. ball, a ball.

BALLOT, a mode of voting, for which little balls were used. (F.) 'They would never take their balls to ballot [vote] against him; North's Plutarch, p. 927 (R.) - F. ballotter, to choose lots (Cotgrave); from ballotte, ballotte, a little ball used in voting (Cotgrave), a word used by Montaigne (Brachet). The ending -otte is diminutive. See Ball (2).

BALM, an aromatic plant. (F.,-Gk.) The spelling has been modified so as to bring it nearer to balsam; the spelling balm occurs in Chapman's Homer, b. xvi. 624 (R.), but the M. E. form is baume or baums; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 596; spelt bams, Ancren Riwle, p. 164; spelt balsme, Gower, C. A. iii. 315. The derivative enhaums occurs in P. Plowman, B. xvii. 70. - O. F. bausme. - Lat. balsamum. -Gk. βάλσαμον, the fragrant resin of the balsam-tree; from βάλσα-μου, a balsam-tree. Der. balm-y. Doublet, balsam. [†] BALSAM, an aromatic plant (Timon, iii. 5. 110). See Balm.

BALUSTER, a rail of a staircase, a small column. (F., - Ital., -Gk.) Evelyn (Of Architecture) speaks of 'rails and balusters;' Dryden has balluurred, i.e. provided with balusters, Art of Poetry, canto i. 1. 54; Mason has balustrade, English Garden, b. ii (R.)-F. balustre; Cotgrave has: 'Balustres, ballisters, little, round, and short pillars, ranked on the outside of cloisters, terraces;' &c. He also has : ' Balustre, Balauste, the blossome, or flower of the wild pomgranet tree.'-Ital. balaustro, a baluster, small pillar; so called from a fancied similarity in form to that of the pomegranate flower. - Ital. balausto, balausta, balaustra, the flower of the wild pomegranate tree. - Lat. balaustium. - Gk. Balavorior, the flower of the wild pomegranate; Dioscorides. Allied, I suppose, to Gk. βάλανοs, an acom, ing the articles on Balk (1), Bar, Barrier. BALL (1), a dance. (F.,-L.) Used by Dryden, tr. of Lucretius, Curtius, ii. 76. The derivation is from the European GAL, to cause

Mr. Wedgwood supposes the contrary, and would derive baraustre from vara, a rod. But he does not account for the termination -austre. BALUSTRADE, a row of balusters. (F.,-Ital.) Modern.

Borrowed from F. balustrade. - Ital. balaustrata, furnished with balusters, as if pp. of a verb balaustrare, to furnish with balusters. See Baluster.

BAMBOO, a sort of woody Indian reed. (Malay.) 'They raise their houses upon arches or posts of bamboos, that be large reeds; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 360. – Malay bambū, the name of the plant; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 47. [†] BAMBOOZLE, to trick, cajole. (A cant word.) The quotations point to the original sense as being to cajole by confusing the senses, to confuse, to obfuscate. It occurs in Swift, Hist. of John Bull, and in Arbuthnot, who talks of 'a set of fellows called barterers and bamboozlers, who play such tricks.' In the Tatler, no. 31, is the remark : 'But, sir, I perceive this is to you all bamboozling,' i. e. unintelligible trickery. The word to bam, i. e. to cheat, is, apparently, a contraction of it, and not the original; but this is uncertain. It is obviously a cant word, and originated in thieves' slang. Webster and the Slang Dictionary assign it to the Gipsies. ¶ In Awdelay's Fratemity of Vagabonds, ed. Furnivall, the phrase 'bene bouse' means 'good drink,' bene being a common slang word for good, and bouse the same for drink. At p. 86 of that work is the saying that 'bene bouse makes nase nabes,' i. e. that a good drink makes a drunken head. Could bamboozle have meant ' to treat to a good drink ?' Of course, this is but a guess.

BAN, a proclamation; pl. BANNS. (E.) M. E. ban, Rob. of Glouc. p. 187. Cf. M. E. bannien, bannen, to prohibit, curse; Laya-mon, ii. 497; Gower, C. A. ii. 96. [Though the Low Lat. bannum and O. F. ban are found (both being derived from the O. H. G. bannan, or pannen, to summon. from the sb. ban or pan, a summons), the word is to be considered as E., the G. word being cognate.]-A.S. geoans, a proclamation, in Ælfric's Hom. i. 30. Cf. ' $\beta$ a het se cyng abannan út ealne þeódscipe' = then the king commanded to order out (assemble) all the population; A.S. Chron. A. D. 1006. +Du. ban, excommunication; bannen, to exile. + Icel. and Swed. bann, a ban; banna, to chide. + Dan. band, a ban; bande, to curse. \beta. Fick connects ban with Lat. fama, fari, from  $\checkmark$  BHAN, to speak, i. 156. Cf. Skt. bhan, to speak, related to bhash, to speak. See Bandit, Banish, Abandon. 4 Hence pl. banns, spelt banes in Sir T. More, Works, p. 434 g.

BANANA, the plantain tree, of the genus Musa. (Span.) Borrowed from Span. banana, the fruit of the plantain or banana-tree; the tree itself is called in Spanish banano. Probably of West-Indian origin.

BAND (1), also BOND, a fastening, ligature. (E.) M. E. bond, band, Prompt. Parv. p. 43; Ormulum, 1981. – A. S. bend, a modification of band, Mat. xi. 22. + O. Friesic band (which shews the true form). + Du. band, a bond, tie. + Icel. and Swed. band. + Dan. baand. + Goth. bandi. + G. band; O. H. G. pant. + Skt. bandha, a binding, tie, fetter; from Skt. bhand, to bind. See Bind. Der. band-age, band-box. But quite unconnected with bondage, q. v.

BAND (2), a company of men.  $(F_{.,-}G_{.})$ Not found in this sense in M. E. Shak. has: 'the sergeant of the band;' Com. of Errors, iv. 3. 30; also banding as a pres. pt., 1 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 81.-F. 'bande, a band; also, a band, a company of soldiers, a troop, or crue;' Cot. - G. bande, a gang, set, band. - G. binden, to bind. See Bind. Der. band, vb.; band-ed, band-ing, band-master; and see bandy. Thus band, a bond, and band, a company, are ultimately the same, though the one is E., and the other F. from G.

BANDIT, a robber; prop. an outlaw. (Ital.) Bandite occurs in Comus. 1. 426, and bandetto in Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 135. Borrowed from Ital. bandito, outlawed, pp. of bandire, to proscribe. - Low Lat. bandire, to proclaim; formed (with excrescent d) from bannire, with the same sense. - Low Lat. bannum, a proclamation. See Ban, Banish.

BANDOG, a large dog, held in a band or else tied up. (E.) Originally band-dog. Sir T. More, Works, p. 586 c, has bandedogges. Prompt. Parv. p. 43, has 'Bondogge, or bonde dogge, Molosus;' and Way in a note, quotes 'A bande doge, Molosus;' Cath. Angl. So also: 'Hic molosus, a banddogge,' Wright's Vocab. i. 187; also spelt bonddoge, id. p. 251. 'A bandogge, can is catenarius' = a chained dog; Levins, Manip. Vocab. p. 157. See Band (1) and Dog. BANDY, to beat to and fro, to contend. (F., -G.) Shak. has bandy, to contend, Tit. And. i. 312; but the older sense is to beat to was formerly also spelt band, as in 'To band the ball;' G. Turbervile, To his Friend P., Of Courting and Tenys. The only difficulty is to Riwle, p. 300. - O. F. baniere; cf. Prov. bandiera. - Low Lat. banderia, to fall, to cast (Gk. Bállaur, to cast, Skt. gal, to trickle down, fall away). - A GAR, to fall away; cf. Skt. gri, to eject, gara, a fluid. See Fick, i. 73, 568. Der. balustr-ade, q. v. The Span. barau-tre, a baluster, stands alone, and must be a corruption of balaustre. also gives: 'Iouer à bander et à racler contre, to bandy against, at tennis; and, by metaphor, to pursue with all insolence, rigour, extremity.' Also: 'Se bander contre, to bandie or oppose himselfe against, with his whole power; or to joine in league with others against.' Also: 'Ils se bandent à faire un entreprise, they are plot[t]ing a conspiracie together.' B. The word is therefore the same as that which appears as band, in the phrase 'to band together.' The F. bander is derived from the G. band, a band, a tie, and also includes the sense of G. bande, a crew, a gang; and these are from G. binden, cognate with E. bind. See Bind. BANDY-LEGGED, crook-legged. (F. and E.) Swift (in R.) has: 'Your bandy leg, or crooked nose;' Furniture of a Woman's Mind. The prefix bandy is merely borrowed from the F. bandé, bent, spoken of a bow. Bandt is the pp. of F. bander, explained by Cotgrave as 'to bend a bow; also, to bind, ... tie with bands.' He has (a) to bend it by stringing it. - G. band, a band. - G. binden, to bind. See Bind. I Observe that the resemblance of bandy to E. bent is deceiving, since the word is not English, but French; yet it happens that bands is the F. equivalent of bent, because bend is also derived from bind. See Bond. [+] BAINE, harm, destruction. (E.) M. E. bane, Chaucer, C. T. 1099. -A. S. bana, a murderer. + Icel. bani, death, a slayer. + Dan. and Swed. bane, death. + Goth. banja, a wound. + Gk. poros, murder; poreie, a murderer; from Gk. 4 4EN; Curtius, i. 372. - 4 BHAN, to kill (?); see Fick, i. 690. Der. bane-ful, bane-ful-ly.

BANG (1), to beat violently. (Scand.) Shak. has bang'd; Tw. Night, iii. 2. 24. - Icel. bang, a hammering. + Dan. bank, a beating ; banke, to beat. + O. Swed. bdng, a hammering. ¶ Perhaps related to Skt. bhanj, to split, break, destroy; see Fick, s. v. bhag, i. 155, who cites O. Irish bong, to break.

BANG (2), a narcotic drug. (Persian.) Bang, the name of drug, is an importation from the East. – Pers. bang, an inebriating draught, hashish; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 93. Cf. Skt. bhanga, the bains made from the wild hemp (Webster). The hemp; the drug being made from the wild hemp (Webster). The Skt. bhangá is a fem. form of the adj. bhanga, breaking, from bhanj, to break. ¶ Prob. introduced by the Portuguese; 'they call it in Portuguese banga;' Capt. Knox (A. D. 1681), in Arber's Eng. Garner, i. 403.

BANISH, to outlaw, proscribe. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. banishen, Chaucer, Kn. Tale, 1728. O. F. bassir, bassir (with suffix -isk due to the -iss- which occurs in conjugating a F. verb of that form ; answering to the Lat. inchoative suffix -isc-, -esc-). - Low Lat. bannire, to proscribe; from a Teutonic source. - O. H. G. bannan, pannan, to summon. - O. H. G. ban, pan, a proclamation. See Ban. Der. banish-ment.

BANISTERS, staircase railings. (F.,-Ital.,-Gk.) Modern. A corruption of balusters ; see Baluster.

BANK (1), a mound of earth. (E.) M. E. banke, P. Plowman, B. v. 521. The early history of the word is obscure; the A.S. bane B. v. 521. (Somner) is a probable form, but not supported. Still we find boncke in Layamon, 25185, and bankes in Ormulum, 9210. + Icel. bakki (for banki), a bank. + O. H. G. panch, a bank; also, a bench. ¶ The word is, in fact, a doublet of bench. The oldest sense seems to have been 'ridge;' whence bank, a ridge of earth, a shelf of earth; and bench, a shelf of wood, used either as a table or a seat. See Bench. (Perhaps further connected with back, q. v.) [†] BANK (2), a place for depositing money. (F, -G)

Bank is in Udall, on Luke, c. 19. - F. banque, a money-changer's table or bench ; see Cotgrave. - M. H. G. bane, a bench, table. See Bonch; and see above. Der. bank-er, q. v.; bank-rupt, q. v.; bank-rupt-cy. BANKER, a money-changer. (F., with E. suffix.) Banker occurs in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1385 h. It is formed from bank, with E. suffix -er. Cf. 'Banker, scamnarium, amphitaba ;' Prompt. Parv.

BANKRUPT, one unable to pay just debts. (F.) M. E. banke-rouple, Sir T. More, Works, p. 881 f. The word has been modified by a knowledge of its relation to the Lat. ruptus, but was originally French rather than Latin. The true French word, too, was banquerouttier (Cotgrave), formed from banqueroutte, which properly meant 'a breaking or becoming bankrupt;' i.e. bankruptcy. The latter was introduced into French in the 16th cent, from Ital. banca rotta (Brachet) .- Ital. banca, a bench; and rotta, broken.- M. H. G. banc, a bench ; and Lat. ruptus, broken, pp. of rumpere, to break. See Bank (2), and Bench; also Rupture. ¶ The usual account a banner. - Low Lat. bandum, a standard; with suffix -eria. - M. H. G. band or bant, a band, strip of cloth; hence, something bound to a pole. - M. H. G. bindan, to bind. See Bind. Cf. also Span. banda, a sash, a ribbon (also from G. band); and perhaps Goth. bandwo, a signal, bandwa, a token; from the same root.

BANNERET, a knight of a higher class, under the rank of a baron. (F.,-G.) F. banneret, which Cotgrave explains as 'a Banneret, or Knight banneret, a title, the priviledge whereof was to have a banner of his own for his people to march and serve under, &c. Properly a dimin. of banner. See above. [†] BANNOCK, a kind of flat cake. (C.) Lowland Sc. bannock. – Gael. bannach, a cake. – Gael. bann, a base, foundation, the sole of the is strict, but partly proceeds by guess, on the supposition that the flat cake was named from resembling a flat sole of a shoe; cf. Lat. solea, (1) the sole, (1) a certain flat fish. The Gael. bonn na coise means the sole of the foot ; ' bonn broige, ' the sole of a shoe.'

The plural of BANNS, a proclamation of marriage. (E.)

Ban, q. v. BANQUET, a feast. (F., -G.) Banquet occurs in Hall's Chron. Henry V, an. 2. The more usual form in old authors is banket. - F. bonquet, which Cotgrave explains as 'a banket; also a feast,' &cc. The word has reference to the table on which the feast is spread (or, as some say, with less likelihood, to the benches of the guests), and is a dimin. of F. bane, a bench, a table, with dimin. suffix -et.-M. H. G. banc, a bench, a table. See Bonch.

BANTAM, a kind of fowl. (Java.) The bantam fowl is said to have been brought from Bantam, the name of a place in Java, at the western extremity of the island.

BANTER, to mock or jeer at; mockery. (F.?) • When wit hath any mixture of raillery, it is but calling it banter, and the work is done. This polite word of theirs was first borrowed from the bullies in White Friars, then fell among the footmen, and at last retired to the pedants; but if this bantering, as they call it, be so despicable a thing,' &c.; Swift, Tale of a Tub; Author's Apology. Ranterer occurs A. D. 1709, in the Tatler, No. 12. Origin un-known; apparently slang. ¶ The etymology from F. badiner is incredible. Rather I would suppose it to have been a mere corruption of bandy, a term used in tennis, and so easily transferred to street talk and slang. Cf. F. bander, to bandy, at tennis; Cotgrave adds: 'Jouer à bander et à racler contre, to bandy against, at tennis; and by metaphor, to pursue with all insolence, rigour, extremity." See Bandy. [+]

BANTLING, an infant. (E.) Occurs in Drayton's Pastorals, ecl. 7; where Cupid is called the 'wanton bandling' of Venus. A corruption of bandling, no doubt, though this form has not been found, owing to the fact that it must soon have been corrupted in common speech; cf. partridge from F. perdrix, and see Mätzner, Gramm. i. 129, for the change from d to t. Bandling means 'one wrapped in swaddling bands;' formed from band, q. v., by help of the dimin. suffix -ling, which occurs in foudling, nursling, firstling, sopling, nestling, &cc. See Band, and Bind.

BANYAN, a kind of tree. (Skt.) Sir T. Herbert, in describing the religion of 'the Bannyans' of India, proceeds to speak of 'the bannyan trees,' which were esteemed as sacred; ed. 1665, p. 51. The bannyans were merchants, and the bannyan-trees (an English, not a native, term) were used as a sort of market-place, and are (I am told) still so used. - Skt. banij, a merchant; banijya, trade. [+] BAOBAB, a kind of large tree. (W. African.) Garner, i. 441. The native name; in Senegal. In Arber's Eng.

BAPTIZE, v. to christen by dipping. (F., - Gk.) Formerly baptise was the commoner form; it occurs in Rob. of Glonc., ed. Hearne, p. 86. [The sb. bapriste occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 160; and baptisme in Gower, C. A. i. 189.] - O. F. baptiser. - Lat. baptizore. -Gk. βαπτίζειν; from βάπτειν, to dip. See & GAP in Fick, i. 69; and Curtius, ii. 75. Der. baptist (Gk. Barriorn's, a dipper); baptism

(Gk. Bárropa, a dipping); and bapist-er-y. BAR, a rail, a stiff rod. (F., -C.) M. E. barre, Chaucer, Prol. 1075; Havelok, 1794.-O. F. barre, of Celtic origin.-Bret. barren. a bar; bar, barr, the branch of a tree. + W. bar, a bar, rail. + Gael. and Irish barra, a bar, spike. + Corn. bara, verb, to bar. [Cf. also O. H. G. para, M. H. G. bar, a beam ; M. H. G. barre, a barrier. Diez  $\beta$ . The original sense prefers the Celtic to the Teutonic origin.] is, probably, 'a thing cut,' a shaped piece of wood ; from  $\checkmark$  BHAR, to cut, pierce, bore, whence also E. bore. See further under Bore, and Balk. Der. barricade, q. v., barrier, q. v.; barrister, q. v.; prob. barrel, q. v.; and see embarrass.

BARB(1), the hook on the point of an arrow.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$  Merely the Lat. barba, a beard. Cotgrave has: 'Barbelé, bearded; also, full of snags, snips, jags, notches ; whence flesche barbelee, a bearded or barbed arrow.'-F. barbe.-Lat. barba, the beard. See Barbel. Barber, and Beard.

BARB (1), a Barbary horse. (F., - Barbary.) Barbe, a Barbery horse.' Named from the country Cotgrave has:

BARBAROUS, uncivilized. (L., -Gk.) M. E. barbar, barbarik, a barbarian; Wyclif's Bible, Col. iii. 11, 1 Cor. xiv. 11. Afterwards barbarous, in closer imitation of the Latin. - Lat. barbarus. - Gk. βάρβαροs, foreign; cf. Lat. balbus, stammering. β. The name was applied by Greeks to foreigners to express the strange sound of their language; see Curtius, i. 362; Fick, i. 684. Dor. barbar-ian, bar-bar-ic, barbar-i:-y, barbar-ise, barbar-ism, barbar-ous-ness.

BARBED, accoutred; said of a horse. (F.,-Scand.) Shak. has: 'barbed steeds;' Rich. III, i. 1. 10. Also spelt barded, the older form; it occurs in Berners' tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 41. Cotgrave has: 'Bardé, m. -ée, f. barbed, or trapped as a great horse.'-F. barde, horse-armour. - Icel. bard, a brim of a helmet; also, the beak or armed prow of a ship of war; from which sense it was easily transferred so as to be used of horses furnished with spiked plates on ¶ This Icel. word bard is cognate both with their foreheads. E. barb (1) and E. beard; see Cleasby and Vigfusson. Hence the spellings barbed and barded are both correct.

BARBEL, a kind of fish. (F.,-L.) 'Barbylle fysch, barbell fische, barbyllus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 24.-O. F. barbel, F. barbeau. Cotgrave has both forms, and defines barbeau as ' the river barbell . . Cograve has both forms, and comes day where a barbel is cf. barbula. a little beard. i - Lat. barbelus, dimin. of barbus, a barbel ; cf. barbula. a little beard, dimin. of barba, a beard. ¶ The fish is so called because it is furnished, near the mouth, with four barbels or beard-like appendages (Webster). See Barb (1). BARBER, one who shaves the beard. (F., -L.) M. E. barbour, Chaucer, C. T. 2025 (Kn. Ta.). -O. F. barbier, a barber. - F. barbe, the beard, with suffix of agent. - Lat. barba, the beard; which is cognate with E. beard; Fick, i. 684. See Beard. BARBERRY, BERBERRY, a shrub. (F.,-Arabic.) Cot-grave has: 'Berberis, the barbarie-tree.' The Eng. word is borrowed from French, which accounts for the loss of final s. The M. E. barbaryn (Prompt. Parv.) is adjectival. - Low Lat. berberis, the name of the shrub. - Arab. barbaris, the barberry-tree; Richardson's Dict., p. 256. Cf. Pers. barbarí, a barberry; Turkish barbarís, a gooseberry; ibid. ¶ This is an excellent example of accommodated spelling; the change of the two final syllables into berry makes them signifi-cant, but leaves the first syllable meaningless. The spelling berberry is the more logical, as answering to the French and Latin. Berbery would be still better; the word cannot claim three r's.

BARBICAN, an outwork of a fort. (F.,-Low Lat.) ME barbican, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 1591; Gawain and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, l. 793. - O. F. barbacane (Roquefort). - Low Lat. barbacana, an outwork; a word of unknown origin. [Not A.S.] ¶ Brachet says that it was adopted from Arabic barbak-khaneh, a rampart, a word which is not in Richardson's Arab. and Pers. Dict., and which appears to have been coined for the occasion. Diez derives it from Pers. bálá-khána, upper chamber, which is far from satisfactory. BARD, a poet. (C.) Selden speaks of 'bardish impostures; 'On Drayton's Polyolbion; Introduction. Borrowed from the Celtic; W. bardd, Irish bard, Gaelic bard, a poet; so too Corn. bardh, Bret. barz. B. Perhaps the word orig. meant 'speaker;' cf. Skt. bhash, to speak. Dor. bard-ic.

BARE, naked. (E.) M. E. bar, bare, Owl and Nightingale, 547. -A. S. bær, bare, Grein, i. 77. + Icel. berr, bare, naked. + O. H. G. par (G. bar), bare. + Lith. basas, bosus, bare-footed. B. The older form was certainly bas-; and it probably meant 'shining;' cf. Skt. bhás (also bhá), to shine. See Fick, iii. 209, 210. Der. bare-ness, bare-faced, bare-headed, bare-footed.

BARGAIN, to chaffer. (F.) M. E. bargayn, sb., Chaucer, Prol. 282; Robert of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 270. - O. F. bargaigner, barginer, to chaffer. - Low Lat. barcaniare, to change about, shift, shuffle. Origin uncertain; Diez and Burguy refer the Low Lat. form, without hesitation, to Low Lat. barea, a barque or boat for merchandise, but fail to explain the latter portion of the word. See below. BARGE, a sort of boat. (F., -Gk.) M. E. barge, Chaucer, Prol.

BARK (1), BARQUE, a sort of ship. (F., -Gk.) These are mere varieties of the same word as the above. Hackluyt has barke, Voyages, vol. ii. p. 227; which is clearly borrowed from F. barque. Cot-E 2

grave has 'Barque, a barke, little ship, great boat.'-Low Lat. barca, a sort of ship. ¶ Brachet points out that the F. barque, though derived from Lat. barca (a little boat, in Isidore of Seville), was not derived immediately, but through the Span. or Ital. barca. For further details, see Barge. [+] BARK (2), the rind of a tree. (Scand.) M. E. barke, P. Plow-

BARK (2), the rind of a tree. (Scand.) M. E. barke, P. Plowman, B. xi. 251; bark, Legends of Holy Rood, p. 68.-Swed. bark, rind. + Dan. bark. + Icel. börkr (from the stem bark). ¶ It is tempting to connect these with Icel. bjarga, to save, protect; Goth. bairgan, to hide, preserve; but the connection is not quite clear.

barrgan, to more, preserve; but the connection is not quite clear. BARK (3), to yelp as a dog. (E.) M. E. berke, Will. of Palerne, ed. Skeat, l. 35. – A. S. beorcan, Grein, i. 106; borcian, i. 132. + Icel. berkja, to bark, to bluster.  $\beta$ . By the metathesis of r (common in English, see Bride), the word is easily seen to be a variant of brecan, to break, to crack, to snap, used of a sudden noise; cf. the cognate Lat. fragor, a crash.  $\gamma$ . That this is no fancy is sufficiently shewn by the use of A. S. brecan in the sense of 'to roar,' Grein, i. 137; cf. Icel. braka, to creak as timber does. Hence we also find M. E. brake used in the sense 'to vomit;' as in 'Brakyn, or castyn, or spewe, Vomo, evomo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 47. See Break. Fick suggests a connection with Skt. barh, to roar as an elephant (i. 151), which is, after all, less likely. [†] all, less likely. [†] BARLEY, a kind of grain. (E.) M. E. barli, Wycl. Exod. ix. 31; barli, Ormulum, 15511. – A. S. barlic, A. S. Chron., an. 1124; formed from A. S. bere, barley (Lowland Scottish bear), and lic. put compare with bara, bread, and llysiau, plants (collectively); a name imitated from the A.S. + Lat. far, corn. See bharas in Fick, i. 692. [The Gothic has the adj. barizeins, made of barley, which could only come from a sb. baris, barley, the same word with the A. S. bere.] See Farina, Leek, and Garlic.

BARM (1), yeas, (E.) M. E. berme, Chaucer, C. T. 12741. – A. S. beorma, Luke, xiii. 21. + Du. berm. + Swed. bärma. + Dan. bærme, dregs, lees. + G. bärme, yeast. B. Cf. Lat. fermentum, yeast; from feruere, to boil; E. brew. The root is not BHAR, to bear, but BHUR, to be unquiet, to start, of which there may have been an older form bhar. See Fick, i. 163; Curtius, i. 378, who connects feruere with  $\varphi p \epsilon a \rho$ , a well, and with E. bourn, a spring. See Bourn, Brew.

BARN, a place for storing grain. (E.) M. E. berne, Chaucer, C. T. 12997. – A. S. bern, Luke, iii. 17; a contracted form of ber-ern, which occurs in the Old Northumbrian version of the same passage; thus the Lindisfarme MS. glosses Lat. 'aream' by 'ber-ern vel bereflor.' A compound word; from A. S. bere, barley, and ern, a house or place for storing, which enters into many other compounds; see Grein, i. 228. See Barton, Barley. Der. barnedoor.

BARNACLE (1), a species of goose. (Lat.?) 'A barnacle, bird, chelonalops;' Levins, 6. 2. Ducange has 'Bernacæ, aves aucis palustribus similes,' with by-forms bernacelæ, bernes.hæ, bernestæ, and bernickæ. Cotgrave has 'Bernaque, the fowle called a barnacle.' B. The history of the word is very obscure; but see the account in Max Müller's Lectures on the Science of Language, 8th ed. ii. 602. His theory is that the birds were Irish ones, i. e. aves Hibernicæ or Hiberniculæ; that the first syllable was dropped, as in Low Lat. bernagium for hybernagium, &c.; and that the word was assimilated to the name of a shell-fish. See Barnacle (2). BARNACLE (2), a sort of small shell-fish. (Lat.) Spelt

BARNACLE (2), a sort of small shell-fish. (Lat.) Spelt bernacles by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. vi. c. 28. § 17. – Lat. bernacula, probably for pernacula, dimin. of perna; see this discussed in Max Müller, Lect. on the Science of Language, 8th ed. ii. 584. – Lat. perna, used by Pliny, Nat. Hist. 32. 55: 'Appellantur et pernæ concharum generis, circa Pontias insulas frequentissimæ. Stant velut suillo crure longe in arena defixæ, hiantesque, qua limpitudo est, pedali non minus spatio, cibum venantur. – Gk. mépra, lit. a ham. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood compares Gael. bairneach, a limpet; Welsh brenig, a limpet; and proposes the Manx bayrn, a cap, 'as the etymon.' R. Williams says, however, that Corn. brennic, limpets, is regularly formed from bron, the breast; from the shape. [†]

BARNACLES, spectacles; also, irons put on the noses of horses to keep them quiet. (F., – Prov., – L.) 'Barnacles, an instrument set on the nose of unruly horses; 'Baret; and see Levins. Apparently corrupted from prov. F. berniques, used in the dialect of Berri (see Vocab. du Berri) instead of O. F. bericles, used by Rabelais to mean a pair of spectacles (see Cotgrave). See the word discussed in Max Müller, Lect. on the Science of Language, 8th ed. ii. 583. The O. F. bericle is, again, a diminutive of Provençal berille. – Lat. beryllus, bervl, crystal; of which spectacles were made; cf. G. brille, spectacles. See Boryl. [+]

BAROMETER, an instrument for measuring the weight of the air. (Gk.) Not in early use. It occurs in Glanvill, Ess. 3 (R.). Boyle has barometrical; Works, vol. ii. p. 798; and so Johnson, Rambler, no. 117. Either Englished from F. baromètre, or at once made from the Gk. – Gk. Bapo, put for Bápos, weight; and µérpor, a measure. The Gk. Bapós, heavy, is cognate with Lat. grauis, heavy; Curtius, i. 77. See Grave and Mete. Der. barometric-al. BARON, a title of dignity. (F., – O. H. G.) M. E. baron, Rob. of Glouc. p. 125 (see Koch, Eng. Gram. iii. 154); barun, Old Eng.

BARON, a title of dignity. (F., -0. H. G.) M. E. baron, Rob. of Glouc. p. 125 (see Koch, Eng. Gram. iii. 154); barum, Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 35. - F. baron (Norman F. barum, see Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson, I. 134, and note to 1. 301).  $\beta$ . The final -on is a mere suffix, and the older form is bar; both bar and baron meaning, originally, no more than 'man' or 'husband.' Diez quotes from Raynouard the O. Proven(al phrase—'lo bar non es creat per la femna, mas la femna per lo baro'= the man was not created for the woman, but the woman for the man.'-O. H. G. bar, a man; originally, in all probability, a bearer, porter (cf. Low Lat. baro in the sense of vassal, servant); cf. G. suffix-bar, bearing; from  $\checkmark$  BHAR, to carry. See Bear. Der. baron-age, baron-y, baron-et, baron-et-y. BAROUCHE, a sort of carriage. (G.,-Ital.) The word is not properly French; but G. barutsche modified so as to present a French property French; but G. barwische modined so as to present a French appearance. The German word is borrowed from Ital. baroccio, commonly (and more correctly) spelt biroccio, a chariot.  $\beta$ . Originally, biroccio meant a two-wheeled car, from Lat. birotus, two-wheeled; with the ending modified so as to resemble Ital. carroccio, a carriage, from carro, a car. - Lat. bi-, double; and rota, a wheel, allied to Skt. ratha, a wheeled chariot.  $\P$  The F. form is browette, a dimin. of berowe\*, standing for Lat. birotus. See Browette in Brachet. [†]

BARRACKS, soldiers' lodgings. (F., - Ital., -C.?) A modern word; Rich. quotes from Swift's Letters and Blackstone, Comment. bk. i. c. 13. – F. baraque, a barrack, introduced in 16th century from Ital. baracca, a tent (Brachet).  $\beta$ . Origin undetermined. Koch (iii. pt. ii. p. 99) suggests the base BAR, quoting Ducange, who says, 'barræ dicuntur repagula ac septa ad munimentum oppidorum et castrorum, vel ad eorum introitus ac portas posita, ne inconsultis custodibus in eas aditus quibusvis pateat.' The original barracks were, if this be admitted, quarters hastily fortified by palisades. This supposition is made almost certain when we remember that bar (q. v.) is a Celtic word; and that the termination -ak (answering to Bret. -ek, Gael. -ack) is also Celtic. The Bret. bar is the branch of a tree; whence barrack, full of branches, branching. So Gael. barr, a top, spike; barrack, top branches, of trees, brushwood; barrachad, a hut or booth (presumably of branches). See Bar.

BARREL, a wooden cask. (F., -C.) M. E. barel, Chaucer, C. T. Group B, l. 3083 (ed. Tyrw. 13899). Spelt barell, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 28. - O. F. bareil, a barrel. B. Brachet says ' origin unknown;' Diez and Scheler suppose the derivation to be from O. F. barre, a bar; as if the barrel were looked upon as composed of bars or staves. Barrel seems to be also a Celtic word; cf. W. baril, Gael. baraill, Irish bairile, Manx barrel, Corn. balliar; and this strengthens the suggested derivation, as we also find W. bar, Gael. barra, a bar, and Corn. bara, to bar. See Bar.

BARREN, sterile. (F.) M. E. barein, Chaucer, C. T. 1977; barain, Ancren Riwle, p. 158.-O. F. baraigne, brehaigne (F. brehaigne), barren. ¶ Etym. unknown; the usual guess is, from Breton bree'han, sterile; but there is little to shew that this is a true Celtic word, or that the spelling brehaigne is older than baraigne. BARRICADE, a hastily made fortification; also, as a verb, to fortify hastily. (F., -Span.) 'The bridge, the further end of which was barricaded with barrells;' Hackluyt, Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 143. - F. barricade, in Cotgrave barriquade, which he explains as 'a barricado, a defence of barrels, timber, pales, earth, or stones, heaped up, or closed together,' &c. B. The F. verb was barriquer, formed directly from barrique, a large barrel. But the F. sb. is clearly a mere borrowing from the Span. barricado, and the Span. spelling appears in English also; e.g. 'having barricado dup their way;' Hackluyt, Voyages, iii. 568. The Span. barricado up their way;' Hackluyt, Voyages, iii. 568. The Span. barricado and the Span. spelling appears in English also; e.g. 'having barricado and the Span. spelling appears in English also; e.g. 'having barricado is formed as a pp. from a vb. barricare, which from barrica, a barrel. Probably from Span. barra, a bar. See Bar; and cf. Barrel. [†] BARRIER, a boundary. (F., -C.) M. E. barrere, in Lydgate, Siege of Thebes, pt. iii. l. 223.-F. barriere, a barrier. -O. F. barrer, to bar up.-O. F. barre, a bar, from a Celtic source. See Bar.

BARRISTER, one who pleads at the bar. (Low Lat.) The earliest quotation is from Holland, Plutarch, p. 138. Formed from the sb. bar, with suffixes -ist- and -arius; see Haldemann's Affixes, pp. 118, 172. This would give Low Lat. barristarius; Spelman quotes it in the form barrasterius, which seems less correct. See Bar.

BARROW (1), a burial-mound. (C.?) Sherwood, in his index to Cotgrave, has: 'A barrow, a hillock, monseau de terre: 'M.E. bergh, a hill, P. Plowman, B. vi. 70. 'Hul vel beoruh,' i. e. a hill or barrow, Wright's Vocab. i. 192.-A.S. beorh, beorg, (1) a hill, (2) a grave-mound; Grein, i. 106. – A. S. beorgan, to hide, protect. See Bury. ¶ We find also Icel. bjarg, a large stone, a precipice. It is most probable that the A.S. beorg in the sense of 'grave-mound' was really an adaptation of some Celtic word; cf. Gael. barpa, a conical heap of stones, a cairn, barrow; also barrach, high-topped, heaped up ; evidently from Gael. barr, a top, point, a common Celtic root, as seen in Corn., W., and Bret. bar, a top.

BARROW (2), a wheelbarrow. (E.) M.E. barow, barowe, Prompt. Parv. pp. 25, 105. – A.S. berewe (an unauthorised form); see Bosworth, Lye, Somner. Evidently formed, like arrow, with suffix -eve; from the stem ber-; i. e. from the verb beran, to bear, carry; so that the signification is 'a vehicle.' See Bear, Bier.

BARTER, to traffic. (F.) M. E. bartryn, to chaffer; Prompt. Parv. - O. F. bareter, barater; thus Cotgrave has 'Barater, to cheat, couzen, beguile ... also, to truck, scourse, barter, exchange.' = O. F. sb. bara, which Cotgrave explains by 'cheating, deceit; also a bar-ter, &c.' See note to Vie de Seint Auban, 1.995. B. The sug-gestion of Diez, connecting barat with the Gk. mpdoget, to do, is valueless. The common meaning of baret in M. E. is 'strife;' yet the Icel. barátta, strife, does not seem to be a true Scandinavian word; and it is more reasonable to suggest a Celtic origin; cf. Gael. bàir, strife; Welsh bár, wrath; barog, wrathful; Bret. bár, that which comes with violence; baramzer, a hurricane; barrad, the same as bar ; barradarne, a tempest. [+]

BARTON, a courtyard, manor; used in provincial English and in place-names and surnames. (E.) A compound word; from Old Northumbrian bere-tum, which occurs as a gloss for Lat. aream in the Lindisfarne MS., Matt. iii. 12. From A. S. bere, barley; and tun, a BARYTA, a heavy earth. (Gk.) Modern. So named from its weight. - Gk. βαρίνη, weight. - Gk. βαρίνη, weight. - Gk. βαρίνη, weight. Lat. gravis. See Grave. Der. baryt-es, sulphate of baryta (unless baryta is derived from barytes, which looks more likely); baryt-ic.

BARYTONE, a grave tone, a deep tone; used of a male voice. (Ital., -Gk.) Also spelt baritone. An Italian musical term. - Ital. toriore, a baritone. -Gk. Bapirs, heavy (hence deep); and rivos, tone. The Gk. Bapirs is the Lat. grauis, grave. See Grave and Tone.

BASALT, a kind of rock. (F., -L.) F. basalte. - Lat. basaltes, a dark and very hard species of marble in Ethiopia, an African word.

 BASE (1), hard species of matter in the part of the p bas, shallow, low, flat; Corn. bas, shallow, esp. used of shallow water; Bret. baz, shallow (used of water). Also Corn. basse, to fall, lower, abate; W. basu, to make shallow, to lower. C. However, Diez regards bassus as a genuine Latin word, meaning 'stout, fat' rather than 'short, low;' he says, and truly, that Bassus was a Lat. personal name at an early period. Der. base-ness, base-minded, &cc.; a-base, a-base-ment; de-base; base-ment (F. sou-bassement, Ital. bassamento, lit. abasement). And see Bass (1).

BASE (2), a foundation. (F., -L., -Gk.) M.E. bas, baas; Chaucer, on the Astrolable, ed. Skeat, ii. 41. 2; ii. 43. 2. – F. base. – Lat. basis. –Gk.  $\beta \dot{\alpha} \sigma s$ , a going, a pedestal. –  $\sqrt{\beta}$  BA, to go, where  $\beta$  stands for g; cf. Skt.  $g \dot{\alpha}$ , to go (Curtius). –  $\sqrt{\beta}$  GA or GAM, to go; Fick, i. 63. Der. base-less, base-line. Doublet, basis.

BASEMENT, lowest floor of a building. (F., - Ital.) Appears in F. as soubassement, formerly sousbassement; a word made in the 16th cent., from sous, under, and bassement, borrowed from Ital. bassamento, of which the lit. sense is 'abasement' (Brachet). Thus it belongs to the adj. base, not to the sb. See Base (1). BASENET, BASNET, a light helmet. (F.) M. E. basenet, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 1. 31.-O. F. bacinet, a helmet; so called because formed like a small basin. - O. F. bacin, a basin, with dim. suffix -et. See Basin.

BASHFUL, shy (Tempest, iii. 1. 81). See Abash.

BASIL: OL, say (1 callest, in: 1. 61). See Tobasil: BASIL, a kind of plant.  $(F_{.,-}Gk)$  'Basil, herb, basilica;' Levins, 124. 7. Spelt basili in Cotgrave. It is short for basilic, the last syllable being dropped. = F. basilic, 'the herb basil'; 'Cot. = Lat. basilicum, neut. of basilicus, royal. = Gk.  $\beta a \sigma_i \lambda \kappa \delta_s$ , royal; from Gk. Baoileus, a king. ¶ The G. name königskraut, i. e. king's wort, records the same notion. [+]

BASIL, a bevelled edge ; see Bezel.

BASILICA, a palace, a large hall. (L., -Gk.) Lat. basilica (sc. domus, house), royal; fem. of basilicus, royal. -Gk. βασιλικόs, (sc. aomst, house), house, a kind of lizard or snake. (Gk.) 'The serpent called a basiliske;' Holland's Pliny, bk. viii. c. 21. - Gk. βασιλισκόs, royal; from a white spot, resembling a crown, on the head (Pliny). -Gk. Baoilein, a king ; lit. 'leader of the people ;' Curtius, i. 452.

BASIN, a wide open vessel. (F., -C.) M. E. bacin, bacin; Seven Sages, ed. Weber, l. 2242; (used in the sense of helmet) Alisaunder, 1. 2333. - O. F. bacin ; alluded to by Gregory of Tours, who cites it as a word of rustic use ; 'pateræ quas vulgo bacchinon vocant.' B. This remark, and the arguments of Diez, prove that the word is not of German, but of Celtic origin, signifying 'a hollow; ' cf. Gaelic bac, a hollow, also a hook, crook; W. bach, a hook; Bret. bak, bag, a shallow flat-bottomed boat, still preserved in F. bac, a ferry-boat, a trough, and in Du. bak, a tray, trough, Dan. bakke, a tray. BASIS, a foundation (Beaum. and Fletcher, Valentinian, iv. 4).

See Base (2).

BASK, to lie exposed to warmth. (Scand.) M. E. baske. Palsgrave has-'I baske, I bathe in water or in any licour." B. It is certainly formed, like busk, from an Old Danish source, the -sk being reflexive. The only question is whether it means 'to bake oneself' or 'to bathe oneself.' All evidence shews that it is certainly the sature; yet both words are from the same root.  $\gamma$ . Chaucer uses bathe hire, i. e. bathe herself, in the sense of bask; Nonne Prestes Tale. 1, AAG: and see Gourse C. A. Tale, l. 446; and see Gower, C. A. i. 290; and the quotation above. Wedgwood quotes a phrase in a Swedish dialect, at basa sig i solen, to bask in the sun; also solen baddar, the sun burns; solbase, the heat of the sun; badfist, fishes basking in the sun; and other like phrases; see basa, to warm, in Rietz. 8. Besides, the soft sound 8 would easily fall out of a word, but bakask would be less compressible. The derivation is then from an O. Scand. badask, to bathe oneself, now represented by Icel. badast, to bathe oneself, with the common corruption of final -sk to -st. See Bath, and Busk.

BASKET, a vessel made of flexible materials. (C.) M. E. basket; Chaucer, C. T. 13860.-W. basged, a basket. + Corn. baseed. + Irish basceid. + Gael. bascaid. Noted as a Celtic word by Martial, xiv. 99, and by Juvenal, xii. 46, who Latinise the word as bascauda. ¶ It is suggested that W. basged is from W. basg, a plaiting, network; a word which I suspect to be allied to E. bast. See Bast.

BASS (1), the lowest part in a musical composition. (F.) Shak. has base, generally printed bass; Tam. of Shrew, iii. 1.46. Cotgrave has: 'Bass, contre, the base part in music.' Sherwood has: 'The base in musick, basse, basse-contre.' - F. basse, fem. of bas, low; cf. Ital. basso. See Base (1). Der. bass-relief (Ital. bassorilievo).

BASS(2), BARSE, BRASSE, (E.); BREAM, (F.); names of fish. However applied, these are, radically, the same word. We make little real difference in sound between words like pass and parse. A. 'A bar:e, fishe, tincha; 'Levins, 33. 13. M. E. bace, a fish; Prompt. Parv. p. 20; see Way's note. - A. S. bars = perca, lupus, a perch, Ælfric's Glossary; Bosworth. + Du. baars, a perch; bra em, a bream. + G. bars, barsch, a perch ; brassen, a bream ; Flügel's G. Dict. "he O. H. G. form was prahsema ; M. H. G. brahsem. B. Breem occurs in Chaucer, Prol. 350.-O. F. bresme (F. breme).-M. H. G. The form barse bears some resemblance brahsem (G. brassen). to perch, but the words are different. The latter is of Gk. origin, and appears to be from a different root.

BASSOON, a deep-toned musical instrument. (F., - Ital.) Not in early use. Borrowed from F. basson, a bassoon. - Ital. bassone, a bassoon; formed, by augmentative suffix -one, from basso, bass. See Bass (1), Base (1).

BAST, the inner bark of the lime-tree, or matting made of it. (E.) M. E. bas:; 'bast-tre, tilia' (i. e. a lime-tree), Vol. of Vocabularies, ed. T. Wright, p. 192. – A.S. bæst, a lime-tree, Lye's Dictionary. Cf. Icel., Swed., Dan., and G. bast, bast. ¶ Fick suggests the √BHADH, to bind. See Bind; and see Baste (3). Sometimes corrupted to bass.

BASTARD, a child of parents not married; illegitimate, false. (F.,-G.) 'Wyllam bastard,' i. e. William the Conqueror; Rob. of Glouc. p. 295. - O. F. bastard, bastart, of which the etymology has been much disputed. [The remarks in Burguy shew that the word is to be divided as bast-ard, not as bas-tard; that the old guess of a deriv. from W. bas, base, and tardh, issue, is wrong; also, that the word is certainly not Celtic.] B. The ending -ard is common in O. F. (and even in English, cf. cow-ard, drunk-ard, the E. suffix having been borrowed from French). This suffix is certainly O. H. G., viz. the O. H. G. -hart, hard, first used as a suffix in proper names, such as Regin-hart (whence E. reynard), Eber-hart (whence E. Everard). In French words this suffix assumed first an intensive, and secondly, a sinister sense ; see examples in Pref. to Brachet's Etym. F. Dict. sect. 196. C. It appears to be now ascertained that O. F. bastard meant 'a son of a bast' (not of a bed), where bast is the mod. F. bat, a packsaddle, and Low Lat. bastum, a pack-saddle. See Brachet, who quotes: 'Sagma, sella quam vulgus bastum vocat, super quo componuntur sarcinæ; ' and refers to M. G. Paris, Histoire poétique de Charlemagne, p. 441, for further information. ¶ The word was very widely spread after the time of William I, on account of his exploits, and found its way into nearly all the Celtic dialects, and into Icelandic. In Cleasby and Vigfusson's Icel. Dict., s. v. bastar r in Appendix and s. v. basiar, an explanation of the word is attempted; but the remarks on basiar r in the body of the Dictionary, to the effect that the word does not seem to have been originally a native Icel. word, are of more weight. The O. F. bast, a packsaddle, was probably so named because covered with woven bast; see Bast. [+] BASTE(1), vb., to beat, strike. (Scand.) We find 'basing and bear-baiting; 'Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1 (R.) – Icel. beysta (also beysta), to beat. + Swed. bösta, to thump.; cf. O. Swed. basta, to strike (Ihre.) B. Of obscure origin. Fick connects Icel. bysta with Icel. bauta and E. beat; but this is uncertain. See Box (3).

BASTE (2), to pour fat over meat. (Unknown.) It occurs in Gammer Gurton's Needle, i. 1; and in Shak., Com. Errors, ii. 2. 59. 'To baste, linire;' Levins, 36. 22. Origin unknown. Some connect it with baste, to beat, as if basting was done with a piece of stick. BASTE (3), to sew slightly. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. basten, BASTE (3), to sew slightly. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. basten, bastyn; Prompt. Parv. p. 26; Rom. of the Rose, l. 104. - O. F. bastir, to put together, form; also, to build (F. båtir). - M. H. G. bestan, to bind. - O. H. G. bast, the inner bark of the lime-tree. So also Dan. baste, to tie, to bind with bast, to pinion; from Dan. bast, bast. See Bast.

BASTILE, a fortress. (F., -O. H. G.) Chiefly used of the bastile in Paris. -O. F. bastille, a building. -O. F. bastir, to build. See Baste (3). BASTINADO, a sound beating; to beat. (Span.) Shak. has

BASTINADO, a sound beating; to beat. (Span.) Shak. has bastinado as a sb.; K. John, ii. 463. – Span. bastonada, a beating with a stick. – Span. baston, a stick, staff, baton. See Baton. BASTION, part of a fortification. (F., – Ital.) The word

BASTION, part of a fortification. (F., - Ital.) The word occurs in Howell, bk. i. letter 42; and in Goldsmith, Citizen of the World (R.) - F. bastion, introduced in the 16th century from Ital. bastions (Brachet). - Ital. bastire, to build. See Baste (3).

BAT (1), a short cudgel. (C.) M. E. batte, Prompt. Parv. p. 26; botte, Ancren Riwle, p. 366; Layamon, 21593.—Irish and Gaelic bat, bata, a staff, cudgel; cf. Bret. bataraz, a club. Perhaps this furnishes the root of Lat. batuere; see note to Beat. Der. bat-let (with dimin. suffix -let=-el-et), a small bat for beating washed clothes; Shak., As You Like It, ii. 4. 49. Also bat, verb; Prompt. Parv. ¶ Lye gives an A.S. bat, but without a reference; and it was probably merely borrowed from O. British. Cf. pat.

BAT (2), a winged mammal. (Scand.) Corrupted from M. E. bakke. The Prompt. Parv. has 'Bakke, flyinge best [beast], vespertilio.' Wyclif has backe, Levit. xi. 19. – Dan. bakke, only used in the comp. aftenbakke, evening-bat. For change of k to t, cf. mate from M. E. make.  $\beta$ . Bakke stands for an older blakke, seen in Icel. le<sup>3</sup>rblaka = a 'leather-flapper,' a bat. – Icel. blaka, to flutter, flap. ¶ The A. S. word is hreremis, whence prov. Eng. rearmouse.

BATCH, a quantity of bread. (E.) A batch is what is baked at once; hence, generally, a quantity, a collection. M. E. bacche; 'bahche, or bakynge, or batche, pistura;' Prompt. Parv. p. 21. Here batche is a later substitution for an older bacche, where cch is for ch-ch, giving bach-che, equivalent to an older bak-ke; clearly a derivative of M. E. baken, to bake. See Bake.

BATE (1), to abate, diminish. (F.,-L.) Shak. has bate, to beat down, diminish, remit, &c.; in many passages. We find too: Batyn, or abaten of weyte or mesure, subtraho; Prompt. Parv. p. 26. M. E. bate, Langtoft, p. 338. Merely a contraction of abate, borrowed from O. F. abatre, to beat down. See Abate.

BATE (2), strife. (F., -L.) Shak. has 'breeds no bate;' 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 271; also bate-breeding, Ven. and Adonis, 655. 'Baryn, or make debate, jurgor;' Prompt. Parv. p. 26. M. E. bat, bate, Cov. Myst. p. 12; Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1. 1461. Bosworth has: 'Bate, contentio,' but it is an uncertain word, and the true A. S. word for battle is beadu. B. Hence it is generally conceded that bate is a mere contraction or corruption of the common old word debate, used in precisely the same sense; borrowed from the O. F. debat, strife; a derivative of battre, to beat. See Batter (1).

BATH, a place for washing in. (E.) M.E. bab, Ormulum, 18044. -A.S. bæð (Grein). + Icel. bað. + O. H.G. bad, pad. + O. Swed. bad (Ihre). The O. H. G. appears to have a still older source in the verb bahen, páen, or páwen, to warm (G. bähen, to foment); cf. Lat. fouere, to warm. The original sense of bath would, accordingly, appear to be a place of warmth; and the Lat. fouere is allied to Gk. ówreter, and to E. bake: Fick, ii. 174. See Bake: and see Baak.

φώγει. and to E. bake; Fick, ii. 174. See Bake; and see Bask. BATHE, to use a bath. (E.) The A.S. babian, to bathe, is a derivative from bass, a bath; not vice versâ. The resemblance to Skt. bád or vád, to dive and emerge, is probably a mere accident.

bid or vid, to dive and emerge, is probably a mere accident. BATHOS, lit. depth. (Gk.) Ludicrously applied to a descent from the elevated to the mean in poetry or oratory. See the allusion, in Appendix I to Pope's Dunciad, to A Treatise of the Bathos, or the Art of Sinking in Poetry. - Gk. βάθοs, depth; cf. Gk. βaθis, deep. -Growthe and emerge, is probably a mere accident. babelynge, or wauerynge, vacillacio, librillacio.' Y. Were this verb still in use, we should express it by bobble, formed, as many frequentatives are, by adding the suffix -le; so that to bobble would mean to bob frequently, to keep swinging about; cf. straggle from stray, nibble from nip. See Bob.

✓ GABH, to be deep; Fick, i. 69; Curtius, i. 75. Cf. Skt. gambhan, depth; gabhira, deep.

BATON, BATOON, a cudgel. (F.) Spelt battoon in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 149; and in Kersey's Dict. – F. bâton, a cudgel. – O. F. baston. – Low Lat. acc. bastonem, from basto, a stick; of unknown origin. Doublet, batten (2). Diez suggests a connection with Gk. Baoracev, to support.

BATTALION, a body of armed men. (F., -Ital.) Milton has it; P. L. i. 569. - F. bataillon, introduced, says Brachet, in the 16th cent. from Ital. battaglione. - Ital. battaglione, formed from Ital. battaglia, a battle, by adding the augment. suffix -one. See Battle.

BATTEN (1), to grow fat; to fatten. (Scand.) Shak. has batten (intransitive), Hamlet, iii. 4. 67; but Milton has 'battening our flocks,' Lycidas, l. 29. Strictly, it is intransitive. – Icel. ba'na, to grow better, recover; as distinguished from bata, trans., to improve, make better. + Goth. gabatnan, to profit, avail, Mark, vii. 11, intrans.; as distinguished from botjan, to avail, Mark, viii. 36. Both Icel. batna and Goth. gabatnan are formed from the Gothic root BAT, good, preserved in the E. better and best. See Better. ¶ The M.E. form would have been batnen; hence the final -en in mod. E. batten answers to the former n of the Mœso-Gothic suffix -nan, added to stems to form passive or neuter verbs. [†] neuter verbs. [+] BATTEN (2), a wooden rod. (F.) 'Batten, a scantling of wood, 2, 3, or 4 in. broad, seldom above 1 thick, and the length unlimited;' Moxon; in Todd's Johnson. Hence, to batten down, to fasten down with battens. A mere variant of batton or ba'on. See Baton.

BATTER (1), to beat. (F., -L.) M. E. batten, P. Plowman, B. iii. 198. - F. batter, to beat. - Lat. batter, a popular form of batuere, to beat. See Battle. Der. batter (2), batter-y, batter-ing-ram.

BATTER (2), a compound of eggs, flour, and milk. (F., -L.) M. E. batour, Prompt. Parv., p. 27. -O. F. baturs, a beating. See above. So called from being beaten up together; Wedgwood. So, too, Span. barido, batter, is the pp. of batir, to beat.

BATTERY, a beating ; a place for cannon.  $(F_{..}-Lat.)$  Cotgrave has: 'Baterie (also Batterie), a beating; a battery; a place for battery.' = F. battre, to beat. See Batter (1). [†] battery." = F. batter, to beat. See Batter (1). [†] BATTLE, a combat. (F., -L.) M. E. bataile, bataile, Chaucer, Leg. of Good Wom. 1627. = O. F. bataille, meaning both (1) a fight. (2) a battalion. = Lat. bataila, a word which in common Latin answered to pugna; see Brachet. = Lat. batere, a popular form of batwere, to beat. Fick gives a European form bhatu, a fight, battle (i. 690); this accounts for the batw- of Lat. batwere, and for the A.S. beadu, a fight. Der. battal-ion. 0. v.

Der. battal-ion, q. v. BATTLEDOOR, a bat with a thin handle. (South F. or Span.) M. E. 'ba'yldoure, a wasshynge betylle,' i. e. a bat for beating clothes whilst being washed, Prompt. Parv. p. 27. a. A corrupted form. It is supposed that the word was borrowed from the Span. baidor, or more likely the Provençal (South French) batedor, meaning exactly a washing-beetle, a bat for clothes. Once imported into English, the first two syllables were easily corrupted into battle, a dimin. of bat, leaving -door meaningless. Cf. crayfish. Note provincial Eng. battler, a small bat to play at ball with; battling-store, a stone on which wet linen was beaten to cleanse it; batting-stock, a beating-stock; Halliwell.  $\beta$ . Formed from F. battre, Span. batir, to beat; the suffix -dor in Span. and Prov. answers to the Lat. -tor, as in ama-tor, a lover. See Beetle (2).

BATTLIEMENT, a parapet for fortification. (F.) M. E. batelment, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1458. 'Batylment of a walle, propugnaculum; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 27. The history of the word is imperfectly recorded; it seems most probable that it represents an O. F. basillement, formed from .O. F. basiller, to fortify. Roquefort quotes the phrase 'mur basille,' i. e. fortified or embattled wall, from the Roman de la Rose. Cf. mod. F. bâtiment, a building, from bâtir, O. F. bastir, to build; of which verb the O. F. basiller is also a derivative. See Baste (1); and see Embattle.

BAUBLE (1), a fool's mace. (C.?, with E. suffix.) This seems to be a different word from bauble, a plaything, and appears earlier in English. M. E. babyll, babulle, bable, explained in Prompt. Parv. p. 20, by 'librilla, pegma.' Palsgrave has: 'Bable for a fool, marotie.' 'As he that with his babel plaide;' Gower, C. A. i. 224. B. See Way's note in Prompt. Parv., shewing that librilla means a stick with a thong, for weighing meat, or for use as a sling; and pegma means a stick with a weight suspended from it, for inflicting blows with. It was no doubt so called from the wagging or swinging motion with which it was employed; from the verb 'bablyn, or babelyn, or waveryn, librillo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 20. We also find, at the same reference, 'babelynge, or wauerynge, vacillacio, librillacio.' Y. Were this verb still in use, we should express it by bobble, formed, as many frequentatives are, by adding the suffix -le; so that to bobble would mean to bob frequently, to keep swinging about; cf. straggle from stray, nibble BAUBLE (2), a plaything. (F., - Ital.) Shak. has bauble in the sense of a trifle, a useless plaything, Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 32. This is probably a mere adaptation of the F. babiale, modified so as to coincide with bauble in the sense of 'a fool's mace.'-F. babiole, 'a trifle, whimwham, gugaw, or small toy, for a childe to play with all; Cot. - Ital. babbola; pl. babbole, child's toys (Diez; s.v. babbeo). - Ital. babbeo, a simpleton; with which cf. Low Lat. babulus, baburrus, a simpleton. These words express the notion of stuttering, or uttering inarticulate sounds, like Gk. BaBa(a, to chatter, and E babble, q.v. ¶ Some connect the word with E. babe, which I believe to be quite a mistake, as shewn s. v. babe.

BAWD, a lewd person. (F., -G.) M. E. baude, Chaucer, C. T. 6936; P. Plowman, B. iii.128. - O.F. baud, bald, gay, pleased, wanton. -O. H. G. bald, free, bold. See Bold. Der. bawd-y, bawd-i-ness;

BAWDY, [O. F. banderie]; see below. Doublet, bold. BAWDY, lewd. (F., =G.) Merely formed as an adj. from band; see above. ¶ But the M. E. bandy, dirty, used of clothes, in Chaucer and P. Plowman, is a different word, and of Welsh origin. Cf. W. bawaidd, dirty; baw, dirt. The two words, having something of the same meaning, were easily assimilated in form.

BAWL, to shout. (Scand.) Sir T. More has 'yalping [yelping] and balling;' Works, p. 1254 c. – Icel. baula, to low as a cow. + Swed. bdla, to roar. See Bull.

BAY (1), a reddish brown. (F., -L.) M. E. bay; 'a stede bay,' a bay horse; Chaucer, C. T. 2159.-O. F. bai.-Lat. badius, baycoloured, in Varro. Der. bay-ard (a bay-horse); baize, q. v.

BAY (2), a kind of laurel-tree; prop. a berry-tree. (F., -L.) 'The roiall lawrell is a very tal and big tree, with leaves also as large in proportion, and the baies or berries (bacca) that it beareth are nothing [not at all] sharp, biting, and unpleasant in taste; 'Holland's Pliny, b. xv. c. 30. ' Bay, frute, bacca;' Prompt. Parv. - F. baie, a berry. -Lat. bacca, a berry. + Lithuanian bapka, a laurel-berry; Fick, i. 683. BAY (3), an inlet of the sea; a recess. (F.,-L.) Bay occurs in Surrey, tr. of the Æneid, bk. ii (R.) – F. bais, an inlet. – Lat. bais, in Isidore of Seville; see Brachet. + Gaelic badh, bagh, a bay, harbour. B. From the sense of 'inlet,' the word came to mean 'a recess' in a building. 'Heje houses withinne the halle, . . So brod bilde in a bay, building. Here houses withinne the halle, ... So brod bilde in a bay, that blonkkes myst renne; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1301. [*] BAY (4), to bark as a dog. (F., -L.) 'The dogge woulde bay; Berners' Froissart, vol. ii. c. 171. Corrupted from a fuller form abay, M.E. abayen, K. Alisaunder, 3882 - F, 'abbayer, to bark or bay at ;' simpler form in bubulare, to screech as an owl, bubo, an owl, pointing to an earlier bubere, to utter a hollow sound ; Fick, i. 685 ; s. v. bub. The word is doubtless imitative; cf. babble, barbarous.

BAY (5), in phr. at bay.  $(F_{n}, -L_{n})$  'He followed the chace of an hert, and ... broughte hym to a bay; 'Fabyan, Chron. c. 127. Here 'to a bay' is really a corruption of 'to abay;' cf. 'Wher hy hym myghte so hound abaye - where they might hold him at bay as a dog does; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 3882; see also abaye in Halliwell; and see further below .- F. abois, abbois. Cotgrave says-'a stag is said rendre les abbois when, weary of running, he turns upon the hounds, and holds them at, or puts them to, a bay.' The same is also expressed by the phrase stre aux abois ; see aboi in Brachet. The original sense of aboi is the bark of a dog. Cotgrave has ' Abbay, the barking or baying of dogs; ' 'Abbois, barkings, bayings.' See Bay (4), to bark

BAY-WINDOW, a window in a recess. Withyn a bay-windows; Court of Love, 1058. See Bay (3). ¶ I see no connection with F. beer, as suggested by Wedgwood. The modern bowwindow, i. e. window with a curved outline, is a corrupt substitution for bay-window; or else an independent word. [*]

BAYONET, a dagger at the end of a gun. (F.) Used by Burke; Select Works, ed. E. J. Payne, i. 111, l. 15. Introduced in the 17th century, from F. baionnette, formerly bayonette. So called from Bayonne, in France, where they are said to have been first made, about 1650-1660. It was used at Killiecrankie in 1689, and at Marsaglia by the French, in 1693. See Haydn, Dict. of Dates. [†]

BAZAAR, a market. (Pers.) Spelt buzzar by Sir T. Herbert, in his Travels, where he speaks of 'the great buzzar or market;' ed. 1665, p. 41. - Pers. bázár, a market. See Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 65. BDELLIUM, a precious substance. (Hebrew.) In Gen. ii. 12, it is joined with 'gold' and 'onyx-stone;' in Numb. xi. 7, manna is likened to it in colour. It is not known what it is. In Holland's Pliny, xii. 9, it is the gum of a tree. At any rate, the word is made from the Hebrew bedolach, whatever that may mean. [†] from the Hebrew bedolach, whatever that may mean. [†] HE, prefix. (E.) A. S. ber, prefix; in very common use. It some-times implies 'to make, as in be-numb, to make numb. 'It some-times serves to locate the act, and sometimes intensifies;' Affixes of English Words, by S. S. Haldeman, p. 49; q. v. Behead means to BEALE (3), an animal. (E.) M. E. bere, Unaucer, C. 1. 1040. A. S. bera, ursus (Grein). + Icel. bera, björn. + O. H. G. pero. + Lat. fera, a wild beast. + Skt. bhalla, a bear. Fick suggests & BHUR, to rage; whence E. fury. Der. bear-ish. [†] BEARD, hair on the chin. (E.) M. E. berde, berd; Chaucer, Prol. 332. - A. S. beard, Grein, i. 102. + Du. baard. + Icel. bard, a deprive of the head ; beset, to set upon, attack ; besiege, to sit by, to invest with an army; bemire, to cover with mire. Cf. becalm, bedim, bedeck, bedrop; also become, befall, i. e. to come upon, to fall upon. Also used as a prefix of prepositions; as in before, between. Besi te = by the side of. Below = by low, on the lower side of; so also beneath, ou the nether side of. The A. S. be- or bi- (M. E. be-, bi-) is a short or unaccented form of the prep. bi, E. by. See By. BE, to exist. (E.) M. E. been, Prompt. Parv. 30. - A. S. beón, to be (passim). + Du. ben, I am. + G. bin, I am. + Gael. bi, to exist. + De (passim). + 100. oen, 1 am. + G. on, 1 am. + G. ott, 1 am. + G. ott, 1 am. + G. ott, 1 am. + W. byw, to live, exist. + Irish bu, was. + Russian built, to be ; bu-du, 1 shall be. + Lat. fore, pt. t. fui. + Gk. φύειν, aor. έφυν. + Skt. bkú, to be. - ↓ BHU, to exist. [+] BEACH, the ground rising from the sea. (Scand.) Not found in early authors. Rich. quotes from Hackluyt, Voyages, i. 355. - Swed.

backe, an ascent. + Dan. bakke, rising ground. + Icel. bakki, a ridge; also, a bank of a river. The kk in Icel. stands for nk; and the word is really another form of bank. See Bank. Der. beach, verb; beach-y. [†] BEACON, a sign, signal. (E.) M. E. bekene, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 262. – A. S. beacen, a sign, signal, standard (Grein); also spelt been. + M. H. G. bouchen; O. H. G. pauhhan, a sign. See Book, Bockon. ¶ If the original sense was a fire-signal, the most probable root is  $\checkmark$  BHA, to shine; cf. Gk.  $\pi \phi a \omega \sigma \kappa_{ev}$ , to shew, which Curtius deduces from the same root.

BEAD, a perforated ball, used for counting prayers. (E.) The old sense is 'a prayer;' and the bead was so called because used for counting prayers; and not vice versa. M. E. bede, a bead; Chaucer, Prol. 109. 'Thanne he hauede his bede seyd' = when he had said his prayer; Havelok, 1385. - A. S. bed, a prayer; gen. used in the form gebed (cf. G. gebet), Grein, i. 376. + Du. bede, an entreaty, request; gebed, a prayer. + O. H. G. beta, M. H. G. bete, G. gebet, a prayer, request. These are derived words from the verb; viz. A. S. biddan, Du. bidden, O. H. G. pittan (G. bitten), to pray. See Bid (t). The Gothic is different; the vb. bidjan being made from the sb. bida. Der. bead-roll, beads-man.

BEADLE, properly, one who proclaims. (E.) M. E. bedel, P. Plowman, B. ii. 77. – A. S. býdel, an officer, Luke, xii. 58. + O. H. G. putil, a beadle. – A. S. beódan, to bid, to proclaim; beód-becoming býd-, when the suffix -el is added. + O. H. G. piotan, to bid. See

Bid (2). [#] BEAGLE, a small dog, for hunting hares. (Unknown.) M.E. begele; Hall's Chron. Hen. VI, an. 27. Of unknown origin. The index to Cotgrave has Beagle, petite chienne. Cf. Begle, canicula; 'Levins, 53, 43.  $\P$  It has been suggested that it is connected with Gael. beag, little; of which there is no proof whatever. [†]

BEAK, a bill, point. (F., -C.) M. E. bete, Chaucer, Leg. of Good Wom. 148.-F. bec.-Low Lat. beccus. quoted by Suetonius as of Gaulish origin (Brachet); obviously Celtic. - Breton bet, a beak. + Gael. beic, a point, a nib, the bill of a bird. + Welsh pig, a point, pike, bill, beak. See Peak, Peck, and Pike.

BEAKER, a sort of cup. (O. Low G.; -L., -Gk.) M. E. byker, biker; Prompt. Parv. p. 35. Way notes that the word occurs as early as A.D. 1348. -Old Sax. bikeri, a cup; Kleine Altniederdeutsche Denkmäler, ed. Heyne, 1867, p. 103. + Icel. bikarr, a cup. + Du. beker. + G. becher. + Ital. bicchiere.  $\beta$ . It appears in Low Lat. as biccarium, a wine-cup; a word formed from Gk. Bixos, an earthen wine-vessel, a wine-cup; a word formed from GK. pikow, an caluted material, whence also the dimin, forms fluctor, fluctor, y. The Gk. flucos is of Eastern origin (Liddell). Doublet, pitcher. [+] BEAM (1), a piece of timber. (E.) M.E. beem, beem, beam; Layamon, 2848; -A.S. bedm, a tree; Grein, p. 105. + O. H. G. beam. a tree. + Icel. badmr, a tree. + Goth. bagms, a tree. B. Fick, paum, a tree. + Icel. baðmr, a tree. + Goth. bagms, a tree. B. Fick, (i. 161) compares Skt. bhúman, earth, Gk. φῦμα, a growth; from the root BHU, to exist, grow.

BELAM (2), a ray of light. (E.) A particular use of the word above. The 'pillar of fire' mentioned in Exodus is called in A.S. poetry byrnende beam, the burning beam ; Grein, p. 105. Der. beam-y, beam-less.

BEAN, a kind of plant. (E.) M. E. bene, Chaucer, C. T. 3774.-A. S. beán (Lye, Bosworth). + Icel. baun. + O. H. G. púna. + Russ. bob'. + Lat. faba. + W. ffaen, a bean; pl. ffa. Fick gives a European form bhabá; i. 690.

BEAR (1), to carry. (E.) M. E. beren, bere, P. Plowman, B. ii. 80. = A. S. beran (Grein). + Goth. bairan. + Lat. ferre. + Gk. ¢épew. + Skt. bhri, to bear. = √ BHAR, to carry. Der. bear-able, bear-er, bear-ing brim, verge, beak of a ship, &c. + Russ. borodá. + W. and Corn. barf. + Lat. barba, the beard. See Fick, i. 684, s. v. bardhá. Cf. Irish bearb<sup>1</sup>, Gael. bearr, to shave. Dor. beard-ed, beard-less. [+] BEAST, an animal. (F., - L.) M. E. beste, Chaucer, C. T. 1978; beaste, Old Eng. Homilies, i. 277.-O. F. beste (F. bête). - Lat. bestia, an animal. Der. beast-like, beast-ly, beast-li-ness, best-i-al (Lat. bestialis). best-i-al-i-ty, best-i-al-ise.

BEAR (2), an animal. (E.) M. E. bere, Chaucer, C. T. 1640.-

BEAT, to strike. (E.) M. E. beten, bete, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 19. - A. S. beatan, to beat; Grein, i. 106. + Icel. bauta, to beat. + O. H. G. pozan, to beat. - Teutonic of BUT, to beat, push, drive; Fick, iii. 214. See But. Der. beat, sb., beat-er. The resemblance to F. battre, Lat. batuere, seems to be accidental; at any rate, it is not to be built upon. See Bat (1).

BEATIFY, to make blessed. (F.-L.) Bp. Taylor has 'beatified spirits ; ' vol. i. ser. 8. - F. beatifier, ' to beatifie ; to make blessed, sacred, or happy;' Cot. - Lat. beatificare, to make happy. - Lat. beati-, for beatus, happy; and facere, to make, the stem fac- turning into fic- in composition. Beatus is a pp. of beare, to make happy, to bless, from the same source as bene, well, and bonus, good; see Bounty: Der. beaific, beaific-al, beaific-al-y, beaific-al-ion. BEATITUDE, happiness. (F., -L.) Used by Ben Jonson, An Elegy on my Muse (R.); Milton, P. L. iii. 62. - F. beaitude, 'beatitude, happiness;' Cot. - Lat. beatitudinem, acc. from nom. beatitude, happiness. - Lat. beatus, happy. - Lat. beare, to bless. See Beatify.

BEAU, a fine, dressy man. (F., -L.) Sir Cloudesley Shovel is represented on his tomb 'by the figure of a beau; 'Spectator, no. 37. -F. beau, comely (Cotgrave); O. F. bel. - Lat. bellus, fine, fair; supposed to be a contracted form of benulus, dimin. of benus; another form of bonus, good. See Bounty. Der. From the F. fem. form belle (Lat. bella) we have E. belle.

BEAUTY, fairness. (F., - Lat.) M. E. beaute, Chaucer. C. T. 2387 .- O. F. biaute, bealteit, beltet. - Low Lat. acc. bellitatem ; from nom. bellitas. - Lat. belli-, for bellus, fair, with suffix -tat-, signifying state or condition. See Beau. Der. beaute-ous (bewteous in Sir T. More, Works, p. 2 g), beaute-ous-ly, beaute-ous-ness, beauti-ful, beautiful-ly, beauti-fy. BEAVER (1), an animal. (E.) M. E. bever, in comp. bever-hat, Chaucer, Prol. 272. - A.S. befer, gloss to fiber ; Ælf. Gloss. ed. Somner (Nomina Ferarum). + Du. bever. + Icel. bjórr. + Dan. bæver. + Swed. bäfver. + G. biber. + Russian bobr'. + Lat. fiber, a beaver. Cf. Skt. babhru, a large ichneumon; Fick, i. 379.

BEAVER (2), the lower part of a helmet. (F.) Shak. has beaver, Hamlet, i. 2. 230. - F. bavière, meaning 'the bever of an helmet;' and, primarily, a child's ' bib, mocket, or mocketer, put before the bosom of a slavering child;' Cot. Thus, the lower part of the helmet was named from a fancied resemblance to a child's bib. - F. baver, to foam, froth, slaver; Cot. - F. bave, foam, froth, The derivation from Ital. bevere, to drink, is quite unfounded. The spelling beaver is due to confusion with 'beaver hat.'

BECALM, to make calm. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Becalmed is in Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 168; and in Mirror for Magistrates, p. 196. Formed by prefixing E. be- to calm, a word of F. origin. See Be- and Calm.

BECAUSE, for the reason that. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Formerly written bi cause, P. Plowman, B. iii. 99; also be cause and by cause. Be, bi, and by are all early forms of the prep. by. Cause is of F. origin. See By and Cause.

BECHANCE, to befall, happen. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Shak. Merch. i. 1. 38. From be-, prefix, q. v., and chance, q. v.

BECK (1), a nod or sign; as a vb. to make a sign.  $(F_{i,j}-C_{i,j})$ The sb. is not found in early writers; it occurs in Surrey's tr. of Virgil, Æneid, iv. (R.) It is clearly formed from the verb, which is older, and occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 1 2329. - F. bequer, 'to pecke, or bob with the beake;' Cot. - F. bec, beak. See Boak. BECK (2), a stream. (Scand.) M. E. bet, Prompt. Parv. p. 29; Legends of Holy Rood, p. 82. [Not properly an A.S. word, but Scandinavian.] - Icel. bethr, a stream, brook. + Swed. bäck, a brook. + Dan. bak. + Du. beek. + G. bach. (Root unknown.) BECKON, to make a sign. (E.) M. E. bécnen, Ormulum, 223.

- A. S. beácnian, to signify by a sign. - A. S. beacen, a sign, with the addition of the suffix -ion, used to form verbs from sbs. See Beacon. ¶ Not allied to Beck. [+] BECOME, to attain to a state; to suit. (E.) M. E. becuman, bicuman ; as, 'and bicomen hise men' = and became his servants, Havelok, l. 2256; 'it bicumeth him swithe wel' = it becomes (suits) him very well, O. Eng. Bestiary, ed. Morris, l. 735. See the large collection of examples in Mätzner, p. 224, s. v. bicumen. - A. S. becuman, to arrive, happen, turn out, befal (whence the sense of 'suit' was later bekomen, to happen, befal, reach, &c. ; whence mod. G. bequem. fit.

BEDIGHT, to array. (E.) 'That derely were bydyyk;' Sir

Degrevant, 647. From be, prefix, q. v.; and dight, q. v. BEDIM, to make dim. (E.) In Shak. Temp. v. 1. 41. From be-, prefix, q. v.; and dim, q. v. BEDIZEN, to deck out. (E.?) Not in early use. The quotations in Richardson shew that the earlier word was the simple form dizen, from which bedizen was formed by help of the common prefix be-, like bedeck from deck. See Dizen. BEDLAM, a hospital for lunatics. (Proper name.)

A corruption of Bethlehem. 'Bethlehem hospital, so called from having been originally the hospital of St. Mary of Bethlehem, a royal foundation for the reception of lunatics, incorporated by Henry VIII in 1547; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. pp. 251, 252. BEDRIDDEN, confined to one's bed. (E.) M. E. bedreden, used in the plural; P. Plowman, viii. 85; bedrede, sing. Chaucer, C. T. 7351. - A. S. bedrida, beddrida, glossed by clinicus (Bosworth). -A. S. bed, a bed, and ridda, a knight, a rider; thus the sense is a bed-rider, a sarcastic term for a disabled man. ¶ Prof. Earle, in his ¶ Prof. Earle, in his Philology of the Eng. Tongue, p. 23, suggests that bedrida means 'bewitched,' and is the participle of bedrian, to bewitch, a verb for which he gives authority. But it is not shewn how the participle took this shape, nor can we thus account for the spelling beddrida.  $\beta$ . Besides which, there is a term of similar import, spelt bedderedig in the Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 65, which can only be ex-Delained with reference to the Low-G. bedde, a bed.  $\gamma$ . Again, an O. H. G. pettiriso, M. H. G. betterise, mod. G. bettrise, is given in Grimm's Ger. Dict. i. 1738, which can likewise only be referred to G. bett, a bed. B. In short, the suggestion can hardly be accepted, but it seemed best not to pass it over. If there be any doubt about the termination, there can be none about the first syllable. I may add that we find also M. E. bedlawer for 'one who lies in bed,' which is said, in the Prompt. Parv. p. 28, to be a synonym for bedridden.

See Prompt. Parv. p. 28, note 4. [+] BEDSTEAD, the frame of a bed. (E.) M. E. bedstede, Prompt. Parv. p. 28. - A. S. bed, a bed; and stede, a place, stead, station. So called from its firmness and stability; cf. sted-fast, i.e. stead-fast. See Bed and Stead.

BEEE, an insect. (E.) M. E. bee, pl. bees and been, both of which occur in Chaucer, C. T. 10518, 10296. – A. S. beó, bi, Grein, p. 109. + Icel. bý. + O. H. G. pía. + Skt. bha, a bee; a rare word, given in Böthlingk and Roth's Skt. Dictionary. Prob. of onomatopoetic origin. Cf. Irish beach, a bee.

BEECH, a kind of tree. (E.) M. E. besch, Chaucer, C. T. 2925. -A.S. bice, an unauthenticated form, but rendered probable by the existence of the adj. becen, E. beechen, for which a reference is given in Bosworth; but the usual A.S. form is boc. [69 The A.S. & is the mutation of  $\delta$ ; thus boc produces becen, adj., whence the corrupt sb. bee.] + Icel. bik, a beech-tree, rare; commoner in the collective form beyki, a beech wood, + Swed. bok. + Dan. bög. + Du. beuk + G. buche (O. H. G. puohha). + Russian buk'. + Lat. fagus. + Gk.  $\phi\eta\gamma\phi$ s. These forms point to an orig. bhóga, possibly meaning a tree with esculent fruit; cf. Skt. bhaksh, to eat; from  $\checkmark$  BHAG, to eat; developed), Grein, i. 81; bicuman, i. 113. + Goth. bikwiman, to come upon one, to befal; 1 Thes. v. 3. + O. H. G. piquëman, M. H. G. BEEF, an ox; the flesh of an ox. (F., -L.) M. E. beef, Chaucer, C. T. 7332. - O. F. boef, buef. - Lat. acc. bovem, an ox; nom. bos. + Gael. bo, a cow. + Skt. go, a cow. + A. S. cú, a cow. Thus the word beef is co-radicate with cow. See Cow. Der. beef-eater, q. v. BEEF-BATER, a yeoman of the guard. (Hyb.) 'Pensioners and beefea.ers' [of Charles II.], Argument against a Standing Army, ed. 1697, p. 16; qu. in N. and Q. 5 S. viii. 398. An eater of beef; but why this designation was given them is not recorded. ¶ In Todd's Johnson is the following notable passage. 'From beef and eat, be-cause the commons is beef when on waiting. Mr. Steevens derives it thus. Beefeater may come from beaufetier, one who attends at the side-board, which was anciently placed in a beaufet. The business of the beefeaters was, and perhaps is still, to attend the king at meals. This derivation is corroborated by the circumstance of the beefeaters having a hasp suspended to their belts for the reception of keys." This extraordinary guess has met with extraordinary favour, having been quoted in Mrs. Markham's History of England, and thus taught to young children. It is also quoted in Max Müller's Lectures, 8th ed. ii. 582, but with the substitution of buffetier for beaufetier, and buffet is explained as 'a table near the door of the dining-hall.' suppose it is hopeless to protest against what all believe, but I must point out that there is not the faintest tittle of evidence for the derivation beyond the 'hasp suspended to their belts.' I do not find beaufetier nor buffetier, but I find in Cotgrave that buffeteurs de vin were 'such carmen or boatmen as steal wine out of the vessels they have in charge, and afterwards fill them up with water.' Mr. Steevens does not tell us what a beaufet is, nor how a sideboard was 'anciently placed in 'it. On this point, see Buffet, sb. When the F. buffetier can be found, with the sense of 'waiter at a side-board ' in reasonably old French, or when the E. beefeater can be found spelt differently from its present spelling in a book earlier than the time of Mr. Steevens, it will be sufficient time to discuss the question further. Meanwhile, we may note that Ben Jonson uses eater in the sense of 'servant; 'as in 'Where are all my enters?' Silent Woman, iii. 2. Also, that the expression 'powderbeef lubber' occurs in the sense of 'man-servant,' where powder-beef certainly means salt-beef; see ' Powder, to salt,' in Nares. A rich man is spoken of as having 'confidence of [in] so many powdrebeefe lubbers as he fedde at home;' Chaloner, translation of Prayse of Follie, 2nd edit. 1577, G v. (1st ed. in 1549.) See Notes and Queries, 5 S. viii. 57. Cf. bread-winner, a sb. of similar formation. [†]

BEER, a kind of drink. (E.) M. E. bere, Prompt. Parv. p. 31; ber, King Hom, ed. Lumby, l. 1112. – A. S. beór, beer, Grein, i. 112. + Du. bier. + Icel. bjórr. + G. bier (O. H. G. bior). ¶ a. The suggestion that it is connected with the Lat. bibere is unlikely; since that would make this common Teutonic word a mere loan-word from Latin. Moreover, the Latin sb. is po'us, which could hardly turn into beer. Both potus and bibere are referred to the root pá, to drink; see Curtius, i. 348. A Teutonic word from that root would begin with f.  $\beta$ . The suggestion that beer is connected with barm (1) is more reasonable. It means 'fermented drink,' from the same root as ferment. See Barm (1), Ferment.

BEESTINGS; see Biestings.

BEET, a plant. (Lat.) M. E. bete, in a vol. of Vocabularies, ed. T. Wright, p. 190. – A. S. bete, gen. betan, fem. sb., in Cockayne's Leechdoms; but certainly borrowed from Lat. beta, used by Pliny.

BRETILE (1), an insect. (E.) M. E. bityl, Prompt. Parv. p. 37. -A. S. bitel, bitel; as in 'pa blacan betlas,' the black beetles; MS. Cott. Jul. A. 2, 141 (Bosworth). -A. S. bitan, to bite; with suffix el of the agent. Thus beetle means 'the biting insect;' cf. 'Mordiculus, bitela,' Ælf. Gloss. (Nomina Insectorum); showing that the word was understood in that sense. See Bite, and Bitter.

BEETLE (2), a heavy mallet. (E.) M. E. betylle, betel, Prompt. Parv. p. 34; Ancren Riwle, p. 188. – A. S. býtel, býtl; Judges iv. 21. – A. S. beátan, to beat; with suffix -l or -el of the agent. See Boat. Der. beelle-headed, i. e. with a head like a log, like a block-head, dull.

BEETLE (3), to jut out and hang over. (E.) 'The summit of the cliff That beeiles o'er his base into the sea;' Hamlet, i. 4. 71. Apparently coined by Shakespeare. By whomsoever coined, the idea was adopted from the M. E. bitelbrowed, beetle-browed, having projecting or sharp brows, P. Plowman, B. v. 90; also spelt bitterbrowed, id., footnote. The sense is 'with biting brows,' i. e. with brows projecting like an upper jaw. The M. E. bitel, biting, sharp, occurs in the Ormulum, 10074, as an epithet of an axe; and in Layamon, ii. 395, as an epithet of steel weapons. The insect called the beelle is similarly named; see Beotle (1). The variant bitter has the same sense; see Bittor. The word is from the A. S. bitel, lit. biting or biter, also, a beetle; from A. S. bitan, to bite, with the suffix -el, used to form both substantives and adjectives, so that bitel may be used as either. See Bitto. Der. beetl-ing; cf. beetle-browed, which is really the older expression.

BEFALL, to happen. (E.) M. E. befallen, bifallen, in common use; Havelok, 2981. – A. S. befeallan, Grein, i. 83. + O. Sax. bifallan. + O. Fries. bifalla. + Du. bevallen, to please. + O. H. G. bifallan, cited by Mätzner; Wackernagel gives M. H. G. bevallen. O. H. G. pivallan. From be-, prefix; and fall. ¶ This is one of the original verbs on which so many others beginning with be- were modelled.

BEFOOL, to make a fool of. (E. and F.) M. E. befolen, Gower, C. A. iii, 236. - E. prefix be, and M. E. fol, a fool; see Fool.

BEFORE, prep., in front of; adv., in front. (E.) M. E. bifore, before, biforen, beforen; in common use; spelt biforen, Layamon, iii. 131. – A. S. beforan, biforan, prep. and adv., Grein, i. 83, 84, 115. – A. S. be-, bi-, prefix, see Be- or By; and foran, before, prep. and adv., Grein, i. 315. A. S. foran is a longer form (-an being originally a case-ending) from fore, prep. and adv., before, for; Grein, i. 321. See Fore, For. Cf. O. Sax. biforan, before; M. H. G. bevor, bevore; O. H. G. bifora, pivora, before. See below.

O. H. G. bifora, pivora, before. See below. BEFOREHAND, previously. (E.) In early use as an adverb. M. E. biuorenhond, Ancren Riwle, p. 212; from biuoren, before, and hond, hand. See Before and Hand.

BEG, to ask for alms. (E.) Cf. M. E. beggar, beggere, a beggar; a word which was undoubtedly associated in the 14th century, and even earlier, with the word bag, as seen from various passages in P. Plowman, C. Pass. i. 41, 42, x. 98; P. Plowman's Crede, I. 600, &c. In the Ancren Riwle, p. 168, we read: 'Hit is beggares rihte uorte [for to] beren bagge on bac.' Yet the word is never spelt baggere, which tends to shew that the word was forced out of its true form to suit a popular theory. This being so, it is probable that the vb. beggen, to beg, was (as Mr. Sweet suggests) a contraction of the A.S. bedecian, which occurs in Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 285, l. 12: 'Hit is swide wel be dæm gecweden dæt he eft bedecige on sumera' = of whom it is very well said that he will afterwards beg in summer. B. This A.S. bed-ec-ian would become bed cian (accented on bed-), and thence be easily contracted to beggen by assimilation. The stem bed- corresponds to a H. German bet-, whence G. betteln, to beg, bettler, a beggar. Moreover, bed- stands for bid-, by vowel-change; cf. Goth. bidagwa, a beggar; and this bid- appears in A. S. biddan, to beg, pray, beseech; whence the M. E. biddere used as synonymous with beggare, as in P. Plowman, C. i. 41. O. Hence bed-ec-ian is formed from bid-, with suffix -ec- (corresponding to -ag- in Goth. bidag-wa) and the common infinitive suffix -ian, only used for secondary verbs, the primary verbs ending in -an. Similarly, the G. betteln is made from bitt-, with suffix -el-, and the verbal suffix -n of the infinitive. The use of the suffixes (-sc- in A. S., and -sl- in G.) was to give the verb a frequentative sense. Hence to beg is to 'bid often,' to 'ask repeatedly;' a frequentative of Bid(1). Der. begg-ar (better

BEGET, to generate, produce. (E.) M. E. bigiten, beggar (better begg-er); whence beggar-ly, beggar-liness, beggary. BEGET, to generate, produce. (E.) M. E. bigiten, begeten, (1) to obtain, acquire; (2) to beget. 'To bigiten mine rihte' = to obtain my right; Layamon, i. 405. 'Thus wes Marlin bigeten' = thus was Merlin begotten; Layamon, ii. 237. - A. S. begitan, bigitan, to acquire; Grein, i. 86, 115. - A. S. be-, bi-, prefix; and gitan, to get. See Get. So too O. Sax. bigetan, to seize, get; and Goth. bigitan, to find. Der. begeti-er.

BEGIN, to commence. (E.) M. E. beginnen, biginnen, in common use. - A. S. beginnan, Grein, i. 86 (though the form onginnan, with the same signification, is far more common). From the prefix be-, and A. S. ginnan, to begin. Cf. Du. and G. beginnen, to begin. See Gin, verb. Der. beginn-er, beginn-ing. BEGONE, pp. beset. (E.) In phr. woo-begone, i. e. affected or BEGONE, pp. beset. (E.) In phr. woe-begone, i. e. affected or oppressed with woe, beset with grief. Wel begon occurs in the Rom. of the Rose, l. 580, apparently in the sense of 'glad,' lit. well surrounded or beset. It is the pp. of M. E. begon, to beset; cf. 'wo je bigo,' woe come upon thee, Reliq. Antiq. ii. 273. - A. S. bigán, begán, bigangan, begangan, to go about, Grein, i. 84, 115. From prefix be-, and A. S. gán, contracted form of gangan, to go. Cf. Du. begaan, concerned, affected. GP In the phrase 'begone !' we really use two words; it should be written 'be gone !' See Go. BEGUILLE, to deceive, amuse. (Hybrid; E. and F.) M. E.

BEGUILLE, to deceive, amuse. (Hybrid; E. and F.) M. E. bigilen, to beguile, Ancren Riwle, p. 328. – E. prefix be-, bi- (A. S. be-, bi-); and M. E. gylen, gilen, to deceive. 'As theigh he gyled were' - as if he were beguiled; Will. of Palerne, 689. – O. F. guiler, to deceive. – O. F. guile, guile, deceit. See Guile. Der. beguil-ing, beguil-ing-ly, beguil-er.

beguil-ing-ly, beguil-er. BEGUINE, one of a class of religious devotees. (F.) The word is rather French than English; and, though we find a Low-Latin form beguinus, it was chiefly used as a feminine noun, viz. F. béguine, Low Lat. beghina. The béguines belonged to a religious order in Flanders, who, without taking regular vows of obedience, lived a somewhat similar life to that of the begging friars, and lived together in houses called béguinages. They were 'first established at Liége, and afterwards at Nivelle, in 1207, some say 1226. The Grande Beguinage of Bruges was the most extensive ;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. B. Another set of 'religious' were called Begardi; and it has been supposed that both terms were formed from the same root, viz. the word which appears in E. as bag, or from the E. beg! Neither solution is even possible, for bag is an English and Scandinavian form, the German form, whether High or Low, being balg; whilst beg is an E. corrupted form, unknown at any time on the continent. The whole subject is rather obscure ; see the article on Beguins in the Engl. Cycl., Arts and Sciences division. C. Mosheim was actually reduced to deriving the words from the G. begehren, regardless of the accent on the word ! As a fact, the names of these orders varied, and no one seems D. Yet the real solution of the to have known their exact meaning. words is so easy, that it is a wonder no one has ever hit upon it. The order arose at Liége, and bégui, in the dialect of Namur, means 'to stammer,' from which beguine would be formed by the mere addition of -ne, to form a fem. sb.; cf. landgrav-ine, hero-ine. Moreover, the Namur word for 'stammerer' as a masculine substantive is 'beguiaut, standing, of course, for an older form beguialt, where -alt is an Old Fr. suffix that is interchangeable with -ard; cf. Regin-ald with Reyn-ard. This gives us an equivalent form beguiard, the original of the above Low Lat. begardus. These Namur words are recorded in Grandgagnage, Dict. de la Langue Wallonne, s. v. béheter. The Namur bégui is, of course, the F. béguer, from bègue, stammering, a word of unknown origin (Brachet). E. Why these nuns were called 'stammerers,' we can but guess; but it was a most likely nickname to arise; it was merely another way of calling them fools, and all are agreed that the names were given in reproach. The form begard or beguard was confused with a much older term of derision, viz. bigo!, and this circumstance gave to the word bigot its present peculiar meaning. See Bigot. [+] BEHALF, interest, benefit. (E.) In M. E., only in the phrase on (or uppon) bihalue, or behalue. Chaucer has: 'on my bihalue' (u=v), Troil, and Cress. i. 1457. So also: 'in themperours bihalue' = on the emperor's behalf; Seven Sages, l. 324. Here on my bihalue is a substitution for the A.S. on healfe, on the side of (see exx. in Grein, i. 53), by confusion with a second common phrase be healfe, by the side of (same ref.).  $\beta$ . The A.S. kealf, lit. half, is constantly used in the sense of 'side;' and even now the best paraphrase of 'in my behalf' is 'on my side.' That this explanation is correct can easily be traced by the examples in Mätzner's Old Eng. Dict., which shews that bihalven was in common use as a prep. and adv. before the sb. behalf came into use at all. See Layamon, vol. i. p. 349; ii. 58; iii. 65, 114, &c. See Half.

BEHAVE, to conduct oneself. (E.) Shak. has behave, refl., to conduct oneself, 2 Hen. VI, iv. 3. 5; and intr. but not refl., Oth. iv. 2. 108. Rare in early authors, but the phr. 'to lerne hur to behave kur among men '= to teach her to behave herself amongst men, occurs in Le Bone Florence of Rome, l. 1567, in Ritson's Metrical Romances, vol. iii. - A. S. behæbban, to surround, to restrain, detain; 'hi behafdon hine,' i.e. they detained him, Luke, iv. 42. Used reflexively, it meant to govern or control oneself, and could at last be used intransitively, without a reflexive pronoun. It is a mere compound of the verb to have with the A. S. prefix be-. + O. Sax. bihebbian, to surround, shut in, but also to possess ; from bi-, prefix, and hebbian, to have. + M. H. G. behaben (from be- and haben), to hold fast, to take possession of. See Have. ¶ Just as E. be-lief answers to glaube (i. e. ge-laube) in German, so E. behave answers to G. gehaben, to behave oneself.

BEHAVIOUR, conduct. (E., with F. suffix.) Spelt behavoure, Levins, 222. 45. Formed, very abnormally, from the verb to behave, The curious suffix is best accounted for by supposing a confusion with the F. avoir used substantively, a word which not only meant 'wealth' or 'possessions,' but also 'ability;' see Cotgrave. It must be remembered (1) that behaviour was often shortened to haviour, as in Shakespeare; and (2) that havings, at least in Lowland Scotch, had the double meaning of (a) possessions, and (b) carriage, behaviour. See Jamieson's Scot. Dict.

BEHEAD, to cut off the head. (E.) M. E. bihefden, biheafden, bihafden. 'Heo us wulle bihafdi' = they will behead us, Layamon, iii. 45. Later, spelt biheden; 'he bihedide Joon,'he beheaded John; Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 10. – A. S. beheafdian, to behead; Matt. xiv. 10. - A. S. be-, prefix, lit. ' by;' and heafod, head. See Head. Cf. Du. onti oofden, G. enthaupten, to behead.

BEHEMOTH, a hippopotamus. (Heb.) See Job, xl. 15.-Heb. behemidik, properly a plural, signifying 'beasts;' but here used as sing to denote 'great beast;' from sing. behemidh, a beast. [*] BEHEST, a command. (E.) M. E. beheste, biheste, commonly used in the sense of 'a promise; 'Chaucer, C. T. 4461; and connected with the sense of 'a promise; 'Chaucer, C. T. 4461; and connected with the verb bihete, behete, to promise, Chaucer, C. T. 1856. From be-, prefix, and hest. Cf. A. S. behetes, a vow, behat, a promise, behatan, to promise. 'He fela behésa behét,' he made many promises ; A. S. Chron., anno 1093. The final i is excrescent. See Hest.

BEHIND, after. (E.) M. E. behinde, bihinde, bihinden, after, at the back of, afterwards; Chaucer, C. T. 4847. - A. S. behindan, adv. and prep., afterwards, after, Grein, i. 87. From A. S. prefix be-; and kindan, adv., behind, at the back, Grein, ii. 76. Cf. O. Saxon bi-kindan, adv., behind; Heliand, l. 3660. See Hind. Der. behindhand, not in early use; made in imitation of before-hand, q.v. It occurs in Shak. Winter's Tale, v. 1. 151.

BEHOLD, to see, watch, observe. (E.) M. E. bikolden, beholden, biholde, beholde, to see, observe, to bind by obligation; in common use. [The last sense appears only in the pp. beholden; 'beholdyn, or bowndyn, obligor, teneor ;' Prompt. Parv. p. 28. Shak. wrongly has beholding for the pp. beholden, as in Merry Wives, i. I. 283.] - A. S. behaldan, to hold, possess, guard, observe, see; Grein i. 87. +0. Fries. bihalda, to keep. +0. Sax. bihaldan, to keep. + Du. behouden, to preserve, keep. +G. behalten, to keep. From A. S. prefix be, and healdan, to hold. See Hold. [Cf. Lat. twor, to see, to keep; E. guard, as compared with regard, &c.] Der. behold-er; also pp. shold-en, corrupted to behold-ing.

BEHOOF, advantage. (E.) Almost invariably found in M. E. in the dat. case behave, bikowe [u written for v], with the prep. to pre-ceding it; as in 'to ancren bikowe,' for the use of anchoresses, Ancren Riwle, p. 90. - A. S. behof, advantage, only used in the comp. behoflic; see bihoflic is, gloss to Lat. oportet in Luke, xviii. 1, in the Lindisfarne MS. (Northumbrian dialect). + O. Fries. behóf, bihóf. + Du. behoef, commonly in the phr. ten behoeve van, for the advantage of. + Swed. behof, want, need. + Dan. behov, need. + G. behuf, behoof. B. The be- is a prefix ; the simple sb. appears in the Icel. kof, moderation, measure, proportion; whence the verb kafa, to hit, to behove. Cf. Swed. köfva, measure; köfvas, to beseem. The Goth. gakobains, temperance, self-restraint, is related on the one hand to Icel. kóf, moderation, measure; and on the other, to O. H. G. huopa, M. H. G. huobe, G. hufe, hube, a measured quantity of land, a hide of land, so named from its capacity or content; from the  $\checkmark$  KAP, to hold, contain; cf. Lat. capax, containing, capere, to seize, orig. to contain, hold, grasp. See Fick, iii. 63. O. The development of ideas is accordingly (1) to hold fast, retain, (2) to restrain, moderate, (3) to fit for one's use, to make serviceable. From the same root we have behave, have, behave.

M. E. bihoven, behoven (writ-BEHOVE, to become, befit. (E.) ten bilouen, behouen in MSS.); commonly as impers. verb, bihoveth, behoveth, Chaucer, Troil. and Cress. iv. 978; pt. t. bihowede, Ancren Riwle, p. 394. – A. S. bihófian, behófian, to need, be necessary; Grein, i. 87, 116. + O. Fries. bihovia, to behove. + Du. behoeven, to be necessary, to behove. + Swed. behöfva. + Dan. behöve. + G. behufen (not in use; but the sb. behuf, need, occurs).  $\beta$ . The form of these verbs shews that they are derivatives from a substantive. Also, the be- is a mere prefix. The simple verb appears only in the Icel. hafa, to aim at, to hit, to behove; Swed. köfvas, to beseem. See Behoof. BELABOUR, to ply vigorously, beat soundly. (Hybrid; E. and F.) 'He... belaboured Jubellius with a cudgel;' North's Plutarch, p. 964. - E. prefix be, q. v.; and labour, q. v. BELAY, to fasten a rope. (Du.) To belay is to fasten a rope by laying it round and round a couple of pins. Borrowed from Du. beleggen, to cover, to overlay, to border, to lace, garnish with fringe, &c.; and, as a naut. term, to belay. From prefix be- (the same as E. prefix be-), and leggen, to lay, place, cognate with E. lay. See Lay. ¶ There is also a native E. word to belay, a compound of be- and lay, but it means 'to besiege' or 'beleaguer' a castle; see Spenser, Sonnet 14. See Beleaguer.

BELCH, to eructate. (E.) M. E. belken, belke, Towneley Myst. 314. The sb. bolke is found, in the dat. case, in P. Plowman, B. p. 314. v. 307; and the vb. bolken, Prompt. Parv. p. 43. - A. S. bealcan, Ps. xviii. 2; commoner in the derived form bealcettan, Ps. xliv. 1; Ps. cxviii. 171. Formed from the stem bel-, which appears in bell, bell-ow, with the addition of the formative suffix -c or -k; cf. tal-k, from tell; stal-k (along), from steal. Cf. Du. bulken, to low, bellow, roar. See Bellow.

BELDAM, an old woman. (F., - L.) Ironically used for beldame, i. e. fair lady, in which sense it occurs in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 2. 43.-F. belle, fair; dame, lady. - Lat. bella, fair; domina, lady. Hence beldam is a doublet of belladonna.

BELEAGUER, to besiege. (Du.) We also find the verb to beleague ; as in 'besieging and beleaguing of cities ;' Holland's Plutarch, p. 319; but this is a less correct form. - Du. belageren, to besiege; from prefix be- (as in E.), and leger, a bed, a camp, army in encampment; which from leggen, to lay, put, place, cognate with E. lay. [Thus the true E. word is belay; see Note to belay. The Du. leger is E. lair.] + G. belagern, to besiege; lager, a camp; legen, to lay. + Swed. belägra, to besiege; läger, a bed; lägga, to lay. + Dan. belægge, to besiege; lægge, to lay; also, Dan. beleire, to besiege, which is prob. a corruption of Du. belegeren. See Lair, Lay. BELLEMNITE, a kind of fossil. (Gk.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg.

Errors, b. ii. c. 5. s. 10. So called because shaped like the head of "lufian, to love. See Love. a dart. - Gk.  $\beta \in \lambda \in \mu \times i \pi \eta s$ , a kind of stone, belemnite. - Gk.  $\beta \in \lambda \in \mu \times i \pi \eta$ , a dart, missile. - Gk. βάλλειν, to cast, throw; also, to fall. + Skt.

BELFRY, properly, a watch-tower. (F., -G.) Owing to a corruption, the word is now only used for 'a tower for bells.' Corrupted from M. E. berfray, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1187; berfrey, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 2777.-O. F. berfroit, berfreit, belefreit.-M. H. G. berefrit, berchfrit, a watch-tower.-M. H. G. bere, protection (which from bergen, to protect); and M. H. G. frit, frid, O. H. G. fridu (G. friede), a place of security (which from O. H. G. fri, cognate with E. free). β. The mod. G. friede means only 'peace,' but O. H. G. fride meant also 'a place of security,' and even 'a tower;' so that berefrit meant 'a watch-tower' or 'guard-tower.' ¶ The term was first applied to the towers upon wheels, so much used in the siege of towns. [†]

BELIE, to tell lies about. (E.) Much Ado, iv. 1. 148. 'To belye the truth; 'Tyndal, Works, p. 105, l. 2. M.E. bilien, bili3en; the pp. bilowen occurs in P. Plowman, B. ii. 22, and in the Ancren Riwle, p. 68. - A. S. be-, prefix; and leogan, to lie. See Lie. BELLEVE, to have faith in. (E.) M. E. beleve, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 151; E. E. bilefde, pt. t. of bilefen, Layamon, 2856*. The prefix is A. S. be or bi-, substituted for the earlier prefix ge-. - A. S. ge-lyfan, gelefan, gelefan, Grein, i. 424), to believe. + Goth. galaubjan, to believe, to esteem as valuable; from galaubs, valuable, which again is from Goth. linbs, dear, equivalent to A. S. leof, Eng. lief. + O. H. G. galaupjan, to believe ; whence G. glauben. See Lief. Der. belief (M. E. bileve, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 187), believ-able, believ-er.

BELLADONNA, deadly nightshade. (Ital.,-L.) The name is due to the use of it by ladies to give expression to the eyes, the pupils of which it expands. - Ital. bella donna, a fair lady. - Lat. bella domina, a fair lady. Bella is the fem. of bellus, handsome; see Beau. Domina is the fem. of dominus, a lord; see Don, sb. Doublet, beldam.

BELLE, a fair lady. (F., -L.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 8. See Beldam, and Beau; or see above.

BELLIGERENT, carrying on war. (Lat.) In Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vol. vi. c. 31. - Lat. belligerent-, stem of belligerens, waging war. - Lat. belli-, for bello-, stem of bellum, war; and gerens, pres. pt. of gerere, to carry. (1) Lat. bellum stands for O. Lat. duellum; see Duel. (1) Lat. gerere, pp. gestus, appears in E. jest; see Jest.

BEILLOW, to make a loud noise. (E.) Gower uses bellewing with reference to the noise made by a bull; C. A. iii. 203. The more usual M. E. form is to bell. 'As loud as belleth wind in helle;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 713.-A. S. bellan, to make a loud noise, Grein, i. 89. + O. H. G. pellan, to make a loud noise.  $-\checkmark$  BHAL, to resound; Fick, ii. 422. B. The suffix -ow is due to the g in the derived A.S. form bylgean, to bellow, Martyr. 17 Jan. (Bosworth, Lye); cf. Icel. belja, to bellow. BELLOWS, an implement for blowing. (E.) M. E. beli, below, a bag, used in the special sense of 'bellows.' Spelt bely in Chaucer, Pers. Tale, Group I, 351, where Tyrwhitt reads belous. The pl. belies, belowes, was also used in the same sense. 'Belowe, or belows, follis ; Prompt. Parv. p. 30. The numerous examples in Mätzner, s. v. bali, shew that bellows is the pl. of belowe, another form of belly; and are in the line of the provided of the line of the lin Ćf. G.

See Bag

BELONG, to pertain to. (E.) M. E. belonge, belongen, Gower, C. A. i. 12, 121, ii. 351; Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, p. 12, l. 17. Not found in A. S., which has only the simple verb langian, to long after, to crave for ; Grein, ii. 157. But cf. Du. belangen, to concern ; wat belangt, as far as concerns, as for; belangende, concerning. [The O. H. G. pelangen, M. H. G. belangen, means to long for, crave after.] See Long, in the sense ' to crave.' BELOVED, much loved. (E.) M. E. beloved, Gower, C. A. i. 106,

BELOVED, much loved. (E.) M. E. beloved, Gower, C. A. i. 106. It is the pp. of M. E. bilutien, biluvien, to love greatly; spelt biluvien in Layamon, i. 39. – A. S. prefix be-, bi-, here used intensively; and A. S. Chaucer has it also, C. T. 9239. Spelt beneysun, Havelok, 1723. –

¶ The M. E. bilufien also means ' to please; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 257; cf. Du. believen, to please. BELOW, beneath. (E.) M. E. biloogh, adv., beneath, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 116. Compounded of prep. bi, be, by; and loogh, low, low. See Low.

BELT, a girdle. (E.) M. E. belt; dative belte, in Chaucer, C. T. 3931. - A. S. belt (Bosworth). + Icel. belti. + Irish and Gaelic balt, a belt, a border. + Lat. balteus, a belt; but the close similarity of this form to the rest shews that it can hardly be a cognate form ; perhaps the Latin was derived from the old Celtic. [+] BEMOAN, to moan for, sorrow for. (E.) The latter vowel has changed, as in moan. M. E. bimenen, to bemoan; O. E. Homilies, i. 13.-A. S. bimenan, Grein, i. 117.-A. S. bi-, prefix; and menan, to moan. See Moan.

BENCH, a long seat or table. (E.) M. E. benche, Chaucer, C. T. 7334. - A. S. bene (Grein). + Du. bank, a bench, form, pew, shelf; also, a bank for money. + Icel. bekkr (for benkr), a bench. + Swed. and Dan. bonk, a bench, form, pew. + G. bank, a bench; a bank for money. Fick gives a supposed Teutonic banki; iii. 201. See Bank, of which bench is a doublet. Dor. bench-er.

BEND, to bow, curve. (E.) M. E. benden, bende ; ' bende bowys, tendo, Prompt. Parv. p. 30. - A. S. bendan, to bend; Grein, i. 90. -A. S. bend, a bond. - A. S. bindan, to bind. See Bind. + Icel. benda. +Swed. banda, to stretch, to strain.  $\P$  Bend means to strain a bow by fastening the band or string. The vowel e is for  $\ddot{a}$ , a mutation of a, and the vowel a is the original vowel seen in band, the pt. t. of bindan. The present is an excellent instance of the laws of vowel-change. We see at once that bend, with a secondary vowel e, is a derivative from (and later than) band, with the primary vowel a. Cf. bend = a band; Gower, C. A. iii. 11.

BENEATH, below. (E.) M. E. benethe, Gower, C. A. i. 35; bineoben, Ancren Riwle, p. 390. - A. S. beneoban, prep., below; Grein, i. 91. + Du. beneden, adv. and prep. From A. S. prefix be, by; and neotan, adv., below; Grein, ii. 293. Here an is an adverbial suffix, and neot-=nit, seen in A. S. nite, adv., below, and niter, nether, lower. See Nothor. BENEDICTION, blessing. (F., -L.) Shak, has both benediction and benison; the former is really a pedantic or Latin form, and the latter was in earlier use in English. See Bonison.

BENEFACTOR, a doer of good to another. (Lat.) Benefactor in North's Plutarch, p. 735; benefactour in Tyndal's Works, p. 216, col. I; but the word was not French. - Lat. benefactor, a doer of good. -Lat. bene, well; and factor, a doer, from Lat. facere, pp. factus, to do. Der. benefact-ion, benefact-ress.

BENEFICE, a church preferment. (F.,-L.) M. E. benefice, Chaucer, Prol. 291. - F. benefice (Cot.) - Low Lat. beneficium, a grant of an estate; Lat. beneficium, a kindness, lit. well-doing.-Lat. benefacere, to benefit. - Lat. bene, well; and facere, to do. See Beneficium in Ducange. From Lat. benefacere we have also benefic-ence, benefic-ent, benefic-i-al, benefic-i-al-ly, benefic-i-ary; and see benefit. BENEFIT, a favour. (F., = L.) Rich. quotes from Elyot's Governour, bk. ii. c. 8: 'And that vertue [benevolence] . . is called than beneficence; and the deed, vulgarly named a good to rne, may be called a benfite.' M. E. bienfet, which occurs with the sense of 'good action' in P. Plowman, B. v. 621; also bienfait, Gower, C. A. iii. 187.-O. F. bienfet (F. bienfait), a benefit.-Lat. benefactum, a kindness conferred. - Lat. bene, well; and factum, done, pp. of facere, ¶ The word has been modified so as to make it more like to do. the Latin, with the odd result that bene- is Latin, and -fit (for -fet) is Old French 1 The spelling benefet occurs in Wyclif's Bible, Ecclus. xxix. o.

BENEVOLENCE, an act of kindness, charity. (F.,-L.) 'He reysed therby notable summes of money, the whiche way of the leuyinge of this money was after named a benywolence; 'Fabyan, Edw. IV, an. 1475. - F. benevolence, 'a well-willing, or good will; a favour, kindnesse, benevolence; 'Cot. - Lat. benevolentia, kindness. - Lat. benevolus, kind; also spelt benivolus. - Lat. beni-, from benus, old form of bonus, good ; and uolo, I wish. See Voluntary. Der. From the same source, benevolent, benevolent-ly.

BENIGHTED, overtaken by nightfall. (E.) In Dryden's Eleonora, l. 57. Pp. of the verb benight. 'Now jealousie no more benights her face;' Davenant, Gondibert, bk. iii. c. 5. Coined by prefixing the verbal prefix be- to the sb. night. BENIGN, affable, kind. (F.,-L.) Chaucer has benigne, C. T.

4598.-O. F. benigne (F. benin).-Lat. benignus, kind, a contracted form of benigenus; from beni-, attenuated form of the stem of benus, old form of bonus, good; and -genus, born (as in indigenus), from the verb genere, old form of gignere, to beget. - & GAN, to beget. Der.

acc. benedictionem, from nom. benedictio. - Lat. benedictus, pp. of benedicere, (1) to use words of good omen, (2) to bless. - Lat. bene, well; and dicere, to speak. Doublet, benediction.

BENT-GRASS, a coarse kind of grass. (E.) 'Hoc gramen, bent; ' Wright's Vocabularies, i. 191. - A. S. beonet, a form adduced by Mätzner, but not in Lye, nor Bosworth, nor Grein. + O. H. G. pinuz, M. H. G. binez, binz, G. binse, bent-grass. Root unknown; there is no very clear reason for connecting it with bind, beyond what is suggested s.v. Bin. BENUMB, to make numb. (E.) Written benum by Turberville; Pyndara's Answere, st. 40 (R.) Benum is a false form, being properly not an infin., but a past part. of the verb benim; and hence Gower has: 'But altogether he is benome The power both of hand and fete' = he is deprived of the power; C. A. iii. 2. See Numb.

BEQUEATH, to dispose of property by will. (E.) M.E. byquethe, Chaucer, C. T. 2770. - A. S. be-cuestan, bi-cuestan, to say, declare, affirm; Grein, i. 82, 113. From prefix be- or bi-, and A. S. cuestan, BEQUEST, a bequeathing; a thing bequeathed. (E.) M. E. biqueste, Langtoft, p. 86; but very rare, the usual form being biquide, byquide, bequide (trisyllabic), as in Rob. of Glouc., pp. 381, 384. From prefix be-, and A. S. ewide, a saying, opinion, declaration, Grein, i. 176. – A. S. bicuedan, to declare. See Boqueath. B. Hence bequest is a corrupted form; there seems to have been a confusion between quest (of F. origin) and quide, from quoth (of E. origin). The common use of inquest as a Law-French term, easily suggested the false form bequest. BEREAVE, to deprive of. (E.) M. E. bireue, bereue (u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 12410. - A. S. bireáfian, bereáfian, Grein, i. 92, 118. -A. S. be-, prefix; and redifian, to rob. See Beave. Der. bereft, ahort for bireued (u for v), the pp. of bireuen; bereave-ment. BEBGAMOT, a variety of pear. (F.,-Ital.) F. bergamotte, in Cotgrave, explained as 'a yellow peare, with a hard rind, good for perry; also, the delicate Italian small peare, called the Bergamotte peare. - Ital. bergamotia, bergamot pear; also, the essence called bergamot. - Ital. Bergamo, the name of a town in Lombardy.

BERRY, a small round fruit. (E.) M. E. berye, berie (with one r), Chaucer, prol. 207. – A. S. berige, berga, Deut. xxiii. 24; where the stem of the word is ber-, put for bes-, which is for bas- + Du. bes, bezie, a berry. + Icel. ber. + Swed. and Dan. bär. + G. beere, O. H. G. peri. + Goth. basi, a berry. Cf. Skt. bhas, to eat; the sense seems to have been ' edible fruit.'

BERTH, a secure position. (E.?) It is applied (1) to the place where a ship lies when at anchor or at a wharf; (2) to a place in a ship to sleep in; (3) to a comfortable official position. In Ray's Glossary of South-Country Words, ed. 1691, we find : ' Barth, a warm place or pasture for cows or lambs.' In the Devon. dialect, barthless means 'houseless;' Halliwell.  $\beta$ . The derivation is very uncertain, but it would appear to be the same word with birth. The chief difficulty is to account for the extension of meaning, but the M.E. burd, berd, or biro means (besides birth) 'a race, a nation;' also 'station, position, natural place,' which comes very near the sense required. Ex. ' For in birbes sal I to re schryue' = confitebor tibi in nationibus, Ps. xvii (xviii). 50; met. version in Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 28. 'Jif he . . forlete his propre burye' - if he abandon his own rank (or origin); Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 6. 'Athalt hire burde i licnesse of heuenliche cunde '= maintains her station (or conduct) in the likeness of heavenly nature; Hali Meidenhad, p. 13, l. 16. See Birth. ¶ It may have been confused with other words. Cf. M. E. berwe, a shady place; Prompt. Parv. p. 33, from A. S. bearu, a grove ; and see Burrow. It does not seem to be W. barth, a floor.

BERYL, a precious stone. (L.,-Gk.,-Arab.) In the Bible (A. V.), Rev. xxi. 20. Spelt beril in An Old English Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 98. - Lat. beryllus, a beryl. - Gk. Bhpullos. B. A word of Eastern origin ; cf. Arab. billour or ballúr, crystal ; a word given in Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 91. [*] BESEECH, to ask. (E.) M. E. biseche, beseche, Gower, C. A. i. 115; but also biseke, beseken, beseken, Chaucer, Knightes Tale, 1. 60. From the prefix be-, and M. E. sechen, seken, to seek. Cf. Du. bezoeken, G. besuchen, to visit; Swed. besöka, Dan. besöge, to visit, go to see. See Seek.

BESIGEEM, to be becoming. (E.) M. E. bisemen, besemen. 'Be-comyn, decet ;' Prompt. Parv. p. 27. 'Wel bisemed be' - it well beseems thee; St. Juliana, p. 55. From the prefix be-, bi-; and the M.E. semen, to seem. See Seem.

BESET, to set about, surround, perplex. (E.) M. E. bisatten, besetten, especially used of surrounding crowns, &c. with precious stones. 'With golde and riche stones Beset;' Gower, C. A. i. 127. Biset, i. e.

O.F. beneison, beneison, Roquefort; beneichon, beneisun, beneison, <sup>6</sup>i. 119. + Du. bezetten, to occupy, invest (a town). + Dan. besætte, to Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, where references are given. - Lat. fill, occupy. + Swed. besätta, to beset, plant, hedge about, people, garrison (a fort). + Goth. bisaljan, to set round (a thing). + G. besetzen, to occupy, garrison, trim, beset. From prefix be-, bi-, and A. S. settan, to set. See Set.

A. S. Mitan, to set. See Bos. BESHREW, to imprecate a curse on. (E.) M. E. bischreuoen; Chaucer, C. T. 6426, 6427. Wyclif uses beskrewith to translate Lat. deprawat, Prov. ix. 9; A. V. 'perverteth.' Formed by prefixing be-to the sb. shrew; cf. bestow. See Bo- and Shrew.

BESIDE, prep., by the side of; BESIDES, adv., moreover. (E.) M. E. biside, bisiden, bisides, all three forms being used both as prep. and adverb. 'His dangers him bisides; 'Chaucer, C. T. prol. 404. 'Bisides Scotlonde' = towards Scotland, said of the Roman wall built as a defence against the Scots; Layamon, ii. 6. - A. S. be sidan, used as two distinct words; where be means 'by,' and sidan is the dat. sing. of sid, a side. ¶ The more correct form is beside ; besides is a later development, due to the habit of using the suffix -es to form adverbs ; the use of besides as a preposition is, strictly, incorrect, but is as old as the 12th century.

BESIEGE, to lay siege to. (Hybrid; E. and F.) M. E. bisegen, besegen. 'To bysegy his castel;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 399. Formed by prefixing be- or bi- to the M. E. verb segen, formed from the M. E. bestum ; Wright's Vocabularies, i. 235, 276. Also bestum, bestum i. 24, 25, 33, - A.S. bestum i. Luke, xi. 25; Mat. xii. 44. + O. Du. bessem, Oudemans; Du. bezem, a broom. + O. H. G. pe samo, M. H. G. bëseme, G. besen, a broom, a rod. B. The original sense seems to have been a rod; or perhaps a collection of twigs or rods. Mr. Wedgwood cites a Dutch form brem-bessen, meaning 'broom-twigs.' Du. bessenboom means 'a currant-tree;' but here E. berry. Root undetermined. BESOT, to make sottish. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Shak. has be-sotted, infatuated, Troil. ii. 2. 143. From verbal prefix be-, and sot, q. v. BESPEAK, to speak to; to order or engage for a future time. (E.) Shak. has bespoke, Errors, iii. 2. 176. M. E. bispeken. 'And byspekith al his deth;' King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 93. – A.S. besprecan, to speak to, tell, complain, accuse; Orosius, i. 10, 12. [For the dropping of r, see Speak.] – A. S. be-, prefix; and sprecas, to speak. Cf. O. H. G. bisprácka, detraction.

BEST ; see Better.

BESTEAD, to situate, to assist. (Scand.) Seldom used except in the past participle. 'Bestad, or wythcholden yn wele or wo, de-tentus;' Prompt. Parv. M. E. bistad, bestad, pp. of a verb bisteden, besteden, to situate, to place under certain circumstances. Spelt bistatet in St. Marharete, p. 3. Of old Low German origin, and apparently Scandinavian. The A.S. has the simple verb stated tan, to set, set fast, plant ; Grein, ii. 477. Cf. Du. besteden, to employ, bestow ; but especially Dan. bestede, to place, to inter, to bury ; with pp. bestedt, used as our E. bestead, as in vare ilde bestedt, to be ill bestead, to be badly off; were bestedt i Nod, to be in distress, to be badly off. Similarly is used Icel. staddr, circumstanced, the pp. of stedja, to stop, fix, appoint. See Stead. [+] BESTIAL, beast-like. (F., -L.) In Rom. of the Rose, 6718. See Beast.

BESTOW, to place, locate, &c. (E.) M. E. bistowen, bestowen, to place, occupy, employ, give in marriage ; Chaucer, Troilus, i. 967 ; C. T. 3979, 5695. From the prefix be-, and M. E. stows, a place; hence it means 'to put into a place.' See Stow. Der. bestow-er, bestow-al.

BESTREW, to strew over. (E.) In Temp. iv. I. 20. M. E. bistretuen, Old Eng. Homilies, p. 5. - A.S. be- or bi-, prefix; and stretuian, to strew. See Strew.

BESTRIDE, to stride over. (E.) In Shak. Cor. iv. 5. 124. M. E. bistriden, Layamon, iii. 118. – A. S. bestridan (Lye). – A. S. be, prefix; and stridan, to stride. See Stride.

BET, a wager; to wager. (F.) Shak. has it both as sb. and verb; Hen. V, ii. 1. 99; Haml. v. 2. 170. It is a mere contraction of abet, formerly used both as a sb. and a verb. See Abet. ¶ The A.S. bid, a pledge (Bosworth), has nothing to do with it, but = Icel. bid, an offer, and Lowland Scotch bode, a proffer; the change from d to o being common; as in E. bone from A.S. bán. Again, the A.S. bétan, to better, amend, produced Scottish beet, which is quite dif-ferent from bet. Both suggestions are wrong. BETAKE, to enter on, take to. (Hybrid; E and Scand.) M.E.

bicaken, which was chiefly used in the sense of 'to entrust, deliver, hand over to.' 'Heo sculled eow pat lond bicaken' = they shall give you the land; Layamon, i. 266. Hence 'to commit;' as in: 'Ich bitake min soule God'= I commit my soul to God; Rob. of Glouc. surrounded, Ancren Riwle, p. 378. - A.S. bisettan, to surround; Grein, p. 475. From A.S. prefix be- or bi-, and M.E. taken, which is a

Scandinavian word, from Icel. taka, to take, deliver. No doubt the sense was influenced by the (really different) A.S. betdecan, to assign, Grein, i. 95; but this was a weak verb, and would have become beteach, pt. tense betaught.

BETEL, a species of pepper. (Port., - Malabar.) Mentioned in 1681; see Arber's Eng. Garner, i. 414 .- Port. betel, betele. - Malabar beetla-codi (Webster).

BETHINK, to think on, call to mind. (E.) M. E. bithenchen, bithenken, bithinken; Layamon, ii. 531.-A.S. bipencan, to consider, think about; Grein, i. 121. - A. S. bi-, prefix; and pencan, to think; see Think. + Du. and G. bedenken, to consider. + Dan. betänke, to consider. + Swed. betänka, to consider. BETIDE, to happen to, befall. (E.) M. E. bitiden, Ancren Riwle, p. 278.-M. E. prefix bi- or be-, and M. E. tiden, to happen; which from A. S. tidan, to happen (Bosworth). - A. S. tid, a tide, time, hour. See Tide.

BETIMES, in good time. (E.) Formerly betime ; the final s is due to the habit of adding -s or -es to form adverbs ; cf. whiles from while, afterwards lengthened to whilst ; besides from beside ; &c. 'Bi so thow go bityme' = provided that thou go betimes; P. Plowman, B. v. 647. - A. S. be or bi, by; and time, time. See Time.

BETOKEN, to signify. (E.) M. E. bitacnen, bitoenen, bitokenen; Ormulum, 1716. Just as in the case of believe, q. v., the prefix behas been substituted for the original prefix ge-. - A. S. getacnian, to betoken, signify, Grein, i. 462. – A. S. ge, prefix; and then, a token; Grein, ii. 520. See Token. ¶ Observe that the right spelling is rather betwokn; i. e. the final -en is for -n, where the n is a real part of the word, not the M.E. infinitive ending. Cf. Du. beteeken-en, Dan. betegn-e, Swed. betechn-a, G. bezeichn-en, to denote. BETRAY, to act as traitor. (E. and F.) M.E. bitraien, betraien, Chaucer, T roil. and Cress. v. 1247. It appears early, e.g. in Rob. of Glouc. p. 454; in King Horn, 1251; and in O. Eng. Misc., ed. Morris, p. 40. From the E. prefix be; and the M. E. traien, to be-tray, of F. origin. [This hybrid compound was due to confusion with bewray, q. v.]  $\beta$ . The M. E. traien is from O. F. trair (F. trahir); which from Lat. tradere, to deliver. - Lat. tra-, for trans, across ; and -dere, to put, cognate with Skt. dhá, to put; from  $\checkmark$  DHA, to put, place. See Traitor, Treason. Der. betray-er, betray-al.

BETROTH, to affiance. (E.) M. E. bitreuthien, to betroth; occurs thrice in Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright (Percy Society), pp. 66, 70. Made by prefixing the verbal prefix bi- or be- to the sb. treathe, or treathe; which is from A.S. treathe, treathe, or treathe; which is from A.S. treathe, truth; Grein, i. 552. See Troth, Truth. Der. betroth-al, betroth-ment. BETTER, BEST. (E.) 1. The M. E. forms are, for the comparative, both bet (Chaucer, prol. 242) and better (Chaucer, prol. 256). The former is commonly adverbial, like Lat. melius; the latter adjectival, Lat. melior. - A.S. bet, adv.; betera, adj. (Grein, i. 95). + Goth. bariza, adj., better; from a root BAT, good. 2. Again, best is short for A. S. betst (Grein, i. 96), which is an obvious contraction of bet-est. + Goth. batista, best; from the same root BAT. Cognate with Goth. bat- is Skt. bhadra, excellent ; cf. Skt. bhand, to be fortunate, or to make fortunate. See Boot (2). ¶ The Gothic forms have been A. The other forms of better given above, as being the clearest. are : Du. beter, adj. and adv. ; Icel. betri, adj., betr, adv. ; Dan. bedre ; Swed. bättre ; G. besser. B. Other forms of best are: Du. and G. best ; Icel. beztr, adj., bezt, adv. ; Dan. bedst ; Swed. bäst.

BETWEIEIN, in the middle of. (E.) M.E. bytwene, bitwene, by-twene, Rob. of Glouc. p. 371; Gower, C.A. i. 9. – A.S. be-tweinan, be-tweinum, Grein, i. 96. – A.S. be, prep., by; and tweinum, dat. pl. of twein, double, twain, as in 'bi seem tweinum,' between two seas; β. Twein is an adj. formed from A.S. twi, two; see Grein, ii. 557. also rwih, two, rwi-, double, rwei-, double, in Grein. Cf. G. zwischen, between, from zwei, two. See Twin, Twain, Two.

BETWIXT, between. (E.) Formed (with excrescent t) from M. E. betwixe, bitwixe, Chaucer, C. T. 2133. - A. S. between, betweens, betweeh, Grein, i. 96. From be, by; and tweehs, tweeh, forms extended from twih, two, twee-, double; all from twa, two. + O. Friesic bitwischa, for biswiska, between; from bi, by, and twisk, twiska, between, which is ultimately from twa, two. Cf. G. zwischen, between, from O. H. G.

zwise, zwiski, two-fold; which from zwei, two. See Two. BEVEL, sloping; to slope, slant. (F.) Shak. has: 'I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel,' i. e. crooked; Sonnet 121. Cotgrave has: 'Buveau, m. a kind of squire [carpenter's rule] or squire-like instrument, having moveable and compasse branches; or, the one branch compasse and the other straight: some call it a bevell.' Now, as F. -eau stands for O. F. -el, it is clear that E. bevel represents an O. F. buvel, or more probably bevel, which is not, however, to be found. We find, however, the Span. baivel, a bevel, accented on the e. The etym. of the O. F. word is unknown. [†] age.' = O. F. bouraige, drink, with which cf. O. F. beverie, the action of drinking. - O. F. bevre, boivre (see boivre in Burguy), to drink, with beveraggio, drink; Span. brebage, drink, [†] BEVY, a company, esp. of ladies. (F.) Spenser has: 'this bevie of Ladies bright;' Shep. Kal. April, 118. On which E. K. has the note : \* Bevie ; a beavie of ladies is spoken figuratively for a company or troupe; the term is taken of larkes. For they say a bevie of larkes, even as a covey of partridge, or an eye of pheasaunts. Spelt bene (= bene) in Skelton, Garl. of Laurel, 771. - F. benee, which Mr. Wedgwood cites, and explains as 'a brood, flock, of quails, larks, roebucks, thence applied to a company of ladies generally.' Florio's Ital. Dict. has: 'Beva, a beauie' [bevy]; and mod. Ital. beva means  $\beta$ . Origin uncertain; but the Ital. points to the original 'a drink.' sense as being a company for drinking, from O. F. bevre, Ital. bevere, to drink. See Boverage. [+] BEWAIL, to wail for, lament. (E.; or E. and Scand.) M. E. biwailen, bewailen; K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 4394. From the prefix be-, and M. E. wailen, to wail. See Wail.

BEWARE, to be wary, to be cautious. (E.) This is now written as one word, and considered as a verb; yet it is nothing but the two words be ware run together; the word ware being here an adjective, viz. the M. E. war, for which the longer term wary has been substi-tuted in mod. E. 'Be war therfor' = therefore be wary, Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 119. 'A hal felawes! beth war of swich a lape! = aha ! sirs, beware (lit. be ye wary) of such a jest ; Chaucer, C. T., B. 1629. The latter phrase cannot be mistaken; since beth is the imperative plural of the verb. Cf. A. S. war, adj., wary, cautious. See Wary. BEWILDER, to perplex. (E.) Dryden has the pp. bewilder'd; tr. of Lucretius, bk. ii. 1. 11. Made by prefixing be- to the prov. Eng. longer form wilderness, which would naturally be supposed as compounded of wilder- and -ness, whereas it is rather compounded of wildern- and -ness, and should, etymologically, be spelt with double n. For examples of wildern, a wilderness, see Halliwell's Dictionary, and Layamon's Brut, 1. 1238.  $\beta$ . Thus bewilder (tor bewildern) is 'to lead into a wilderness,' which is just the way in which it was first used. Dryden has : 'Bewilder'd in the maze of life' (as above); and Addison, Cato, i. 1, has : 'Puzzled in mazes, . . . Lost and bewildered Y. There is thus no reason for supposing it in the fruitless search.' other than a parely native word, though other languages possess words somewhat similar. Cf. Du. verwilderen, to grow wild, verwilderd, uncultivated; Dan. forvilde, to lead astray, bewilder, perplex; passive forvildes, to go astray, lose one's way; Swed. forvilla, to puzzle, confound ; Icel. villr, bewildered, astray ; villa, to bewilder. The Scandinavian words shew that the peculiar sense of E. bewilder has a trace of Scandinavian influence ; i. e. it was a Northern English word. See Wilderness. Der. bewilder-ment.

BEWITCH, to charm with witchcraft. (E.) M. E. biuicchen. bewicchen; spelt biwucched (unusual) in Layamon, ii. 597, where the later MS. has iwicehed. From prefix be- or bi-, and A. S. wiccian, to be a witch, to use witchcraft; Thorpe's Ancient Laws of England, ii. 274, sect. 39. - A. S. wicce, a witch. See Witch. Der. bewitchment, bewitch-er-y.

BEWRAY, to disclose; properly, to accuse. (E.) In A. V. Matt. xxvi. 73; and, for numerous examples, see Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook. M. E. bewraien, biwreyen; Chaucer has bywereye, to disclose, reveal, C. T. 6529, and also the simple verb wreye in the same sense, C. T. 3502. – Prefix be-, and A. S. wregan, to accuse; 'agunnon hime wregan,' they began to accuse him, Luke, xxiii. 2. + Icel. ragja (orig. vragja), to slander, defame. + Swed. rija, to discover, betray. + O. Fries. biwrogia, to accuse. + Goth. wróhjan, to accuse. + G. rügen, to censure. The Goth. and Icel. forms shew that the verb is formed from a sb., which appears as Goth. wróhs, an accusation; Icel. róg, a slander; cf. G. ruge, a censure. See Fick, iii. 310.

BEY, a governor. (Turkish.) Modern. - Turk. beg (pron. nearly as E. bay), a lord, a prince; Rich. Dict., p. 310. Cf. Persian baig, a lord ; a Mogul title ; ' Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 102.

BEYOND, on the farther side of. (E.) M. E. beyonde, biyonde, beyeonden ; Maundeville's Travels, pp. 1, 142, 314. - A.S. begeondan, Matt. iv. 25. - A. S. be-, and geond, giond, prep., across, beyond; with adv. suffix -an. See geond in Grein, i. 497. And see Yon, Yonder.

BEZEL, the part of a ring in which the stone is set, and which holds it in. (F., -L.?) Also spelt basil. It occurs in Cotgrave's Dict., who explains F. biseau by 'a bezle, bezling, or scuing [i.e. ' BEVERAGE, drink. (F., -L.) Shak. has beverage, Winter's skewing]; such a slopenesse, or slope form, as is in the point of an Tale, i. 2. 346. Cotgrave has: 'Bruvage, Breuvage, drinke, beveredge to which a chisel is ground; the application to the ring' relates to the sloping edge or rim of metal round the stone. The F. bisen had an older spelling bisel (noted by Roquefort), from which E. bezel and basil are corruptions. - O. F. bisel, which Roquefort explains by 'en pente; angle imperceptible;' the true sense being, apparently, 'a sloping edge.' + Span. bisel (accented on s), a basil, bezel; the edge of a looking-glass, or crystal plate. [Looking-glasses used to have a slanted border, so as to be thin at the edge.] B. Origin unknown; but we should not pass over Low Lat. 'bisalus, lapis cui sunt duo anguli;' Ducange. This looks like the same word, and as if derived from Lat. bis, double, and and a, a wing. The Lat. ala, equivalent to ax-la, also signifies the axil of a plant, i. e. the angle formed by a leaf where it leaves the stem. This gives the sense of 'slope,' and the 'bezle' seems to be the 'slope' formed by the two faces of anything that has a bevelled edge. C. If this be the solution, there is a confusion between 'face' and ' angle;' but the confusion is probable that many are unaware of this, and cannot tell the difference between the two ideas indicated. In any case, we may feel sure that (as Diez remarks) the Lat. bis, double, has something to do with the word.

BEZOAR, a kind of stone. (F., – Port., – Pers.) O. F. bezoar, 16th cent. spelling of F. bezoard, according to Brachet. Cotgrave has: 'Bezoard, a Beazar stone.' – Port. bezoar; see Brachet, who remarks that the word was introduced from India by the Portuguese. – Pers. pád-zahr, the bezoar-stone, also called zahr-dárá; Palmer's Pers. Dict. coll. 107, 328. So called because it was a supposed antidote against poison. – Pers. pád, expelling; and zahr, poison; Rich. Dict., pp. 315, 790.

Dict., pp. 315, 790. BI-, prefix. (Lat.) Generally Latin; in bias, it is F., but still from Lat.-Lat. bi-, prefix = dui-; cf. Lat. bellum for duellum.-Lat. duo, two; Cf. Gk. bi-, prefix, from duo, two; Skt. dvi-, prefix, from dua, two; A. S. tui-, prefix, from twd, two. See Fick, i. 625. See Two. GP- In M. E. the prefix bi- occurs as another spelling of the prefix bi-; see Bo-.

BIAS, an inclination to one side, a slope. (F., -L.) Spelt biais in Holland's Pliny, bk. xxvii. c. 4 (on the Aloe). -F. biais, a slant, a slope. -Lat. acc. bifacem, used by Isidore of Seville in the sense of squinting, of one who looks sidelong. (A similar loss of f occurs in antienne from Lat. antifona or antiphona; for the change from -acem to -ais, cf. vrai from a theoretical form veracum as a variant of veraerm; Brachet.) (This is not wholly satisfactory. BIB, a cloth on an infant's breast. (Lat.) Used by Beaum. and Fletcher, The Captain, iii. 5. It must have meant a cloth for imbibing moisture, borrowed, half jocularly, from the M. E. bibben, to tipple, imbibe, used by Chaucer, C. T. 4160: 'This miller hath so wisly bibbed ale.' This, again, must have been borrowed directly from Lat. bibere, to drink, and may be imagined to have been also used jocularly by those familiar with a little monkish Latin. Hence wine-bibber, Luke, vii. 34, where the Vulgate has bibens uinum. Der. from the same source : bibb-er. bib-ul-ous.

BICE, a pale blue colour; green bice is a pale green. (F.) The true sense is 'grayish.' Borrowed from F. bise, fem. of bis, which Cotgrave explains as 'brown, duskie, blackish.' He gives too: 'Roche bise, a hard, and blewisk rocke, or quarrey, of stone.' Cf. F. bis blanc, whitey-brown; O. F. azur bis, grayish blue; vert bis, grayish green. The word is found also in Italian as bigio, grayish. Origin unknown; see Diez.

BICKER, to skirmish. (C.) M. E. bikere, P. Plowman, B. xx. 78; biker, sb., a skirmish, Rob. of Glouc. p. 538; but it is most commonly, and was originally, a verb. Formed, with frequentative suffix -er, from the verb pick in the original sense of to peck, to use the beak; cf. 'picken with his bile,' i.e. peck with his beak or bill, Ancren Riwle, p. 84, note c. The interchange of b and p is seen in beak and peak; and in the same page of the Ancren Riwle, l. 3, we BID (1), to pray, (E.) [Bid, to pray, is nearly obsolete; but used in what is really a reduplicated phrase, viz. 'a bidding prayer.' To 'bid beads' was, originally, to 'pray prayers.' See Bead.] M. E. bidden, to pray, P. Plowman, B. vii. 81.-A.S. biddan, to pray (in common use). + Du. bidden, to pray. + O. H. G. pittan, G. bitten, to pray, request. These are strong verbs, and so are Icel. bidja, to pray, beg, and Goth. bidjan, to pray, ask, notwithstanding the termination in ja or jan. ¶ The root is obscure, and it is not at all certain that bid, to pray, is connected either with bid, to command, or with bids. BIDE, to await, wait. (E.) M. E. bide, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 307.-A. S. bidan, Grein, i. 122. + Du. beiden. + Icel. bida. + Swed. bida. + Dan. bie. + Goth. beidan. + O. H. G. pitan (prov. G. beiten). ¶ Fick connects it with Lat. fidere, to trust, Gk. weißenv, to persuade; but Curtius is against it. See Fick, iii. 211; Curtius, i. 325. See also Abide.

BIENNIAL, lasting two years. (Lat.) In Ray, On the Creation, pt. i. - Lat. biennalis, the same as biennis, adj., for two years. [The second i in biennial is due to confusion with the sb. biennium, a space of two years.] - Lat. bi-, two, double ; and annalis, lasting for a year, which becomes ennalis in composition. - Lat. annus, a year. See Annual. Der. biennial-ly.

BIER, a frame on which a dead body is borne. (E.) M. E. beere, Prompt. Parv. 33; bere, Layamon, 19481. – A. S. bár, Grein, i. 78. + Icel. barar. + O. H. G. bára. + Lat. fer-strum; Gk. ¢éperpov. – VBHAR, to bear. See Bear.

BIESTINGS, BEESTINGS, the first milk given by a cow after calving. (E.) Very common in provincial English, in a great number of differing forms, such as biskins, bistins, &c. - A. S. bysting, humber of untering forms, such as obtains, outins, occ. - A. S. Systing, byst, bedst; Bosworth and Lye quote from a copy of Ælfric's Glos-sary: ' byst, bysting, ficce meele' = biest, biestings, thick milk. + Du. biest, biestings. + G. biestmilch, biestings; also spelt biest, bienst, piess; as noted in Schmeller's Bavarian Dict. i. 300. B. According to Cotgrave, the sense is 'curdled ;' he explains 'calleboute' as 'curdled, or beesty, as the milke of a woman that's newly delivered.' In discussing the O.F. beter, to bait a bear [which has nothing to do with the present word], Diez quotes a passage to shew that la mars betada, in Provençal, means the 'clotted' sea, Lat. coagulatum; and again quotes the Romance of Ferumbras, 1, 681, to shew that sanc vermelk betatz means 'red clotted blood;' in Old French, sanc trestout bete. y. It is clear that the Provencal and O. F. words have lost s before t, as usual (cf. F. bete from Lat. bestia), and that these examples point to an O. F. bester, Prov. bestar, to clot; both words being probably of Teutonic origin. 8. The original sense in O. Teutonic is perhaps preserved in the Goth. beist, leaven. See Diefenbach, i. 291, where numerous spellings of the word biestings are given, and compared with the Goth. word. The origin of beist is uncertain, but it is generally referred (like Goth. bairs, bitter) to Goth. beitan, to bite; see Bite.

BIFURCATED, two-pronged. (Lat.) Pennant, British Zoology, has 'a large bifurcated tooth;' Richardson. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. § a, has the sb. bifurcation. – Low Lat. bifurcatus, two, pp. of bifurcari, to part in two directions. – Lat. bifurcares, twopronged. – Lat. bi-, double; and furca, a fork, prong. Being used by Minot and Hampole, it was probably at first a Northern word, and of Scandinavian origin; as it does not appear in Anglo-Saxon.  $\beta$ . Perhaps bigg stands for bilg, by assimilation; cf. Icel. belgia, to inflate, puff out, i.e. to make big; Swed. dial. bälgig, bulgig, big; Rietz. The l appears also in the word billow; but has been dropped in bag. See Billow, Bulk, and Bag.

BIGHT, a coil of a rope; a bay. (Scand.) A variation of bought or bout. Cf. Dan. and Swed. bugr, used in both senses, viz. (1) the bight of a rope; and (2) a bay. The vowel is perhaps due to A. S. bige or byge, a bending, corner; 'to anes wealles byge' = at the corner of a wall; Orosius, iii. 9. The root appears in the verb to bow. See Bout, and Bow. [+]

BIGOT, an obstinate devotee to a particular creed, a hypocrite. (F.,-Scand.) Used in Some Specialities of Bp. Hall's Life (R.)-F. bigot, which Cotgrave explains thus : 'An old Norman word (signifying as much as de par Dieu, or our for God's sake [he means by God] and signifying) an hypocrite, or one that seemeth much more holy than he is; also, a scrupulous or superstitious fellow.' a. The word occurs in Wace's Roman du Rou, ii. 71, where we find: 'Mult ont Franceis Normanz laidi E de mefaiz e de mediz, Sovent lor dient reproviers, E claiment bigoz e draschiers,' i. e. the French have much insulted the Normans, both with evil deeds and evil words, and often speak reproaches of them, and call them bigots and dregdrinkers' (Diez). The word draschiers means 'dreggers' or 'draffers, drinkers of dregs, and is of Scandinavian origin; cf. Icel. dregjar, dregs, pl. of dregg. We should expect that bigoz would be of similar origin. Roquefort quotes another passage from the Roman du Rou, fol. 218, in which the word occurs again: 'Sovent dient, Sire, por coi Ne tolez la terre as bigos;' i. e. they often said, Sire, wherefore do you not take away the land from these barbarians? In this in- $\beta$ . The origin of the word is unstance it rhymes with vos (you). known. The old supposition that it is a corruption of by God, a phrase which the French picked up from often hearing it, is not, after all, very improbable: the chief objection to it is that by is not a Scandinavian preposition, but English, Dutch, Friesian, and Old Saxon. However, the French must often have heard it from the Low-German races, and the evidence of Wace that it was a nick-name and a term of derision is so explicit, that this solution is as good as any other. Mr. Wedgwood's guess that it arose in the 13th century is disproved at once by the fact that Wace died before A.D. 1200. y. At the same time, it is very likely that this old term of derision, to a Frenchman meaningless, may have been confused with the term beguin, which was especially used of religious devotees. See Beguin. And it is a fact that the name was applied to some of these orders; some Bigutti of the order of St. Augustine are mentioned in a charter of A. D. 1518; and in another document, given by Ducange, we find: ' Beghardus et Beguina et Beguita sunt viri et mulieres tertii ordinis;' and again Biguita are mentioned, in a charter of A. D. 1499. The transference of the nickname to members of these religious orders explains the modern use of the term. Der. bigot-ry. ¶ Disputed; see Errata. BIJOU, a trinket, jewel. (F.) Modern; and mere French. Origin unknown.

Origin unknown. BILATERAL, having two sides. (L.) From Lat. bi-, double; and la eralis, adj., lateral. - Lat. later-, stem of latus, a side.

and la'eralis, adj., lateral. - Lat. later., stem of latus, a side. BILBERRY, a whortleberry. (Scand. and E.) 'As blue as bilberry;' Shak. Merry Wives, v. 5. 49. This form is due to the Dan. billebær, the bilberry; where bær 1s a berry, but the signification of bille is uncertain. Since, however, bilberries are also called, in Danish, by the simple term bölle, the most likely sense of bölle is balls, from Icel. böllr, a ball. If so, the word means 'ball-berry, from its spherical shape. ¶ In the North of England we find bleaberry or black and blue.' Blae is the same word as our E. blue, but is used in the older, and especially in the Scandinavian sense. That is, blae is the Icel. blár, dark, livid, Dan. blaa, Swed. blå, dark-blue; whence Icel. bláber, Dan. blaabær, Swed. blåöär, a blaeberry. Hence both bil- and blae- are Scandinavian; but -berry is English.

BILBO, a sword; BILBOES, fetters. (Span.) Shak. has both bilbo, Merry Wives, i. 1. 165, and bilboes, Hamlet, v. 2. 6. Both words are derived from Bilboa or Bilbao in Spain, 'which was famous, as early as the time of Pliny, for the manufacture of iron and steel.' Several bilboes (fetters) were found among the spoils of the Spanish Armada, and are still to be seen in the Tower of London. See note by Clark and Wright to Hamlet, v. 2. 6.

BILE (1), secretion from the liver.  $(F_{\cdot,-} L_{\cdot})$  In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. – F. bile, which Cotgrave explains by 'choller, gall,' &c. – Lat. bilis, bile, anger. Dar. bili-ar-y, bili-ous.

BILE (2), a boil; Shak. Cor. i. 4. 31. M. E. byle, Prompt. Parv. See Boil.

BILGE, the belly of a ship or cask. (Scand.) a. It means the protuberant part of a cask or of a ship's bottom, i. e. the belly, and is merely the Scand. form of that word, preserving the final g, which, in the case of belly, has been replaced by y.  $\beta$ . Hence the vb. to bilge, said of a ship, which begins to leak, lit. to fill its belly; from Dan. bälge, to swill, Swed. dial. bälga, to fill one's belly (Riet2). This verb to bilge is also written to bulge; see examples in Richardson s. v. bulge; and Kersey's Dict. Y. Bilge-water is water which enters a ship when lying on her bilge, and becomes offensive. See Belly.

Belly, and Bulge. BILL (1), a chopper; a battle-axe; sword; bird's beak. (E.) M. E. bil, sword, battle-axe, Layamon, i. 74; 'Bylle of a mattoke, ligo, marra;' Prompt. Parv. p. 36. Also M. E. bile, a bird's bill, Owl and Nightingale, 70. – A. S. bil, bill, a sword, axe, Grein, i. 116; bile, a bird's bill, Bosworth. + Du. bill, an axe, hatchet. + Icel. bildr, bilda, an axe. + Dan. bill, an axe. + Swed. bila, an axe. + G. bille, a pick-axe. B. The original sense is simply" a cutting instrument.' Cf. Skt. bill, b il, to break, to divide, Benfey, p. 6,3; which is clearly related to Skt. b. id, to cleave. See Bite. ¶ There is a Cornish bool, an axe, hatchet; but bill is Teutonic, not Celtic.

is a Cornish bool, an axe, hatchet; but bill is Teutonic, not Celtic. BILL (2), a writing, account. (F., -L.; or L.) M. E. bille, a letter, writing; Chaucer, C. T. 9810. Probably from an O. F. bille\*, now only found in the dimin. billei; or else it was borrowed directly from the Low Latin. -Low Lat. billa, a writing, with dimin. bille a; bullet is also found, with the same meaning, and is the dimin. of Lat. bulla.  $\beta$ . It is certain that Low Lat. billa is a corruption of Lat.

bulla, meaning 'a writing,' a schedule' in mediaeval times; but esp. and properly 'a sealed writing;' from the classical Lat. bulla, a stud, knob; later, a round seal. See Bull (2), Bullet, Bulletin.

BILLET (1), a note, ticket.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.})$  Shak, has the vb. to billet, to direct to one's quarters by means of a ticket; to quarter. Spelt bylet, Prompt. Parv. -F. billet, dimin. of O. F. billet, a ticket, note, writing. See Bill. B. We sometimes use billet-down for 'love-letter;' see Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 118, 138. It is mere French, and means, literally, 'sweet letter;' from F. billet, letter, and down (Lat. dulcis), sweet.

and boul, q. v. BILL/IARDS, a game with balls. (F., -C.) Shak. has billiards, Ant. and Cleop. ii. 5. 3. - F. billard, billart, 'a short and thick truncheon, or cudgell, . a billard, or the stick wherewith we touch the ball at billyards;' Cot. He also has: 'Biller, to play at billyards;' and 'bille, a small bowl or billyard ball; also, a young stock of a tree to graft on,'&cc. Formed, by suffix -ard, from F. bille, signifying both a log of wood and a 'billyard ball,' as explained by Cotgrave. Of Celtic origin; see Billet (2).

BILLION, a million of millions. A coined word, to express 'a double million;' from Lat. bi-, double; and -illion, the latter part of the word million. So also trillion, to express 'a treble million,' or a million times a billion. [†]

BILLOW, a wave. (Scand.) Not in very early use. Rich. quotes it from Gascoigne, Chorus to Jocasta, Act ii. - Icel. bylgia, a billow. + Swed. bölja. + Dan. bölge. + M. H. G. bulge, a billow, also a bag; O. H. G. pulga. From the root which appears in E. bulge, so that a billow means 'a swell,' 'a swelling wave.' See Bag, and Bulge. Der. billow-y. ¶ The ending -ow often points to original g; thus, from bylgja is formed (by rule) an M. E. bilge, which passes into bilow; the double II is put to keep the vowel short. So fullow, from Icel. filagi; see Follow.

BIN, a chest for wine, corn, &c. (E.) M. E. binne, bynne, Chaucer, C. T. 595. – A. S. bin, a manger, Luke, ii. 7, 16.  $\pm$  Du. ben, a basket.  $\pm$  G. benne, a sort of basket. (1) It is more confusing than useful to compare the F. banne, a tilt of a cart, from Lat. benna, a car of osier, noticed by Festus as a word of Gaulish origin. 2. Neither is bin to be confused with the different word M. E. bing, of Scandinavian origin, and signifying 'a heap;' cf. Icel. bingr, Swed. binge, a heap; though such confusion is introduced by the occurrence of the form bynge in the Prompt. Parv. p. 36, used in the sense of 'chest,' like the Danish bing, a bin. 3. The most that can be said is that the Gaulish benna suggests that bin may have meant originally 'a basket made of osiers;' in which case we may perhaps connect bin with E. bent, coarse grass; a suggestion which is strengthened by the curious form which bent takes in O. H. G., viz. pinz or finiz, with a stern pinGrimm hazards the guess that it is connected with E. bind. See T book-binder, bind-weed; also bundle, bend; probably bast, beni-grass. BING, a heap of corn; obsolete. (Scand.) Surrey has 'bing of corn' for 'heap of corn,' in his translation of Virgil, Book iv. - Icel. bingr, a heap. + Swed. binge, a heap. ¶ Probably distinct from E. bin, Dan. bing, though sometimes confused with it. See Bin.

BINNACLE, a box for a ship's compass. (Portuguese,-L.) Modern ; a singular corruption of the older form bittacle, due to confusion with bin, a chest. Only the form bittacle appears in Todd's Johnson, as copied from Bailey's Dict., viz. 'a frame of timber in the steerage of a ship where the compass stands.'- Portuguese bitacola, explained by 'bittacle' in Vieyra's Port. Dict. ed. 1857. + Span. bitacora, a binnacle. + F. habitacle, a binnacle; prop. an abode. = Lat. habitaculum, a little dwelling, whence the Port. and Span. is corrupted by loss of the initial syllable. - Lat. habitare, to dwell ; frequentative ¶ The 'habitaculum' seems to of habere, to have. See Habit. have been originally a sheltered place for the steersman.

BINOCULIAR, suited for two eyes; having two eyes. (L.) 'Most animals are binocular;' Derham, Phys. Theol. bk. viii. c. 3, note a. Coined from bin- for binus, double; and oculus, an eye. See Binary and Ocular.

BINOMIAL, consisting of two 'terms' or parts. (L.) Mathematical. Coined from Lat. bi-, prefix, double ; and nomen, a name, denomination. It should rather have been binominal.

BIOGRAPHY, an account of a life. (Gk.) In Johnson's Rambler, no. 60. Langhorne, in the Life of Plutarch, has bio-grapher and biographical - Gk. βίο-, from βίοs, life; and γράφειν, to write. Gk. Bios is allied to E. quick, living ; see Quick. And see Grave. Der. biograph-er, biograph-ic-al.

BIPARTITE, divided in two parts. (L.) Used by Cudworth, Intellectual System; Pref. p. 1. - Lat. bipartitus, pp. of bipartiri, to divide into two parts. - Lat. bi-, double ; and partiri, to divide. - Lat. parti-, crude form of pars, a part. See Bi- and Part.

BIPED, two-footed; an animal with two feet. (L.) 'A... biped beast; 'Byrom, an Epistle. Also in Sir T. Browne's Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 4. s. 8. The adj. is sometimes bipedal. - Lat. bipes, gen. biped-is, having two feet; from bi-, double, and pes, a foot. So too Gk. dinous, two-footed, from de-, double, and nous, a foot. See Bi- and Foot, with which pes is cognate.

BIRCH, a tree. (E.) In North of England, birk; which is perhaps Scandinavian. M. E. birche, Chaucer, C. T. 2921. - A. S. beorc, the name of one of the runes in the Rune-lay, Grein, i. 106. Also spelt birce (Bosworth). + Du. berkenboom, birch-tree. + Icel. björk. + Swed. björk. + Dan. birk. + G. birke. + Russ. bereza. + Skt. bhúrja, a kind of birch, the leaves or bark of which were used for writing on (Benfey). Det. birch-en, adj.; cf. gold-en.

BIRD, a feathered flying animal. (E.) M. E. brid; very rarely byrde, which has been formed from brid by shifting the letter r; pl. briddes, Chaucer, C. T. 2931. - A. S. brid, a bird; but especially the young of birds; as in earnes brid, the young one of an eagle, Grein, i. 142. The manner in which it is used in early writers leaves little 142. doubt that it was originally 'a thing bred,' connected with A.S. brédan, to breed. See Brood, Breed. BISECT, to divide into two equal parts. (L.) In Barrow's Math. Lectures, Lect. 15. Coined from Lat. bi-, twice, and sectum, supine of secare, to cut. See Bi- and Section. Der. bisect-ion. BISHOP, an ecclesiastical overseer. (L., -Gk.) M. E. bisslop Chaucer, C. T. Group B, l. 253. - A. S. bissop, in common use; bor-rowed from Lat. episcopus. - Gk. usformore, an overseer, overlocker. -Gk. inf, upon; and onomos, one that watches. -Gk. root ΣKED, co-radicate with Lat. specere, E. spy, and really standing for ones. -√SPAK, to see, behold, spy; Curtius, i. 205; Fick, i. 830. See Spy. Der. bishop-ric ; where -rie is A.S. rice, dominion, Grein, ii. 376; cf. G. reich, a kingdom; and see Rich.

BISMUTH, a reddish-white metal. (G.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. It is chiefly found at Schneeburg in Saxony. The F. bismuth, like the E. word, is borrowed from German; and this word is one of the very few German words in English. - G. bismuth, bismuth; more commonly wismut, also spelt wissmut, wissmuth. An Old German spelling wesemot is cited in Webster, but this throws no light on the origin of the term.

BISON, a large quadruped. (F. or L., -Gk.) In Cotgrave, q. v. Either from F. bison (Cot.) or from Lat. bison (Pliny).  $-\beta$  from , the wild bull, bison; Pausanias, ed. Bekker, 10. 13 (about A. D. 160). Cf. A.S. wesent, a wild ox; Bosworth. + Icel. visundr, the bison-ox. + O. H. G. wisunt, G. wisunt, a bison. ¶ It would seem that the word is really Teutonic rather than Greek, and only borrowed by the latter. E. Müller suggests as the origin the O. H. G. wisen, G. weisen, to direct, as though wisent meant 'leading the herd,' hence, an ox.

But this is only a guess. BISSEXTILE, a name for leap-year. (L.) In Holland's Pliny, bk. xviii. c. 25. - Low Lat. bissentilis annus, the bissextile year, leapyear. - Lat. bissextus, in phr. bissextus dies, an intercalary day, so called because the intercalated day (formerly Feb. 24) was called the sixth day before the calends of March (March 1); so that there were two days of the same name. - Lat. bis, twice; and sex, six.

BISSON, purblind. (E.) Shak, has bisson, Cor. ii, 1. 70; and, in the sense of 'blinding,' Hamlet, ii. 2. 529. M. E. bisen, bisne, purblind, blind; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, II. 471, 2822. – A. S. bisen, Matt. ix. 27, in the Northumb. version, as a gloss upon Lat. caecus. β. Comparison with Du. bijziend, short-sighted, lit. 'seeing by' or 'near,' suggests that bisen may be a corruption of pres. pt. biseond, in the special sense of near-sighted; from prefix bi-, by, and seon, to see. Cf. G. beisichtig, short-sighted. ¶ In this case the prefix must be the prep. bi or big, rather than the less emphatic and unaccented form which occurs in biseon or beseon, to examine, behold; and the A.S. word should be bisen, with long i. See Grein, i. 121, for examples of words with prefix bi-, e.g. bispell, an example. [\*] BISTRE, a dark brown colour. (F.) 'Bister, Bister, a colour made of the soot of chimneys boiled; 'Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. -F. bistre; of uncertain origin. Perhaps from G. biester, meaning (1) bistre, (2) dark, dismal, gloomy (in prov. G.); Flügel. It seems reasonable to connect these. Cf. also Du. bijster, confused, troubled, at a loss; Dan. bister, grim, fierce; Swed. bister, fierce, angry, grim, BIT (1), a small piece, a mouthful. (E.) M. E. bite, in phr. bite brædess = a bit of bread, Ormulum, 8639. – A. S. bite, or bita, a bite; also, a morsel, Psaim, cxlvii. 6 (ed. Spelman). + Du. bee, a bite; also, a bit, morsel. + Icel. biti, a bit. + Swed. bit. + Dan. bid. + G. biss, a bite; bissen, a bit. β. From A. S. bitan, to bite. See Bite. [†] BIT (2), a curb for a horse. (E.) M. E. bitt, bytt. Bytt of a brydylle, lupatum; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 37.-A.S. bitol, a gloss on frænum in Ps. xxxi. 12 (Spelman); a dimin. of A.S. bite or bita, a bite, bit; so that this word cannot be fairly separated from the preceding, q. v. No doubt bit was used in Early Eng. as well as the dimin. bitol, though it is not recorded. + Du. gobit. + Icel. bitill (dimin.). + Swed. bett. + Dan. bid. + G. gebiss. Compare these forms with those in the article above.  $\P$  The A.S. bettan, to curb (Grein, i. 78), is cognate with the Icel. beia, to bait, cause to bite; see Bait. It cannot therefore be looked on as the origin of bit, since it is a more complex form.

BITCH, a female dog. (E.) M. E. biche, bicche, Wright's Vocab. i. 187. – A. S. bicce (Bosworth). + Icel. bikkja. Cf. G. betze, a bitch. Possibly connected with prov. E. (Essex) bigge, a teat. See Pig. [+] bioure, bytoure, Chaucer, C. T. 6554. - F. butor, 'a bittor;' Cot. - Low "' They are taken for no better than rakehells, or the devil's blacke Lat. butorius, a bittern ; cf. Lat. butio, a bittern. B. Thought to be a corruption of Lat. bos taurus ; taurus being used by Pliny, b. x. c. 42, for a bird that bellows like an ox, which is supposed to be the bittern. More likely, of imitative origin; see Boom (1).[+] ¶ The M.E. bitours was no doubt corrupted from the F. butor rather than borrowed from the Span. form bilor; terms of the chase being notoriously Norman. On the suffixed -n see Mätzner, i. 177; and see Marten.

BITE, to cleave, chiefly with the teeth. (E.) M.E. bite, biten, pt. t. bot, boot, P. Plowman, B. v. 84.-A.S. bitan, Grein, i. 123.+ Du. bijten, to bite. + Icel. bita. + Swed. bita. + Dan. bide. + O. H. G. pizan; G. beissen, + Goth. beitan. + Lat. findere, pt. t. fidi, to cleave. + Skt. bhid, to break, divide, cleave. - ABHID, to cleave; Fick, i.

4 Sk. bala, to break, aivide, cleave. - & Brild, to cleave; Fick, t. 160. Der. bite, sb.; bit, bit-er, bit-ing; bitt-er, q. v.; bait, q. v. BITTER, acid. (E.) M. E. biter, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 82.-A.S. biter, bitor, bitter, Grein, i. 120. + Du. bitter. + Icel. bitr. + Swed. and Dan. bitter. + O. H. G. pittar (G. bitter). + Goth. baitrs (rather an exceptional form). B. The word merely means 'biting;' and is directly derived from A.S. bitan, to bite. See Bite. Der. and is directly derived from A.S. ones, to block bitter-dy, bitter-ness, bitter-s; also bitter-sweet, Prompt. Parv. p. 37.

BITTS, a naval term. (Scand.) The bitts are two strong posts standing up on deck to which cables are fastened. [The F. term is bittes, but this may have been taken from English.] The word is properly Scand., and the E. form corrupt or contracted. – Swed. beting, a bitt (naut. term); cf. betingbult, a bitt-pin. + Dan. beding, a slip, bitts; bedingsbolt, a bitt-bolt; bedingsknæ, a bitt-knee; &c. [It has found its way into Du. and G.; cf. Du. being, beinghout, a bitt; G. bäting, a bitt; bätingholzer, bitts] B. The etymology is easy. The word clearly arose from the use of a noose or tether for pasturing horses, or, in other words, for bairing them. Cf. Swed. beta, to pasture a horse; whence betingbult, lit. a pin for tethering a horse while at pasture. So also Dan. bede, to bait; whence beding, a slip-noose, bedingsbolt, lit. a pasturing-pin. See Bait. ¶ The word bait is Scand., shewing that the Du. and G. words are borrowed.

BITUMEN, mineral pitch. (L.) Milton has bituminous; P. L. x. 562. Shak. has the pp. bitumed, Peric. iii. 1. 72. - F. bitume (Cotgrave). - Lat. bitumen, gen. bitumin-is, mineral pitch; used by Virgil, Geor. iii. 451. Der. bitumin-ous, bitumin-ate.

BIVALVE, a shell or seed-vessel with two valves. (F., -L.) In Johnson's Dict. - F. bivalve, bivalve; both adj. and sb. - Lat. bi, double; and walwa, the leaf of a folding-door; gen. used in the pl. ualua, folding-doors. See Valve.

BIVOUAC, a watch, guard; especially, an encampment for the night without tents. (F.,-G.) Modern. Borrowed from F. bivouac, orig. bivac. - G. beiwache, a guard, a keeping watch; introduced into F. at the time of the Thirty Years War, 1618-1648 (Brachet).-G. bei, by, near; and wacken, to watch; words cognate with E. by and watch respectively.

BIZARRE, odd, strange. (F., - Span.) Modern. Merely bor-rowed from F. bizarre, strange, capricious. It originally meant valiant, intrepid; then angry, headlong; lastly strange, capricious; Brachet. - Span. bizarro, valiant, gallant, high-spirited. In Mahn's Webster, the word is said to be 'of Basque-Iberian origin.' It is clearly not Latin. ¶ Does this explain the name Pizarro? It would seem so. [†]

BLAB, to tell tales. (Scand.) Often a sb.; Milton has: 'avoided as a blab;' Sams. Agoa. 495; but also blabbing; Comus. 138. M. E. blabbe, a tell-tale; see Prompt. Parv. p. 37. The verb more often occurs in early authors in the frequentative form blabber, M. E. blaberen; see Prompt. Parv. p. 37. 'I blaber, as a chylde dothe or [ere] he can speke; 'Palsgrave. – Dan. blabbre, to babble, to gabble; an Old Norse form blabbra is cited by Rietz. + Swed. dial. bladdra, blaffra, to prattle; Rietz. + G. plappern, to blab, babble, prate. + Gael. blabaran, a stammerer, stutterer; blabhdack, babbling, garrulous; plabair, a babbler. ¶ Partly an imitative word, like garrulous; plabair, a babbler. ¶ Partly an imitative word, like babble; cf. Gaelic plab, a soft noise, as of a body falling into water; prov. Eng. plop, the same. Cf. also Du. plof, a puff, the sound of a puff. There is probably a relation, not only to Du. Maffen, to yelp, E. Mubber, to cry, and Muff, rude, but to the remarkable set of European words discussed by Curtius, i. 374, 375. Cf. Gk.  $\phi\lambda i\sigma \sigma$ ,  $\phi\lambda i\sigma \sigma$ , idle talk,  $\phi\lambda i\sigma \sigma$ , a chatterer ;  $\phi\lambda i\sigma \sigma$ , a chatterer ,  $\phi\lambda i\sigma \sigma$ , a All ' with the common primary notion of bubbling over ;' Curtius.

See Bleb, Blob. BLACK, swarthy, dark. (E.) M. E. blak, Chaucer, C. T. 2132.-A. S. blac, black, Grein, i. 124. + Icel. blakkr, used of the colour of wolves. + Dan. blak, sb., ink. + Swed. black, ink ; blacka, to smear with ink; Swed. dial. blaga, to smear with smut (Rietz). Cf. Du. blaken, to burn, scorch ; Du. blakeren, to scorch ; G. blaken, to burn with much smoke; blakig, blakerig, burning, smoky. ¶ Origin obscure; not the same word as bleak, which has a different vowel. ¶ Origin The O. H. G. plakan (M. H. G. bläjen, G. blähen) not only meant 'to blow,' but 'to melt in a forge-fire.' The G. blaken can be expressed in E. by 'flare.' It seems probable that the root is that of blow, with the sense of flaring, smoking, causing smuts. See Blow (1). M.E. bladdre, Chaucer, C.T. 12367.-A.S. blædr, a blister; Orosius, i. 7. + Icel. blaðra, a bladder, a watery swelling. + Swed bläddra, a bubble, blister, bladder.+ Dan. blære, a bladder, blister. + Du. blaar, a bladder, blister; cf. Du. blaas, a bladder, bubble, lit. a thing blown, from blazen, to blow. + O. H. G. plátrá, plátará, a bladder. B. Formed, with suffix -r(a), from A.S. blod (base blad-), a blast, a blowing; cf. Lat. flatus, a breath. - A.S. blawan, to blow. + Lat flare, to blow. See Blow. Der. bladder-y. BLADE, a leaf; flat part of a sword. (E.) M.E. blade (of a sword), Chaucer, Prol. 630. - A. S. blad, a leaf; Grein, i. 125. + Icel. blad, a leaf. + Swed., Dan., and Du. blad, a leaf, blade. + O. H. G. plat, G. blatt. ¶ Fick refers it to a root bla, to blow, Lat. flare, iii. 219; it is rather connected with E. blow in the sense 'to bloom, blossom, Lat. florere ; but the ultimate root is probably the same ; see Curtius,

i. 374, where these words are carefully discussed. See Blow (a). BLAIN, a pustule. (E.) M. E. blein, bleyn; Prompt. Parv. p. 39; Wyclif, Job, ii. 7. - A. S. blegen, a boil, pustule; Liber Medicinalis, (by suffix -on, diminutival) from the stem blag-, a variation of blaw-, seen in A.S. blawan, to blow. It means 'that which is blown up,' a blister. The word bladder is formed similarly and from the same root. See Bladder, and Blow (1). [+]

BLAME, to censure. (F., -Gk.) M. E. blame, Chaucer, C. T. Group E, l. 76; blamen, Ancren Riwle, p. 64.-O.F. blasmer, to blame.-Lat. blasphemare, used in the sense ' to blame ' by Gregory of Tours (Brachet). - Gk. βλασφημείν, to speak ill. BLAND, gentle, mild, affable. (L.) [The M. E. verb blanden, to flatter (Shoreham's Poems, p. 59), is obsolete; we now use blandish.] The adj. bland is in Milton, P. L. v. 5; taken rather from Lat. directly than from F., which only used the verb ; see Cotgrave. - Lat. blandus, caressing, agreeable, pleasing. B. Bopp compares Lat. blandus, per-haps for mlandus, with Skt. mridu, soft, mild, gentle, E. mild, Gk. µee-Mixios, mild ; and perhaps rightly ; see Benfey, s. v. mridu, and Curtius, i. 411. See Mild. Der. bland-ly, bland-ness; also blandish, q. v.

A simpler form of the verb appears in A.S. blawan, to blow. See Blow (1), and see Blaze (2). Der. blast, vb. [+] BLATANT, noisy, roaring. (E.) Best known from Spenser's 'blatant beast;' F.Q. vi. 12 (heading). It merely means bleating; the suffix -ant is a fanciful imitation of the pres. part. suffix in French; blatand would have been a better form, where the -and would have served for the Northern Eng. form of the same participle. Wyclif has bletende for bleating, a Midland form; Tobit, ii. 20. See Bloat. BLAZE (1), a flame; to flame. (E.) M. E. blase, a flame, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 212; blasen, to blaze, id. B. xvii. 232. - A. S. blase, a flame; in comp. bdl-blæse, a bright light, Grein, i. 77. + Icel. blys, a torch. + Dan. blus, a torch; a blaze. B. From the root of blow; Fick, iii. 219. See Blow (1), and cf. Blast, from the same root.

BLAZE (a), to spread far and wide; to proclaim. (E.) 'Began to blaze abroad the matter; 'Mark, i. 45. M. E. blasen, used by Chaucer to express the loud sounding of a trumpet; Ho. of Fame, iii. 711 (see extract under Blare). - A.S. blasan, to blow (an unauthorised form, given by Lye). + Icel. Waisa, to blow, to blow a trumpet, to sound an alarm. + Swed. blasa, to blow, to sound. + Dan. blüse, to blow a trumpet. + Du. blazen, to blow, to blow a trumpet. + Goth. blesan *, in comp. uf-blesan, to puff up. From the same root as Blow; Fick, iii. 220. See also Blare, and Blazon; also Blast, from the same root. BLAZON (1), a proclamation; to proclaim. (E.) Shak, has blason, a proclamation, Hamlet, i. 5. 21 ; a trumpeting forth, Sonnet 106; also, to trumpet forth, to praise, Romeo, ii. 6. 21. This word is a corruption of blaze, in the sense of to blaze abroad, to proclaim. The final n is due (1) to M. E. blasen, to trumpet forth, where the n is the sign of the infinitive mood; and (2) to confusion with blazon in the purely heraldic sense; see below. ¶ Much trouble has been taken to unravel the etymology, but it is really very simple. Blazon, to proclaim, M.E. blasen, is from an A.S. or Scand. source, see Blaze (2); whilst the heraldic word is French, but from a German source, the German word being cognate with the English. Hence the confusion matters but little, the root being exactly the same.

BLAZON (2), to pourtray armorial bearings: an heraldic term. (F.,-G.) M.E. blason, blasoun, a shield; Gawain and Grene Knight, l. 838. - F. blason, 'a coat of arms; in the 11th century a buckler, a shield; then a shield with a coat of arms of a knight painted on it; lastly, towards the fifteenth century, the coats of arms themselves; 'Brachet (who gives it as of unknown origin).  $\beta$ . Burguy remarks, however, that the Provençal blezé had at an early period the sense of glory, fame; just as the Span. blason means honour, glory, as well as blazonry; cf. Span. blazonr, to blazon; also, to boast, brag of.  $\gamma$ . We thus connect F. blason with the sense of glory, and fame; and just as Lat. fama is from fari, to speak, it is easy to see that blason took its rise from the M. H. G. blasen, to blow; cf. O. H. G. blasa, a trumpet. See Blazon (1). 8. Notice O. Du. blaser, a trumpeter; blasoen, a trumpet, also, a blazon; blazoenen, to proclaim. So also 'blayn, or dyscry armys, describo;' and 'blasynge of armys, descriptio;' Prompt. Parv. p. 38. Shields probably bore distinctive marks of some kind or other at a Plowman, B. xvii. 324. – Dan. pliiröiet, blear-eyed, blinking; from plire, also blire, to blink. + O. Swed. blira, plira, Swed. plira, to blink; Swed. dial. blura, to blink, to close the eyes partially, like a near-sighted person. The O. Swed. blire with the partially like a near-sighted person. The O. Swed. blira, to twinkle, is probably from the same root as blirak. See Blink. B. Cf. O.H.G. prehan, with sense of Lat. lippus, weak-sighted, dim-sighted. This last form is closely connected with O. H. G. prehen, breken, to twinkle, shine suddenly, glance; [cf. E. Wirk with C. bliraken, to twinkle, shine suddenly, glance; [cf. E. blink with G. blinken, to shine, and the various uses of E. glance;] from the same & BHARG, to shine; see Fick, iii. 206.

BLEAT, to make a noise like a sheep. (E.) M.E. ble'en, used also of a kid; Wyclif, Tobit, ii. 20. – A. S. ble'tan, to bleat, said of a sheep, Ælfric's Gram. xxiv. 9. + Du. blaten, to bleat. + O. H. G. plázan, to bleat. + Lat. balare, to bleat. + Gk. βληχάομαι, I bleat; βληχή. a bleating; on which Curtius remarks, 'the root is in the syllable bla, softened into bala, lengthened by different consonants;' i. 362.-

A BHLA, to blow, Fick, i. 703. See Blow. Der. bla-car, q. v. BLEB, a small bubble or blister. (E.) a. We also find the form blob, in the same sense. Rich. quotes blabs from More, Song of the Soul, conclusion. Jamieson gives: 'Brakis, bylis, blobbs, and blisteris;' qu. from Roul's Curs. Gl. Compl. p. 330. The more usual form is blubber, M.E. blober; 'blober upon water, bouteillis,' Palsgrave. 'Blobure, blobyr, burbulium, Prompt. Parv. p. 40. 'At his mouth a blubber stood of fome' [foam]; Test. of Creseide, by R. Henrysoun, l. 192.  $\beta$ . By comparing blobber, or blubber, with bladder, having the same meaning, we see the probability that they are formed from the same root, and signify 'that which is blown up;' from the root of blow. See Bladder, and Blow; also Blubber, Blab, Blob. [†]

BLEED, to lose blood. (E.) M. E. blede, P. Plowman, B. xix. 103. – A. S. blidan, to bleed (Grein). – A.S. blid, blood. See Blood. ¶ The change of vowel is regular; the A.S.  $\delta = \bar{o}$ , the mutation of

o. Cf. feet, geese, from foot, goose ; also deem from doom. BLEMISH, a stain ; to stain. (F., - Scand.) M. E. blemisshen ; Prompt. Parv. 'I blemysshe, I hynder or hurte the beautye of a person; Palsgrave. - O. F. blesmir, blemir, pres. part. blemis-ant, to wound, soil, stain ; with suffix -ish, as usual in E. verbs from F. verbs in -ir. - O. F. blesme, bleme, wan, pale. - Icel. blaman, the livid colour of a wound. - Icel. blar, livid, blueish; cognate with E. blue. The orig. sense is to render livid, to beat black and blue. See Blue.

BLENCH, to shrink from, start from, flinch. (E.) [Sometimes spelt blanch in old authors; though a different word from blanch, to whiten.] M. E. blenche, to turn aside, P. Plowman, B. v. 589 -A. S. blencan, to deceive; Grein, i. 127. + Icel. blekkja (for blenkja), to impose upon. B. A causal form of blink; thus to blenck meant originally to 'make to blink,' to impose upon; but it was often confused with blink, as if it meant to wink, and hence to flinch. See Blink. ¶ Cf. drench, the causal of drink. BLEND, to mix together. (E.) M. E. blenden, Towneley Mys-Blink.

teries, p. 225; pp. blent, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1609. A.S. blandan, Grein, i. 124. + Icel. blanda, to mix. + Swed. blanda. + Dan. blande. + Goth. blandan sik, to mix oneself with, communicate with. + O. H. G. plantan, blantan, to mix.  $\beta$ . The stem is bland-: see Fick, iii. 221.  $\gamma$ . The A.S. blendan means to make blind, Grein, i. 127; this is a secondary use of the same word, make bind, Grein, 1. 127; this is a secondary use of the same word, meaning (1) to mix, confuse, (2) to blind. See Blind BLESS, orig. to consecrate. (E.) M. E. blessen, Chaucer, C. T. Group E. 553, 1240; bletseigen, Layamon, 32157. – A. S. blétsian, to bless (Grein); bledsian. Kentish Psalter, iii, 9, v. 13; O. Northumb. bloedsia, Matt. xxiii. 39, Jo. viii. 48; Durham Ritual, p. 117. These forms point to an orig. blédsiav\*, to redden with blood, from bléd, blood S. Blood, d. blockster the time is more depth prime illurged in blood. See Blood, 'In heathen time it was no doubt primarily used in the sense of consecrating the altar by sprinkling it with the blood of the sacrifice;' H. Sweet, in Anglia, iii. 1. 156 (whose solution I here give). This is unassailably correct. Der. bless-ing, bless-ed, blessed-ness.

BLIGHT, to blast; mildew. (E.) The history of the word is very obscure; as a verb, blight occurs in The Spectator, no. 457. Cotgrave has: 'Brulure, blight, brant-corn (an herb).' B. The word has not been traced, and can only be guessed at. Perhaps it is shortened from the A.S. blicettan, to shine, glitter, for which references may be found in Lye. This is a secondary verb, formed from A.S. BLEAR ONE'S EYE, to deceive (Scand.) a. This is closely blican, to shine, glitter; cognate with Icel. blika, blikja, to gleam, and with M. H. G. blichen, to gleam, also to grow pale. All that is in my mouth than Would blo's a hundred herrings; Beaum. and necessary is to suppose that the A.S. blicettan could have been used in the active sense 'to make pale,' and so to cause to decay, to bleach, to blight. And, in fact, there is an exactly corresponding form in the O.H. G. blecchezen, M. H. G. bliczen, mod. G. blizzen, to lighten, shine as lightning. Y. That this is the right train of thought is made almost sure by the following fact. Corresponding to Icel. blika, blikja, prop. an active form, is the passive form blikna, to become pale; whence M. E. blichening, lit. pallor, but used in the sense of blight to translate the Latin rubigo in Palladius on Husbandry, ed. Lodge, bk. i. st. 119, p. 31. 3. This example at least proves that we must regard the A.S. blican as the root of the word; and possibly there may be reference to the effects of lightning, since the same root occurs in the cognate O. H. G. bleechezen, to lighten, Swed. blint, lightning, Du. blishen, lightning; cf. Du. blish, the white pellicle on the bark of trees; also Swed. blicka, to lighten. a. Note also A. S. dibiegas, to amaze, Elfric's Hom. i. 314; ii. 166; from the same root. Thus the word is related to Bleach and Blink.

BLIND, deprived of sight. (E.) M. E. blind, blynd, Prompt. Parv. p. 40. - A. S. blind, Grein, i. 128. + Du. blind. + Icel. blindr. +Swed. and Dan. blind.+O.H.G. plint, G. blind. B. The theoretical form is blenda, Fick, iii. 221; from blandan, to blend, mix, confuse; and, secondarily, to make confused, to blind. See Blend. Not to be confused with blink, from a different root. Der. blind-fold.

BLINDFOLD, to make blind. (E.) From M. E. verb blind folden, Tyndale's tr. of Lu. xxii. 64. This M. E. blind/olden is a cor-ruption of blind/elden, to blindfold, used by Palsgrave ; and, again, blindfelden (with excrescent d) is for an earlier form blindfellen, Ancren Riwle, p. 106. - A. S. blind, blind; and fyllan, to fell, to strike. Thus it means, ' to strike blind.'

i. 129), where the n is dropped; but blincan may easily have been preserved dialectally. So also O.H.G. blichen, to shine. - ABHARK, to shine. See Bloak.

BLIBS, happiness. (E.) M. E. blis, Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 33. - A. S. blis, bliss (Grein); a contraction from A. S. blids or blids, happiness, Grein, i. 130. - A.S. blide, happy. See Blithe, Bless. Der. bliss-ful, bliss-ful-ly, bliss-ful-ness. BLISTER, a little bladder on the skin. (E.)

M.E. blister. in The Flower and The Leaf, wrongly ascribed to Chaucer, 1 408. Not found in A.S., but Kilian gives the O. Du. bluyster, a blister. Cf. Icel. blastr, the blast of a trumpet, the blowing of a bellows; also, a swelling, mortification (in a medical sense). The Swedish blaster means a pair of bellows. B. Blister is, practically, a diminutive of blast in the sense of a swelling or blowing up; cf. Swed. bldsa, a bladder, a blister. The root appears in Du. blazen, Icel. blása, Swed. blása, to blow. C. The word bladder is formed, much in the same way, from the same ultimate root. See Blast, Bladder, Blow. Der. blister, verb.

BLITTHE, adi., happy. (E.) M. E. blithe, Chaucer, Prol. 846; Havelok, 651. – A. S. blitt, blitte, sweet, happy; Grein, i. 130. + Icel. blidr. + O. Saxon blibi, bright (said of the sky), glad, happy. + Goth. bleiths, merciful, kind. + O. H. G. blibi, glad. B. The signification ' bright ' in the Heliand suggests a connection with A. S. blican, to shine. The long i before  $\overline{o}$  is almost a sure sign of loss of n; this gives blin-th, equally suggesting a connection with the same A.S. blican, which certainly stands for blin-can. See Blink. Der. blithely, blithe-ness, blithe-some, blithe-some-ness.

Not in early authors. The history BLOAT, to swell. (Scand.) of the word is obscure. 'The bloat king' in Hamlet, iii. 4. 182, is a conjectural reading; if right, it means 'effeminate' rather than bloated. We find 'bloat him up with praise' in the Prol. to Dryden's Circe, 1. 25; but it is not certain that the word is correctly used. However, bloated is now taken to mean 'puffed out,' 'swollen,' per-haps owing to a fancied connection with blow, which can hardly be right.  $\beta$ . The word is rather connected with the Icel bloma, to become soft, to lose courage; blautr, soft, effeminate, imbecile; cf. Swed. blo, soft, pulpy; also Swed. bloid, to steep, macerate, sop; Dan. blod, soft, mellow. [These words are not to be confused with Du. bloor, naked, G. bloss.] The Swedish also has the phrases lagga i blöt, to lay in a sop, to soak ; blötna, to soften, melt, relent ; blötfisk, a soaked fish. The last is connected with E. bloater. See Bloater. y. The root is better seen in the Lat. fluidus, fluid, moist ; from fluere, to flow; cf. Gk. phier, to swell, overflow. See Curtius, i. 375; Fick, iii. 220. See Fluid.

Fletcher, Isl. Princess, ii. 5. 'Why, you stink like so many bloat-herrings, newly taken out of the chimney;' Ben Jonson, Masque of Augurs, 17th speech. Nares gives an etymology, but it is worth-less. There can hardly be a doubt that Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion is correct. He compares Swed. blöt-fisk, soaked fish, from blöta, to soak, steep. Cf. also Icel. blaut fishr, fresh fish, as opposed to hardr fishr, hard, or dried fish; whereon Mr. Vigfusson notes that the Swedish usage is different, blösfisk meaning 'soaked fish.' Thus a bloater is a cured fish, a prepared fish. The change from 'soaking' to curing by smoke caused a confusion in the use of the word. See Bloat. BLOB, a bubble (Levins); see Blob.

BLOCK, a large piece of wood. (C.) M. E. blok, Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 141, l. 314.-W. ploc, a block; Gael. ploc, a round mass, large clod, bludgeon with a large head, block; stump of a tree; Irish ploc, a plug, bung (blocan, a little block); cf. Ir. blogh, a fragment, O. Irish blog, a fragment. Allied to E. break, as shewn in Curtius, ii. 159. See Break. The word is Celtic, because the Irish gives the etymology. But it is widely spread; we find Du. blok, Dan. blok, Swed. block, O. H. G. bloch, Russ. platha, plashka. Der. block-ade, block-house, block-head, block-rin. See Plug. BLOND, fair of complexion. (F.) A late word. Not in Johnson. Blonde-lace is a fine kind of silken lace, of light colour ; a blonde is a beautiful girl of light complexion. - F. 'blond, m., blonde, f., light yellow, straw-coloured, flaxen; also, in hawkes or stags, bright tawney, or deer-coloured; Cot. Origin unknown.  $\beta$ . Referred by Diez to Icel. blandinn, mixed; A.S blonden-feax, with hair of mingled colour, gray-haired; or else to Icel. blautr, soft, weak, faint. Both results are unsatisfactory; the latter is absurd. Y. Perhaps it is, after all, a mere variation of F. blanc, from O. H. G. blanck, white. Even if not, it is probable that confusion with F. blanc has influenced the sense of the word.

BLOOD, gore. (E.) M. E. blod, blood, Chaucer, C. T. 1548.-A. S. blod (Grein). + Du. bloed. + Icel. blod. + Swed. blod. + Goth. bloth. + O. H. G. pluot, ploot. - A. S. blowan, to blow, bloom, flourish (quite a distinct word from blow, to breathe, puff, though the words are related); cf. Lat. florere, to flourish; see Curtius, i. 375. See Blow (2). ¶ Blood seems to have been taken as the symbol of Blow (2). ¶ Blood seems to have been taken as the symbol or blooming, flourishing life. Der. blood-kound, blood-sked, blood-stone, blood-y, blood-i-ly, blood-i-ness; also bleed, q. v. BLOOM, a flower, blossom. (Scand.) M. E. blome, Havelok, 63; but not found in A. S. - Icel. blom, blomi, a blossom, flower. + Swed. blomma. + Dan. blomme. + O. Saxon blómo (Heliand). + Du. blomm. + O. H. G. plomá, and blomon. + Goth. bloma, a flower. + Lat. flor, a flower. Cf. also Gk.  $\epsilon \kappa \phi \lambda a (\nu \epsilon_1 \nu)$ , to spout forth; from Gk.  $\checkmark \phi \Lambda \Lambda$ ; see Curtius on these words, i. 375. The E. form of the root is blow; see Blow (2). The truly E. word is blossom, q. v. BLOSSOM, a bud, small flower. (E.) M. E. blossme, blossum;

Prompt. Parv. p. 41. But the older form is blostme, Owl and Nightingale, 437; so that a t has been dropped. - A. S. blostma [misprinted bostma], Grein, i. 131. + Dn. blossom. + M. H. G. blwost, blusst, a blossom. B. Formed, by adding the suffixes -st and -ma, to the root blo- in A.S. blowan, to flourish, bloom. I When the suffix -ma alone is added, we have the Icel. blomi. E. bloom. When the suffix -st alone is added, we have the M.H.G. bluost, blust, formed from blo-, to flourish, just as blast is formed from blá-, to blow. See Blow, to flourish; and see Bloom.

BLOT (1), a spot, to spot. (Scand) M. E. blot, blotte, sb, blotten, vb. 'Blotte vppon a boke, oblitum : Blottyn bokys, oblitero ;' Prompt. Parv. p. 41.-Icel. blettr, a spot, stain (stem blat-). + Dan. plet, a spot, stain, speck; plette, to spot, to stain; 'Dan. dial. blat, blatte, a small portion of anything wet, blatte, to fall down;' Wedgwood. [Cf. Swed. plotter, a scrawl; plottra, to scribble. Perhaps connected with G. platschen, to splash; plottra, to scribble. Perhaps connected a crash; platz (interjection), crack | bounce |] B. Fick cites M H. G. blatzen, G. platzen, to fall down with vehemence; from stem blat-; iii. 221. And the stem blat- curiously reappears in the Gk. ξφλαδον, I tore with a noise,  $\pi a \phi \lambda \dot{a} \zeta \epsilon \nu$ , to foam, bluster, from the  $\sqrt{\Phi} \Lambda \Delta \Delta$ , an extension of  $\sqrt{\Phi AA}$ , seen in  $k \kappa \phi \lambda a k \kappa v$ , to spout forth. See these roots discussed in Curtius, i. 375. The original sense of the root is 'to spout forth,' bubble out.'

BLOT (2), at backgammon. (Scand.) A blot at backgammon is an exposed piece. It is obviously, as Mr. Wedgwood well points out, the Dan. blot, bare, naked; cf. the phrase give sig blot, to lay oneself open, to commit or expose oneself. + Swed. blott, naked; blotta, to lay oneself open. + Du. bloot, naked ; blootstellen, to expose.  $\beta$ . These words, remarks Mr. Vigfusson in his Icel. Dict. s. v. blautr, were borrowed from German bloss, naked, bare, which can hardly be admitted; the difference in the last letter shews that the words are cognate merely. Y. All of them are connected with the Icel. blastr, soft, moist; cl. Lat. fluidus, fluid. See Bloat. [+]

BLOTCH, a dark spot, a pustule. (E.) The sense 'pustule' seems due to confusion with botch. The orig. form is the verb. To black = to black or black, i.e. to blacken; formed from black as bleach is formed from bleak. 'Smutted and blacked;' Harmar, tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 195 (R.) See blacchepot, a blacking-pot, and blakien, to blacken, in Mätzner; and cf. Wiltshire blatch = black, sooty; Akerman's Wilts. Gloss. [+]

BLOUSE, a loose outer garment. (F.) Modern.-F. blouse, a smock-frock.-O. F. bliaus, bliauz, properly the plural of bliaut, blialt (mod. F. blaude), a vestment worn over others, made of silk, and often embroidered with gold, worn by both sexes (Burguy). This is the same word, though now used in a humbler sense, and with the pl. form mistaken for the singular. The Low Lat. form is bialdws: see Ducange. The M. H. G. forms are bialt, bliant, bliant, Origin unknown. ¶ The suggestion (by Mahn) that it is of Eastern origin, deserves attention; since many names of stuffs and articles of dress are certainly Oriental. Cf. Pers. balyad, a plain garment, balyar, an elegant garment; Rich. Dict., p. 289. BLOW (1), to puff. (E.) M. E. blowen; in Northern writers, blaw; very common; Chaucer, Prol. 567.-A. S. blawan, Grein. + G. blähen, to puff up, to swell. + Lat. flare; cf. Gk. stem  $\phi \lambda a$ -, seen in knowlawe, I spout forth; Curtius, i. 374. – V BHLÅ, to blow; Fick, i. 703. ¶ The number of connected words in various languages is large. In English we have bladder, blain, blast, blaze (to proclaim), blazon, blaze (of a trumpet), bleb, blister, blubber, &c.; and perhaps bleat, blot, bloat; also flatulent, inflate. And it is closely connected with the word following.

BLOW (2), to bloom, flourish as a flower. (E.) M. E. blowe, Rob. of Glouc. ed. Hearne, p. 352, l. 13. – A. S. blówan, to bloom, Grein, i. 131.+Du. bloeijen, to bloom.+O.H.G. pluon (G. blühen). Cf. Lat. florere, Fick, iii.222; thus flourisk is co-radicate with blow. See Bloom, Blossom, Blood. From the same source are flourish, flour, flower.

BLOW (3), a stroke, hit. (E.) M. E. blowe; 'blowe on the cheek, joure; blowe with ones fyst, soufflet; 'Palsgrave. The A.S. form does not appear; but we find O. Du. blowen, to strike, Kilian; and Du. blouwen, to dress flax. The O. Du. word is native and genuine, as the strong pt. t. blau, i.e. struck, occurs in a quotation given by Oudemans. + G. bläuen, to beat with a beetle; (bläuel, a beetle;) M. H. G. bluen, bliuwen, O. H. G. bliwan, pliuwan, to beat. + Goth. bliggwan, to beat. + Lat. figere, to beat down; flagellum, a scourge. Cf. also Gk.  $\theta\lambda i\beta ev,$  to crush; Curtius, ii. 89. -  $\checkmark$  BHLAGH, to strike, Fick, iii. 703. From the same root, blue, q. v.; also afflict, inflict, flagellate, flog.

BLUBBER, a bubble; fat; swollen; to weep. (E.) The various senses are all connected by considering the verb to blow, to puff, as the root; cf. bladder. Thus (1) blubber, M. E. blober, a bubble, is an extension of bleb or blob, a blister; see extracts s. v. bleb. (2) The fat of the whale consists of bladder-like cells filled with oil. (3) A blubber-lipped person is one with swollen lips, like a person in the act of blowing; also spelt blobber-lipped, and in the Digby Mysteries, p. 107, blabyrlypped; so that it was probably more or less confused with blabber, q. v. (4) To blubber, to weep, is M. E. blober. Palsgrave has: 'I blober, I wepe, je pleure.' But the older meaning is to bubble, as in: 'The borne [bour] blubred therinne, as it boylled had;' Gawain and the Green Knight, I. 2174. See Curtius, on the stems  $\phi \lambda \omega$ ,  $\phi \lambda \alpha$ ; i. 374, 375. See Bleb, Bladder, Blow (1). BLUDGEON, a thick cudgel. (Celtic?) Rarely used; but given in Johnson's Dictionary. It has no written history, and the etymology is a guess, but can hardly be far wrong. - Irish blocan, a little block; marked by O'Reilly as a vulgar word. + Gael. plocan, a wooden hammer, a beetle, mallet, &c.; a dimin. of ploc, explained by Macleod and Dewar as 'any round mass; a large clod; a club or bludgeon with a round or large head; ... a block of wood.' Cf. W. plocyn, dimin. of ploc, a block.  $\beta$ . That is to say, bludgeon is a derivative of block, a stumpy piece of wood. See Block. [+]

BLUE, a colour. (E.; or rather, Scand.) The old sense is 'livid.' M.E. bloo, livid, P. Plowman, B. iii. 97; bloo, 'lividus;' Prompt. Parv. - Icel. blár, livid, leaden-coloured. + Swed. bld. + Dan. blaa. + O. H. G. pláo, blue (G. blaw). ¶ The connection with Lat. Farty = Icel. war, invit, leaden-coloured, = Sweet, bit. = D. dat. + O. H. G. pláo, blue (G. blaw). ¶ The connection with Lat. fauus or fuluus is very doubtful. Nor can we prove a connection with Icel. blý, G. blei, lead.  $\beta$ . It is usual to cite A. S. bleo, blue; but it would be difficult to prove this word's existence. We once find A.S. bla-hewen, i.e. blue-hued, Levit. viii. 7; but the word is so scarce in A. S. that it was probably borrowed from Old Danish. In the Scandinavian languages it is very common; the North. Eng. blae is clearly a Scand. form. See Bleaberry. The original sense was 'the colour due to a blow;' see Blow (3). Cf. the phr. 'to beat black and blue' Dor. blu-ish, blue-bell, blue-bottle.

" a bluff,' from Cook's Voyages, bk. iv. c. 6. B. Origin uncertain; but perhaps Dutch. Cf. O. Du. blaf, flat, broad; blaffaert, one having a flat broad face; also, a boaster, a libertine; Outemans. And Mr. Wedgwood quotes from Kilian the phrases 'blaf aensight, facies plana et ampla; blaf van voorhooft, fronto,' i. e. having a broad forehead.  $\gamma$ . If the O. Du. blaffart, having a flat broad face, is the same word as when it has the sense of 'boaster,' we can tell the root. The mod. Du. blaffer, a boaster, signifies literally a barker, yelper, noisy fellow; from blaffen, to bark, to yelp; E. blabber. This seems to be one of the numerous words connected with E. blow, to puff, blow, to blossom, and blabber, to chatter, discussed by Curtius, i. 374. The primary sense was probably 'inflated;' then 'broad;' as applied to the face, 'puffy;' as applied to manners, 'noisy' (see blubber); as applied to a headland, 'broad,' or 'bold.'

BLUNDER, to flounder about, to err. (Scand.) M. E. blondren, to pore over a thing, as in 'we blondren ever and pouren in the fyr, Chaucer, C. T. 12598. 'I blonder, je perturbe ;' Palsgrave's F. Dict. B. Formed, with frequentative suffix -ren (for -eren), from Icel. blunda, to doze, slumber; so that it means ' to keep dozing,' to be sleepy and stupid. Cf. Swed. blunda, to shut the eyes; Dan. blunde, to nap, doze, slumber. We find also Icel. blundr, Dan. and Swed. blund, a doze, a nap.  $\gamma$ . A derivative from blind, the more remote source being blend. See Blind, Blond.

BLUNDERBUSS, a short gun. (Dutch.) Used by Pope, Dunciad, iii. 150. A singular corruption of Du. donderbus, a blunderbuss; which should rather have been turned into thunderbuss. - Du. donder, thunder; and bas, a gun, orig. a box, a gun-barrel. + G. donnerbückse, a blunderbuss; from donner, thunder, and bückse, a box, gun-barrel, gun. Thus it means 'thunder-box;' see Thunder, and bucks, a box, gun-barrel, gun. Thus it means 'thunder-box;' see Thunder, and Box. [†] BLUNT, not sharp. (Scand.) M.E. blunt (of edge), Prompt. Parv. p. 41; 'blont, nat sharpe;' Palsgrave's F. Dict. Allied to blunder, and from the same root, viz. Icel. blunda, to doze; so that the orig. sense is 'sleepy, dull.' It is also nearly allied to blind, from which it differs in sense but slightly, when applied to the understanding. More remotely allied to bland, to mix, confuse. See Blunder, Blind, Blend. Der. blunt-ly, blunt-ness. ¶ The Blunder, Blind, Blend. Der. blunt-iy, blunt-ness. ¶ The M. E. blunt, cited by Mr. Wedgwood with the sense of 'naked, bare, is clearly allied to Swed. blott, naked, G. bloss, naked, as suggested by him. But I take it to be quite a different word ; see blauta, weak, yielding, in Fick, iii. 220; and see Blot (2). [†]

BLUB, to stain; a stain. (Scand.) Shak, has both sb. and verb; Lucrece, 222, 522. Levins has both: 'A blirre, deceptio;' and 'to blirre, fallere.' Palsgrave has: 'I bleare, I begyle by dissimulacyon.' Thus blur is nothing but another form of blear, to dim, as seen in blear-eyed, and still more clearly in the phr. Blear one's eye, q.v.  $\beta$ . The M. E. bleren sometimes means to 'dim.' 'The teris. blaknet with blering all hir ble quite'= the tears spoilt with blurring all her complexion wholly; Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton and Don-aldson, 9132. This is also of Scand. origin, as shewn s. v. blear.

BLURT, to utter rashly. (E.) Shak, has blurt at, to deride, Per. iv. 3. 34. We commonly say 'to blurt out,' to utter suddenly and inconsiderately. The Scot. form is blirt, meaning 'to make a noise in weeping, esp. in the phr. to blirt and greet, i. e. to burst out crying; Jamieson. This shews that it is a mere extension of blare, to make a loud noise. See 'Bloryyn or wepyn, or bleren, ploro, fleo,' in Prompt. Parv. p. 40. The orig. sense of blurt is to blow violently.  $\beta$ . Blurt is formed from blore or blare, just as blast is formed from A. S. blasan, to blow. Blurt is, moreover, from the same root as blast, and little else than a doublet of it. See Blare, to roar; and see Bluster.

BLUSH, to grow red in the face. (E.) M. E. bluschen, blusshen, to glow; 'blusshi the sun,' the sun shone out; Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton and Donaldson, 1. 4665. - A. S. blysgan, only found in deriv. sb. ablysgung, explained by Lat. 'pudor,' shame; Lye's A. S. Dict. Formed, by the addition of -g (cf. smir-k, smile), from the A. S. blýsan, only found in the comp. ablýsian (less correctly ablisian), used to translate Lat. erubescere in Levit. xxvi. 41. + Du. Wozen, to blush. + Dan. blusse, to blaze, flame, burn in the face. + Swed. blossa, to blaze. B. All these are verbs formed from a sb., viz. A. S. blyse or blys, in comp. bál-blys, a fire-blaze (whence blysige, a torch). + Du. blos, a blush. + Dan. blus, a blaze, a torch. + Swed. bloss, a torch. Evidently from the root of blaze. See Blaze. [†]

BLUSTER, to blow noisily; to swagger. (Scand.) Shak. has blustering, tempestuous, said of weather, Lucrece, 115. It is a further extension of blurt or blast, words which have been shewn (s.v. blurt) to be, practically, doublets.  $\beta$ . Perhaps it is best to consider bluster as an extended form (expressing iteration) of blast, with the BLUFF, downright, rude. (Dutch?) Not in early authors. Rich. cites 'a remarkable bluffness of face' from The World, no. 88; and the phrase 'a bluff point,' i. e. a steep headland, now shortened to languages give the idea of 'tempestuous weather.' Cf. Icel. blassr, a BOA, a large snake. (L.) A term borrowed from Latin. The pl. box occurs in Pliny, Nat. Hist. viii. 14, where it means serpents of immense size. Prob. allied to Lat. bos, in allusion to the size of the animal. B. The Skt. gavaya (allied to Lat. bos) not only means a kind of ox, but is also the name of a monkey. The form of boa answers to Skt. gava (=go-a), which is substituted for go, a bull, at the beginming of compound words, and helps to form the sb. gavaya just quoted. BOAR, an animal. (E.) M. E. bore, boor, P. Plowman, B. xi. 333. -A.S. bir, Ælfic's Glossary, Nomina Ferarum, + Du. beer, + O.H.G. pér, M.H.G. bér, a boar. + Russ. borov.' ¶ Probably allied to bear, in the orig. sense of 'wild animal.' Cf. O.H.G. pero, M. H. G. bero, a bear; also written per, ber. See Bear.

BOARD, a table, a plank. (E.) M. E. bord, a table, Chaucer, C. T. Group E. 3. - A. S. bord, a board, the side of a ship, a ship in the field (Grein). + Du. bord, board, shelf. + Icel. bord, plank, side of a ship, margin. + Goth. -baurd, in comp. fotu-baurd, foot-board, footstool. + O. H. G. porto, rim, edge (G. bord). Perhaps from ✓ BHAR, to carry, Fick, iii. 203. See Bear. ¶ In the phrases 'star-board,' 'lar-board,' over board,' and perhaps in 'on board,' the sense of 'side of a ship' is intended; but it is merely a different use of the same word; and not derived from F. bord. On the contrary, the F. bord is Low German or Scandinavian. Some see a connection with adj. broad, because the G. brett means 'a board, plank.' But the word board is Celtic also; spelt bord in Gaelic, Irish, Welsh, and Cornish; and broad is not. Der. board, to live at table; board-ing-house, board-

BOB, to jerk about, to knock. (C.?) Sometimes assumed to be onomatopoetic. It may be an old British word, imperfectly preserved. Cf. Gael. bog, to bob, move, agitate; Irish bogaim, I wag, shake, toss; Gael. boc, a blow, a box, a stroke, deceit, fraud. In this view bob stands for an older form bog. Cf. buffet, box. See Bog. ¶ 'A bob of cheris,' i. e. a cluster of cherries, Towneley Mysteries, p. 118, may be explained from Gael. babag, a cluster; which cf. with Gael. bagaid, a cluster, W. bagad, bagwy, a cluster, bunch. BOLLED, swollen. (Scand.) In the A. V.; Exod. ix. 31. Pp. of M. E. bollen, to swell; which occurs in bollep, P. Plowman, A. v. 99; and in the sb. bolling, swelling, P. Plowman, A. vi. 218, B. vii. 204. Another form of the pp. is bolned, whence the various readings bolnip, bolnyth, for bollep, in the first passage. - Dan. bulne, to swell; pp. bullen, swollen. + Icel. bolgnadr, swollen, pp. of bolgja, to swell; also boliginn, swollen, pp. of a lost verb. + Swed. bulna, to swell. BOLSTER, a sort of pillow. (E.) M. E. bolster, Prompt. Parv. p. 43. - A. S. bolster, Grein. + Icel. bolstr. + O. H. G. polstar (Stratmann, E. Müller). In Dutch, bolster is both a pillow, and a shell or hnsk. a. The suffix may be compared with that in kol-ster; see it discussed in Koch, Engl. Grammatik, iii. 46.  $\beta$ . BOLT, BOULT, to sift meal. (F., -L., -Gk.) Shak has bolt, Winter's Tale, iv. 4, 375; also bolter, a sieve, 1 Henry IV, iii. 3. 81. Palsgrave has: 'I boulte meale in a boulter, Ie bulte.'-O.F. bulter (Palsgrave); bluter, to boult meal (Cotgrave); mod. F. bluter.  $\beta$ . See above. BOND, a tie. (E.) In Chaucer, C. T. 3096, where it rimes with hond = hand. A mere variation of band; just as Chaucer has londe, honde, for land, hand. See Band. Der. bond-ed, bonds-man; but perhaps not bond-man, nor bond-age ; see Bondage.

BONDAGE, servitude. (F., - Scand.) M. E. bondage, servitude, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 71. - O. F. bondage, explained by Roquefort as 'vilaine tenue,' i. e. a tenure of a lower character = Low Lat. bondagium, a kind of tenure, as in 'de toto tenemento, quod de ipso tenet in bondagio;' Monast. Anglic. 2 par. fol. 609 a, qu. in Blount's Nomo-lexicon. A holder under this tenure was called a bondman, or in earlier times bonde, A. S. bonda, which merely meant a boor, a householder. B. That the word bondage has been connected from very early times with the word bond, and the verb to bind is certain ; hence its sinister sense of 'servitude.' C. It is equally certain that this etymology is wholly false, the A.S. bonda having been borrowed from Icel. bondi, a husbandman, a short form of búandi, a tiller of the soil; from Icel. búa, to till. See Boor.

BONE, a part of the skeleton. (E.) M. E. boon, Chaucer, Prol. 546.-A. S. bán, Grein. + Du. been. + Icel. bein. + Swed. ben. + Dan. been. + O. H. G. pein, peini. Fick suggests a connection with Icel. beinn, straight; iii. 197. Der. bon-y; perhaps bon-fire, q. v. BONFIRE, a fire to celebrate festivals, &c. (E.) Fabyan (continued) has: ' they sang Te Deum, and made bongires;' Queene Marie, an. 1555. Several other quotations in R. shew the same spelling. B. The origin is somewhat uncertain. Skinner suggested F. bon, or Lat. bonus II Wedgwood suggests (1) Dan. baun, a beacon, which can hardly be an old word, as the fuller form, Icel. bakn, is a borrowed word; (2) W. ban, lofty; cf. W. banffagl, a bonfire, blaze; which does not answer to the spelling bonefire; (3) a fire of buns, i. e. dry stalks (prov. Eng.).  $\gamma$ . The Lowland Scotch is banefire, in Acts of James VI (Jamieson). The M. E. bone means (1) a bone, (2) a boon; but the Scotch bane means a bone only. This makes it 'bone-fire,' as being the only form that agrees with the evidence; and this explanation leaves the whole word native English, instead of making it a clumsy hybrid. ¶ After writing the above, I noted the following passage. 'The English nuns at Lisbon do pretend that they have both the arms of Thomas Becket; and yet Pope Paul the Third . . . pitifully complains of the cruelty of K. Hen. 8 for causing all the bones of Becket to be burnt, and the ashes scattered in the winds; . . . and how his arms should escape that bone-fire is very strange; ' The Romish Horseleech, 1674, p. 82. But, in fact, the entry 'bane-fire, ignis ossium' occurs in Cathol. Anglicum, A.D. See Errata, &c. [+] 1483

Shak. has 'blithe and bonny;' Much Ado, ii. 3. 6y; also, 'the bonny beast;' 2 Hen. VI, v. 2. 12. Levins has: 'Bonye, scitus, facetus,' 102. 32. A comparison of the word with such others as bellibone, bonibell, bonnilasse (all in Spenser, Shep. Kal. August), shews at once that it is a corruption of F. bonne, fair, fem. of bon, good. - Lat. bonus, good. Der. bonnily. See Bounty.

BONZE, a Japanese priest. (Port., - Japanese.) Spelt bonzee in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, pp. 393, 394. – Port. bonzo, a bonze. – Japan. busso, a pious man; according to Mahn's Webster.

BOOBY, a study a folds man, a config to mann a volume of the start of the start, as the start of the start, and Fletcher, Hum. Lieutenant, iii, 7. 9. In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 11, we find: 'At which time some boobyes pearcht upon the yardarm of our ship, and suffered our men to take them, an animal so very simple as becomes a proverb.' [The F. boubie, in the Supplement to the Dict. de l'Académie, is only used of the bird, and may have been borrowed from English. The name probably arose among the Spanish sailors.] - Span. bobo, a blockhead, dolt ; a word in very common use, with numerous derivatives, such as bobon, a great blockhead, bobote, a simpleton, &c.; cf. Port. bobo, a mimic, buffoon. [Related to F. baube, stuttering (Cotgrave), and to O. F. bobu, cited by Littre (s. v. bobe), the latter of which points back to Lat. balbutire, to stammer, just as baube does to balbus. ] - Lat. balbus, stammering, lisping, inarticulate. [Cf. Span. bobear, to talk foolishly, bobada, silly speech.] + Gk. Báp-Bapos, lit. inarticulate. See Barbarous.

BOOK, a volume; a written composition. (E.) M. E. book, Chaucer, C. T. Group, B. 190. + A. S. boe, Grein, i. 134. + Du. boek. + Icel. bok. + Swed. bok. + Dan. bog. + O. H. G. buah, M. H. G. buoch, G. buch. B. A peculiar use of A. S. boe, a beech-tree (Grein, i. 134); because the original books were written on pieces of beechen board. The Icel. bokstafr properly meant 'a beech-twig, but afterwards 'a letter.' So, in German, we have O. H. G. puachá, póhhá, M. H. G. bucche, a beech-tree, as compared with O. H. G. buah, poah, M. H. G. bucch, a book. The mod. G. forms are bucke, beech, buch, a book. Cf. Goth. boka, a letter. See Bosch. Der.

Not recorded in A.S., but yet O. Low G.; cf. Du. bommen, to give out a hollow sound, to sound like an empty barrel The O. Du. bommen meant 'to sound a drum or tabor;' and O. Du. bom meant a tabor ;' Oudemans ; with which compare the A. S. byme, a trumpet. Closely allied to bump, to make a noise like a bittern, which is the Welsh form; see Bump (2). ¶ That the word begins with b both in O. Low G. and in Latin (which has the form bombus, a humming), is due to the fact that it is imitative. See Bomb.

BOOM (2), a beam or pole. (Dutch.) Boom occurs in North's Examen (R.) - Du. boom, a beam, pole, tree. + E. beam. See Boam. Many of our sea-terms are Dutch. Der. jib-boom, stanker-bcom. BOON, a petition, favour. (Scand.) M. E. bone, borne, Chaucer, C. T. 2271. - Icel. bon, a petition. + Dan. and Swed. bon, a petition. + A.S. ben, a petition. Fick gives a supposed Teutonic form bona, which he connects with the root ban, appearing in our E. ban; iii. 201. This seems more likely than to connect it with the verb bid, in the sense of 'to ask,' with which it has but the initial letter in common. See Ban. O. The sense of 'favour' is somewhat late, and points to a confusion with F. bon, Lat. bonus, good. D. the phrase 'a boon companion,' the word is wholly the F. bon. [†] D. In

The original sense is rather 'to dwell,' and the word is closely related t the word be. From 🖌 BHÚ, to be; Fick, i. 161; Bensey, s. v. bhú. See Be. Der. boor-ish, boor-ish-ly, boor-ish-ness.

BOOT (1), a covering for the leg and foot. (F. -O. H. G.) Chaucer has botes, Prol. 203, 275.-O. F. boute, botte, meaning (1) a Travels, et. 1005, p. 41. Chaucer has botes, Prol. 203, 275. - O. F. boute, botte, meaning (1) a BONNET, a cap. (F., -Low L., - Hindee?) 'Lynnen bonnettes ypon their heades; 'Bible, 1551, Ezck. xliv. 18; and so in A. V.-F. bonnet, a cap; Cot. [Brachet says it was originally the name of a stuff; 'there were robes de bonnet; the phrase chapel de bonnet [cap] by ta, a bottle, whence M. E. bitte, a bottle, pitcher, now superseded by butt (from the O. F. boute). See Butt (2).  $\P$  The connection of boot and butt with bottle is sometimes asserted, but it is not clear that G. butte = Gk. Boirts. See Bottle (1). [#] that G. bittle = Gk. Boöris. See Bottle (1). [\*] BOOT (2), advantage, profit. (E.) Chiefly preserved in the adj. bootless, profiless. M.E. boie, boote, common in early authors; the phr. to bote is in Langtoft, p. 163, &c. -A. S. bit, Grein, i. 135; whence A. S. bétan, to a mend, help. + Du. bote, penitence; botten, to mend, kindle, atone for. + Icel. bót, bati, advantage, cure; bæta, to mend, improve. + Dan. bod, amendment; böde, to mend. + Swed. bot, remedy, cure; böta, to fine, mulct. + Goth. bóta, profit; bótjan, to profit. + O. H. G. puoza, to fine, mulct. + Goth. bóta, profit; bótjan, to profit. + O. H. G. puoza, boo:-less-ly, bood-less-ness. ¶ The phrase to boot means 'in addition,' lit. 'for an advantage;' it is not a verb, as Bailey oddly supposes; and, in fact, the allied verb takes the form to beet, still used in Scotland in the sense of 'to mend a fire' (A. S. bétan, to help, to kindle).

BOOTH, a slight building. (Scand.) M. E. bothe, in comp. tolbothe, a toll-house, Wyclif, St. Matt. ix. 9; also bole, which seems to occur first in the Ormulum, 1. 15187. – Icel.  $b\dot{u}\partial_i$ , a booth, shop. + Swed. bod. + Dan. bod. + Gael. buth, a shop, tent; Irish bo'h, boith, a cottage, hut, tent. + W. buth, a hut, booth, cot. + G. bude, a booth, stall.  $\beta$ . Mr. Wedgwood cites also Bohem. bauda, budha, a hut, a shop, budowati, to build; Polish buda, a booth or shed, budowaé, to build; with the remark that 'in the Slavonic languages, the word signifying "to build" seems a derivative rather than a root.'  $\gamma$ . Mr. Vigfusson says that Icel. bud is not derived from bua, to live, to make ready. The solution is easy; all these words are from the  $\sqrt{BHU}$ , to be; cf. Skt. bhavana, a house, a place to be in, from bhú, to be.

to be; cf. Skt. bhavana, a house, a place to be in, from bhú, to be. BOOTY, prey, spoil. (Scand.) Not in very early use. One of the earliest examples is in Hall's Chron. Henry VIII, an. 14 (R.), where it is spelt botie. – Icel. býti, exchange, barter. + Dan. bytte, exchange, booty, spoil, prey. + Swed. byte, exchange, barter, share or dividend, spoil, pillage. + Du. buit, booty, spoil, prize; buit maken, to get booty, take in war. [The G. bette, booty, is merely borrowed, as shewn by its unaltered form.]  $\beta$ . The word was also taken into F. in the form butin (Cotgrave), and Cotgrave's explanation of butiner as 'to prey, get booty, make spoil of, to bootchale,' clearly shews that the Eng. spelling was affected by confusion with boot, advantage, profit.]  $\gamma$ . The Icel. býti, exchange, is derived from the verb býta, to divide into portions, divide, deal out, distribute, so that the original sense of booty is 'share.' Remoter origin unknown.

sense of booty is 'share.' Remoter origin unknown. BORAGE, a plant with rough leaves. (F.) Formerly bourage, as in Cotgrave, who gives: 'Bourrocke, Bourracke, bourage.'=F. bourracke. = Low Lat. borraginem, acc. of borrago; a name given to the plant from its roughness(?) = Low Lat. borra, burra, rough hair, whence F. bourre, Ital. borra; the latter meaning 'short wool, goat's hair, cowhair, '&c.; cf. Low Lat. reburrus, rough, rugged. See Burr. ¶ Or from (unauthorised) Arab. abū 'araq, a sudorific plant; from abū, a father (hence, endowed with), and 'araq, sweat (Littré, who thinks the Low Lat. borrago to be taken from the F.). [+]

BORAX, biborate of soda; of a whitish colour. (Low L., – Arab., – Pers.) Cotgrave gives boran, borrais, and boras as the French spellings, with the sense 'boran, or green earth; a hard and shining minerall.' Boran is a Low-Latin spelling; Ducange also gives the form boracum. The latter is the more correct form, and taken directly from the Arabic. – Arab. búráq (better búraq), borax; Rich. Arab. Dict. p. 295. – Pers. búrah, borax (Vullers).

Arab. Dict. p. 295. – Pers. búrah, borax (Vullers). BORDEIR, an edge. (F., – O. Low G.) M. É. bordure, Chaucer, tr. of Boethins, bk. i. pr. 1, 1. 50. – F. bordure (Cotgrave). – Low Lat. bordura, a margin; formed, with suffix -ura, from O. Low German; cf. Du. boord, border, edge, brim, bank; which is cognate with A. S. bord in some of its senses. See Board. Der. border, vb.; border-er. BORE (1), to perforate. (E.) M. E. borien, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 66. – A. S. borian, Bosworth, with a ref. to Ælfric's Glossary; he also quotes 'wyrm pe borad treow,' a worm that perforates wood, from infin. boras. + Du. boren, to bore, pierce. + Icel. bora. + Swed. borra. + Dan. bore. + O. H. G. poron (G. bokren). + Lat. forare, to bore. + Gk.  $\phi a p$ , in  $\phi a p a \gamma f$ , a ravine,  $\phi a p - v \gamma f$ , the pharynx, gullet; Curtius, i. 371. + Zend bar, to cut. –  $\checkmark$  BHAR, to cut; Fick, i. 694. Thus bore is co-radicate with perforate and pharynx. Der. bor-er.

BORE (a), to worry, vex. (E.) Merely a metaphorical use of bore, to perforate. Shak, has it in the sense, to overreach, trip up: 'at this instant He bores me with some trick;' Hen. VIII, i. 1. 128. Cf. 'Baffled and bored;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Span. Curate, iv. 5. BORE (3), a tidal surge in a river. (Scand.) Used by Burke, On BORE (3), a tidal surge in a river. (Scand.) Used by Burke, On a Regicide Peace, letters 3 and 4 (R.). An old prov. E. word, of Scand. origin. – Icel. bára, a billow caused by wind. + Swed. dial. bår, a hill, mound; Rietz.  $\beta$ . Cf. G. empor, O. H. G. in por, upwards; O. H. G. purjan, to lift up. Referred by Fick, iii, 203, to Teutonic bar, to carry, lift. –  $\checkmark$  BHAR, to bear. [+] BOREAS, the north wind. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 38. -Lat. Boreas, the north wind. -Gk. Bopeas, Boppas, the north wind.  $\beta$ . Perhaps it meant, originally, the 'mountain-wind;' cf. Ital. tramontana, mountain-wind. Cf. Gk. bpos, Skt. giri, a mountain; Curtius, i. 434. Der. borea-I.

BOROUGH, a town. (C.) Or. open, bat. gr., a mountain, Cuttius, i. 434. Der. borea-J. BOROUGH, a town. (E.) M. E. burgh, borgh, P. Plowman, B. vi. 308; also borwe, in the sense 'a place of shelter '(cf. E. burrow), Will. of Palerne, 1. 1889; burge, burie, borwe, borewe, Layamon, 2163, 3553, 9888. -A. S. burk, burg, Grein, i. 147; forming byrig in the gen and dat. sing., whence the modern E. bury. + Du. burg. + Icel. borg, a fort, castle. + Swed. and Dan. borg, a fort, castle. + Goth. baurgs, a town. + O H. G. purue (G. burg), a castle. B. From A. S. beorgan, to defend, protect, Grein, i. 197. + Goth. bairgan, to hide, preserve, keep. + Lithuanian bruku, to press hard. constrain. + Lat. farcire, to stuff. + Gk.  $\phi a \sigma \sigma ev,$  to shut in, make fast. -Gk.  $\checkmark \Phi PAK (= bhrak)$ , according to Curtius, i. 376. Fick (ii. 421) gives  $\lor BHARGH$ , to protect. Benfey (p. 635) suggests a connection with Skt. bihant, large. See below; and see Burgess.

BORROW, to receive money on trust. (E.) M. E. borwen, Chaucer, C. T. 4525. - A. S. borgian, to borrow, Matt. v. 42 (by usual change of A. S. g to M. E. w); the lit. meaning being 'to give a pledge.' - A. S. borg, a pledge, more frequently spelt berh in the nom. case; common in the A. S. laws. + Du. borg, a pledge, bail, security, + M. H. G. and G. borg, security. (Merely a borrowed word in Icelandic, and perhaps also in Swed. and Danish.) Thus A. S. borgian is a deriv. of borg, which is, itself, from the pp. of A. S. beorgan, to protect, secure. See Borough. Der. borrow-er.

rande, and perhaps also in Sweet, and Danisl.) Thus A.S. borgan is a deriv. of borg, which is, itself, from the pp. of A.S. borgan, to protect, secure. See Borough. Der. borrow-er. BOSOM, a part of the body. (E.) M. E. bosom, Chaucer, C. T. 7575. – A.S. bism, Grein, i. 134. + Dutch bozzm. + O. H.G.  $tuo_{am}$ ; G. busen.  $\beta$ . Grimm (Dict. ii. 483, 494, 553) suggests the root which appears in E. to bow, q.v., as if the orig. sense were 'rounded.'

BOSS, a knob. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. 'bosse of a bokelere' (buckler); Chaucer, C. T. :266. - F. bosse, a hump; Prov. bossa; Ital. bozza, a swelling. - O. H. G. bózo, pózo, a bunch, a bundle (of flax); whence was also borrowed Du. bos, a bunch, a bundle.  $\beta$ . It seems to be agreed that (just as E. bump means (1) to strike, and (a) a hump, a swelling, with other similar instances) the root of the word is to be found in the O. H. G. bózen, póssen, búzen, to strike, beat; cognate with E. beat. See Boat, and see further under Botch (1).

BOTANY, the science treating of plants. (F., -Gk.) The word is ill-formed, being derived from the F. adj. botanique, a form which appears in Cotgrave, and is explained by 'herball, of, or belonging to herbs, or skill in herbs,' The mod. F. botanique is both adj. and sb. Thus botany is short for 'botanic science.' -Gk. Boravinós, botanical, adj., formed from Borávn, a herb, plant. -Gk. Boravinós, botanical, adj., formed from Borávn, a herb, plant. -Gk. Boravinós, botanical, adj., formed from Borávn, a herb, plant. -Gk. Boravinós, botanical, adj., formed from Borávn, a herb, plant. -Gk. Boravinós, botanical, adj., formed from Borávn, a herb, plant. -Gk. Boravinós, botanical, adj., formed from Borávn, a herb, plant. -Gk. Boravinós, botanical, adj., formed from Borávn, a herb, plant. -Gk. Boravinós, botanical, adj., formed from Borávn, a herb, plant. -Gk. Boravinós, botanical, adj., formed from Borávn, a herb, plant. -Gk. Botan-ise, BOTCH (1), to patch; a patch. (O. Low G.) Wyclif has bocchyn, to mend, a Chron. xxiv. 10. Borowed [not like the sb. botch (2), a swelling, through the French, but] directly from the O. Low German. Oudemans gives botsen (mod. Du. botsen), to strike; with its variant butsen, meaning both (1) to strike or beat, and (2) to repair. The notion of repairing in a rough manner follows at once from that of fastening by beating. The root is the same as that of beat. See Boss, and Beat; and see below. Der. botch er, botch-y.

BOTS, and BOT(1), a swelling.  $(F_{.,} - G_{.})$  Used by Milton, 'botches and blains;' P. L. xii. 180. The Prompt. Parv. has: 'Bohche, botche, sore; ulcus.' Here tch is for cch or ch. The spelling bocches is in P. Plowman, B. xx. 83, -O. F. boce, the boss of a buckler, a botch, a boil. Cotgrave has boce as another spelling of F. bosse; thus botch is a doublet of boss. See BOBS. ¶ Oudemans gives butse as O. Du. for a boil, or a swelling, with the excellent example in an old proverb: 'Naar den val de butse' = as is the tumble, so is the botch.

BOTH, two together. (Scand.) Not formed from A. S. bá twá, butu, lit. both two, but borrowed from the Scandinavian; cf. Lowland Scotch baih; spelt bape and bepe in Havelok, 1680, 25,43. – Icel. báðir, adj. pron. dual; neut. bæði, báði. + Swed. báða. + Dan. baade, + O. H. G. pédé (G. beidé). + Goth. bajotks, Luke, v. 38. B. TheA. S. has only the shorter form bá, both; cognate with Goth. bai, $both; cf. -ba in Lat. am-ba; -<math>\phi \omega$  in Gk.  $d\mu - \phi \omega$ ; and -bha in Skt. u-bha. See Fick, i. 18. O. The Goth. form shews that -th (in bo-th) does not mean two, nor is it easy to explain it. For numerous examples of various forms of the word, see Koch, Engl. Gram. ii. 197.

BOTHER, to harass; an embarrassment. (C.) There is no proof that the word is of any great antiquity in English. The earliest quotation seems to be one from Swift; 'my head you so bother;' Strephon and Flavia (R.). Swift uses pother in the same poem, but rather in the sense of 'constant excitement.' • With every lady in the land | Soft Strephon kept a pother;

One year he languish'd for one hand | And next year for another.' I am not at all sure that the words are the same ; and instead of see-ing any connection with Du. bulderen, to rage (Wedgwood), I incline to Garnett's solution (Philolog. Trans. i. 171), where he refers us to Irish buaidhirt, trouble, affliction; buaidhrim, I vex, disturb. Swift may easily have taken the word from the Irish. Cf. Gaelic buaidheart (obsolete), tumult, confusion; buaidheirthe, disturbed, agitated; buireadh, disturbance, distraction; derived from buair, to tempt, allure, provoke, vex, disturb, annoy, distract, madden; Irish buair, to vex, grieve, trouble.

BOTS, BOTTS, small worms found in the intestines of horses. (C.) Shak. has bots, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 11. Cf. Gael. botus, a bellyworm ; boiteag, a maggot. Bailey has : ' Bouds, maggots in barley. BOTTLE (1), a hollow vessel. (F., - Low Lat. - Gk.) M.E. bote; Chaucer, C. T. 7513. - Norm. F. butwille, a bottle (note to Vie de Seint Auban, ed. Atkinson, l. 677). - Low Lat. buticula, dimin. of butica, a kind of vessel (Brachet). - Gk. βύτις, βοῦτις, a flask. See Boot (1).

BOTTLE (1), a bundle of hay. (F., -O. H.G.) M.E. botel, Chaucer, C. T. 16963. -O. F. botel; C. 'botelle, botte de foin ou de paille;' Roquefort. A dimin. of F. botte, a bundle of hay, &c. -O. H. G. bózo, pózo, a bundle of flax. See Boss. BOTTOM, the lower part, foundation. (E.) M. E. boym, boym, botun, bottome; also bothom; see Prompt. Parv. p. 45; bothem, Gawain and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, 1.2145. - A.S. botm, Grein, p. 133. + Du. bodem. + Icel. botn. + Swed. botten. + Dan. bund. + O. H. G. podam (G. boden). + Lat. fundus. + Gk. πυθμήν. + Skt. (Vedic) budhna, depth, ground; Benfey, p. 634; Fick, iii. 214. From A BHUDH, signifying either ' to fathom' (see budk in Benfey), or an extension of BHU, 'to be, to grow,' as if the root is the place of growth (Curtius, i. 327). B. The word appears also in Celtic; cf. Irish bonn, the sole of the foot; Gaelic bonn, sole, foundation, bottom; W. bon, stem, base, stock. Der. bottom-less, bottom-ry. From the same root, fund-ament. BOUDOIR, a small private room, esp. for a lady. (F.) Modern, and mere French. - F. boudoir, lit. a place to sulk in. - F. bouder, to sulk. Origin unknown (Brachet). [+] BOUGH, a branch of a tree. (E.)

M. E. bough, Chaucer, C. T. 1983. - A. S. bóg, bóh, Grein, i. 134. [The sense is peculiar to English; the original sense of A. S. bóg was 'an arm;' esp. the 'shoulder of an animal.'] + Icel. bógr, the shoulder of an animal. + Dan. boug, bov, the shoulder of a quadruped; also, the bow of a ship. + Swed. bog, shoulder, bow of a ship. + O. H. G. puac, poac (G. bug), the shoulder of an animal; bow of a ship. + Gk.  $\pi \eta \chi v_3$ , the fore-arm, + Skt. báhus, the arm.  $\beta$ . From a base bhághu, str Skt. bahu, large. See Curtius, i. 240. See Bow (4). BOUGHT, s., the bight of a rope, &c. ; see Bout. β. From a base bhaghu, strong, thick; cf.

BOULDER, a large round stone. (Scand.) Marked by Jamieson as a Perthshire word; chiefly used in Scotland and the N. of England. a. Mr. Wedgwood says: 'Swed. dial. bullersten, the larger kind of pebbles, in contrast to klappersteen, the small ones. From Swed. bullra, E. dial. bolder, to make a loud noise, to thunder." Klappersteen means 'a stone that claps or rattles.' See his article, which is quite conclusive; and see Rietz. β. But I may add that the excrescent d is due to a Danish pronunciation; cf. Dan. buldre, to roar, to rattle; bulder, crash, uproar, turmoil. (Danish puts 1d for U, as in falde, to fall.) The word is related, not to ball, but to bellow. ll, as in falde, to fall.) See Bellow, Bull.

BOUNCE, to jump up quickly. (O. Low G.) M. E. bunsen, bounsen, to strike suddenly, beat; Ancren Riwle, p. 188.-Platt-Deutsch bunsen, to beat, knock, esp. used of knocking at a door; Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 164. + Du. bonzen, to bounce, throw. B. The word is clearly connected with bounce, a blow, bump, used also as an interjection, as in 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 304. Cf. Du. bons, a bounce, thump; Swed. dial. bums, immediately (Rietz); G. bumps, bounce, as in bumps ging die Thür - bounce went the door; Icel. bops, bump! imitating the sound of a fall. O. The word is probably imitative, C. The word is probably imitative, and intended to represent the sound of a blow. See Bump (1)

BOUND (1), to leap. (F., -L.) Shak. has bound, All's Well, iii. 3. 314.-F. bondir, to bound, rebound, &c.; but orig. to resound, make a loud resounding noise : see Brachet. - Lat. bombitare, to resound, hum, buzz. - Lat. bombus, a humming sound. See Boom (1). BOUND (2), a boundary, limit. (F., - C.) M. E. bounde, Chaucer, C. T. 7922. - O. F. bonne, a limit, boundary, with excrescent d, as in sound from F. son; also sometimes spelt bodne (which see in Burguy). -Low Lat. bodina, bonna, a bound, limit.-O. Bret. boden, a cluster of trees (used as a boundary), a form cited in Webster and by E. Müller (from Heyse); cf. Bret. bonn, a boundary, as in men-bonn, a boundary-stone (where men = stone). B. The Gael. bonn, a foundation, base, has a remarkable resemblance to this Breton word, and also appears to be a contracted form. This would link bound with bottom. At any rate, bound is a doublet of bourn, a boundary. See Bottom, and Bourn (1). Der. bound, vb., bound-ary, bound-less. [+] (= bow-er, bow maker), bow-string, &c.

BOUND (3), ready to go. (Scand.) In the particular phrase the ship is bound for Cadiz,' the word bound means 'ready to go;' formed, by excrescent d, from M. E. bown, ready to go. 'She was bown to go;' Chaucer, C. T. 11807. 'The maister schipman made him bowne And goth him out;' Gower, C. A. iii. 322. 'Whan he sauh that Roberd . . . to wend was alle bone ; ' Langtoft, p. 99 .-Icel. buinn, prepared, ready, pp. of vb. bua, to till, to get ready;

from the same root as Boor, q. v. BOUNDEN, pp., as in 'bounden duty.' (E.) The old pp. of the verb to bind. See Bind. BOUNTY, goodness, liberality. (F., -L.) Chaucer has bountee, C. T. Group B 1647. E 157, 415.-O. F. bonteit, goodness.-Lat. acc. bonitatem, from nom. bonitas, goodness. - Lat. bonus, good ; Old Lat. duonus, good ; see Fick, i. 627. Der. bounti-ful, bounti-ful-ness, bounte-ous, bounte-ous-ness.

BOUQUET, a nosegay. (F., - Prov., - Low Lat., - Scand.) Mere French. - F. bouquet, 'a nosegay or posie of flowers;' Cotgrave. - O. F. bousquet, bosquet, properly 'a little wood;' the dimin. of bois, a wood; see Brachet, who quotes from Mme. de Sévigné, who uses bouquet in the old sense. - Frovençal bose (O. F. bos), a wood. - Low Lat. boseum, buseum, a wood. See Bush. ¶ The lit. sense of 'little bush' makes good sense still. [+]

BOURD, a jest; to jest; obsolete. (F.) Used by Holinshed, Drayton, &c.; see Nares. M. E. bourde, boorde. 'Boorde, or game, ludus, jocus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 44. The verb is used by Chaucer, C. T. 14193.-O. F. bourde, a game; bourder, to play. Of unknown origin, according to Brachet. B. The difficulty is to decide between two theories. (1) The word may be Celtic; cf. Bret. bourd, a jest, bourda, to jest, forms which look as if borrowed from French; yet we also find Gael, buirte, a gibe, taunt; Gael. burt, buirt, mockery; Irish buirt, a gibe, taunt. (2) On the other hand Burguy takes O. F. bourder to be a contraction of O. F. bohorder, to tourney, joust with lances, hence to amuse oneself; from sb. bohort, behort, a mock tourney, a play with lances, supposed by Diez to stand for bot-horde, i. e. a beating against the hurdles or barrier of the lists, from O. F. boter, to beat, and hords, a hurdle; words borrowed from M. H. G. and mate with E. beat and hurdle respectively.

BOURGEON ; see Burgeon.

BOURN (1), a boundary. (F.) Well known from Shak. Hamlet, iii. 1. 79; K. Lear, iv. 6. 57. - F. 'borne, a bound, limit, meere, from O. F. bonne, a bourn, limit, bound, boundary. Thus bourn is a doublet of bound. See Bound (2). [+]

BOURN, BURN (2), a stream. (E.) 'Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me ;' K. Lear, iii. 6. 67. M.E. bourne, P. Plowman, prol. 1. 8. - A.S. burna, burne, a stream, fountain, Grein, i. 149. + Du. born, a spring.+ Icel. brunnr, a spring, fountain, well.+ Swed. brunn, a well. Dan. brönd, a well.+Goth. brunna, a spring, well.+ O.H.G. prunno (G. brunnen), a spring, well. + Gk. optap, a well. B. The root is probably A.S. byrnan, to burn, just as the root of the Goth. brunna is the Goth. brinnan, to burn ; Curtius, i. 378. The connection is seen at once by the comparison of a bubbling well to boiling water; and is remarkably exemplified in the words well and torrent, q.v. See Burn. BOUSE, BOOSE, BOUZE, BOOZE, to drink deeply.

Spenser has: 'a bouzing-can'= a drinking vessel; F.Q. Dutch.) Cotgrave uses bouse to translate F. boire. - O. Du. buisen, 4. 22. buysen, to drink deeply; Oudemans. - O. Du. buize, buyse, a drinkingvessel with two handles (Oudemans); clearly the same word as the modern Du. buis, a tube, pipe, conduit, channel, which cannot be separated from Du. bus, a box, urn, barrel of a gun. The last word (like G. buchse, a box, pot, jar, rifle-barrel, pipe) is equivalent to the E. box, used in a great variety of senses. See Box. [†]

Formerly BOUT, properly, a turn, turning, bending. (Scand.) bought; Milton has bout, L'Allegro, 139; Spenser has bought, F. Q. i. 1. 15; i. 11. 11. Levins has: Bought, plica, ambages; 217, 31. Dan. bugt, a bend, turn; also, a gulf, bay, bight (as a naut. term). + Icel. bugda, a bend, a serpent's coil (the sense in which Spenser uses bought). B. From Dan. bugne, to bend. + Icel. bjuga*, to bow, bend, a lost verb, of which the pp. boginn, bent, is preserved. + Goth.

biugan, to bow, bend. See Bow (1), and Bight. [†] BOW (1), verb. to bend. (E.) M. E. bugen, buwen, bogen, bowen. Bowyn, flecto, curvo; Prompt. Parv. p. 46. Very common. – A. S. bugan, to bend (gen. intransitive), Grein, i. 129. + Du. buigen, to bend (both trans. and intrans.). + Icel. beygia, to make to bend. + Swed. boja, to make to bend. + Dan. boie, to bend (tr. and intr.); bugne, to bend (intr.). + Goth. biugan (tr. and intr.). + O. H. G. piocan, G. beugen. + Lat. fugere, to turn to flight, give way. + Gk. petryer, to flee. + Skt. bhuj, to bend. - ABHUGH, to bend, to turn aside; Fick, i. 162. ¶ Note that the bow of a ship is the same word as bough, and is unrelated. Der. bow (a weapon), bow-man, bow-yer

ii. 87. From the verb above.

BOW (3), a weapon to shoot with. (E.) Chaucer has bowe, Prol. 108.-A.S. boga, Grein, i. 132. + Du. boog. + Icel. bogi. + Swed. bdge. + Dan\_bue. + O. H. G. pogo, bogo.  $\beta$ . From A.S. búgan, to See Bow (1). bend.

BOW (4), as a naut. term, the 'bow' of a ship. (Scand.) See quotation under Bowline. – Icel. bogr; Dan. bov, Swed. bog. See Bough. ¶ Not from Bow (1). Der. bow-line. bow-sprit. BOWELL, intestine. (F., = L.) M. E. bouele., Gower, C. A. ii. 265.

also, intestine; climin. of boulus, a sausage. BOWER, an arbour. (E.) M. E. bour, Chaucer, C. T. 3367.-A. S. bur, a chamber; often, a lady's apartment, Grein, i. 150. + Icel. A. S. Su, a chamber, other, a lardy supartment, other, i. 150. + 1760. bur, a chamber; also, a larder, pantry, store-room. + Swed. bur, a cage. + Dan. burr, a' cage. + M. H. G. bur, a house, a chamber, a cage (see quotation in E. Müller). B. The Lowland Scotch byre, a cowhouse, is merely another spelling and application of the same cow-house, is merely another spelling and application of the orig. sense is a dwelling-place, a place to be in. The derivation is from A. S. búan, to dwell. See Boor. Der. bower-y.

BOWL (1), a round ball of wood for a game.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  The Prompt. Parv. has: 'Bowle, bolus;' p. 46; and again: 'Bowlyn, or pley wythe bowlys, bolo.' The spelling with ow points to the old sound of ou (as in soup), and shews that, in this sense, the word is French. -F. 'boule, a bowle, to play with ;' Cot. - Lat. bulla, a bubble, a stud ; later, a metal ball affixed to a papal bull, &c. See Bull (2), and Boil (1). Der. boul, vb.; boul-er, boul-ing-green.

BOWL (2), a drinking-vessel. (E.) The spelling has been assimilated to that of Bowl, a ball to play with; but the word is English. M. E. bolle, P. Plowman, B. v. 360; pl. bollen, Layamon, ii. 406.-A. S. bolla, a bowl; Grein, i. 132. + Icel. bolli, a bowl. + O. H. G. follá, M. H. G. bolle, a bowl. B. Closely related to E. ball, Icel. bollr, a ball, O. H. G. pallá, a ball; and called bowl from its rounded

BOWLDER; see Boulder.
BOWLINE, naut. term. (E.) Often wrongly defined; see Errata. [+] 'Hale the boweline!' Pilgrim's Sea Voyage, ed. Furnivall, l. 25. From bow (4) and line; cf. Icel. boglina, bowline.
BOW-WINDOW, a bowed window. (E.) Discredited in literature, because the Dictionaries never tire of asserting it to be an in-correct form of bay-window, a word used by Shak. Yet it may very well be a distinct word, and not a mere corruption of it. (1) A baywindow is a window forming a recess in the room; see Bay (3). (2) A bow-window is one of semi-circular form. Confusion was inevitable. The etymology is from bow (1), to bend. BOX (1), the name of a tree. (L.) M. E. box-tree, Chaucer, C. T.

1304. – A.S. box, Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 315. (Not a native word.) - Lat. buxus, a box-tree. + Gk. wifes, the box-tree. See below.

BOX (2), a case to put things in, a chest. (L.) M. E. box, Chaucer, C. T. 4392 - A. S. box; Matt. xxvii. 7. (Not a native word.) -Lat. buxus, buxum, anything made of box-wood. + Gk. wufis, a case of box-wood. See Box (1). B. Thus box is co-radicate with pyx, q.v. Hence flow a great many meanings in English; such as (1) a chest; (2) a box at the theatre; (3) a shooting-box; (4) a Christmas box;

(5) a seat in the front of a coach (with a box under it formerly); &c. BOX (3), to fight with fists; a blow. (Scand.) 'Box, or buffet; alapa,' Prompt. Parv. p. 46; 'many a bloody boxs;' Chaucer, Good Women, 1384. - Dan. baske, to strike, drub, slap, thwack ; bask, a slap, thwack. (For change of sk to x, cf. ask with axe.)+Swed. basa, to whip, flog, beat; bas, a whipping; see basa in Ihre and Rietz. ¶ Note also Gael. boc, a blow, a box, a stroke. It is probable that box is another form of pash. See Pash; also Baste, to beat. Der. box-er.

BOY, a youngster. (O. Low Ger.) M. E. boy, Havelok, 1889; sometimes used in a derogatory sense, like knowe. Certainly from an O. Low German source, preserved in East Friesic boi, boy, a boy; Koolman, p. 215. Cf. Du. boef, a knave, a villain; O. Du. beef, a boy, youngling (Oudemans); Icel. boff. a knave, a rogue. + M. H. G. buobe, pube (G. bube). + Lat. pupus, a boy. It is therefore co-radicate with pupil and puppet. Der. boy-ish, boy-ish-ly, boy-ish-ness, boy-hood. ¶ The Gael. bobon, a term of affection for a boy; bobug, a fellow. a boy, a term of affection or familiarity; are words that have no relation here, but belong to E. babe. See Babe.

BRABBLE, to quarrel; a quarrel. (Dutch.) Shak. has brabble, a quarrel, Tw. Nt. v. 68; and brabbler, a quarrelsome fellow, K. John, v. 2. 162. - Du. brabbelen, to confound, to stammer ; whence brabbelaar, a stammerer, brabbeltaal, nonsensical discourse; brabbeling, stammering, confusion. Compare Blab, and Babble. Der. brabler. BRACE, that which holds firmly; to hold firmly. (F., -L.) 'A drum is ready brac'd;' King John, v. 2. 169. 'The brace of Seynt George, that is an arm of the see' (Lat. brachium sancti Georgii);

BOW (2), a bend. (E.) 'From the bows [bend] of the ryuer of <sup>60</sup> Mandeville's Travels, p. 126. - O. F. brace, brasse, originally a measure Humber anon to the ryuer of Teyse' [Tees]; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, of five feet, formed by the extended arms: see Cotores I at i. 87. From the verb above. brachia, pl. of brachium, the arm. See Burguy, s.v. bras; and Brachet, s. v. bras. See below. [†]

BRACELET, an ornament for the wrist or arm. (F.,-L.) 'I spie a bracelet bounde about mine arme;' Gascoigne, Dan Bartholo-mewe's Dolorous Discourses, l. 237.-F. bracelet (Cot.); dimin. of O. F. bracel (Burguy only gives brackel), an armlet or defence for the arm. - Lat. brachile, an armlet (see Brachet, s. v. bracelet). - Lat. brachium, the arm. + Gk.  $\beta \rho \alpha \chi i \omega \nu$ , the arm. Cf. Irish brac, W. braich, Bret. bréach, the arm. B. It is suggested in Curtius, i. 363, that perhaps Gk.  $\beta \rho \alpha \chi i \omega \nu$  meant 'the upper arm,' and is the same word with Gk. Baxior, shorter, the comparative of Gk. Baxior, short. See Brief. ¶ Perhaps Lat. brachium is borrowed from Gk. [†] BRACH, a kind of hunting-dog. (F., -G.) Shak. has brach Lear, iii. 6. 72, &c. M. E. brache, Gawain and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, L. 1142. - O. F. brache (F. braque), a hunting-dog, hound. -O. H. G. bracco, M. H. G. bracke (G. brack), a dog who hunts by the B. The origin of O. H. G. bracco is unknown ; some take it scent.

to be from the root seen in Lat. fragrare, but this is remarkably absent from Teutonic, unless it appears in Breath, q. v. O. There is a remarkable similarity in sound and sense to M. E. rache, a kind of dog; cf. Icel. rakki, a dog, a lapdog; O. Swed. racka, a bitch, which can hardly be disconnected from O. Swed. racka, to run. The difficulty is to account fairly for prefixed b- or be-

BRACK, BRACKISH, somewhat salt, said of water. (Dutch.) 'Water... so salt and brackish as no man can drink it;' North's Plutarch, p. 471 (R.); cf. brackishness in the same work, p. 610. Gawain Douglas has brake-brackish, to translate salsos, Æneid. v. 237. - Du. brak, brackish, briny; no doubt the same word which Kilian spells brack, and explains as 'fit to be thrown away;' Oudemans. i. 802. - Du. braken, to vomit; with which cf. ' braking, puking, retching, Jamieson; also' braky, or castyn, or spewe, Vomo, vomo; 'Prompt. Parv. + G. brack, sb., refuse, trash; brack, adj., brackish; brackwasser, brackish water.  $\beta$ . Probably connected with the root of break; see Broak, and Bark (3). The G. bracken, to clear from rubbish, is a mere derivative from brack, refuse, not the original of it. Der. brackish-ness.

BRACKEN, fern. (E.) M. E. braken, Allit. Poems, ed Morris, B. 1675. A.S. bracce, gen. braccan, a fern; Gloss. to Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 315; with the remark: 'the termination is that of the oblique cases, by Saxon grammar.' Or of the nom. pl., which is also braccan. + Swed. braken, fern. + Dan. bregne, fern. + Icel. burkni, fern. The Icel. burkni may be considered as a deriv. of Icel. brok, sedge, rough grass. B. The orig. form is clearly brake, often used as synonymous with fern; thus, in the Prompt. Parv. p. 47, we have 'Brake, herbe, or ferme (sic; for ferme), Filix; 'also 'Brakebushe, or fernebrake, Filicetum, filicarium;' and see Way's note. See Brake (2).

BRACKET, a cramping-iron, a corbel. &c. (F., -L.) A modern technical word. The history of the introduction of the word is not clear. It is certainly regarded in English as supplying the place of a dimin. of brace, in its senses of 'prop' or 'clamp.' β. But it cannot be derived direc'ly from brace, or from O. F. brache (Lat. brachium). It seems to have been taken rather from some dialectic form of French. Roquefort gives : 'Braques, les serres d'une écrevisse,' i. e. the claws of a crab; and Cotrave has: 'Brave, a kind of mortaise, not or joining of peeces together.' Y. Ultimately, the source is clearly the Bret. bréach or Lat. brachium, and, practically, it is, as was said, the dimin, of brace. See Brace, and Branch. [*]

BRACT, a small leaf or scale on a flower-stalk. (L.) A modern botanical term. - Lat. bractea, a thin plate or leaf of metal. Der. bractea-l, immediately from the L. form.

BRAD, a thin, long nail. (Scand.) M.E. brod, spelt brode in Prompt. Parv. p. 53, where it is explained as 'a hedlese nayle.'-Icel. broddr, a spike. + Swed. brodd, a frost-nail. + Dan. brodde, a frost-nail. B. The Icel. dd stands for rd, the fuller form being exhibited in A. S. brord, a spike or spire or blade of grass, which see in Bosworth; and the second r in brord stands for orig. s, seen in Gael. brosdaich, to excite. stimulate: Corn. bros. a sting. Thus A.S. brord brosdaich, to excite, stimulate; Corn. bros, a sting. is a variant of A. S. byrst, a bristle; and brad really represents a form brasd or brast, closely related to briss, the word of which brissle is a diminutive. Thus Fick, iii. 207, rightly gives the Teutonic forms brosda, a sharp point, and borsta, a bristle, as being closely related. O. Further, as the O. H. G. prort means the fore part of a ship, Curtius (ii. 394) thinks that Fick is quite right in further connecting these words with Lat. fastigium (for frastigium), a projecting point, and perhaps even with Gk. aphaoror, the curved stern of a ship. D. Fick suggests, as the Teutonic root, a form bars, to stand stiffly out, on the strength of the O. H. G. parran, with that sense. See further under Bristle. ¶ Thus there is no immediate connection between ness in form and sense. [+] BRAG, to boast; a boast. (C.) [The sb. braggart in Shak. (Much Ado, v. 1. 91, 189, &c.) = F. 'bragard, gay, gallant, ... braggard ;' Cotgrave. But the older form is braggere, P. Plowman, B. vii. 142 (A. vi. 156), and the vb. to brag is to be regarded rather as Celtic than French.]-W. bragio, to brag; brac, boastful. + Gael. bragairaachd, empty pride, vainglory; breagh, fine, splendid (E. brave). + Irish bragaim, I boast. + Breton braga, 'se pavaner, marcher d'une manière fière, se parer de beaux habits;' Le Gonidec. B. The root prob. appears in the Gael. bragh, a burst, explosion; from  $\checkmark$  BHRAG, to break; whence E break. So also to crack is 'to boast;' Jamieson's Scot. Dict. See Break, and Brave. Der. bragg-er, bragg-art, bragg-adocio (a word coined by Spenser; see F. Q. ii. 3). BRAGGET, a kind of mead. (Welsh.) M. E. bragat, braget, Chaucer, C. T. 3261.-W. bragot, a kind of mead. + Corn. bregaud, brago!, a liquor made of ale, honey, and spices; receipts for making it are given in Wright's Prov. E. Dict. + Irish bracat, malt liquor. From W. brag, malt. + Gael. braich, malt, lit. fermented grain. + Irish braich, malt. B. The Gael. braich is a derivative of the verb brach, to ferment; which can hardly be otherwise than cognate with A.S. bredwan, to brew. See Brew. ¶ The Lowland Scottish bragwort is a corrupt form, due to an attempt to explain the Welsh suffix -ot.

BRAHMIN, BRAHMAN, a person of the upper caste among Hindoos. (Skt.) The mod. word comes near the Skt. spelling. But the word appears early in Middle English. 'We were in Bragmanie bred,' we were born in Brahman-land; Romance of Alexander, C. 175. In the Latin original, the men are called Bragmanni, i.e. Brahmans. The country is called 'Bramande; 'King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 5916. Skt. brokmana, a Brahman. We also find Skt. brokman, ... 7. the brahmanical caste; 8. the divine cause and essence of the world, the unknown god ; also (personally) 1. a brahman, a priest, orig. signifying possessed of, or performing, powerful prayer; 2. Brahman, the first deity of the Hindu triad; Benfey, p. 636. Supposed to be derived from Skt. bhri, to bear, hold, support, cognate with E. bear. See Bear (1).

BRAID, to weave, entwine. (E.) M. E. breiden, braiden. Brayde lacys, necto, torqueo; Prompt. Parv. p. 49. - A. S. bregdan, bredan, to brandish, weave ; Grein, i. 138. + Icel. bregda, to brandish, turn about, change, braid, start, cease, &c. + O. H. G. brettan, B. Fick gives the Teu-M. H. G. bretten, to draw, weave, braid. tonic base as bragd, meaning to swing, brandish, turn about, iii. 215. C. He does not give the root; but surely it is not difficult to find. The Icel. bregda is allied to the sb. bragd, a sudden movement, which, compared with braga, to flicker, gives a stem brag-, to glance; evidently from & BHRAG, to shine; Fick, i. 152. Cf. Skt. bhraj, to shine, E. bright, &c.

BRAIL, a kind of ligature. (F., -C.) A brail was a piece of leather to tie up a hawk's wing. Used now as a nautical term, it means a rope employed to have up the corners of sails, to assist in furling them. Borrowed from O. F. braiel, a cincture, orig, a cincture for fastening up breeches; formed by dimin. suffix -el from F. braie, breeches, of the same origin as the E. Breeches, q. v.

BRAIN, the seat of intellect. (E.) M. E. brayne, Prompt. Parv. p. 47; brain, Layamon, 1468. - A. S. bragen, bregen (Bosworth). + Du. brain (O. Du. breghe). + O. Fries. brein. B. The A. S. form is a derived one; from a stem brag-; origin unknown. Some connect it with Gk. Brexuos, Breyma, the upper part of the head; on which see Curtius, ii. 144. Dor. brain-less.

BRAKE (1), a machine for breaking hemp; a name of various mechanical contrivances. (0. Low G.) M. E. brake, explained by 'pinsella, vibra, rastellum; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 47, note 3. Cf. 'bowes of brake,' cross-bows worked with a winch, P. Plowman, C. xzi. 293. One of the meanings is 'a contrivance for confining refractory horses; connecting it at once with O. Dutch brake, a clog or fetter for the neck ; braecke, braake, an instrument for holding by the nose (Oudemans). Cf. Platt-Deutsch brake, an instrument for breaking flax; braken, to break flax; Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 132. Thus the word is O. Dutch or Platt-Deutsch, from which source also comes the F. 'braquer, to brake hempe;' Cotgrave. Comparison of Du. braak, a breach, breaking, with Du. vlasbraak, a flax-brake, shews that braken, to break flax, is a mere variant of Du. break, to break; from VBHRAG. See Break. [†]

BRAKE (a). a bush, thicket; also, fern. (O. Low G.; perhaps E.) Shak, has 'hawthorn-brake;' M. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 3, and 77. In the sense of 'fern,' at least, the word is English, viz. A. S. bracce; see Bracken. In any case, the word is O. Low G., and appears in Brake, weidenbusch '= willow-bush, in the Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 131 (E. Müller); see also G. brack and bracke in Grimm's Wörter-B. It is almost certainly connected with Du. braak, fallow, buch.

E. brad and Irish and Gael. brad, a goad, notwithstanding the like-<sup>4</sup> to be that of rough, or 'broken' ground, with the over-growth that ness in form and sense. [+] BRAG, to boast; a boast. (C.) [The sb. braggart in Shak. | land broken up, but unsown. It may then be referred to the prolific BHRAG, to break. See Break.

BRAMBLE, a rough prickly shrub. (E.) M. E. brembil, Wyclif, Eccles. xliii. 21. - A. S. bremel, brembel, brember; Gloss. to Cockayne's Leechdoms, vol. iii. + Du. braam, a blackberry; braambosch, a bramblebush.+Swed. brom-bär, a blackberry.+Dan. brambær, a blackberry.+ G. brombeers, a blackberry; brombeerstrauch, a bramble-bush. B. E. Müller cites an O.H.G. form bramal, which, compared with A.S. bremel. shews that the second b is excrescent; and the termination is the common dimin. termination -el; the stem being bram-, answering to the WBHRAM, which, in Sanskrit, means 'to whirl, to go astray;' or, as explained by Max Müller, 'to be confused, to be rolled up toge-Lect. on Sc. of Lang. ii. 242 (8th edition). ther; ¶ The idea is difficult to follow; perhaps the reference is to the 'straggling' or ' tangled ' character of the bush. Some see a reference to the prickliness; for which see Breese. And see Broom.

BRAN, the coat of a grain of wheat. (C.) M. E. bran, Wright's Vocab. i. 201. - W. bran, bran, husk. + Irish bran, chaff. [The Gaelic bran, cited in E. Müller and Webster, is not in Macleod's Dict.] B. We find also a M. E. form bren, borrowed from O. F. bren, which again is from the Breton brenn, bran. B. It is difficult to determine whether our word was borrowed directly from the Welsh, or in-directly, through French, from the Breton. The latter is more likely, as bren is the more usual form in early writers. The mod. F. form is bran, like the English. The F. bren, dung, in Cotgrave, is the same word; the original sense is refuse, esp. stinking refuse; and an older sense appears in the Gael. brein, stench, breun, to stink ; also in the word Breath, q. v.

BRANCH, a bough of a tree. (F., -C.) M. E. branche, Rob. of Glouc., p. 193, l. 5. - F. branche, a branch. - Bret. branc, an arm; with which cf. Wallachian brëncë, a forefoot, Low Lat. branca, the claw of a bird or beast of prey. + W. braich, an arm, a branch. + Lat. brūchium, an arm, a branch, a claw. ¶ See Diez, who suggests that the Low Lat. branca is probably a very old word in vulgar Latin, as shewn by the Ital. derivatives brancare, to grip, brancicare, to grope; and by the Wallachian form. See Bracelet. Der. branch. vb., branch-let, branch-y, branch-less.

BRAND, a burning piece of wood ; a mark made by fire ; a sword. (E.) M. E. brond, burning wood, Chaucer, C. T. 1340; a sword, Will. of Palerne, l. 1244. - A. S. brand, brond, a burning, a sword. Grein, i. 135. + Icel. brandr, a fire-brand, a sword-blade. + Du. brand. a burning, fuel (cf. O. Du. brand, a sword; Oudemans). + Swed. and Dan. brand, a fire-brand, fire. + M. H. G. brant, a brand, a sword. [The sense is (1) a burning; (2) a fire-brand; (3) a sword-blade, from its brightness.] B. From A. S. brinnar, to burn. See Burn. BRAND- or BRANT-, as a prefix, occurs in brant-fox, a kind of Swedish fox, for which the Swedish name is brandräf. Also in bren:goose or brandgoose, Swed. brandgds. The names were probably at first conferred from some notion of redness or brownness, or the colour of burnt wood, &c. The word seems to be the same as Brand, q. v.  $\beta$ . The redstart (i.e. red-tail) is sometimes called the brantail, i.e. the burnt tail; where the colour meant is of course red.  $\gamma$ . The prefix is either of English, or, more likely, of Scandi-navian origin. See Brindled.

In Shak. BRANDISH, to shake a sword, &c. (F.,-Scand.) Mach. i. 2. 7; &c. M. E. braundisen, to brandish a sword ; Will. of Palerne, 3294, 2322.-F. brandisr (pres. pt. brandissant), to cast or hurl with violence, to shake, to brandish; Cot.-O. F. brand, a sword, properly a Norman F. form; it occurs in Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson, ll. 1234, 1303, 1499, 1838. Of Scandinavian origin; see Brand. β. The more usual O. F. brant answers to the O. H. G. form. ¶ I think we may rest content with this, because brandisk is so closely connected with the idea of sword. The difficulty is, that there exists also F. branler, to shake, of unknown origin, according to Brachet. But Brachet accepts the above derivation of brandir; and Littré treats branler as equivalent to O. F. brandeler, a frequentative form of brander, which is another form of brandir. See Brawl (2).

BRANDY, an ardent spirit. (Dutch.) Formerly called brandywine, brand-wine, from the former of which brandy was formed by dropping the last syllable. Brand-wine occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, iii. 1. – Du. brandewijn, brandy; lit. burnt wine; sometimes written brandwijn. – Du. brandt, gebrandt (full form gebrandet), burnt; and wijn, wine.  $\beta$ . The Dutch branden, lit. to burn, also meant to distil, whence Du. brander, a distiller, branderij. a distillery; hence the sense is really 'distilled wine,' brandy being obtained from wine by distillation.

BRANKS, an iron instrument used for the punishment of scolds. fastened in the mouth. (C.) Described in Jamieson's Dict.; the Dan. brak, fallow, G. brack, fallow, uploughed. The notion seems | Lowland Sc. brank means to bridle, restrain. - Gael. brangus, brar 1908 (formerly spelt brancas), an instrument used for punishing petty offenders, a sort of pillory; Gael. brang, a horse's halter; Irish brancas, a halter. + Du. pranger, pinchers, barnacle, collar. + G. pranger, a pillory. B. The root appears in Du. pranger, to pinch; cf. Goth. ana.praggan, to harass, worry (with gg sounded as ng); perhaps related to Lat. premere, to press, worry, harass. See Press. F For the Gaelic b = G. p in some cases, cf. Gael. boc, a pimple, with G. pocken, small-pox.

C. pocken, small-pox. BRAN-NEW, new from the fire. (E.) A corruption of brandnew, which occurs in Ross's Helenore, in Jamieson and Richardson. The variation brent-new occurs in Burns's Tam O'Shanter: 'Nae cotillon brent-new frae France.' Kilian gives an Old Dutch brandnieuvo, and we still find Du. vonkelnieuw, lit. spark.new, from vonkel, a spark of fire. 'The brand is the fire, and brand-new, equivalent to fire-new (Shak.), is that which is fresh and bright, as being newly come from the forge and fire;' Trench, English Past and Present, Sect. V. See Brand.

BRASIER, BRAZIER, a pan to hold coals. (F., -Scand.) The former spelling is better. Evidently formed from F. braise, live coals. embers. Cotgrave gives braisier, but only in the same sense as mod. F. braise. However, braisiere, a camp-kettle, is still used in mod. French; see Hamilton and Legros, F. Dict. p. 137. Not of G. origin, as in Brachet, but Scandinavian, as pointed out by Diez. See Brass, and Braze (1).

BRASS, a mixed metal. (E.) M. E. bras (Lat. as), Prompt. Parv. p. 47; Chaucer, Prol. 366. – A. S. bras, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Somner, p. 4. + Icel. bras, solder (cited by Wedgwood, but not in Cleasby and Vigfusson's Dictionary). Cf. Gael. prais, brass, pot-metal; Irish pras, brass; W. pres, brass; all borrowed words. B. The word seems to be derived from a verb which, curiously enough, appears in the Scandinavian languages, though they lack the substantive. This is Icel brass, to harden by fire; Swed. brasa, to flame; Dan. brass, to fry. Cf. O. Swed. (and Swed.) brasa, fire; and perhaps Skt. bhrajj, to fry. Der. brass-y, braz-en (M. E. brasen, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 293 – A. S. brasen, Ælf. Gram., as above), braz-ier; also braze, verb, q. v.

BRAT, a contemptuous name for a child. (C.) The orig. sense was a rag, clout, esp. a child's bib or apron; hence, in contempt, a child. Chaucer has bratt for a coarse cloak, a ragged mantle, C. T. 16347 (ed. Tyrwhitt); some MSS. have bak, meaning a cloth to cover the back, as in P. Plowman. – W. brat, a rag, a pinafore. + Gael. brat, a mantle, cloak, apron, rag; brat-speilidk, a swaddlingcloth. + Irish brat, a cloak, mantle, veil; bratog, a rag. ¶ The O. Northumbrian bratt, a cloak, a gloss to pallium in Matt. v. 40, was probably merely borrowed from the Celtic.

probably merely borrowed from the Celtic. BRATTICE, a fence of boards in a mine. (F.) M. E. bretage, bretage, brutaske (with numerous other spellings), a parapet, battlement. outwork, &c.; Rob. of Glouc., p. 536. 'Betran, bretage, bretays of a walle, propugnaculum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 50. - O. F. bretesche, a small wooden outwork, &c. See further under Buttress.

BRAVADO, a vain boast. (Span., -C.) It occurs in Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, To the Reader; ed. 1845, p. 35 (see Todd). An E. substitution for bravada. - Span. bravada, a bravado, boast, vain ostentation. - Span. brave, valiant; also, bullying; cognate with F. brave. See Brave. [+] with F. brawe. See Brave. [†] BRAVE, showy, valiant. (F., = C.) Shak. has brave, valiant, splendid; brave, vb., to defy, make fine; brave, sb., defiance; bravery, display of valour, finery; see Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. = F. 'brave, brave, gay, fine, ... proud, braggard, ... valiant, hardy,' &cc.; Cot. = Bret. brav, brad, fine; braga, to strut about (see under Brag). Cf. Gael. breagh, fine. B. Diez objects to this derivation, and quotes O. Du. brauwen, to adorn, brauwe, fine attire (see Oudemans or Kilian), to shew that the Bret. brad or brav, fine, is borrowed from the O. Dutch. But the root brag is certainly Celtic, and suffices to explain the O. Dutch and other forms. C. It is remarkable that braf, good, excellent, occurs even in O. Swedish (Ihre); whence Swed. bra, good, and perhaps Lowl. Scotch braw, which is, in any case, only a form of brave. Der. brave-ry; also bravo, bravado, which see below and above.

BRAVO, a daring villain, a bandit. (Ital., -C.) 'No bravoes here profess the bloody trade;' Gay, Trivia. - Ital. brave, brave, valiant; as a sb., a cut-throat, villain. Cognate with F. brave. See Brave.  $\beta$ . The word brave l well done l is the same word, used in the vocative case.

BRAWL (1), to quarrel, roar. (C.) M. E. brawle, to quarrel. Brawlere, litigator; brawlyn, litigo, jurgo; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 48. Brawlyng, P. Plowman, B. xv. 233. – W. brawl, a boast; brol, a boast; broled, vaunting; brolio, to brag, vaunt; bragal, to vociferate; cf. Irish braighean, a quarrel; bragaim, I boast, bounce, bully. [We find also Du. brallen, to brag, boast; Dan. bralle, to jabber, chatter, prate.] β. The W. bragal, to vociferate, appears to be from bragio, to brag; if so, brawl = braggle, frequentative of brag. See Broil (2), Brag, and Bray (2). Der. brawl-er, brawl-ing. BRAWL (2), a sort of dance. (F.) In Shak. Love's La. Lo. iii.

BRAWL (2), a sort of dance. (F.) In Shak. Love's La. Lo. iii, 9, we have 'a French brawd.' It is a corruption of the F. bransle, explained by Cot. as 'a totter, swing, shake, shocke, &c.; also a brawle or daunce, wherein many men and women, holding by the hands, sometimes in a ring, and otherwhiles at length, move all together.' - F. bransler, to totter, shake, reel, stagger, waver, tremble (Cot.); now spelt branler, marked by Brachet as of unknown origin. B. Littré, however, cites a passage containing the O. F. brandeler, from which it might easily have been corrupted; and Cotgrave gives brandiller, to wag. shake, swing, totter; as well as brandil, brandishing, shaking, flourishing, lively. Can the original brawd have been a sword-dance? See Brandish.

BRAWN, muscle; boar's flesh. (F., -0. H. G.) M. E. brawn, muscle, Chaucer, Prol. 548; brawn, boar's flesh, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 63, 91. -0. F. braon, a slice of flesh; Proven(al bradon -0. H. G. brado, prodo, accus. bradon, M. H. G. brade, a piece of flesh (for roasting). -0. H. G. pratan (G. braten), to roast, broil. See bhrat\*, to seethe, boil, in Fick, i. 196; from  $\sqrt{BHAR}$ , to boil; whence also brew. The restriction of the word to the flesh of the boar is accidental; the original sense is merely 'muscle', as seen in the derived word. Der. brawn-y, muscular; Shak. Venus, 625.

BRAY (1), to bruise, pound. (F., -G.) M. E. brayen, brayin; 'brayyn, or stampyn in a mortere, tero;' Prompt. Parv. p. 47. -O. F. breier, brehier (F. broyer), Roquefort. -M. H. G. brecken, to break; cognate with A. S. brecan, to break. See Break. The F. word supplanted the A. S. bracan, to bruise, pound (Levit. vi. 21), from the same root.

BRAY (2), to make a loud noise, as an ass. (F., -C.) M. E. brayen, brayin; 'brayyn in sownde, barrio;' Prompt. Parv. p. 47; where Way quotes from Palsgrave: 'To bray as a decre doth, or other beest, brayre.'-O. F. braire. -Low Lat. bragire, to bray, bragare, to vociferate; Gael. bragh, a burst, explosion. Like bark, it is derived from the root of break. See Bark, Break, and Brag.

BRAZE (1), to harden. (F., -Scand.) Shak. has brazed, hardened, Hamlet, iii. 4. 37; Lear, i. I. II. Generally explained to mean 'hardened like brass;' but it means simply 'hardened;' being the verb from which brass is derived, instead of the contrary. Cotgrave says that 'braser l'argent' is to re-pass silver a little over hot embers (sur la braise). -F. braser, to solder; Roquefort has: 'Braser, souder le fer.' - Icel. brass, to harden by fire. See Brass, and see below.

BRAZE (2), to ornament with brass. Used by Chapman, Homer's Odys. xv. 113. In this sense, the verb is a mere derivative of the sb. brass. See above. [+] sb. brass. See above. [+] BREACH, a fracture. (E.) M. E. breche, a fracture, Gower, C. A. ii. 138. – A. S. brece, which appears in the compound hlaf-gebrece, a fragment of a loaf, bit of bread; Grein, i. 81. The more usual form is A. S. brice, breaking; in the phr. 'on hlafes brice,' in the breaking of bread, Luke, xxiv. 35. [The vowel e appears in the O. Dutch bree or breke (Du. breuk); see Oudemans; and in the A. S. gebree, a cracking noise = Lat. fragor, with which it is cognate. The vowel i in A. S. brice appears again in the Goth. brikan, to break.] – A. S. breean, to break. See Break.

The vowel i in A.S. brice appears again in the Goth. brikan, to break.] – A.S. brecan, to break. See Break. BREAD, food made from grain. (E.) M. E. breed, bred, Chaucer, Prol. 343. – A. S. bread, Grein, i. 140. + Du. brood. + Iccl. braud. + Swed. and Dan. bröd. + O. H. G. prod (G. brod).  $\beta$ . Not found in Gothic. Fick suggests a connection with the root seen in our verb to brew, with a reference to the formation of bread by fermentation; see Fick, iii. 218.

BREADTH, wideness. (E.) This is a modern form. It occurs in Lord Berners' tr. of Froissart, spelt bredethe, vol. i. c. 131 (R.)  $\beta$ . In older authors the form is brede, as in Chaucer, C. T. 1972. – A.S. bradu, Grein, i. 137.  $\gamma$ . Other languages agree with the old, not with the modern form; cf. Goth. braidei, Icel. breidd, G. breide. The Dutch is breadte. See Broad.

BREAK, to fracture, snap. (E.) M. E. breke. Chaucer, Prol. 551. – A. S. brecan, Grein, i. 137. + Du. breken. + Icel. braka, to creak. + Swed. braka, bräkka, to crack. + Dan. brække, to break. + Goth. brikan. + O. H. G. prechan (G. brechen). + Lat. frangere, to break; from  $\checkmark$  FRAG. + Gk.  $\beta \gamma \gamma \nu \nu \sigma a$ , to break; from  $\checkmark$  FPAF; Curtius, ii. 150. [Perhaps Skt. bhanj, to break; stands for an older form bhrani; in which case it is the same word as break; Benfey, p. 641.] –  $\checkmark$  BHRAG, to break; Fick, i. 702. See Brake. ¶ The original sense is 'to break with a snap;' cf. Lat. fragor, a crash; Gael. bragh, a burst, explosion; Swed. bräkka, to crack. Der. breach, q. v.; break-age, break-er. break-fast, break-wafer.

breach, q. v.; break-age, break-er. break-fast, break-water. BREAM, a fish. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. break-water, Prol. 350. = O. F. bresme, a bream. = O. H. G. braksema, M. H. G. braksem, G. brassen, a bream (E. Müller). Here O. H. G. braksema has the stem braks-, equivalent to E. barse, bass, with a suffix -ema.  $\beta$ . Similarly, in brea-m, the final -m is a mere suffix; the O. F. bresme has the stem bres-, equivalent to E. barse, bass. See Bass (2).

BREAST, the upper part of the front of the body. (É.) M. E. brest, Chaucer, Prol. 115. – A. S. breóst, Grein, i. 141. + Du. borst. + Icel. brjóst. + Swed. bröst. + Dan. bryst. + Goth. brusts. + G. brust.  $\beta$ . The O. H. G. prust means (1) a bursting, (2) the breast; from O. H. G. prëstan, to burst. Chaucer has bresten, to burst. The original sense is a bursting forth, applied to the female breasts in particular. See Burst. Der. breast, verb; breast-plate, breast-work.

cular. See Burst. Der. breast, verb; breast-plate, breast-work. BREATH, air respired. (E.) M. E. breeth, breth; dat. case breethe, brethe, Chaucer, Prol. 5. – A. S. bræt, broden, brodel, steam, vapour, exhalation; Flügel's G. Dict.  $\beta$ . Perhaps allied to Lat. frag-rare, to emit a scent; frag-um. a strawberry; but this is uncertain; see Fick, i. 607. See Bran. Der. breathe, breath-less. BREECCH, the hinder part of the body. (E.) M. E. brech, breech, BREECH, the hinder part of the body. (E.) M. E. brech, breech, properly the breeches or breeks, or covering of the breech; in Chaucer, C. T. 12882, the word breech means the breeches, not the breech, as is obvious from the context, though some have oddly mistaken it. Thus the present word is a mere development of A. S. brée, the breeches, pl. of brée. So in Dutch, the same word broek signifies both breeches and breech. See Breeches.

BREECHES, BREEKS, a garment for the thighs. (E.; perhaps C.) M.E. 'brecke, or breke, braccæ, flur.;' Prompt. Parv. p. 48; and see Way's note. Breeckes is a double plural, the form breek being itself plural; as feet from foot, so is breek from brock.— A.S. brde, sing., bree, plural (Bosworth). + Du. broek, a pair of breeches. + Icel. brok; pl. brækr, breeches. + O. H. G. próh, pruah, M. H. G. bruoch, breeches. + Lat. braccæ, of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. bróg, a shoe; briogais, breeches. Closely related to Brogues, q. v. ¶ Perhaps it is only the Latin word that is of Celtic origin; the other forms may be cognate. Besides, the Lat. word braccæ does not answer so well to the Gael. briogais as to the Gael. breacan, a tartan, a plaid, which was so named from its many colours, being a derivative of Gael. breac, variegated, spotted, chequered; with which cf. W. brech, bindled; Irish braccan, a plaid, from breacaim, I speckle, chequer, embroider, variegate.

BREED, to produce, engender. (E.) M. E. breden, P. Plowman, B. xi. 339. – A. S. brédan, to nourish, cherish, keep warm (= Lat. fouere), in a copy of Ælfric's Glossary (Lye). + Du. broeden, to brood; closely related to broeijen, to incubate, hatch, breed, also to brew, foment. + O. H. G. pruatan (G. brüten), to hatch; cf. M. H. G. brüejen, brüten, to singe, burn.  $\beta$ . The notion is 'to hatch,' to produce by warmth; and the word is closely connected with brew. See Brood, and Brew. Der. breed-er, breed-ing. [†]

Brood, and Brew. Der. bred-r, bred-ing. [4] BREESE, a gadfly. (E.) Well known in Shak. Troil. i. 3. 48; Ant. and Cleop. iii. 10. 14. Cotgrave has: 'Oestre Iunonique, a gadbee, horse-fly, dun fly, brimsey, brizze.' The M. E. form must have been brimse. - A. S. brimsa, a gadfly (Bosworth, Lye); the form brissa is in Wright's Voc. 281. + Du. brems, a horse-fly.+G. bremse, a gad-fly - brem-se, from M. H. G. brëm, O. H. G. brëmo, a gadfly, so named from its humming; cf. M. H. G. brëmen, O. H. G. brëman, G. brummen, to grumble (Du. brommen, to hum, buzz, grumble), cognate with Lat. fremere, to murnur. + Skt. bhramara, a large black bee; from Skt. bhram, to whirl, applied originally to 'the flying about and humming of insects;' Benfey, p. 670. See Fick, i. 702. [4]

BREEZE (1), a strong wind. (F.) a. Brachet says that the F. brise, a breeze, was introduced into French from English towards the end of the 17th century. This can hardly be the case. The quotations in Richardson shew that the E. word was at first spelt brize, as in Hackluyt's Voyages, iii. 661; and in Sir F. Drake's The Worlde Encompassed. This shews that the E. word was borrowed from French, since brize is a French spelling.  $\beta$ . Again, Cotgrave notes that brize is used by Rabelais (died 1553) instead of bise or bize, signifying the north wind. + Span. brise, the N.E. wind. + Port. brize, the N.E. wind. + Ital. brezza, a cold wind. Remoter origin unknown. Der. brezzy.

BREEZE (2), cinders. (F.) Breeze is a name given, in London, to ashes and cinders used instead of coal for brick-making. It is the same as the Devonshire briss, dust, rubbish (Halliwell). - F. bris, breakage, fracture, fragments, rubbish, a leak in a ship, &cc.; Mr. Wedgwood cites (s. v. Bruise) the 'Provençal brizal, dust, fragments; brizal de carbon, du bris de charbon de terre; coal-dust. - F. briser, to break. Cf. F. débris, rubbish. (Wrong; see Errata). [*]

BREVE, a short note, in music. (Ital., -L.) [As a fact, it is now a long note; and, the old long note being now disused, has become the longest note now used.] - Ital. breve, brief, short. -Lat. breve, short. Breve is a doublet of brief, q. v. Der. From the Lat. breve we also have brevet, lit. a short document, which passed into English from F. brevet, which Cotgrave explains by 'a briefe, note, breviate, little writing,' &c. Also brev-i-ar-y, brev-i-er, brev-i-ty. See Brief.

BREW, to concoct. (E.) M. E. brew, pt. t., P. Plowman, B. v. 219; brewe, infin., Seven Sages, ed. Wright, l. 1490. – A. S. bredwan; of which the pp. gebrowen occurs in Ælfred's Orosius; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, p. 22, l. 133. + Du. brownen. + O. H. G. prúwan (G. brauen). + Icel. brugga. + Swed. brygga. + Dan. brygge. [Cf. Lat. defrutum, new wine fermented or boiled down; Gk. Spŵror, a kind of beer (though this seems doubtful).] – & BHRU, to brew; BHUR, to boil; Fick, i. 696. Der. brewer, brew-house, brew-er-y.

biobil; Fick, i. 696. Der. brewer, brewer, brewer-y. BRIAR, BRIER, a prickly shrub. (E.) M. E. breve, Chaucer, C. T. 9690. – A. S. brev, Grein, i. 140. + Gael. preas, a bush, shrub, briar; gen. sing. prearis. + Irish preas, a bush, briar; the form briar also occurs in Irish. B. As the word does not seem to be in other Teutonic tongues, it may have been borrowed from the Celtic. Both in Gael, and Irish the sb. preas means also 'a wrinkle,' 'plait,' 'fold;' and there is a verb with stem preas-, to wrinkle, 'fold, corrugate. If the connection be admitted, the briar means 'the wrinkled shrub.' Der. briar-y. Doublet, (perhaps) furze. [†]

BRIBE, an undue present, for corrupt purposes. (F., -C.) M. E. bribe, brybe; Chaucer, C. T. 69:8. -O. F. bribe, a present, gift, but esp. 'a peece, lumpe, or cantill of bread, given unto a begger; Cot. [Cf. bribours, i. e. vagabonds, rascals, spoilers of the dead, P. Plowman, C. xxiii, a63. The Picard form is brife, a lump of bread, a fragment left after a feast.] - Bret. bréva, to break; cf. Welsh briw, broken, briwfara (= briw bara), broken bread, from W. briwo, to break. B. The W. briwo is clearly related to Goth. brikan, to break, and E. break. See Break, and Brick. Der. bribe, verb; briber., briber.y.

BRICK, a lump of baked clay. (F., -O. Low G.) In Fabyan's Chron. Edw. IV, an. 1476; and in the Bible of 1551, Exod. cap. v. Spelt brique, Nicoll's Thucydides, p. 64 (R.) - F. brique, a brick; also a fragment, a bit, as in prov. F. brique de pain, a bit of bread (Brachet). - O. Du. brick, bricke, a bit, fragment, piece; also brick, brijek, a tile, brick. - Du. breken, to break, cognate with E. break. See Break. Dar. brick-bat, q. v.; brick-kiln, brick-lay-er.

BRICKBAT, a rough piece of brick. (F. and C.) From brick and bat. Here bat is a rough lump, an ill-shaped mass for beating with; it is merely the ordinary word bat peculiarly used. See Bat. BRIDAL, a wedding; lit. a bride-ale, or bride-feast. (E.) M. E. bridale, bruydale, P. Plowman, B. ii. 43; bridale, Ormulum, 14003. Composed of bride and ale; the latter being a common name for a feast. (There were leet-ales, scot-ales, church-ales, clerk-ales, bid-ales, and bride-ales. See Brand's Pop. Antiquities.) The comp. brjd-ealo occurs in the A. S. Chron. (MS. Laud 656), under the date 1076. ¶ It is spelt bride-ale in Ben Jonson, Silent Woman, ii. 4; but bridall in Shak. Oth. iii. 4.151. See Bride and Ale.

In Shak. Oth. iii. 4.151. See Bride and Ale. BRIDE, a woman newly married. (E.) M. E. bride, bryde, Prompt. Parv. p. 50; also birde (with shifted r), Sir Perceval, I. 1289, in the Thomton Romances, ed. Halliwell. Older spellings, brude, burde; Layamon, 294, 19271. – A. S. brýd, Grein, i. 147. + Du. bruid. + Icel. brúdr. + Swed. and Dan. brud. + Goth. bruths. + O. H. G. prúd (G. braut). – Teutonic (theoretical) BRÚDI, Fick, iii. 217. Fick suggests a connection with Gk.  $\beta pieue$ , to teem. ¶ The W. priod, Bret. priad, mean 'a spouse,' whether husband or wife. In Webster's Dict., a connection is suggested with Skt. praudhá, fem. of praudha, of which one meaning is 'married,' and another is 'a woman from 30 years of age to 45;' from  $\checkmark$  VAH, to draw, carry, bear; see Benfey, Skt. Dict. s. v. uak, pp. 828, 829. This ill suits with Grimm's law; for Skt. p = Eng. f(as in pri, to love, as compared with E. friend,loving); and Skt. pra- answers to Eng. fore. The suggested connection is a coincidence only. Der. brid-al, q. v., bride-proom, q. v.

nection is a coincidence only. Der. brid-al, q. v., brid-groom, q. v. BRIDEGROOM, a man newly married. (E.) Tyndal has bridegrome; John, iii. 29. But the form is corrupt, due to confusion of grome, a groom, with gome, a man. In older authors, the spelling is without the r; we find bredgome in the Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, p. 233, written A. D. 1340; so that the change took place between that time and A. D. 1525. A.S. bryd-guma, Grein, i. 147. + Du. bruidegom. + Icel. brúdgumi. + Swed. brudgumme. + Dan. brudgom. + O. H.G. brútegomo (G. bräutigam). B. The latter part of the word appears also in Goth. guma, a man, cognate with Lat. homo, a man; this Fick denotes by a theoretical ghamans \*, a son of earth ; from  $\checkmark$  GHAM, earth, appearing in Gk. xaµ-ai, on the ground, and in Lat. hum-us, the ground. See Bride, Homage.

BRIDGE, a structure built across a river. (E.) M. E. briege, Chaucer, C. T. 3920; brig, Minot's Poems, p. 7; also brugge, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1187; brugg, Rob. of Glouc. p. 402. - A.S. brycg, bricg (acc. bricge), Grein, i. 145. + Icel. bryggia. + Swed. brygga. + Dan. brygge, a pier. + Du. brug. + O. H. G. prúcca, G. brücke. B. The word is properly dissyllabic, and a diminutive. The original appears in Icel. brú, a bridge; Dan. bro, a bridge; O. Swed. bro, a bridge. The Old Swed. bro means not only a bridge, but a paved way, and the Dan. bro also means a pavement. Fick, ii. 420, connects this with Icel. brún, the eye-brow; cf. the phrase brow of a hill.' Perhaps it is, then, connected with Brow.

BRIDLE, a restraint for horses. (E.) M. E. bridel, Ancren Riwle, p. 74. – A. S. bridel, Grein, i. 142. + Du. breidel. + O. H. G. priddel, bridel, britil; M. H. G. britel; the F. bride being borrowed from this G. bridel. B. The M.H.G. britel or britil appears to be formed from the verb briten, bretten, to weave, to braid, as if the bridle was originally woven or braided. If this be so, the A. S. bridel must be similarly referred to the verb bredan, to braid, Grein, i. 138, which is a shorter form of breedan, to brandish, weave, braid.

Shorter form of bregdan, to brandish, weave, braid. See Braid.
BRIEF (1), short. (F., -L.) Spelt brief in Barnes' Works, p. 347, col. 1, last line. In older English we find bref, breef, P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 327; with the dimin. brenet (brevet), P. Plowman, C. i. 72. F. brief (so spelt in Cotgrave); mod. F. bref. - Lat. breuis, short. + Gk. βραχύs, short. Perhaps from a root BARGH, to tear; see Fick, i. 684; Curtius, i. 363. Der. brief-ly.

BRIER; see Briar.

BRIG, a ship. See Brigantine.

BRIGADE, a body of troops. (F., - Ital.) Milton has brigads, P. L. ii. 532. - F. 'brigade, a troop, crue, or company; 'Cot. - Ital. brigata, a troop, band, company. - Ital. brigare, to quarrel, fight. See Brigand. Der. brigad-ier.

BRIGAND, a robber, pirate. (F., - Ital.) Borrowed from F. brigand, an armed foot-soldier, which see in Cotgrave; who also gives 'Brigander, to rob;' and 'Brigandage, a robbing, theeverie.' -Ital. brigante, a busybody, intriguer; and, in a bad sense, a robber, pirate. - Ital. brigante, pres. part. of the verb brigare, to strive after. - Ital. brigan, strife, quarrel, trouble, business; which see in Diez. B. Diez shews that all the related words can be referred to a stem brig., to be busy, to strive. Now brig-easily comes from brik-, which at once leads us to Goth. brikan, to break, with its derivative brakja, strife, contention, struggle, wrestling. -  $\sqrt{BHRAG}$ , to break; Fick, i. 702. ¶ No connection with W. brigant, a highlander, from brig, a hill-top. Der. brigand-age; and see below. BRIGANDINE, a kind of armour. (F.) Brigandine, a kind of BRIGANDINE, a kind of armour. (F.) Brigandine, a kind of coat of mail, occurs in Jerem. xlvi. 4, li. 3, A. V.; see Wright's Bible Word-book. – F. brigandine, 'a fashion of ancient armour, consisting of many jointed and skale-like plates;' Cot. So called because worn by brigands or robbers; see Brigand. The Ital. form is briganting, a coat of mail.

BRIGANTINE, BRIG, a two-masted ship. (F., - Ital.) Brig is merely short for brigantine. Cotgrave has it, to translate the F. brigantin, which he describes. - F. brigantin. - Ital. brigantino, a pirate-ship. - Ital. brigante, an industrious, intriguing man; also, a robber, brigand. See Brigand.

BRIGHT, clear, shining. (E.) M.E. bright, Chaucer, C. T. 1064. -A. S. boorht (in common use). + Old Sax. berkt, beraht (Heliand). +Goth. bairhts. + Icel. bjartr. + O. H. G. përaht, M. H. G. bërkt, shining. B. In the Goth. bairhts, the s is the sign of the nom. case, and the t is formative, leaving a stem bairk-, signifying to shine; cognate with Skt. bhráj, to shine, and with the stem flag- of Lat. flagrare, to flame, blaze, burn; whence the sb. flag-ma, i. e. flamma, a flame. From  $\checkmark$  BHARG, or BHRAG, to blaze, shine; Fick, i. 152. Hence bright is co-radicate with flame. Der. bright-ly, brightness, bright-m (Goth, gabairhtjan).

ness, bright-on (Goth. gabairhtjan). BRILL, a fish; Rhombus vulgaris. (C.) Most likely, the same word as the Cornish brilli, mackerel, the lit. meaning of which is 'little spotted fishes;' the brill being 'minutely spotted with white;' Engl. Cycl. s. v. Pleuronectidæ. In this view, brill stands for brithel, formed by the dimin. suffix -el from Corn. brith, streaked, variegated, pied, speckled; cognate with Gael. breac, W. brych, freckled, Irish breac, speckled, a very common Celtic word, seen in the E. brock, a badger, q. v. Cf. Corn. brithel, a mackerel, pl. brithelli, and (by contraction) brilli. So in Irish and Gaelic, breac means both 'spotted' and 'a trout;' and in Manx, brack means both 'trout' and 'mackerel.' BRILLIANT, shining. (F., -L., -Arab.) Not in early use. Dryden has brilliant, sb., meaning 'a gem;' Character of a Good Parson, last line but one. - F. brillant, glittering, pres. pt. of v. briller, to glitter, sparkle. - Low Lat. beryllare * (an unauthorised form), to sparkle like a precious stone or beryl (Brachet). - Low Lat. berillus, beryllus, a gem, an eye-glass; see Diefenbach, Glossarium Latino-Germanicum ; cf. berillus, an eye-glass, brillum, an eye-glass, in Du-¶ This etymology is rendered certain by the fact that the cange. G. brille, spectacles, is certainly a corruption of beryllus, a beryl; see Max Müller, Lectures on the Science of Language, ii. 583; 8th ed. 1875. See Beryl.

BRIM, edge, margin. (E.) M. E. brim, brym, margin of a river, lake, or sea; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1072; the same word is constantly used in the sense of surge of the sea, surf; also, ocean, waves of the sea. -A. S. brim, surge, surf, sea, flood; Grein, i. 142; the alleged A. S. brymme, a brim (Somner), being merely the same word, and not a true form. + Icel. brim, surf. + G. brame, brüme, the outskirts, border; M. H. G. brëm, a border, brim. The latter is derived from M. H. G. brëmen, meaning (1) to roar, (2) to border; cognate with Lat. fremere, to roar, and Skt. bhram, to whirl. Similarly, Skt. bhrimi, a whirl-pool, is from Skt. bhram, to whirl. The brim of the sea is its margin, where the surf is heard to roar. See Max Müller, Lect. on Science of Lang., 8th ed. ii. 241. See Breese. Der. brim-ful, brimm-er.

BRIMSTONE, sulphur. (E.) Lit. 'bura-stone.' M. E. brimston, brymston; bremstoon, Chaucer, Prol. 629 (631 in some edd.); also brunston, brenstoon, Wyclif, Gen. xix. 24; Deut. xxix. 23; cf. Icel. brennisteinn, brimstone. – M. E. bren-, burning (from the vb. brennen, to burn); and stoon, a stone.  $\beta$ . So also the Icel. brennisteinn is from Icel. brenna, to burn, and steinn, a stone. See Burn and Stone.

BRINDLED, BRINDED, streaked, spotted. (Scand.) Shak. has 'brinded cat;' Macb. iv. I. I; brindled being an extended quasidiminutive form. – Icel. brönd-, in the comp. bröndöttr, brindled, said of a cow, Cleasby and Vigfusson's Dict. App. p. 772. We also find Icel. brand-brosoftr, brindled-brown with a white cross on the forehead. – Icel. brandr, a brand, flame, firebrand, sword. – Icel. brenna, to burn. ¶ Thus brinded is little more than another form of branded; the letter i appears again in Brimstone, q. v. And see Brand, and Burn.

BRINE, pickle, salt water. (E.) M. E. brine, bryne, Prompt. Parv. p. 51. – A. S. bryne, salt liquor, Ælf. Gloss. (Bosworth); a particular use of A.S. bryne, a burning, scorching; from the burning taste. – A.S. brinnan, byrnan, bærnan, to burn. + O. Du. brijn, brijne, pickle, sea-water (Oudemans); whence Du. brem, brine, pickle. See Burn. Der. brin-y.

BRING, to fetch. (E.) M. E. bringen (common). - A. S. bringan, pt. t. brang, pp. gebrungen, Grein, i. 143; also brengan, pt. t. brohte, pp. broht; the former being the strong and original form. + Du. brengen. + Goth. briggan (with gg sounded as ng); pt. t. brahta. + O. H. G. pringan (G. bringen). An extension from  $\checkmark$  BHAR, to bear, carry; cf. Skt. bhri, to bear; Benfey, p. 665. See Bear.

BRINK, margin; but properly, a slope. (Scand.) M.E. brink, edge of a pit, Chaucer, C. T. 9275; a shore, Wyclif, John, xxi. 4. – Dan. brink, edge, verge. + Swed. brink, the descent or slope of a hill. + Icel. brekka (=brenka), a slope, also a crest of a hill, a hill; bringa, a soft grassy slope, orig, the breast.  $\beta$ . So, too, in Swedish, bringa is the breast, brisket; and Dan. bringe is the chest. Add prov. G. brink, sward; a grassy hill (Flügel).  $\gamma$ . We saw, above, that the orig. sense of Swed. and Icel. bringa is 'breast.' The same relation appears in Celtic. We have W. brynet, a hillock, from W. and Corn. bryn, a hill; and (just as the W. brynet, a hillock, from W. and Corn. bryn, a hill; and (just as the W. brynet, a hillock, from W. and corn. bryn, a hill; and (just as the W. brynet, a hillock, from W. and corn. bryn, a hill; and (just as the W. brynet, a hillock, from W. and corn. bryn, a hill; and (just as the W. brynet, with W. bron, the breast, pap, also, the breast of a hill. So, in Cornish, brow means a round protuberance, breast, the slope of a hill.  $\delta$ . This points back to an older conception, viz. that of 'roundness,' which appears, perhaps, again in the Irish bru, the womb, belly, with the remarkable word bruach, lit. great-bellied, but also meaning 'a border, brink, edge, bank, mound; 'O'Reilly. Further back, we are clearly led to the  $\checkmark$  BHRU, to swell, boil; see Fick, i. 696. See Bride, Brew.

BRISKET, part of the breast-piece of meat.  $(F_{..}-C_{.})$  Ben Jonson has brisket-bone; Sad Shepherd, i. 22. - O. F. brischet, a form given by Brachet, s. v. brechet, but bruschet in Littré; however, Cotgrave has: 'Bricket, m. the brisket, or breast-piece. Wedgwood gives the Norman form as brucket. - Bret. bruched, the breast, chest, claw of a bird (Wedgwood); see the word in Le Gonidec, who notes that in the dialect of Vannes the word is brusk. Brachet gives the W. brisket, a breast, and Webster and Littré the W. brysced, the breast of a slain animal; I cannot find either form. However, the word is most likely of Celtic origin, and ultimately connected with E. breast. See Breast.

BRISTLE, a stiff hair. (E.) M. E. bristle, berstle, Chaucer, Prol. 556. - A. S. byrst, a bristle, Herbarium, 52. 2 (Bosworth); with dimin. suffix -el. + Du. borstel, a bristle. + Icel. burst, a bristle. +

Swed. borst, a bristle. + G. borste, a bristle. + Skt. hrisk (orig. bhrisk), to bristle, to stand erect, said of hair; cf. Skt. sohasro-briskti, having a thousand points; Benfey, pp. 666, 1121; Fick, i. 159, iii. 207. B. This word is closely connected with Brad, q.v. Fick gives borsta as the Teutonic form for 'bristle,' and brosda as that for brad. Der. bristle, verb ; bristl-y, bristl-i-ness.

BRITTLE, fragile. (E.) M. E. britel, brotel, brutel; Chaucer has brotel, Leg. of Good Women, Lucr. 206. Formed by adding the suffix -el (A. S. -ol) to the stem of the M. E. brutten or britten, to break. On the suffix -el (-ol) see Koch, Gramm. iii. 49. The M. E. brutten is from A. S. breckan, to break; Grein, i. 142. + Icel. brjóta, to break, destroy. + Swed. bry'a, to break. + Dan. bryde, to break. of the stem brak, to break. The M. E. has also a form brickle, used by Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 39, obviously from A. S. brecan, to break. The Latin fragilis (E. fragile, frail) is from the same root. See Break.

BROACH, to tap liquor. (F., -L.) The M. E. phrase is setten on broche, to set a-broach, to tap, Babees Boke, ed. Furnivall, p. 266. Imitated from the F. mettre en broche, to tap a barrel, viz. by piercing it; from F. 'brocker, to broach, to spitt;' Cot. - F. 'brocke, a broach, spitt;' Cot. See Brooch, Abroach.

BROAD, adj., wide. (E.) M. E. brod, brood, Chaucer, Prol. 155. - A. S. brdd, Grein, i. 136. + Du. breed. + Icel. breidr. + Swed. and Dan. bred. + Goth. braids. + O. H. G. preit (G. breit). B. The suggested connection with Gk.  $\pi\lambda\alpha\tau\nu$ s and Skt. prath, to spread out (Schleicher), can hardly be right, and is ignored by Curtins. Some see a relation to the sb. board, which is also doubtful. Der. broad-ly, broad-ness, broad-en, broad-side; also breadth, q.v.

BROCADE, a variegated silk stuff. (Span.) A 'brocade waistcoat' is mentioned in the Spectator, no. 15.-Span. brocado, sb., brocade; also pp., brocaded, embroidered with gold; which explains the use of brocade as an adjective. [The Span. form is much nearer than F. brocard (brocar in Cotgrave), or the Ital. broccato : the Port. form is, however, brocado, but it appears to be only a substantive.] Brocado is properly the pp. of a verb brocar, which no doubt meant 'to embroider,' answering to F. brocher, which Cotgrave explains by 'to broach, to spit; also, to stitch grossely, to set or sowe with great stitches;' der. from F. broche, explained by 'a broach, or spit; also, a great stitch.' See Brooch. Der. brocade, verb; brocad-ed.

BROCCOLI, a vegetable resembling cauliflower. (Ital., -L.) Properly, the word is plural, and means 'sprouts.'- Ital. broccoli, sprouts, pl. of broccolo, a sprout ; dimin. from brocco, a skewer, also, a shoot, stalk. Brocco is cognate with F. brocke, a spit, also a brooch. See Brooch.

BROCHURE, a pamphlet. (F., -L.) Mere French. F. brochure, a few printed leaves stitched together. -F. brocher, to stitch. See Brocade.

Brock, a badger. (C.) Used by Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, Act i. sc. 4. M. E. brok, P. Plowman, B. vi. 31; cf. Prompt. Parv. p. 53.-A. S. broc, a badger (Bosworth), but the word is of slight authority, and borrowed from Celtic.-W. brock; Corn. brock; Bret. brock; Irish, Gaelic, and Manx broc, a badger; the Irish has also the form breck. B. It is most probable, as Mr. Wedgwood suggests, that the animal was named from his whitestreaked face; just as a trout is, in Gaelic, called breac, i.e. spotted, and a mackerel is, in Cornish, called brithill, i.e. variegated; see Brill. (It is also remarkable that the word broc for badger exists in Danish, and closely resembles Dan. broget, variegated.) Cf. Gael. brocack, speckled in the face, grayish, as a badger; brocack, spotted, freckled, speckled, particularly in the face. O. Hence, brock is from Gael. and Irish breac, speckled, also, to speckle; Welsh brech, brindled, freckled; Bret. briz, spotted, marked, brizen, a freckle.

BROCKET, a red deer two years old. (F.) A corruption of F. brocart. Cotgrave has: 'Brocart, m. a two year old deere; which if it be a red deere, we call a brocket; if a fallow, a pricket; also a kinde of swift stagge, which hath but one small branch growing out of the stemme of his horne.' So named from having but one tine to his horn. - F. brocke, a broach, spit; also, a tusk of a wild boar; hence, a tine of a stag's horn; see Cotgrave. See Brooch. BROGUES, stout, coarse shoes. (C.) In Shak. Cymb. iv. 2. 214.-Gael. and Irish brog, a shoe. See Breeches.

BROIDER, to adorn with needlework.  $(F_{.,}=0. L. G.)$  In the Bible, A. V., Ezek. xvi. 10. This form of the word was due to confusion with the totally different word to broid, the older form of braid. In 1 Tim. ii. 9, broidered is actually used with the sense of braided! See Broider in Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook. The older spelling of broider is broder; thus we find 'a spoyle of * v. 30. - F. 'broder, to imbroyder,' Cotgrave; a word more usually spelt border, also in Cotgrave, with the explanation 'to border, gard, welt; also, to imbroyder, &c. He also gives: 'Bordeur, an im-broyderer.' Cf. Span. and Port. bordar, to embroider. The lit. sense is 'to work on the edge,' or 'to edge.' - F. bord, explained by Cot. to mean ' the welt, hem, or selvedge of a garment ; ' whence also E. border. See Border. [†] BROIL (1), to fry, roast over hot coals. (C.) M. E. broilen.

Brolyyn, or broylyn, ustulo, ustillo, torreo ; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 53. See Chaucer, Prol. 385. B. Origin doubtful; but it is probable (as is usual in words ending with l preceded by a diphthong) that the word was originally dissyllabic, with the addition of -1 (M. E. -len) to render the verb frequentative; cf. crack-le from crack. Y. If so, the root is to be sought by comparison with Gael. bruich, to boil, seethe, simmer; sometimes, to roast, to toast. Cf. Irish bruighim, I seethe, boil. Thus it is from the same root as fry; cf. Lat. frigere, to fry ; Gk. opbyen, to parch; Skt. bharj, to parch, bhrajj, to parch, roast. See Fry. ¶ Certainly not F. braler, to burn; which = Lat. perusiulare. But see Errata. [*]

BROIL (2), a disturbance, tumult. (F., -C.) Occurs in Shak. 1 Hen. VI, i. 1. 53; iii. 1. 92. Spelt breull in Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 140. - F. brouiller, explained by Cotgrave by 'to jumble, trouble, disorder, confound, marre by mingling together; to huddle, tumble, shuffle things ill-favouredly; to make a troublesome hotchpotch; to make a hurry, or great hurbyburly.' B. Probably of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. broighleadh, bustle, confusion, turmoil; broiglich, noise, bawling, confusion, tumult. Also Welsh broch, din, tumult, froth, foam, wrath; brochell, a tempest. The word is not unlike brawl (1), q. v.; and the two words may be ultimately from the same root. Cf. Lat. fragor, noise; and see Bark, to yelp as a dog; also Brag, Imbroglio. But see Errata. [*]

BROKER, an agent, a middle-man in transactions of trade. (E.) M. E. broker, brokour, P. Plowman, B. v. 130, 248. We also find brocage - commission on a sale, P. Plowman, ii. 87. The oath of the brokers in London is given in Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 273. Their business was 'to bring the buyer and seller together, and lawfully witness the bargain between them;' for which they were allowed a commission on the sale, called a brocage, or, in later times, brokerage. These latter terms are merely law terms, with the F. suffix -age; but the word is English. Webster is misled by the corrupt spelling brogger; and from Mr. Wedgwood's elaborate explanation I dissent.  $\beta$ . We cannot separate the sb. broker from the M.E. vb. broken, meaning (1) to have the full and free use of a thing, and (3) to digest (as in Prompt. Parv. s. v. brooke); now spelt brook, to put up with. The only difficulty is to explain the sense of the word, the form being quite correct. Perhaps it meant 'manager,' or 'transactor of business.' y. The verb broken (A.S. brúcan = G. brauchen) was used, as has been said, in various senses; and the sense of 'to manage,' or 'contrive,' or perhaps 'to settle,' is not very widely divergent from the known uses of the verb, viz. to use, employ, have the use of, digest (meat), &c.; besides which the derived A.S. sb. bryce meant use, profit, advantage, occupation; and the secondary vb. brycian meant to do good to, to be of use to (Beda, v. 9); and the adj. bryce meant useful. The Dan. brug means use, custom, trade, business, whence brugsmand, a tradesman. See the numerous examples of the M.E. broken or bruken (s. v. bruken) in Mätzner's Wörterbuch, appended to his Altenglische Sprachproben. Cf. 'Every man hys wynnyng brouke Amonges you alle to dele and dyght' = let every man possess his share of gain, to be divided and arranged amongst you all; Richard Coer de Lion, ed. Weber, l. 4758. See Brook, vb. [†]

BRONCHIAL, relating to the bronchia or bronchia. (Gk.) The bronchiæ are the ramifications of the windpipe, passing into the lungs. Bronchiæ is the scientific form ; but the more correct form is bronchia, neut. plural. - Gk. Bρόγχια, neut. pl., the bronchia, or ramifications of the windpipe. - Gk.  $\beta_{\rho} \delta \gamma_{\chi} c_{\sigma}$ , the windpipe, trachea. Cf. Gk.  $\beta_{\rho} \delta \gamma_{\chi} c_{\sigma}$ , neut. pl., the gills of fishes;  $\beta_{\rho} \delta \gamma_{\chi} c_{\sigma}$ , a gill. also, a sore throat, and (as an adjective) hoarse; sometimes spelt  $\beta \delta \rho \alpha \gamma_{\chi} c_{\sigma}$ . Curtius, ii. 401. B. Allied to Gk. Braxer, to roar, shriek ; only used Curtais, i. 401. p. Anice to G. Sprink, the action of  $\beta partial (0, 0, 0)$  in the actist  $\delta parrow$ , roared, shrink, orig. brink: Benfey, p. 888. The brih, to roar; also spelt vrimk, orig. brimh; Benfey, p. 888. Skt. barkita means the 'trumpeting of an elephant;' Fick, i. 684.

BRONCHITIS, inflammation of the bronchial membrane. (L. -Gk.) A coined Lat. form browchitis, made from Gk. βρόγχοε, the windpipe. See above. BRONZE, an alloy of copper with tin, &c. (F., – Ital.) Not in early use. In Pope, Dunciad, ii. 10; iii. 199. - F. bronze, introd. in 16th cent. from Ital. bronzo (Brachet). - Ital. bronzo, bronze; cf. abbrowzare, to scorch, roast, parch.  $\beta$ . Diez connects it with Ital. bruno, brown, whence brunire, to polish, burnish, brunezza, swarthiness, brown colour; and he says that. in the Venetian dialect, the word with brodered workes' in the Bible of 1551, Judges, bronze means 'glowing coals.' Mr. Donkin says: 'the metal is so called from being used in soldering, an operation performed over glowing coals.' Cf. also M. H. G. brunst, a burning. The word brown is itself from the root of burn, so that either way we are led to the same root. See Burn, and Brass.

BROOCH, an ornament fastened with a pin. (F., = L.) So named from its being fastened with a pin. M.E. broche, a pin, peg, spit, Prompt. Parv. p. 52; also a jewel, ornament, id; cf. Chaucer, Prol. 158; Ancren Kiwle, p. 420. - O.F. broche, F. broche, a spit; also, the tusk of a boar (Cotgrave). - Low Lat. brocca, a pointed stick; brochia, a tooth, sharp point; from Lat. broceus, a sharp tooth, a point (Plautus). B. The connection between Lat. broceus, and Gk. Bouncer, to bite, suggested by Fick, ii. 179, is unlikely; see Curtius, who connects Brukeiv with BiBruokeiv, to eat, Lat. worare, from Gk. & BOP. But the Lat. broccus is obviously related to Welsh procio, to thrust, stab, prick (whence prov. E. prog, to poke); and to Gael. brog, to spur, stimulate, goad; whence Gael. brog, sb., a shoemaker's awl. Cf. Irish brod, a goad, brodaim, I goad; prov. Eng. prod, to goad. O. Hence the sense of brooch is (1) a sharp point; (2) a pin; (3) an ornament with a pin.

BROOD, that which is bred. (E.) M.E. brod, Owl and Nightingale, 518, 1633; Rob. of Glouc. p. 70, l. 16. – A. S. brod, a form given in Bosworth, but without authority; the usual A. S. word from the same root is brid, a young one esp. a young bird; Grein, i. 142. + Du. broed, a brood, hatch. + M. H. G. bruce, that which is hatched, also heat ; whence G. brut, a brood. Cf. W. brud, warm ; brydio, to  $\beta$ . The primary meaning is that which is hatched, or produced heat.

by means of warmth. See Brood, and Brow. Der, brood, v. [+] BROOK (1), to endure, put up with. (E.) M. E. browke, which almost invariably had the sense of 'to use,' or 'to enjoy;' Chaucer, C. T. 10182; P. Plowman, B. xi. 117; Havelok, 1743. - A. S. brúcan, to use, eniov. Grein i 144 - D to use, enjoy, Grein, i. 144. + Du. gebruiken, to use. + Icel. brúka. to use. + Goth. brukjan, to make use of. + O. H. G. pruhhan (G. bran-chen), to use. enjoy. + Lat. frui, to enjoy; cf. Lat. fruges. fructus, fruit. + Skt. bhuj, to eat and drink, to enjoy, which probably stands for an older form bhruj; Benfey, p. 656. - & BHRUG, to enjoy, use; BROOK (2), a small stream. (E.) M. E. brook, Chaucer, C. T.

3920. – A. S. brúc, brooe, Grein, i. 144. + Du. broek, a marsh, a pool. + O. H. G. pruoch (G bruch), a marsh, bog. B. Even in prov. Eng. we find: 'Brooks, low, marshy, or moory ground;' Pegge's Kenticisms (E. D. S.); at Cambridge, we have Brook-lands, i.e. low-lying, marshy ground. The G. bruch also means 'rupture;' and the notion in brook is that of water breaking up or forcing its way to the surface: from the root of break, q.v. Der. brook-let.

BROOM, the name of a plant; a besom. (E.) M.E. brom. broom, the plant; Wyclif. Jerem. xvii. 16. - A. S. brom, broom, Gloss. to Cockayne's Leechdoms + Du. brem, broom, furze. B. The confusion in old names of plants is very great; broom and bramble are closely related, the latter being, etymologically, the diminutive of broom, and standing for bram-el; the second b being excrescent; O. Max Müller connects cf. Du. braam-bosch, a bramble-bush. broom and bramble with Skt. bhram, to whirl, ' to be confused. to be rolled up together;' Lect. on Science of Language, 8th ed. ii. 242. See Bramble.

BROSE, a kind of broth or pottage (Gael.); BREWIS (F.,-M. H. G.). 1. Brose is the Gael. brokkas, brose. 2. An allied word is brewis, for which see Nares and Richardson. In Prompt. Parv. we find : 'Browesse, browes, Adipatum;' and see Way's note, where browyce is cited from Lydgate. - O. F. broues, in the Roman de la Rose, cited by Roquefort, where it is used as a plural, from a sing. brou. - Low Lat. brodum, gravy. broth. - M. H. G. brod, broth; cognate with E. broth. ¶ It is no doubt because brewis is really a plural and because it has been confused with broth, that in prov. Eng. (e. g. Cambs.) broth is often alluded to as 'they' or 'them.' See Broth, and Brow.

BROTH, a kind of soup. (E.) M. E. broth, Rob. of Glouc. p. 528, 1. 2. - A. S. brod (to translate Lat. ius), Bosworth. + Icel. brod. + O. H. G. prói; M. H. G. brói (G. gebräude). From A. S. breiwin, to brew. See Brew, and Brose.

BROTHEL, a house of ill fame. (E.; confused with F .. - O. Low a. The history of the word shews that the etymologists have G) entirely mistaken the matter. It was originally quite distinct from M. E. bordel (= Ital. bordello).  $\beta$ . The quotations from Bale (Votaries, pt. ii), and Dryden (Mac Flecknoe, l. 70) in Richardson, shew that the old term was brothel-house, i. e. a house for brothels or prostitutes : for the M. E. brothel was a person. not a place. Thus Gower speaks of 'A brothel, which Micheas hight' = a brothel. whose name was Micheas; C. A. ed. Pauli, iii. 173; and see P. Plowman, Crede. 772. Cf. 'A brothelrie, lenocinium;' Levins. 103. 34. We also find M. E. brethel, a wretch, bretheling, a beggarly fellow; and, from the same root, the A. S. ábročen. degenerate, base; and the past tense ábručon, they failed, A. S. Chron an. 1004. These forms Curtius considers as allied to Skt. bark, to roar as an elephant, which are from the vb. dbreidan, to perish, come to the ground, become vile; connected with breitan, to break, demolish, Grein, i. 13, 142. y. From the same root is Icel. laga-brjótr, a law-breaker. The Teutonic stem is brut-, to break; see Fick. iii. 218. 8. Thus brothel, sb., a breaker, offender, and brittle, adj., fragile, are from the same source. See Brittle. B. But, of course, a confusion between brothel-house and the M. E. bordel, used in the same sense. was inevitable and immediate. Chaucer has bordel in his Persones Tale (see Richardson), and Wyclif even has bordelhous, Ezek. xvi. 24, shewing that the confusion was already then completed; though he also has bor delrie = a brothel, in Numb. xxv. 8, which is a French form. -O. Fr. bordel, a hut; dimin. of borde, a hut, cot, shed made of boards. - O. Du. (and Du.) bord, a plank. See Board.

BROTHER, a son of the same parents. (E.) M. E. brother, Chaucer, Prol. 529. - A.S. brotsor, Grein, p. 144. + Du. broeder. + Icel. brotir. + Goth. brothar. + Swed. broder. + Dan. broder. + O. H. G. pruoder (G. bruder). + Gael. and Irish brathair. + W. brawd, pl. brodyr. + Russian brat. + Lat. frater. + Gk. opáry... + Church-B. The Skt. b'rdtri is from biri, Slavonic bratru. + Skt. bhrátri. to support, maintain; orig. to bear. - & BHAR, to bear. Der. brother-' ood, brother-like, brother-ly.

BROW, the eye-brow; edge of a hill. (E.) M. E. brows. Prompt. Parv p 53. - A. S. brú, pl. brúa, Grein, i. 144 + Du braann, in comp. wenkbraann, eye-brow, lit. wink brow + Icel brún, eye brow : brá, eye-lid. + Goth. bratw, a twinkling, in phr in bratwa augins = in the twinkling of an eye; 1 Cor. xv. 52. + O. H. G. práwa, M. H. G. brá, the eye-lid. + Russian brow. + Gael. brá, a brow; abira an eye-lid. + Bret. abrant, eye-brow. + Gk. δφρώs. eye-brow. + Pers abrú. + Skt. b'rú. eye-brow. - ↓ BHUR. to move quickly; see Fick, i 163. The older sense seems to have been 'eye-lid,' and the name to have been given from its twitching. Der. brow-beat ; Holland's Plutarch, BROWN, the name of a darkish colour. (E) M. E. brown, BROWN, the name of a darkish colour. (E) M. E. brown, brown, brown, Chaucer, Prol. 207. – A. S. brún, Grein, i. 145 + Du. bruin, brown, bay. + Icel. brúnn. + Swed. brun. + Dan. bruwn. + G braun. B. The close connection with the verb to burn. has been generally perceived and admitted. It is best shewn by the Goth brinnan, to burn, pp. brunnans, burnt, and the Icel. brenna, to burn, pp. brunninn, burnt; so that brown may be considered as a contracted form of the old pp.

signifying burnt. See Burn. Der. brown-ish. Doublet, bruin. BROWN-BREAD, a coarse bread (E.) The word is, The word is, of course, explicable as it stands; but it may, nevertheless, have been a corruption for bran-bread. In Wright's Vocabularies, i. 201, we find : 'Hic furfur. bran ;' and at p. 198. 'Panis furfurinus, bran-bread.'

BROWZE, to nibble; said of cattle. (F., -M.HG) Occurs in Shak. Wint. Tale, iii 3. 69; Antony, i. 4. 66; Cymb. iii. 6. 38; but scarcely to be found earlier. A corruption of broust. - F. brouster, also brouter, explained by Cotgrave by 'to brouze, to nip, or nibble off the sprigs, buds, barke. &c. of plants; ' a sense still retained in prov. Eng. brut (Kent, Surrey), which keeps the i whilst dropping the s.-O. F. browst, a sprig. tendrell, bud, a yong branch or shoot; Cot. - M. H G. broz, a bud (Graff, iii. 369); Bavarian bross, brosst, a bud (Schmeller). B. The word is also Celtic; cf. Bret brousta, to browze; brows, a thick bush; brows, brows, a bud, shoot. A collection of shoots or sprigs is implied in E. brushwood; and from the same

BRUIN, a bear. (Dutch.) In the old epic poem of Reynard the Fox, the bear is named 'brown,' from his colour; the Dutch version spells it bruin. which is the Dutch form of the word ' brown.' The proper pronunciation of the word is nearly as E. broin, as the ui is a diphthong resembling of in boil; but we always pronounce it broo-in, disregarding the Dutch pronunciation. See Brown. BRUISE, to pound, crush, injure. (F., - M. H. G.) M. E. brusen, Joseph of Arimathie, ed. Skeat, 1, 500; but more commonly spelt brissen or brisen, Wyclif's Bible, Deut. ix. 3; also broo.en, id. Numbers, xxii. 25.-O.F. bruiser, bruser, briser, to break : forms which Diez would separate; but wrongly, as Mätzner well says. -M. H. G. brösten, to break, burst; cognate with E. burst. See Burst. Der. bruis-er. ¶ Diez, E. Müller, and others are puzzled by the 'A. S. brysan, to bruise,' which nearly all etymologists cite. The word is, however, authorised ; see further in Errata. The Gaelic bris, brisd, to break, seems to be a genuine Celtic word. [†]

BRUIT, a rumour; to announce noisily. (F., -C.) Occurs in Shak. Much Ado, v. 1.65; Macb. v. 7. 22. - F. 'bruit, a bruit, a great sound or noise, a rumbling, clamor,' &c.; Cot. - F. bruire, to make a noise, roar. B. Perhaps of Celtic origin; cf. Bret. bruchellein, to roar like a lion; W. broch, din, tumult; Gael. broighleadh, bustle, is from the Indo-Eur. BARGH, to roar (Fick, i. 151). seems to be from the same source as Broil, a tumult, q. v

BRUNETTE, a girl with a dark complexion. (F., -G.) Mere French; but it occurs in the Spectator, No. 396. [The older E. equivalent is 'nut-brown,' as in the Ballad of The Nut-brown Maid.] -F. brunette, explained by Cotgrave as 'a nut-browne girle.'-F. brunet, masc. adj., brunette, fem. adj., brownish; Cot. Formed, with dimin. suffix -et, from F, brun, brown, - M. H. G. brún, brown; cognate with E. brown, q. v.

BRUNT, the shock of an onset. (Scand.) Seldom used except in the phr. brunt of battle, the shock of battle, as in Shak. Cor. ii. 2. 104. However, Butler has: 'the heavy brunt of cannon-ball;' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. M. E. brunt, bront. 'Brunt, insultus, impetus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 54. - Icel. brana, to advance with the speed of fire, said of a standard in the heat of battle, of ships advancing under full sail, &c. - Icel. bruni, burning, heat. - Icel. brenna, to burn; cognate with E. burn. See Burn. ¶ The form of the sb. is illustrated by Dan. brynde, conflagration, heat; Goth. ala-brunsts, a whole burnt-offering. The sense of 'heat' has partly given way to that of 'speed,' 'shock;' but the phrase 'heat of battle' is still a good one.

BRUSH, an implement for cleaning clothes; cf. brushwood, underwood. (F., -Low Lat., -G.) M. E. brusshe, in the phrase 'wyped it with a brusshe; ' P. Plowman, B. xiii. 460; also: ' Brusche, bruscus, i.e. brush-wood, Prompt. Parv. - O. F. broce, broche, brosse, brushwood, small wood; F. brosse, a bush, bushy ground, brush (Cotgrave). -Low Lat. brustia, a kind of brush, bruscia, a thicket. - Bavarian bross, brosst, a bud (Schmeller); M. H. G. broz, a bud (Graff, iii. 369). ¶ See Brachet, who explains that the word meant originally 'heather, broom,' then 'a branch of broom used to sweep away dust.' Cf. F. browssailles, brush-wood, and note the double sense of E. broom. See further under Browse. Der. brush-wood BRUSQUE, rough in manner. (F., - Ital.) Spelt brusk by Sir Henry Wotton, d. 1639 (R.) He speaks of giving 'a brusk welcome' = a rough one. - F. brusque, rude; introduced in 16th cent. from Ital. bruce (Brachet). - Ital. brusco, sharp, tart, sour, applied to fruits and wine. B. Of unknown origin; Diez makes it a corruption of O. H. G. bruttise, brutish, brutal, which is clumsy. Ferrari (says Mr. Donkin) derives it from the Lat. labruscus, the Ital. dropping the first syllable. This is ingenious; the Lat. labruscus was an adj. applied to a wild vine and grape. ¶ The notion of connecting brusque with brisk appears in Colgrave; it seems to be wrong.

BRUTE, a dumb animal. (F., -L.) Shak. has brute as an adj., Hamlet, iii. 2. 110; and other quotations in Richardson shew that it was at first an adj., as in the phr. ' a brute beast.' - F. brut, masc., brute, fem. adj., in Cotgrave, signifying 'foul, ragged, shapeless,' &c., -Lat. brutus, stupid. Der. brut-al, brut-al-i-ty, brut-al-ise, brut-ish, brut-ish-ness.

BRYONY, a kind of plant. (L., -Gk.) In Levins; also in Ben Jonson, Masques: The Vision of Delight. - Lat. bryonia. - Gk. βρυωνία, also βρυώνη. - Gk. βρύειν, to teem, swell, grow luxuriantly.

BUBBLE, a small bladder of water. (Scand.) Shak. has the sb., As You Like It, ii. 7. 152; also as a vb., 'to rise in bubbles,' Macb. iv. 1. 11. Not found much earlier in English. [Palsgrave has: 'Burble in the water, bubette,' and the same form occurs in the Prompt. Parv. p. 56; but this is probably a somewhat different word, and from a different source; cf. Du. borrel, a bubble.]-Swed. bubble, a bubble. + Dan. boble, a bubble; to bubble. + Du. bobbel, a bubble; bobbelen, to bubble. B. The form of the word is clearly a diminutive; and it is to be regarded as the dimin. of blob, a bubble; it is obvious that the form blobble would give way to bobble. In the same way babble seems to be related to blab. See Blob, Blob.

BUCCANIER, a pirate. (F., - West-Indian.) Modern. Borrowed from F. boucanier, a buccanier, pirate. - F. boucaner, to smokedry; or, according to Cotgrave, 'to broyle or scorch on a woodden gridiron.'-F. boucan, 'a woodden gridiron, whereon the cannibals broile pieces of men, and other flesh;' Cot. B. The word boucan is said to be Caribbean, and to mean 'a place where meat is smokedried.' Mr. Wedgwood says: 'The natives of Florida, says Laudonnière (Hist. de la Floride, Pref. A.D. 1586, in Marsh), "mangent leurs viandes rosties sur les charbons et boucantes, c'est à dire quasi caictes a la fumée." In Hackluyt's translation, "dressed in the smoke, which in their language they call boucaned." Hence those who established themselves in the islands for the purpose of smoking meat were called buccaniers.' Webster adds: 'The name was first given to the French settlers in Hayti or Hispaniola, whose business was to hunt wild cattle and swine.

Bruit familiarity, like E. 'old buck.' + Swed. bock, a buck, a he-goat. + Dan. buk, a he-goat, ram, buck. + O. H. G. poch (G. bock), a buck, Mere he-goat, battering-ram. + W. bwch, a buck; bwch gafr, a he-goat. + der E. Gael. boc, a buck, he-goat. + Irish boc, a he-goat. B. The root is uncertain; the G. form seems as if allied to M. H. G. bochen, G. pochen, to strike; with a supposed reference to butting; but the word seems too widely spread for this. Fick (i. 162, 701) cites Zend

BUCK (2), to wash linen, to steep clothes in lye. (C.) Shak. has buck-basket, a basket for washing linen, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 2. M. E. bouken, to wash linen; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 19. Of Celtic origin. -Gael. buac, dung used in bleaching; the liquor in which cloth is washed; also, linen in an early stage of bleaching. + Irish buac, lye; buacachan, buacaire, a bleacher; with which cf. buacar, cow-dung. [The remoter origin is clearly Gael. bo, W. buw, bruch, a cow; cognate with Lat. bos. See Cow.] ¶ Hence also the very widely spread derived verb, viz. Swed. byka, Dan. byge, O. Du. buiken, G. beuchen, O. F. buer, to buck-wash; a word which has given great wrong. Der. buck-basket.

BUCKET, a kind of pail. (E.; perhaps C.) M. E. boket, Chau-cer, Kn. Tale, 675. – A. S. buc, a pitcher, glossed by 'lagena,' and occurring also in Judges, vii. 20 (Bosworth); with dimin. suffix -et. β. The addition of the suffix appears in Irish buicead, a bucket, knob, boss ; Gael. bucaid, a bucket, also a pustule. y. It seems to have been named from its roundness; from Gael. and Irish boc, to swell.

The word bowl (2), q. v., is of similar formation. BUCKLE, a kind of fastening; to fasten. (F., -L.) The sb. bokeling occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 2505. -O. F. boole (F. boucle), the boss of a shield, a ring; from the latter of which senses 'buckle' has been evolved. - Low Lat. bucula, the boss of a shield, as explained by Isidore of Seville (Brachet). Ducange also gives buccula, meaning (1) a part of the helmet covering the cheek, a visor; (2) a shield; (3) a boss of a shield; (4) a buckle. The original sense of Lat. buccula was the check; dimin. of bucca, the check. See Buffet.

BUCKLER, a kind of shield  $(F_{..}-L)$  Chaucer has bokeler, Prol. 112; the pl. boceleris occurs in King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1189.-O. F. bocler (F. bouclier); so named from the bocle, or boss in the centre. See Buckle.

BUCKRAM, a coarse cloth. (F., -M. H. G.) M. E. bokeram, cloth; Prompt. Parv. p. 42.-O. F. boucaran (F. bougran), a coarse kind of cloth (Roquefort). - Low Lat. boquerannus, buckram. - Low Lat. boyuma, goat's skin. – M. H. G. boc, a he-goat: cognate with E. buck. See Buck. ¶ This etymology is sufficient, as names of stuffs were very loosely applied. Webster makes buckram a variation of barracan, the same of a stuff resembling camle, and derived, ac-cording to Diez, from Pers. barak, a stuff made of camel's hair; Rich. Dict. p. 263. Diez himself inclines to the derivation of the present word from M. H. G. boc.

BUCKWHEAT, the name of a plant. (E.) The Polygonum fagopyrum. The word buckwheat means beech-wheat, so called from the resemblance in shape between its seeds and the mast of the beech-tree. The same resemblance is hinted at in the term fagopyrum, from Lat. fagus, the beech-tree. The form buck for beech is Northumbrian, and nearer to A.S. boe than is the Southern form. + Du. boekweit. + G. buchweizen. See Booch.

BUCOLIC, pastoral. (Gk.) Elyot has bucolickes; The Governour, bk. i. c. 10. Skelton has 'bucolycall relations;' Garlande of Laurell, 326. - Lat. bucolicus, pastoral. - Gk. βουκολικόs, pastoral. - Gk. βουκόλοs, a cow-herd.
 B. The derivation of βουκόλοs is not clear; the first syllable is, of course, from Gk. Bous, an ox (from the same κέληs, a race-horse, Lat. celer, swift. 2. Fick refers -κόλοs to the root kar, to run; cf. Skt. char, to go, Lat. currere, to run. 8. Liddell BUD, a germ; to sprout. (E.?) The Prompt. Parv., p. 54, has: 'Budde of a tre, Gemma,' and : 'Buddum as trees, Gemmo.' The word does not appear earlier in M. E.; but may have been an E. or Old Low German word. Cf. Du. bot, a bud, eye, shoot; botten, to bud, sprout out. This is closely related to the O.F. boter, to push, to butt. whence the deriv. boton, a button, a bud; this F. word being of Teutonic origin.  $\beta$ . Or perhaps 'to bud' is a mere corruption of O. F. boser. Either way, the ultimate origin is the same. See Button, boter. and Butt (1).

BUDGE (1), to stir, move from one's place. (F., -L.) Shak. has budge, to stir, Haml. iii. 4. 18. - F. bouger, to stir; Prov. bolegar, BUCK (1), a male deer, goat, &c. (E.) M. E. bukke, Chaucer, to disturb oneself; answering to Ital. bulicare, to bubble up. – C. T. 3387. – A. S. bucca, a he goat, Levit. iv. 23. + Du. bok, a he-goat. + Icel. bukkr, a he-goat; bokki, a he-goat; also a term of  $\beta$ . This derivation is made clearer by the facts that the Span. bullir to disturb oneself; answering to Ital. bulicare, to bubble up. -Formed, as a frequentative, from Lat. bullire, to boil. See Boil. means not only 'to boil,' but 'to be busy, to bestir oneself,' also 'to move from place to place;' whilst the deriv. adj. bullictoso means 'brisk, active, busy.' So also Port. bulir, to move, stir, be active; buliçoso, restless.

BUDGE (2), a kind of fur. (F., -C.) Milton has: 'those budge doctors of the Stoic fur;' Comus, 707; alluding to the lambskin fur worn by some who took degrees, and still worn at Cambridge by bachelors of arts. Halliwell has: 'budge, lambskin with the wool dressed outwards; often worn on the edges of capes, as gowns of bachelors of arts are still made. See Fairholt's Pageants, i. 66; Strutt, ii. 102; Thynne's Debate, p. 32; Pierce Penniless, p. 11.' Cotgrave has: 'Agnelin, white budge, white lamb.' Another sense Another sense of the word is 'a bag or sack;' and a third, 'a kind of water-cask;' Halliwell. These ideas are connected by the idea of 'skin of an animal;' which served for a bag, a water-skin, or for ornamental animal; which served for a bag, a water-skin, or for ormanental purposes. Budge is a doublet of bag; and its dimin. is budget. See further under Budget, and Bag. [+] BUDGET, a leathern bag. (F., -C.) Shak. has budget (old edd. bowget), Wint. Tale, v. 3. 20. - F. 'bowgette, a little coffer, or trunk of wood, covered with leather; . . . also, a little male, pouch, or budget;' Cot. A dimin. of F. 'bowget, a budget, wallet, or great pouch;' id.; cf. O. Fr. bowlge (Roquefort). - Lat. bulga, a little bag; according to Festus, a word of Gaulish origin (Brachet). - Gael. bolg, budget, bag bag budget. Sa Bag builg, a bag, budget. See Bag.

BUFF, the skin of a buffalo; a pale yellow colour. (F.) Buff is a contraction of buffe, or biffle, from F. buffle, a buffalo. 'Buff, a sort of thick tanned leather;' Kersey. 'Buff, Buffle, or Buffalo, a wild beast like an ox;' id. 'The term was applied to the skin of the buffalo dressed soft, buff-leather, and then to the colour of the leather so dressed ;' Wedgwood. See Buffalo.

BUFFALO, a kind of wild ox. (Span., -L., -Gk.) The pl. buffollos occurs in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 43. The sing. buffalo is in Ben Jonson, Discoveries, Of the magnitude of any fable. Borrowed from Span. bufalo, Spanish being much spoken in North America, where the name burgalo is (incorrectly, perhaps) given to the bison. [But the term was not really new in English; the Tudor Eng. already had the form buffle, borrowed from the French. Cotgrave has: Buffle, m. the buffle, buffle, bugle, or wild ox; also, the skin or neck of a buffe.'] - Lat. bufalus, used by For-tunatus, a secondary form of bubalus, a buffalo. – Gk.  $\beta o i \beta a \lambda o s$ , a buffalo; Polyb. xii. 3, 5. – Gk.  $\beta o i s$ , an ox; see Beef. [+] BUFFFER (1), a foolish fellow. (F.) Jamieson has 'buffer, a foolish fellow.' The M. E. buffer means 'a stutterer.' 'The tunge of bufferes [Lat. balborum] swiftli shal speke and pleynly;' Wycl. Isaiah, xxxii. 4. – M. E. buffen, to stammer. – O. F. bufer, to puff out the cheeks, &c. See Buffet (1).  $\beta$ . The word is, no doubt, partly imitative; to represent indistinct talk; cf. Babble.

BUFFER (2), a cushion, with springs, used to deaden concussion. F.) Buffer is lit. a striker; from M. E. buffen, to strike; prov. (F.) Eng. buff, to strike, used by Ben Jonson (see Nares). - O. F. bufer, buffer, to strike. See Buffet (1). BUFFET (1), a blow; to strike. (F.) M. E. buffet, boffet, a blow; esp. a blow on the cheek or face; Wycl. John, xix. 3. Also buffeten, bofeen, translated by Lat. colaphizo, Prompt. Parv. p. 41. Also bufeting, a buffeting, Old Eng. Homilies, i. 207. - O. F. bufet, a blow, esp. on the cheek. - O.F. bufe, a blow, esp. on the cheek; bufer, buffer, to strike; also, to puff out the cheeks. B. Some have derived the O. F. bufe, a blow, from the Germ. puff, popl also, a cuff, thump; but the word is not old in German, and the German word might have been borrowed from the French. No doubt buffet is connected with puff, and the latter, at least, is onomatopoetic. See Puff. C. But the O. F. bufe may least, is onomatopoetic. See Puff. C. But the O.F. bufe may be of Celtic origin; the f being put for a guttural. Cf. Bret. boked, a blow, buffet, esp. a blow on the check; clearly connected with Bret. boch, the cheek. D. The M. E. had a form bobet as well as boffet; cf. 'bobet, collafa, collafus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 41; 'bobet on the heed, coup de poing;' Palsgrave. Now bobet is clearly a dimin. of bob, a blow, with its related verb bobben, to strike; words in which the latter b (or bb) likewise represents a guttural, being connected with Gael, boe, a blow, a box, a stroke, and prob. with E. bow. See E. The Celtic words for cheek are Bret. bock, Welsh Box, verb. boch, Corn. boch, all closely related to Lat. bucca, the cheek, which Fick (i. 151) connects with Lat. buceina, a trumpet, and the Skt. bukk, to sound; from the BUK, to puff or snort. The original idea is thus seen to be that of puffing with violence; hence, cheek; and hence, a blow on the cheek.

BUFFET (2), a side-board. (F.) Used by Pope, Moral Essays (Ep. to Boyie), l. 153; Sat. ii. 5. - F. buffet, a court cupboord, or high-standing cupboord; also, a cupboord of plate; 'Cot. B. Origin unknown (Brachet). Diez gives it up. That it may be conwith water, is probable. Cf. 'Buffer, to puff, or blow hard; also, to spurt, or spout water on.' But the word remains obscure, and the Various conjectures remain without proof. BUFFOON, a jester. (F.) Holland speaks of 'buffoons, pleasants, and gesters ;' tr. of Plutarch, p. 487. Pronounced buffon, Ben Jonson, Every Man, ii. 3. 8. For the suffix, cf. ball-oon. - F. bouffon, which Cotgrave explains as 'a buffoon, jester, sycophant,' &c. Cf. Span. bufa, a scoffing, laughing at : equiv. to Ital. buffa, a trick. jest ; which is connected with Ital. buffare, to joke, jest ; orig. to puff out the cheeks, in allusion to the grimacing of jesters, which was a principal part of their business. See Buffet (1). Der. buffoon-ery. BUG (1), BUGBEAR, a terrifying spectre. (C.) Fairlax speaks of children being frightened by strange bug-beares; 'tr. of Tasso, Gier. Lib. bk. xiii. st. 18. Here bug-bear means a spectre in the shape of a bear. The word bug was used alone, as in Shak. Tam. Shrew, i. 2. 211. Shak. himself also has bugbear. Troil. iv. 2. 34.-W. bug, a bear bear bugbear bug and the bugbear bugbear. hobgoblin, spectre; bwgan, a spectre. + Irish puea, an elf, sprite (Shakespeare's Puek). + Gael. (and Irish) bocan, a spectre, apparition, terrifying object. + Corn. bucca, a hobgoblin, bugbear, scarecrow.  $\beta$ . Probably connected further with Lithuanian baugus, terrific, frightful, bugstu, bugti, to be frightened, bauginti, to frighten (Fick, i. 162); which Fick further connects with Lat. fuga, flight, fugare, to pat to flight, and Skt. bluj, to bow, bend, turn aside, cognate with E. bow, to bend. See Bow (1). And see below. BUG (2), an insect: (C.) This is merely a particular application of the Tudor-English bug, an apparition, scarecrow, object of terror: The word is therefore equivalent to 'disgusting creature.' So in Welsh we find bug, bugan, buci, a hobgoblin, bugbear; bucai, a

BUGABOO, a spectre. (C.) In Lloyd's Chit-chat (R.) It is the word bug, with the addition of W. bw, an interjection of threatening, Gael. bo, an interjection used to frighten children, our 'boh !'

BUGLE (1), a wild ox; a horn.  $(F_{.,} = L_{.})$  Bugle in the sense of 'horn' is an abbreviation of bugle-horn, used by Chaucer, C. T. 11565. It means the horn of the bugle, or wild ox. Halliwell has: 'Bugle, a buffalo; see King Alexander, ed. Weber, 5112; Maundeville's Travels, p. 269; Topsell's Beasts, p. 54; Holinshed, Hist. of Scotland, p. 17. No doubt bugle was confused with buffle or buffalo (see Buffalo), but etymologically it is a different word. - O. F. bugle, a wild ox (whence, by the way, F. bengler, to bellow). - Lat baculus, a bullock, young ox (Columella); a dimin. of Lat. bos, cognate with E. cov. See Cow.

BUGLE (2), a kind of ornament. (M. H. G.) a. Bugies are fine glass pipes, sewn on to a woman's dress by way of ornament. Mr. Wedgwood quotes from Muratori, shewing that some sort of ornaments, called in Low Latin bugoli, were worn in the hair by the ladies of Piacenza in A. D. 1388.  $\beta$ . I think there can be little doubt that the word is formed, as a diminutive, from the M. H. G. bouc, or bouch, an armlet, a large ring, a word very extensively used in the sense of a ring-shaped ornament; the cognate A. S. beag, an armlet, neck-ornament, ring, ornament, and the Icel. baugr, spiral ring, armlet, are the commonest of words in poetry. The dimin. bugel is still used in German, signifying any piece of wood or metal that is bent into a round shape, and even a stirrup. The Icel. bygill also means a stirrup; the provincial Eng. bule (contracted from bugle) means the handle of a pail, from its curved shape. Y. A bugle means, literally, 'a small ornament (originally) of a rounded shape;' from the verb bow, to bend, O. H. G. bougen, biegen (G. beugen), to bend, Icel. buga, beygja, to bend. See Bow (1), to bend. ¶ The original sense of 'roundness' was quite lost sight of, the mere sense of 'ornament' having superseded it. There is not necessarily an allusion to the cylindrical shape of the ornament.

BUILD, to construct a house. (Scand.) M. E. bulden, bilden, Layamon, 2656; Coventry Mysteries, p. 20; also builden. P. Plowman, B. xii. 288; and belden, P. Plowman, Crede, 706. The earlier history of the word is not quite clear; but it is most likely a Scand. word, with an excrescent d (like the d in boulder, q. v.). - O. Swed. bylia, to build (Ihre). β. Formed from O. Swed. bol, böle, a house, dwelling; Ihre, i. 220, 221. + Dan. bol, a small farm. + Icel. bol, a farm, abode; bozli, býli, an abode. B. In the same way it may easily be the case that the A.S. bold, a dwelling, house, abode (Grein, i. 132) is not an original word; but borrowed from Icel. bol, with the addition of an excrescent d. The introduction of d after l is a common peculiarity of Danish; thus the Danish for to fall is falde, and the Danish for a ball is bold. [The alleged A.S. byldan, to build, is late; there is an A.S. byldan, but it means 'to embolden,' being simply formed from the adjust of the but one Formed Ford of 100 for 100 for rrom the adj. beald, bold; but see Errata. [*] O. The Iccl. bdl, Dan. bol, O. Swed. bol, a house, dwelling, is probably to be referred back (as Ihre says) to Icel. búa, O. Swed. bo, to live, abide, nected with buffeter, sometimes used (see Cotgrave) for 'to marre a dwell; akin to Skt. bhú, to be. Thus to build means 'to construct a vessel of wine by often tasting it before it is broached, or, to fill it up place in which to be or dwell.' See Be. Der. build-er, build-ing.

certainly a derivative of Icel. bia, to dwell. Hence bi-g and bui-1(d) only differ in their endings.

BULB, a round root, &c. (F., -L., -Gk) Not in early use. In Holland's Plutarch, p. 577; and bulbous is in Holland's Pluty, bk. xix. c. 4; vol. ii. p. 13. – F. bulbe. – Lat. bulbus. – Gk.  $\beta o \lambda \beta \delta s$ , a bulbous root, an onion. Der. bulb, verb; bulb-ed, bulb-ous. [†] BULGE, to swell out. (Scand.) This word, in the sense of 'to swell out, is very rare except in modern writers. I can find no early instance. Yet bulgia, to swell out, pp. bulgin, swollen, occurs in O. Swedish (Ihre), and in Swed. dialects (Rietz); the Icelandic has a pp. bolginn, swollen, also angry, from a lost verb; and the root is very widely spread.  $\beta$ . The A.S. belgan is only used in the metaphorical sense, to swell with anger, which is also the case with the O. H. G. pilgan, M. H. G. bilgen; and again we find an O. H. G. pp. hip: Igan, inflamed with anger, which must originally have meant 'swollen.' So we have Goth. ufbauljan, to puff up. Again, cf. Gael. bulgach, protuberant; obs. Gael. boly, to swell out, extend, &c. Y. All these examples point to an early base BHALGH, to swell, Fick, ii. 422. Der. The derivatives from bhalgh\*, to swell, are very numerous, viz. ball, beil (a pustule), bowl, bilge, billow, belly, bag, bolled (swollen), ble (of a tree), bulk, &c. ¶ We commonly find bulge in Elizabethan English used in the sense of ' to leak,' said of a ship; this is betnan English used in the sense of to teak, said of a surg, the -but another spelling of bilge, q. v. [†] BULK (1), magnitude, size. (Scand.) M. E. bolke, a heap, Prompt. Parv. p. 43. - Icel. búlki, a heap; búlkast, to be bulky. + Dan. bulk, a lump, clod; bulket, lumpy. + Swed. dial. bulk, a knob, bunch; bullkug, bunchy, protuberant (Rietz); O. Swed. bolk, a heap B. The Swed. dial. words are connected with Swed. dial. (Ihre). buljna, to bulge; Swed. bulna, to swell. The original idea in bulk is 'a swelling;' cf. the adj. bulky. See Bulge. Der. bulk-y, bulk-i-ness. BULLK (2), the trunk of the body. (O. Low G.) Used by Shak. Hamlet, ii. 1. 95. = O. Dutch bulete, thorax; Kilian. + Icel. buler, the trunk of the body. + Swed. buk, the belly. + Dan. bug, the belly. + G. bauch, the belly. The latter forms have lost an original l, as is the case with Bag. See Bag, Belly, Bulge. B. The Gael. bulg signifies (1) the belly. (2) a lump, mass; thus connecting bulk, the trunk of the body, with bulk, magnitude. The notion of 'bulg-BULK (3), a stall of a shop, a projecting frame for the display of goods. (Scand.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 226; Oth. v. 1. I. Halliwell has: Bult, the stall of a shop; with references. He also notes that the Lincolnshire bulkar means (1) a beam; and (2) the front of a butcher's shop where meat is laid. The native E. word balk generally means a rafter, and does not give the right vowel. The change of vowel shews that the word is Scandinavian, as also may be inferred from its being a Lincolnshire word. - Icel. balkr, a beam, rafter; but also, a partition. [The Icel. d is like E. ow in cow.] Florio translates the Ital. balco or balcone (from a like source) as ' the bulk BULK-HEAD, a partition in a ship made with boards, forming apartments. (Scand.) A nautical term. Had it been of native origin, the form would have been balk-kead, from balk, a beam. The change of vowel points to the Icel. bálkr, a balk, beam, also a partition, the Icel. á being sounded like ow in cow. Moreover, the E. balk means 'a beam, a rafter;' the Icel. bdlkr, and Swed. balk, also mean a partition.' See further under Balk; and see Bulk (3).

BULL (1), a male bovine quadruped. (E.) M. E. bole, bolle, Chaucer, C. T. 2141; bule, Ormulum, 990. Not found in A. S., though occurring in the Ormulum and in Layamon; yet the dimin. bullica, a bull-ock, little bull, really occurs (Bosworth). + O. Du. bollica, a bull-ock, little bull, really occurs (Bosworth). + O. Du. bolle, a bull (Kilian); Du. bul. + Icel. boli, a bull; baula, a cow. +Russian vo<sup>n</sup>, a bull.  $\beta$ . From A. S. bellan, to bellow. See Bellow. Der. bull-dog, bull-finch, &c.; dimin. bull-ock.

BULL (2), a papal edict. (L.) In early use. M. E. bulle, a papal bull ; P. Plowman, B. prol. 69 ; Rob. of Glouc. p. 473. - Lat. bulla, a stud, a knob; later, a leaden seal, such as was affixed to an edict; hence the name was transferred to the edict itself. + Irish boll, a bubble on water; the boss of a shield. Der. From the same source: bull-et, q. v., bull-et-in, q. v.; bull-ion, q. v. ¶ The use of bull in the sense of 'blunder' is due to a contemptuous allusion to papal edicts. BULLACE, wild plum. (Celtic.) Bacon has the pl. bullises; Essay on Gardens. 'Bolas frute, pepulum;' and 'Bolas tre, pepu-lus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 42. 'Pepulus, a bolaster;' Ort. Voc., qu. in lus; Way's note; id.-Gael. bulaistear, a bullace, sloe. + Irish bulos, a prune. + Bret. bolos, better polos, explained as 'prune sauvage,' i. e. bullace. The O. F. beloce, belloce, 'espèce de prunes,' is given by Roquefort; and Cotgrave has: 'Bellocier, a bullace-tree, or wilde plum-tree;' words probably derived from the Breton. Florio, in his Ital. Dict, has: 'Bulloi, bulloes, slowne' [sloes]. ¶ It is obvious

The Lowland Scotch big, to build, from Icel. byggja, to build, is bolaster was first turned into bolastere (bullace-tree), as in the Prompt.

Parv., and then the tre was dropped. [+] BULLEFT, a ball for a gun. (F., = L.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 227, 412. = F. boulet, 'a bullet; Cot. A dimin. of F. boule, a ball. - Lat. bulla, a stud, knob; a bubble. See Bull (2).

BULLETIN, a brief public announcement. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) Burke speaks of the pithy and sententious brevity of these bulletins. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs (R.) – F. bulletin, 'a bill, ticket, a billet in a lottery;' Cot. – Ital. bulletino, a safe conduct, pass, ticket. Formed, by the dimin. suffix -ino, from bulletta, a passport, a lottery-ticket; which again is formed, by the dimin. suffix -etta, from bulla, a seal, a pope's letter. - Lat. bulla, a seal; later, a BULLION, a stud, a boss; uncoined metal. (F., -L.) Skelton has bullyon, a boss, a stud; Garlande of Laurell, 1165; see Dyce's note. - F. bouillow, a boiling; also, according to Cotgrave, 'a studde, any great-headed, or studded, nails.' - Low Lat. bullionem, acc. of bullio, a mass of gold or silver; also written bulliona. - Low Lat. bullare, to stamp, or mark with a seal. - Low Lat. bulla, a seal; Lat. bulla, the head of a nail, a stud. [In the sense of 'boiling' or 'soup,' the F. bouillon is from Lat. bullire, to boil, from the same Lat. bull, in the sense of a bubble.] ¶ Mr. Wedgwood shews that the O. F. bullions (Stat. 9 Edw. III, st. 2. c. 14) meant the mint itself, not the uncoined metal, which is only a secondary meaning. This explains the connection with the Lat. bulla, a seal, at once. See Blount's Nomolexicon. B. The mod. F. word is billow; which

Littré derives from F. bille, a log; see Billet (2). [†] BULLY, a noisy rough fellow; to bluster. (O. Low G.) Shak. has bully for 'a brisk dashing fellow; 'Merry Wives, i. 3. 6, 11, &c.; Schmidt. Also bully-rook in a similar sense, Merry Wives, i. 3. 2; ii. 1. 200. Mr. Wedgwood cites 'Platt-Deutsch buller-jaan (bully John), buller-bük, buller-brook, a noisy blustering fellow, from the last of which is doubtless our bully-rook; see Bremen Wörterb. i. 159. These words correspond to Du. bulderaar, a blusterer, bulderbas, a rude fellow, bulderen, to buster, rage, roar, bulderig, boisterous, blustering (all with excrescent d, as in Boulder, q. v.). Cf. O. Du. bollaer, a tattler, bollen, to tattle; bolle, a bull. + Swed. buller, noise, clamour, bullra, to make a noise, bullerbas, a noisy person, bullersam, noisy. B. From Du. bul, a bull; a rough unsocial man. + Swed. bulla, a bull;
 From the notion of bellowing. See Bull, Bellow.
 BULWARK, a rampart. (Scand.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 4. 38.

Dan. bulværk, a bulwark; Swed. bolverk. + Du. bolwerk. + G. bollwerk. Corrupted in F. to bowlevarde, from the Du. or G. form. Kilian explains bol-werck, or block-werck by propugnaculum, agger, vallum; shewing that bol is equivalent to block, i. e. a log of wood. [I regard the word as Scandinavian, because these languages explain the word at once; the Du. bol is not commonly used for 'log,' nor is G. böhle anything more than 'a board, plank.]  $\beta$ . From Dan. bul, a stem, stump, log of a tree; vark, work. + Icel. bulr, bolr, the bole or trunk of a tree; bola, to fell trees.  $\gamma$ . Thus the word stands for bole-work, and means a fort made of the trump of felled trace. and means a fort made of the stumps of felled trees. [†]

BUM, buttocks. (E.) Used by Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 53. mere contraction of bottom. In like manner, the corresponding O. Friesic boden is contracted in North Friesic into bom; Richtofen.

BUM-BAILIFF, an under bailiff. In Shak. Twelfth Nt. iii. 4 194. Blackstone (bk. i. c. 9) says it is a corruption of bound-bailiff, which seems to be a guess only. The etymology is disputed.  $\beta$ . Todd quotes from a Tract at the end of Fulke's Defence of the English translations of the Bible, 1583, p. 33: 'These quarrels . . are more meet for the bum-courts than for the schools of divinity. In this saying, if the term of bumcourts seem too light, I yield unto the censure of grave and godly men.' He also quotes the expression 'constables, tithing-men, bailiffs, bumme or shoulder-marshals' from Gayton's Notes on Don Quixote, bk. ii. c. a. He accordingly suggests that the term arose from the bailiff or pursuer catching a man 'by y. Mr. the hinder part of his garment;' and he is probably right.  $\gamma$ . Mr. Wedgwood derives it from the verb 'bum, to dun' in Halliwell; but this may be a familiar contraction of the word bumbailiff itself.

BUMBLE-BEE, a bee that hums. (O. Low G.) The verb bumble is a frequentative of boom. -O. Du. bommelen, to buzz, hum (Oudemans); Bremen bummeln, to sound. -O. Du. and Du. bommen. to sound hollow (like an empty barrel). See Boom (1), and Bump (2). Our As both boom and ham signify 'to buzz,' the insect is called, indifferently, a bumble-bee or a humble-bee.

BUMBOAT, a boat used for taking out provisions to a ship. (Dutch.) Mr. Wedgwood quotes Roding's Marine Dict. to shew that Du. bumboot means a very wide boat used by fishers in South Holland and Flanders, also for taking a pilot to a ship. He adds: probably for bumboo, a boat fitted with a bum, or receptacle for keeping fish alive. This is very likely right. The word bum is also that the M.E. form bolaster = Gael. bulaistear; it seems probable that butch; and was formerly spelt bon or bonne. See Oudemans, who gives bon or bonne with the sense of box, chest, cask; also bonne, the Rich. Pers. Dict., p. 293, we find: 'Pers. bangalah, of or belonging hatch of a ship. O. Du. bonne also means a bung, now spelt bom in to Bengal; a bungalow.' From the name Bengal. [+] Dutch, thus exhibiting the very change from s to m which is required. Besides, the sound nb soon becomes mb.

BUMP (1), to thump, beat; a blow, bunch, knob. (C.) Shak. has bump, a knob, Rom. i. 3: 53. – W. pump, a round mass, a lump; pumpio, to thump, bang.+Corn. bom, bum, a blow. + Irish beum, a stroke; also, to cut, gash, strike. + Gael. beum, a stroke, blow; also, to smite, strike. ¶ In this case, and some other similar ones, the original word is the verb, signifying 'to strike;' next, the sb. signifying 'blow;' and lastly, the visible effect of the blow, the 'bump' raised by it. Allied to Bunch, q. v.; also to Bun, and Bunion. BUMP (2), to make a noise like a bittern. (C.) 'And as a bittour bumps within a reed;' Dryden, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 194; where Chaucer has bumbleth, C. T. 6544. – W. bump, a hollow sound; aderyn y bump, a bittern; cf. Gael. buabhall, a trumpet, Irish bubhal, a hora. The same root appears again in Lat. bombus, Gk. βόμβοs, a BUMPER, a drinking-vessel. (F.) Dryden has bumpers in his translation of Juvenal (Todd's Johnson). This word appears in English just as the older bombard, a drinking-vessel (Tempest, ii. 2. 21). disappears. Hence the fair conclusion that it is a corruption of it. For the etymology, see Bombard. ¶ A fancied connection with bump, a swelling, has not only influenced the form of the word, but added the notion of fulness, so that a bumper generally means, at present, a glass filled to the brim.' BUMPKIN, a thick-headed fellow. (Dutch?) Used by Dryden, who talks of 'the country bumphin,' Juvenal, Sat. 3, 1. 295. The index to Cotgrave says that the F. for bumhin is chicambault; and Cot. has: 'Chicambault, m. The luffe-block, a long and thick piece of wood, whereunto the fore-saile and sprit-saile are fastened, when a ship goes by the wind.' I think it clear that bumkin (then pro-nounced nearly as boomkin) is the dimin. of boom, formed by adding to boom (a Dutch word) the Dutch dimin. ending -ken; so that the word signifies 'a small boom,' or 'luff-block;' and metaphorically, a blockhead, a wooden-pated fellow; perhaps originally a piece of nautical slang. The Dutch suffix -ken is hardly used now, but was once in use freely, particularly in Brabant; see Ten Kate, ii. 73; it answers exactly to the E. suffix -kin, which took its place. [+] BUN, a sort of cake. (F., = Scand.) Skelton has bun in the sense of a kind of loaf given to horses; ed. Dyce, i. 15. = O. prov. F. bugne, a name given at Lyons to a kind of fritters (Burguy); a variation of E bigne, a swelling riging from a blow (Burguy). B These F

F. bigne, a swelling rising from a blow (Burguy). B. These F. words are represented by the mod. F. dimin. beignet, a fritter; the connection is established by Cotgrave, who gives the dimin. forms as bugnet and bignet, with this explanation : "Bignets, little round loaves, or lumps made of fine meale, oile, or butter, and raisons: buns, Lenten loaves; also, flat fritters made like small pancakes. y. The word is of Scandinavian origin; see Bunion, Bunch. [†] BUNCH, a knob, a cluster. (Scand.) M. E. bunche, Debate of the Body and Soul, Vernon MS.; where the copy printed in Mätzner has bulche, 1.370. – Icel. bunki, a heap, pile. + O. Swed. bunke, any-thing prominent, a heap (Ihre); Swed. dial. bunke, a heap (Rietz). +Dan. bunke, a heap. - O. Swed. bunga, to strike (Ihre); Swed. dial. bunga, to bunch out, &c. (Rietz).  $\beta$ . The notion of 'bunching out' is due to 'striking,' as in other cases, the swelling being caused by the blow; see Bump (1). Cf. Du. bonken, to beat, belabour; M.E. bunchen, to beat, P. Plowman, A. prol. 71; B. prol. 74. See Bang. Y. Cf. also W. pung, a cluster; pung, what swells out; pump, a round mass, lump; pumpio, to thump, bang; pumplog, bossed, knobbed.

Der. bunch-y BUNDLE, something bound up, a package. (E.) M. E. bundel (ill-spelt bundelle), Prompt. Parv. p. 55. - A. S. byndel, an unauthorised form, given by Somner; a dimin., by adding suffix el, of bund, a bundle, a thing bound up; the plural bundle, bundles, occurs as a gloss of Lat. fasciculos in the Lind. MS. in Matt. xiii. 30. + Du. bondel, a bundle. + G. bundel, a dimin. of bund, a bundle, bunch, trass. - A. S. bindan, to bind. See Bind.

BUNG, a plug for a hole in a cask. (C.?) M. E. tunge, Prompt. Parv. p. 55. 'Bung of a tonne or pype, bondel ;' Palsgrave. Etym. Parv. p. 55. 'Bung of a tonne or pype, bondel;' Palsgrave. Etym. uncertain. Perhaps of Celtic origin. 1. Cf. W. bung, an orifice, also a bung; O. Gael. buine, a tap, spigot; Irish buinne, a tap, spout; also, a torrent. 2. Again, we find an O. Du. bonne, a bung, stopple, for which Oudemans gives two quotations; hence mod. Du. 8. Yet again, we find the F. bonde, of which Palsbom, a bung. grave has the dimin. bondel, cited above. Cotgrave explains bonde by 'a bung or stopple; also, a sluice, a floodgate.' This F. bonde is derived by Diez from Suabian G. bunte, supposed to be a corruption of O. H. G. spunt, whence the mod. G. spund, a bung, an orifice. To derive it from the O. Du. bonne would be much simpler.

BUNGALOW, a Bengal thatched house. (Pers., - Bengalee.) In BUNGLE, to mend clumsily. (Scand.) Shak. has bungle, Hen. V, ii. 2. 115; Sir T. More has bungler, Works, p. 1089 c. Prob. for bongle, and that for bangle, formed from bang by suffix 1e, denoting to strike often, and hence to patch clumsily. B. This is rendered very strike often, and hence to patch clumsily.  $\beta$ . This is rendered very probable by comparison with Swed. dial. bangla, to work ineffectually (Rietz). Ihre gives an Old Swed. bunga, to strike, and Rietz gives bonka and bunka as variants of Swed. dial. banka, to strike. See Bang. Der. bungl-er. [+] BUNION, a painful swelling on the foot. (Ital., - Teut.?) Not in early use. Rich. quotes bunians from Rowe's Imitations of Horace, bk. iii. ode 9; written, perhaps, about A.D. 1700. - Ital. bugnone, bugno, any round knob or bunch, a boil or blain; cf. O.F. bugne, bune, buigne, a swelling (Burguy); F. bigne, a bump, knob, rising, or swelling after a knock (Cotgrave). - Icel. bunga, an elevation, convexity; bunki, a heap, bunch. See Bunch. B. The prov. Eng. bunny, a swelling after a blow, in Forby's East Anglian Dialect, is from the O.F. bugne. See Bun. ¶ The O.F. bugne is from the Icel. bunga or bunki. The Ital. bugnone is from Ital. bugno, the same as the O.F. bugne, with the addition of the Ital. augmentative suffix -one. [+]

BUNK, a wooden case or box, serving for a seat by day and a bed by night; one of a series of berths arranged in tiers. (Scand.) nautical term; and to be compared with the Old Swed, bunke, which Ihre defines as 'tabulatum navis, quo cæli injuriæ defenduntur a vectoribus et mercibus.' He adds a quotation, viz. 'Gretter giorde sier grof under bunka'= Gretter made for himself a bed under the boarding or planking [if that be the right rendering of 'sub tabulato']. The ordinary sense of O. Swed. bunke is a pile, a heap, orig. some-thing prominent. The mod. Swed. bunke means a flat-bottomed bowl; dialectally, a heap, bunch (Rietz). For further details, see Bunch.

BUNT, the belly or hollow of a sail; a nautical term. (Scand.) In Kersey's Dict. a. Wedgwood explains it from Dan. bundt, Swed. bunt, a bundle, a bunch; and so Webster. If so, the root is the verb B. But I suspect it is rather a sailor's corruption of some to bind. Scandinavian phrase, formed from the root which appears in Eng. as bow, to bend. Cf. Dan. bugi, a bend, turn, curve; Swed. bugi, a bend, flexure; Dan. bug, a belly; bug paa Scil, a bunt; bug-gaarding, a bunt-line; bug-line, bowline; bug-spryd, bowsprit; bugne, to bend; de bugnende Seil, the bellying sails or canvas; Swed. buk på ett segel, the bunt of a sail; bugning, flexure. Thus the right word is Swed.

buntle, buntlin, suggest that the root is a verb bunt, with a frequentative buntle. The M. E. bunten means to push with the head, to poke the head forward; cf. Bret. bounta, bunta, to push, shove. On the other hand, we find Lowl. Sc. buntin, short and thick, plump, bunt, a rabbit's tail; Welsh bontin, the rump; bontinog, large-buttocked. Any connection with G. bunt, variegated, is most unlikely, BUNTING (2), a thin woollen stuff, of which ship's flags are made. (E. ?) I can find no quotations, nor can I trace the word's history. The suggestion of a connection with High G. bunt, variegated, is unlikely, though the word is now found in Dutch as bont. Mr. Wedgwood says: 'To bunt in Somerset is to bolt meal, whence bunning, bolting-cloth, the loose open cloth used for sifting flour, and now more generally known as the material of which flags are made." I have nothing better to offer; but wish to remark that it is a mere guess, founded on these entries in Halliwell: 'Bunt, to sift: Somerset;' and 'Bunting, sifting flour: West.' It is not said that bunting is 'a bolting-clock.' The verb bunt, to bolt flour, is M. E. bonten, to sift, and occurs in the Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 93. See above. [†]

BUOY, a floating piece of wood fastened down. (Du., -L.) It occurs in Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. p. 411. Borrowed, as many sea-terms are, from the Dutch. -Du. boei, a buoy; also, a shackle, fetter. - Low Lat. boia, a fetter, a clog. ['Raynouard, Lex, Rom. ii. 232, quotes "jubet compedibus constringi, quos rustica lingua boias vocat." Plautus has it in a pun, Capt. iv. 2. 109, ". . Boius est; boiam terit;" note to Vie de Seint Auban, l. 680, ed. Atkinson; q.v.] - Lat. boiæ, pl. a collar for the neck, orig. made of leather. β. Perhaps from Gk. βόειοs, βόειοs, made of ox-hide; from Gk. βοῦs, an ox. See Beef. ¶ A broy is so called because chained to its place, like a clog chained to a prisoner's leg. Cf. 'In presoune, fetterit with boyis, sittand;' Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, x. 766. Der. buoy ant, buoy-anc-y.

The same

word as bourdon, the drone of a bagpipe or the bass in music. M. E. burdown, Chaucer, Prol. 674. - F. bourdon, 'a drone or dorre-bee; also, the humming or buzzing of bees; also, the drone of a bagpipe; Cot. - Low Lat. burdonem, acc. of burdo, a drone or non-working bee, which is probably an imitative word, from the buzzing sound made by the insect; bur-being another form of buzz, q. v. The M.E. bourdon also means a pilgrim's staff, which is another meaning of the F. bourdon. The Low Lat. burdo also means (1) an ass, mule, (2) a long organ-pipe. Diez thinks the 'organ-pipe' was so named from resembling a 'staff,' which he derives from burdo in the sense of 'mule.' But perhaps the 'staff' was itself a pitch-pipe, as might easily have been contrived. [+]

BURHAU, an office for business. (F., -L.) Used by Swift and Burke; see Richardson. - F. bureau, a desk, writing-table, so called because covered with baize. Cotgrave has: 'Bureau, a thick and course cloth, of a brown russet or darke-mingled colour; also, the table that's within a court of audit or of audience (belike, because it is usually covered with a carpet of that cloth); also the court itself." And see Brachet, who quotes from Boileau, vêtu de simple bureau. – O.Fr. burel, coarse woollen stuff, russet-coloured. – O.F. buire (F. bure), reddish brown. - Lat. burrus, fiery-red (Fick, ii. 154). + Gk.  $\pi v \rho \rho \delta s$ , flame-coloured. - Gk.  $\pi \tilde{v} \rho$ , fire. See Fire. ¶ Chaucer has 'borel folk,' i. e. men roughly clad, men of small account, where borel is from the O. F. burel above. Dor. bureau-cracy; see aristocracy.

BURGEON, a bud; to bud. (F.) M. E. boriowne (printed bor-jourse), a bud ; Arthur and Merlin, p. 65 (Halliwell's Dict.). ' Gramino, to borioune (printed borionne) or kyrnell; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 276, note 3.-F. bourgeon, a young bud; Cot. B. Diez cites a shorter form in the Languedoc boure, a bud, the eye of a shoot; and he supposes the word to have been formed from the M.H.G. buren, O.H.G. purjan, to raise, push up. If so, we are at once led to M.H.G. bor, O. H. G. por, an elevation, whence is formed the word in-por, upwards, in common use as G. empor; cf. G. empörung, an insurrection, i. e. a breaking forth. Cf. Gael. borr, borra, a knob, a bunch; borr, to swell, become big and proud. See Burr. BURGESS, a citizen. (F., -M. H.G.) M. E. burgeys, Chaucer, Prol. 369; Havelok, 1328.-O. F. burgeis, a citizen. - Low Lat. burgensis, adj., belonging to a city. - Low Lat. burgus, a small fort (Vegetius). - M. H. G. burc, a fort; cognate with E. borough. See Borough.

BURGHER, a citizen. (E.) In Gascoigne, Fruites of Warre, St. 14. Formed by adding er to burgh =borough. See Borough. BUBGLAB, a housebreaker, thief. (F., - L.) Dogberry misuses burglary, Much Ado, iv. 2. 52. Florio [ed. 1680, not in ed. 1611] wood). Burglar is an old F. law term. It is made up of F. bourg, town, and some dialectal or corrupted form of O. F. leres, a robber, Lat. latro. Roquefort has: 'Lere, leres, lerre, voleur, larron; larro;' and see laron in Burguy. Hence the Low Lat. burgulator, a burglar, nocturnal thief; commonly shortened to burgator. See Larceny and Borough. Der. burglar-y, burglar-i-ous. BURGOMASTER, a chief magistrate of a town. (Dutch.)

'Every of the foresayd cities sent one of their burgomasters vnto the town of Hague in Holland; ' Hackluyt, Voyages, i. 157. - Du. burgemeester, a burgomaster; whence it has been corrupted by assimilating burge- to burgo-, crude form of Low Lat. burgus, a town (Latinised form of borough or burgh), whilst meester is spelt in the E. fashion. -Du. burg, a borough, cognate with E. borough, q. v.; and meester, a master (Lat. magister), for which see Master.

BURIAL, a grave; the act of burying. (E.) M. E. buriel, a grave; Trevisa, ii. 27; biriel, a tomb, Wycl. Matt. xxvii. 60. But the form is corrupt; the older Eng. has buriels, which is a singular, not a plural substantive, in spite of its apparent plural form. 'Beryels, sepulchrum; ' Wright's Vocab. i. 178. 'An buryels,' i. e. a tomb; Rob. of Glouc, p. 204. - A. S. birgels, a sepulchre; Gen. xxiii. 9; Palerne, l. 9. In the Prompt. Parv. p. 56, we find: 'Burwhe, burwhe, the commoner form being birgen, Gen. xxiii. 1. Formed, by suffx [burwch?] burwe, burrowe, town; burgus.' Thus burrow is a mere ¶ Other examples of the suffix -els or -else occur in A. S.; e. g. fetels, a bag, Josh. ix. 4; rédels or rédelse, a riddle, Numb. xii. 8.

BURROW

BURIN, an engraver's tool. (F., -Ital., -G.) Borrowed from F. burin; a word borrowed from Ital. borino (Brachet). Probably formed from M. H. G. boren (O. H. G. porón, G. bohren), to bore; cognate with E. bore. See Bore.

BURL, to pick knots and loose threads from cloth; in clothmaking. (F., - Low Lat.) To burl is to pick off burls or knots in cloth, the word being properly a sb. Halliwell has: 'Burle, a knot, or bump; see Topsell's Hist. Beasts, p. 250. Also, to take away the knots or impure parts from wool or cloth. "Desquamore vestes, to burle clothe;" Elyot. Cf. Herrick's Works, ii. 15. M. E. burle, 2 knot in cloth; see Prompt. Parv. p. 56. - Prov. Fr. borril, bowrril, a flock or end of thread which disfigures cloth; cited by Mr. Wedgwood as a Languedoc word. - F. bowrre, expl. by Cotgrave as ' flocks, or locks of wool, hair, &c. serving to stuff saddles, balls, and such like things.' - Low Lat. burra, a woollen pad (Ducange). See Burr.

BURLESQUE, comic, ironical. (F., - Ital.) Dryden speaks of the dull burlesque; Art of Poetry, canto i. 1. 81. It is properly an adjective. - F. burlesque, introd. in 16th cent. from the Ital. (Brachet.) - Ital. burlesco, ludicrous. - Ital. burla, a trick, waggery, fun, banter. B. Diez suggests that burla is a dimin. from Lat. burra, used by Ausonius in the sense of a jest, though the proper sense is rough hair. This supposition seems to explain also the Span. borla, a tassel, tuft, as compared with Span, borra, goat's hair. See Burr.  $\P$  Mr. Wedgwood cites 'Gaelic burl, mockery, ridicule, joking;' this seems to be a misprint for burt. No doubt some Italian words are Celtic; but the Gaelic forms are not much to be depended on in elucidating Italian. BURLY, large, corpulent, huge. (E.) M. E. burli, Perceval, 269; borlic, large, ample, Reliq. Antique, i. 223; burliche, Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 586. a. Of Eng. origin, though the first part of the word does not clearly appear except by comparison with the M. H. G. burlih, purlih, that which raises itself, high; from the root discussed under Burgeon, q.v.  $\beta$ . We thus see that the word is formed by adding the A.S. suffix lic, like, to the root (probably Celtic) which appears in the Gael. and Irish borr, borra, a knob, a bunch, grandeur, greatness; whence borrach, a great or haughty proud man, and Gael. borrail, swaggering, boastful, haughty, proud; words which are the Celtic equivalents of burly. See Burr. [+]

BURN, to set on fire. (E.) M. E. bernen, Ancren Riwle, p. 306; also brennen (by shifting of r), Chaucer, C. T. 2333. - A. S. barnan, also byrnan, to burn; Grein, i. 77, 153; also beornan, p. 109; and brinnan, in the comp. on-brinnan, ii. 340. + O. Fries. barna, berna. + Icel. brenna. + Dan. brende. + Swed. brünna. + Goth. brinnan. + O. H. G. prinnan; M. H. G. brinnen; G. brennen. B. Prob. connected with Lat. feruere, to glow, and perhaps with furere, to rage. See  $\checkmark$  BHUR, to be active, rage, in Fick, i. 163. If this be the case, burn is related to brew. and fervent. Der. burn-er.

BURN, a brook. See Bourn (1). BURNISH, to polish. (F., -G.) Shak. has burnished, Merch. Ven. ii. 1. 2; M. E. burnist, Gawain and Grene Knight, ed. Morris, Veli, H. 1. 2; W. E. ournas, Gawan and Orther Angen, ed. Moris, 212; burned, Chaucer, C. T. 1985. – O. F. burnir, brunir, to embrown, to polish; pres. pt. burnissant (whence the E. suffix -ish). – O. F. brun, brown. – M. H. G. brún, brown; cognate with A. S. brún, brown, See Brown. Der. burnisker. [1]

BURR, BUR, a rough envelope of the seeds of plants, as in the burdock, (E.) M. E. burre, tr. by 'lappa, glis;' Prompt. Parv. p. 56; cf. borre, a hoarseness or roughness in the throat, P. Plowman, C. xx. 306. In Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 316, we find: Burr, pl. burres, bur, burs, Arctium lappa; Gl. Rawlinson, c. 60;; Gl. Sloane, 5. Apparently an F. word. + Swed. borre, a sea-hedge-hog, sea-urchin; kardborre, a burdock. + Dan. borre, burdock. + Ital. borra, cow-hair, shearings of cloth, a.c.; which, with Low Lat. reburrus, rugged, rough, and Lat. burræ, refuse, trash, point back to a Lat. burrus \*, rough; with which Fick (ii. 17) compares the Gk.  $\beta \epsilon \rho \delta \nu$ ,  $\beta \epsilon \mu \rho \delta \nu$ , rough, rugged, given by Hesychius. The ultimate notion seems to be that of 'rough.' Cf. also Gael. borra, a knob. bunch; borr, to swell; Irish borr, a knob, hunch, bump; borraim, I swell. And cf. F. bourre in Brachet. Der. burr, a roughness in ¶ There is a difficulty in the the throat, hoarseness; bur-dock. fact that the word begins with b in Latin as well as in Scandinavian. The original word may have been Celto-Italic, i. e. common to Latin and Celtic, and the Scand. words were probably borrowed from the Celtic, whilst the Romance words were borrowed from the Latin.

BURROW, a shelter for rabbits. (E.) M. E. borwgh, a den, cave, lurking-place; 'Fast byside the borwgh there the barn was inne' = close beside the burrow where the child was; William of variation of borough.  $\beta$ . The provincial Eng. burrow, sheltered, is from the A. S. beorgan, to protect; i.e. from the same root.  $\gamma$ . The vb. to burrow is der. from the sb. See Borough. Der. burrow, verb.

BURSAR, a purse-keeper, treasurer. (Low Lat., -Gk.) Wood, in his Athene Oxonienses, says that Hales was 'bursar of his college' (R.) - Low Lat. bursarius, a treasurer. - Low Lat. bursa, a purse, with suffix -arius, denoting the agent. -Gk. Suppar, a hide, skin; of which purses were made. See Purse. Der. bursar-ship.

BURST, to break asunder, break forth. (E.) M. E. birsten, bresten, Chaucer, C. T. 1982; P. Plowman, B. vii. 165. – A. S. bersten, Grein, i. 92. + Du. bersten, to burst asunder. + Icel. bresta. + Swed. brista. + Dan. briste. + O. H. G. pröstan, M. H. G. brösten (G. bersten). + Gael. bris, brisd, to break. + Irish britaim, I break. B. The Teutonic stem is BRAST, Fick, iii. 216; which seems to be a mere extension of the stem BRAK, the original of our break. Sce Break.

BURTHEN; see Burden (1).

BURY (1), to hide in the ground. (E.) M. E. burye, P. Plowman, B. xi. 66. – A. S. byrgan, byrigan, Grein, i. 152; closely related to A. S. beorgan, to protect; for which see Borough. Der. buri-al, q. v. 1 It is remarkable that there is another A. S. verb, meaning to taste, which also has the double spelling byrgan and beorgan. BUBY (2), a town; as in Canterbury. (E.) A variant of borough, BURY (2), a town; as in Canterbury. (E.) A variant of borough, due to the peculiar declension of A. S. burk, which changes to the form byrig in the dat. sing. and nom. and acc. plural. See Borough. BUSH (1), a thicket. (Scand.) The word is rather Scand. than F., as the O. F. word was merely bos (F. bois); whereas bush is due to a F. pron. of the M. E. busk.] M. E. busch, busk, Chaucer, C. T. 1519; busch, busk, P. Plowman, B. xi. 336; busk, Will. of Palerne, 819, 3069. — Dan. busk, a bush, shrub. + Swed. buske, a bush. + Du. bouch, a wood, forest. + O. H. G. busc (G. busch). [The Low Lat. boreus, Ital. bosco, F. bois, are derived from the Teutonic.] B. Cf. Du. bos, a bunch, bundle, truss. Mr. Wedgwood suggests the notion of 'tuft;' perhaps it may be, accordingly, connected with boss. See BOES. Der. bush-j, bush-i-ness.

BUSH (2), the metal box in which an axle of a machine works. (Dutch.) Modern, and mechanical. – Du. bus, a box; here the equivalent of the E. box, which is similarly used. – Lat. buxus, the box-tree. See further under Box(1).

BUSHELL, a measure. (F., -Low Lat., -Gk.) M. E. bushel, Chaucer, C. T. 4091.-O. F. boissel; Burguy, s. v. boiste. - Low Lat. boissellus, buscellus, a bushel; also spelt bussellus. - Low Lat. busselus, bussela, bussela, a little box. - Low Lat. bussela, a form of buxida, the acc. case of buxis = Gk. wyie, a box. See Box (3).

BUSK (1), to get oneself ready. (Scand.) M. E. buske, busken, P. Plowman, B. ix. 133.—Icel. búask, to get oneself ready; see Cleasby and Vigfusson's Icel. Dict. pp. 87, col. 1, and 83, col. 1; Dasent, Burnt Njál, pref. xvi, note. It stands for búa-sk, where búa is to prepare, and -sk is for sik (cf. G. sick), oneself. The neut. sense of búa is to live, dwell, from  $\checkmark$  BHU, to be. The Gael. busgainnick, to dress, adorn (old Gael. busg) is merely borrowed from the Scand. Gaelic has borrowed many other words from the same source.

BUSK (2), a support for a woman's stays. (F.) Busk now means a piece of whalebone or stiffening for the front of a pair of stays; but was originally applied to the whole of the stays. a. Cotgrave has: 'Bue, a buske, plated body, or other quilted thing, worne to make, or keep, the body straight;' where bue means the trunk of the body; see Bulk.  $\beta$ . He also has: 'Busque,... a buske, or buste.'  $\gamma$ . Also: 'Buste, m. as Bue, or, a bust; the long, small (or sharppointed) and hard quilted belly of a doublet; also the whole bulk, or body of a man from his face to his middle; also, a tombe, a sepulchre.' B. It is tolerably clear, either that F. busque is a corruption of F. buste, caused by an attempt to bring it nearer to the F. buse, here cited from Cotgrave; or otherwise, that buste is a corruption of busque, which is more likely. See Bust.

BUSKIN, a kind of legging. (Dutch?) Shak. has buskin'd, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. i. 71. Cotgrave has: 'Brodequin, a buskin.' Origin unknown. Some suggest that it stands for bruskin or broskin, and is the dimin of Du. broos, a buskin. Brachet derives F. brodequin from the same Du. word. [†]

BUSS (1), a kiss; to kiss. (O. prov. G.; confused with F.,-L.) Used by Shak. K. John, iii. 4. 35.-O. and prov. G. (Bavarian) bussen, to kiss; Schmeller. Webster refers to Luther as an authority for bus in the sense of a kiss. + Swed. dial. pussa, to kiss; puss, a kiss (Rietz). Cf. also Gael. bus, W. bus, mouth, lip, snout. B. The difficulty is to account for the introduction into England of a High-German word. Most likely, at the time of the reformation, it may have happened that some communication with Germany may have rather modified, than originated, the word. For, in M. E, the form is bass. Cf. 'Thus they kiss and bass;' Calisto and Melibæa, in Old BUTT.

BUSS (2), a herring-boat. (F.,-L.) In Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, pp. 149, 153, 158, 169.-O.F. busse, buse, buse, a sort of boat (Burguy). [+ Du. buis, a herring-boat. + G. büse, buise (Flügel's G. Dict.)] - Low Lat. bussa, a kind of a larger boat; bussia, a kind of boat; also, a box. B. Merely a variation of the word which appears in F. as boise (O. F. boisse), and in E. as box; alluding to the capacity of the boat for stowage. See Bushel, Box (2).

BUST, the upper part of the human figure. (F. - Ital.) Used by Cotgrave; see quotations under Busk (2). - F. buste, introduced in 16th century from Ital. (Brachet). - Ital. busto, bust, human body, stays; cf. bustino, bodice, corset, slight stays. - Low Lat. bustum, the trunk of the body, the body without the head. B. Etym. uncertain. Diez connects it with Low Lat. busta, a small box, from Lat. acc. busida; see Box (2). Compare the E. names chest and trunk. Others refer to Low Lat. busta, or busca, a log of wood, O. Fr. busche, F. buche; for which see Bush (1). ¶ If we take the latter, we can at once explain busk (O. F. busque) as derived from the same Low Lat. busca. See Busk (2).

BUSTARD, a kind of bird. (F., -L.) 'A bustard, buteo, picus;' Levins, 30, 12. Used by Cotgrave, who has: 'Bistarde, a bustard.' [Sherwood's Eng. and Fr. Dictionary, appended to Cotgrave, has: 'A bustard, or bistard, bistard, outarde, houtarde, oustarde, houstarde, houtarde;' whence houstarde has been copied into Todd's Johnson as boustarde f] We thus see that it is a corruption of F. bistard; possibly due to confusion with buzzard. - Lat. avis tarda, a slow bird. Pliny has: 'proxime iis sunt, quas Hispania aves tardas appellat, Græcia áriðas;' Nat. Hist. x. 22.  $\beta$ . Thus bistard is for avis-tard, with the a dropped; so in Portuguese the bird is called both abetarda and betarda. The mod. Fr. has made avis tarda into outarde; cf. the form oustarde quoted above. ¶ Thus Diez, who is clearly right. BUSTLE, to stir about quickly, to scurry. (Scand.) Shak. has bustle, to be active, Rich. III, i. 1. 152. - Icel. bustla, to bustle, splash about in the water; bustl, a bustle, splashing about, said of a fish. A about in the water, bush, a bush, spinsing about, said of a half. A shorter form appears in the Dan base, to bounce, pop; Swed. basa pd en, to rush upon one; Swed. dial. basa, to strike, thrust (Rietz). B. Halliwell gives the form bushle (with several references); this is probably an older form, and may be referred back to A. S. bysgian, to be busy. In any case, bushle and busy are probably from the same ultimate source. See Busy. BUSY, active. (E.) M. E. bisy, Chaucer, Prol. 321. – A. S. bysig.

BUSY, active. (E.) M. E. bisy, Chaucer, Prol. 321. – A. S. bysig, busy, Grein, i. 153; cf. bysgu, labour, bysgian, to employ, fatigue. +Du. bezig, busy, active; bezigheid, business, occupation; bezigen, to use. employ.  $\beta$ . Cf. Skt. bhuranya, to be active; from  $\checkmark$  BHUR, to be mad, whence Lat. furere; Benfey, p. 657. ¶ The attempt to connect busy with F. besoin seems to me futile; but it may yet be true that the O. Fr. busoignes in the Act of Parliament of 1372, quoted by Wedgwood in the phrase that speaks of lawyers 'pursuant busoignes en la Court du Roi,' suggested the form bisinesse in place of the older compounds bisihede and bisichipe; see Stratmann. Der. busi-ness, busy-body. [†]

BUT (1), prep. and conj., except. (E.) M. E. bute, Havelok, 85; buten, Layamon, L 23. – A. S. bútan, conj. except. prep. besides, without; contr. from be-útan, Grein, i. 150. The full form biutan is frequently found in the Heliand, e.g. in L 2188; and even biutan that, unless, l. 2775. B. Be = by; útan = outward, outside; bútan = 'by the outside,' and so 'beyond,' 'except.' + Du. buiten, except. B. The form útan is adverbial (prob. once a case of a sb.), formed from út, out. ¶ All the uses of but are from the same source; the distinction attempted by Horne Tooke is quite unfounded. The form be for by is also seen in the word be-youd, a word of similar formation. See further under Out.

BUT (2), to strike; a but-end; a cask. See Butt (1) and Butt (2). BUTCHER, a slaughterer of animals. (F.) M. E. bocher, I'. Plowman, B. prol. 218; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, I. 2832.-O. F. bocher, originally one who kills he-goats.-O. F. boc (F. bou), a hegoat; allied to E. buck. See Buok. Der. bucker, verb; bucher-y. BUTLER, one who attends to bottles. (F.,-L.) M. E. boteler, boller, Wyclif, Gen. xl. 1, 2; boteler (3 syll.), Chaucer, C. T. 16220.-Norm. F. butwiller, a butler, Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson, I. 677; and see note - Norm. F. butwille, a bottle. See Bottle. Der. buttery, a corrupted word; q. v. [+] BUTT (1), an end, thrust; to thrust. (F.,-M. H. G.) [The

BUTT (1), an end, thrust; to thrust. (F., -M. H. G.) [The senses of the sb. may be referred back to the verb, just as the F. bout depends on bouter (Brachet).] M. E. butten, to push, strike, Ormulum, 1. a810; Havelok, 1916. - O. F. boter, to push. butt, thrust, strike; of which the Norman form was buter, Vie de Saint Auban, 534. - M. H. G. bózen, to strike, beat; cognate with A. S. bedican. See Beat. B. Similarly, in the sense of butt-end, a reduplicated form, the E. butt is from O. F. bot (F. bout), an end. Hall has 'but of their's speres;' Hen. V, an. 10; also 'but-end of the spere;' Hen. VIII, an. 6. C. In the sense of 'a butt to shoot at,' or 'a rising ground, a knoll,' we have borrowed the F. butte, which see in Cotgrave and Brachet. Cf. F. but, a mark; buter, to strike; from the same root as before[\*] BUTT (2), a large barrel. (F., -M. H. G.) In Levins, 195. 13. Not E. [The A. S. byt or bytte, occurring in the pl. bytta in Matt. ix. 17, and the dat. sing. bytte, Psalm, xxii. 7, produced in M. E. bitte or bit, given under butte in Stratmann; cf. Icel. bytta, a pail, a small tub. The A. S. butte is a myth.] Our modern word is really French. -O. F. boute; F. botte, which Cotgrave explains as 'the vessel which $we call a butt.' <math>\beta$ . Thus butt is merely a doublet of boot, a covering for the leg and foot, and the two words were once pronounced much more nearly alike than they are now. See Boot (1).

BUTTER, a substance obtained from milk by churning. (L., – Gk.) M. E. botere, Wyclif, Gen. xviii. 8. – A. S. butera, buter (Bosworth); a borrowed word. – Lat. butyrum. – Gk.  $\beta$ oúrvµov; from  $\beta$ ov., for  $\beta$ oûs, an ox, and rupós, cheese. ¶ The similarity of E. butter to G. butter is simply due to the word being borrowed, not native. Der. butter-cup; also butter-fly, q. v.

built to Ger. builter cup; also builter fly, q. v. BUTTTERFLY, an insect. (E.) A.S. buttor-fleoge, in Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Somner, Nomina Insectorum. – A.S. butter, butter; and fleoge, a fly. + Du. botervilieg. + G. butterfliege, a butterfly; cf. butter; orged (butter-fowl, i. e. butter-bird), a large white moth. B. It has amused many to devise guesses to explain the name. Kilian gives an old Du. name of the insect as boter-schijte, shewing that its excrement was regarded as resembling butter; and this guess is better than any other in as far as it rests on some evidence.

BUTTERY, a place for provisions, esp. liquors. (F.) Shak. has buttery, Tam. Shrew, Ind. i. 103. Again: 'bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink;' Tw. Night, i. 3. 74. [The principal thing given out at the buttery-bar was (and is) beer; the buttery-bar is a small ledge on the top of the half-door (or buttery-hatch) on which to rest tankards. But as butter was (and is) also kept in butteries, the word was easily corrupted into its present form.]  $\beta$ . It is, however, a corruption of M. E. botelerie, i. e. a butlery, or place for bottles. In Rob. of Glouc. p. 191, we read that 'Bedwer the botyler' (i. e. Bedivere the butler) took some men to serve in 'the botelery.' So too, we find: 'Hec botelaria, botelary; 'Wright's Vocab. p. 204. = F. bouteillerie, a cupboord, or table to set bottles on; also, a cupboord or house to keep bottles in; 'Cotgrave. - F. bouteille, a bottle.

BUTTOCK, the rump. (F.; with E. suffix.) Chaucer has buttok, C. T. 3801. It is also spelt bottok, and botok, Wright's Vocabularies, i. 207, 246. It is a dimin. of but, an end; from O. F. bot, F. bout, end, with the E. suffix-ock, properly expressing diminution, as in bull-ock. See Butt (1); also Abut. The Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion of a connection with the Du. bout, a leg, shoulder, quarter of mutton, &c. is easily seen to be wrong; as that is merely a peculiar spelling of the word which appears in English as bolt, and there is no authority for a form boltock.

BUTTON, a small round knob. (F., -M. H. G.) M. E. boton, P. Plowman, B. xv. 121; corrupted to bothum, a bud, Romaunt of the Rose, l. 1721. - O. F. boton, a bud, a button; F. bouton, explained by Brachet 'that which pushes out, makes knobs on plants; thence, by analogy, pieces of wood or metal shaped like buds.' - O. F. boter, to push out; whence E. butt. See Butt (1). Cf. W. bot, a round body; botum, a boss, button.

BUTTRESS, a support ; in architecture. (F.) Bale uses butrasse BUTTHERSS, a support; Apology, p. 155. a. The word is com-monly explained from the F. bouter, to support. Cotgrave has: Boulant, m. a buttress, or shorepost.' Thus all etymologists have B. The truth is rather that failed to account for the ending -ress.  $\beta$ . The truth is rather that buttress is a modification of the O. F. bretesche (bretesque in Cotgrave), once much in use in various senses connected with fortification; such as a stockade, a wooden outwork, a battlement, portal for defence, &c. This word, being used in the sense of 'battlement,' was easily corrupted into that of 'support' by referring it to the F. bouter, the verb to which it was indebted for its present form and meaning. B. The above suggestion is fairly proved by a passage in P. Plowman, A. vi. 79, or B. v. 598, where the word boterased occurs as a past participle, with the sense of 'fortified,' or 'embattled,' or 'supported;' spoken of a fort. The various readings include the forms brutaget, briteschid, and bretaskid, clearly shewing that confusion or identity existed between a buttress and a bretesche. The O.F. bretesche appears in Low Latin as brestachia, bretagia, breteschia, &c. The Provencal form is bertresca, the Italian is bertesca. As to the etymology of this strange word, Diez wisely gives it up. The G. breit, BUXOM, healthy; formerly, good-humoured, gracious; orig. bedient. (E.) Shak. has buxom, lively, brisk, Hen. V, iii. 6. 27.

to bow, bend. + G. biegram, flexible; from biegen, to bend. See Bow. BUY, to purchase. (E.) M. E. buggen, biggen, beyen, &c. The older spelling is commonly buggen, as in the Ancren Riwle, p. 362. -A. S. byegan, biegan, Grein, i. 151. + Goth. bugjan, to buy.  $\beta$ . Perhaps cognate with Skt. bhuj, to enjoy, use (-Lat. fungi); from  $\checkmark$ BHUG, to enjoy. Der. buy-er.

BUZZ, to hum. (E.) Shak. has buzz, to hum, Merch. Ven. iii. 2. 183; also buzz, a whisper, K. Lear, i. 4. 348. Sir T. More speaks of the buzzing of bees; Works, p. 208 g. It is a directly imitative word; and much the same as the Lowland Sc. birr, to make a whirring noise, used by Douglas, and occurring in Burns, Tam Samson's Elegy, st. 7.  $\beta$ . Cf. also Sc. bysse, to hiss like hot iron in water (Douglas's Virgil), and bizz, to hiss, Ferguson's Poems, ii. 16.  $\gamma$ . The Ital. buzzicare, to whisper, buzz, hum, was formed independently, but in order to imitate the same sound.

BUZZARD, an inferior kind of falcon. (F., -L.) Spelt bosarde in the Romaunt of the Rose, 1. 4031; also busard, K. Alisaunder, l. 3047.-F. 'busard, a buzzard;' Cotgrave.-F. buse, a buzzard, with suffix -ard; on which see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, sect. 322.  $\beta$ . The F. buse is from Low Lat. busio - Lat. buser, used by Pliny for a sparrow-hawk. The buzzard still retains the old Latin name; the common buzzard is Buteo vulgaris.

BY, beside, near; by means of, &c. (E.) M. E. bi. - A. S. bi, big; Grein, i. 121, 122. [The form big even appears in composition, as in big-leofe, sustenance, something to live by; but the usual form in composition is be, as in beset.] + O. Fries. and O. Sax. bi. + Du. bij. + O. H. G. bi, pi; M. H. G. bi; G. bei. + Goth. bi. Related to Lat. amb., ambi., Gk. dµpi, Skt. abhi; see Fick, i. 18. Der. by-name, by-word. (But not by-law, q. v.)

BY-BOR. (But not by-law, q. v.) BY-LLAW, a law affecting a township. (Scand.) Usually ridicu-lously explained as being derived from the prep. by, as if the law were 'a subordinate law;' a definition which is actually given in Webster, and probably expresses a common mistake. Bacon has: 'bylaws, or ordinances of corporations; ' Hen. VII, p. 215 (R.), or ed. Lumby, β. Blount, in his Law Dict., shews that the word p. 196, l. 10. was formerly written birlaw or burlaw; and Jamieson, s. v. burlaw, shews that a birlaw-court was one in which every proprietor of a freedom had a vote, and was got up amongst neighbours. 'Laws of burlaw ar maid and determined be consent of neichtbors;' Skene (in Jamieson). There were also burlaw-men, whose name was corrupted into barley-men !- Icel. bajar-lög, a town-law (Icel. Dict. s. v. bær); from bær, a town, and lög, a law. + Swed. bylag; from by, a village, and lag, law. + Dan. bylov, municipal law; from by, a town, and lov, law. y. The Icel. bajar is the genitive of bar or byr, a town, village; der, from búa, to dwell, co-radicate with A. S. búan, to till, cultivate, whence E. bower. See Bower. ¶ The prefix by- in cultivate, whence E. bower. See Bower. this word is identical with the suffix -by so common in Eng. placenames, esp. in Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, such as Whitby, Grimsby, Scrooby, Derby. It occurs in the Cursor Mundi, ed. Morris, pp. 1210, 1216.

BYRE, a cow-house. (Scand.) It is Lowland Scotch and North. E. Jamieson quotes 'of bern [barn] or of byre,' from Gawain and Golagros, i. 3. The word, which seems to have troubled etymologists, is merely the Scandinavian or Northern doublet of E. bower. Cf. Icel. bur, a pantry; Swed. bur, Dan. buwr, a cage, esp. for birds; Swed. dial. bur, a house. cottage, pantry, granary (Rietz); Swed. dial. (Dalecarlia) baur, a housemaid's closet or store-room (Ihre, s. v. bur). With these varied uses of the word, it is easy to see that it came to be used of a cow-house; the orig. sense being 'habitation,' or 'chamber.' The cognate E. bower came to be restricted to the sense of a 'lady's chamber' in most M. E. writers. See Bower.

CAB (1), an abbreviation of cabriolet, q.v. (F.)

CAB(2), a Hebrew measure; 2 Kings, vi. 25. (Heb.) From IIeb. qab, the 18th part of an ephak. The lit. sense is 'hollow' or 'concave;' Concise Dict. of the Bible; s. v. Weights. Cf. Heb. qabab, to form in the shape of a vault. See Alcove.

CABAL, a party of conspirators; also, a plot. (F.,-Heb.) Ben buh- (for bug-); with the suffix -sum, same, like. as in E. win-some, i.e. joy-like, joyons; see March's A. S. Grammar, sect. 229. The actual word buhsum does not appear in A. S. (as far as we know), but is common in Early English; and there is no doubt about the etymo-

Jonson uses it in the sense of 'a secret:' 'The measuring of the temple; a cabal Found out but lately;' Staple of News, iii. I. Bp. Bull, vol. i. ser. 3, speaks of the 'ancient cabala or tradition;' here he uses the Hebrew form. Dryden has: 'When each, by curs'd cabals of women, strove 'To draw th' indulgent king to partial love;' Aurengzebe, i. I. 19. He also uses cabaling, i. e. conspiring. as a present participle; Art of Poetry, canto iv. l. 972.-F. cabale, 'the Jewes Caball, or a hidden science of divine mysteries which, the Rabbies affirme, was revealed and delivered together with the divine law;' Cotgrave.-Heb. gabbilåh, reception, mysterious doctrine received; from the verb gabbilåh, to take or receive; in the Piel conjugation, gibbel, to adopt a doctrine. If The cabinet of 1671 was called the cabal, because the initial letters of the names of its members formed the word, viz. Clifford, Arlington. Buckingham, Ashley, Lauderdale; but the word was in use earlier, and this was a mere coincidence. Der. cabal, verb; cabal-ist, a mystic, cabal-ist-ie. [†]

CABBAGE (1), a vegetable with a large head. (F., -Ital., -L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 124. Spelt cabages in Ben Jonson, The Fox, ii. 1; cabbages in Holland's Pliny, bk. xix. c. 4. Palsgrave has 'cabbysshe, rote, choux cabas.' -O. F. 'choux cabus, a cabbidge;' Cot. He also gives 'Cabusser, to cabbidge; to grow to a head.' [The sb. choux was dropped in English, for brevity.] -O. F. cabus, cabuce, round-headed, great-headed; Cot. Formed, indirectly, from the Lat. caput, a head; the Ital. capuccio, a little head, and lattugacapuccia, cabbage-lettuce (Meadows' Ital. Dict. s. v. cabbage in the E. division), explain the French form. - Lat. caput, a head; cognate with E. head, q. v.

with E. head, q. v. CABBAGE (2), to steal. (F.) In Johnson's Dict. - F. cabasser, to put into a basket; see Cot. - F. cabas, a basket; of uncertain origin. CABIN, a little room, a hut. (C.) M. E. caban, cabane. 'Caban, lytylle howse; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 57. 'Creptest into a caban; 'P. Plowman, A. iii. 184. - W. caban, booth, cabin; dimin. of cab, a booth made with rods set in the ground and tied at the top. + Gael. caban, a booth, tent, cottage. + Irish caban, a cabin, booth, tent. ¶ The word was more likely borrowed directly from Welsh than taken from F. cabane, which is, however, the same word, and ultimately from a Celtic source. Der. cabin-et, from the French; cf. gaberdine.

CABLE, a strong rope. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. cable, cable, kabel; pl. kablen, Layamon, i. 57; where the later text has cables. -O. F. cable (F. câble), given in Cotgrave; but it must have been in early use, having found its way into Swedish, Danish, &c. - Low Lat. caplum, a cable, in Isidore of Seville; also spelt capulum (Brachet). - Lat. capure, to take hold of; cf. Lat. capulus, a handle, haft, hilt of a sword. The Lat. capere = E. have. See Have.

CABOOSLE, the cook's cabin on board ship. (Dutch.) Sometimes spelt camboss, which is a more correct form; the F. form is cambosse. Like most sea-terms, it is Dutch. - Du. kombuis, a cook's room, caboose; or 'the chimney in a ship,' Sewel.  $\beta$ . The etym. is not clear; but it seems to be made up of Du. kom, 'a porridge dish' (Sewel); and buis, a pipe, conduit; so that the lit. sense is 'a dish-chimney,' evidently a jocular term.  $\gamma$ . In other languages, the m is lost; cf. Dan. kabys, Swed. kabysa, a caboose.

CABRIOLET, a one-horse carriage, better known by the abbreviation cab. (F, -L). Mere French. -F, cabriole, a cab; dimin. of cabriole, a caper, a leap of a goat; named from the fancied friskiness and lightness of the carriage. The older spelling of the word is capriole, used by Montaigne (Brachet). -Ital. capriola, a caper, the leap of a kid. -Ital. caprio, the wild-goat. -Lat. caprum, acc. of exper, a goat; cf. Lat. caprea, a kind of wild she-goat. See Caper. CACAO, the name of a tree. (Span., -Mexican.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, we find: 'Chocolate, a kind of compound drink, which we have from the Indians; the principal ingredient is a fruit called cacao, which is about the bigness of a great black fig. See a Treatise of it, printed by Jo. Okes, 1640.' The word cacao is Mexican, and was adopted into Spanish, whence probably we obtained it, and not directly. See Prescott's Conquest of Mexico, cap. v. The cacao-tree, Theobroma cacao, is a totally different tree from the cocoanut tree, though the accidental similarity of the names has caused great confusion. See Chocolate, and Cocoa.

CACHINNATION, loud laughter. (L.) In Bishop Gauden's Anti-Baal-Berith, 1661, p. 68 (Todd's Johnson). Borrowed from Latin, with the F. suffix -tion. – Lat. cachinnationsm, acc. of cachinnatio, loud laughter. – Lat. cachinnare, to laugh aloud ; an imitative word. The Gk. form is xxxá%ur. See Cackle.

word. The Gk. form is saxd(ser. See Cackle. CACK, to go to stool. (L.) M. E. cakken. 'Cakken, or fyystyn, caeo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 58. Found also in Dutch and Danish, but all are borrowed from the Latin. - Lat. cacare. + Gk. sassay ; which is from the sb. sassay, dung. ¶ An A. S. cac-kis, privy, is given by Somner; either he invented it, or it is from Latin or Celtic; there is an O. Irish form cace, dung. See Curtius, i. 170.

CACKLE, to make a roise like a goose. (E.) In early use.

<sup>1</sup> The hen ... ne con but kakelen,' the hen can only cackle; Ancren Riwle, p. 66. May be claimed as English; being evidently of O. Low-G. origin. Cf. Du. kakelen, to chatter, gabble. + Swed. kackla, to cackle, gaggle. + Dan. kagle. + G. gackeln, gakeln. gackern, to cackle, gaggle, chatter. B. The termination -le has a frequentative force. The stem cack- (i. e. kak) is imitative, like gag- in prov. E. gaggle, to cackle, and gob- or gab- in gobble, to make a noise like a turkey, and gabble. Cf. A S. ceahketan, to laugh loudly, Beda, v. 12; G. kichern, to giggle. From the Teutonic base KAK, to laugh, cackle; Fick, iii. 30. ¶ Observe the three gradations of this imitative root, viz. (1) KAK, as in cackle; (2) KIK, as in the nasalised chink in chincough, i. e. kink-cough or chink-cough; and (3) KUK, as in cough, and probably in choke; certainly in chuckle. All refer to convulsive motions of the throat.

CACOPHONY, a harsh. disagreeable sound. (Gk.) 'Cacophonies of all kinds;' Pope, To Swift, April 2, 1733. – Gk. ranopavia, a disagreeable sound. – Gk. ranópavos, harsh. – Gk. ranó-, crude form of ranós, bad; and party, sound, voice. Der. cacophonous; from the Gk. adj. ranópavos directly.

CAD, a low fellow; short for Cadet, q. v. Cf. Sc. cadie, a boy, a low fellow; Burns, Author's Earnest Cry and Prayer, st. 19 [+] CADAVEROUS, corpse-like. (L.) In Hammond's Works, vol.

CADAVEROUS, corpse-like. (L.) In Hammond's Works, vol. iv. p. 529. – Lat. cadauerosus, corpse-like. – Lat. cadauer, a corpse. – Lat. cadare, to fall, fall as a dead man. ¶ Similarly, Gk.  $\pi r \hat{\omega} \mu a$ , a corpse, is from the stem  $\pi ro$ -, connected with  $\pi i \pi r \epsilon_i r$ , to fall. See Cadonce.

CADDY, a small box for holding tea. (Malay.) 'The key of the caddy;' Letter from Cowper to Lady Hesketh, Jan. 19, 1793. The sense has somewhat changed, and the spelling also. It properly means 'a packet of tea of a certain weight,' and the better spelling is catly. 'An original package of tea, less than a half-chest, is called in the trade a "box," "caddy," or "catty." This latter is a Malay word; "kati, a catty or weight equal to  $1_2$  b. avoirdupois." In many dictionaries, catty is described as the Chinese pound;' R. W. W., in Notes and Queries,  $3 ext{ S. x } 323$ . At the same reference I myself gave the following information. 'The following curious passage in a lately-published work is worth notice. "The standard currency of Borneo is brass guns. This is not a figure of speech, nor do I mean small pistols, or blunderbusses, but real cannon, five to ten feet long, and heavy in proportion. The metal is estimated at so much a picul, and articles are bought and sold, and change given, by means of this awkward coinage. The picul contains 100 catties, each of which weighs about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  English pounds. There is one advantage about this currency; it is not easily stolen."—F. Boyle, Adventures among the Dyaks, p. 100. To the word catties the author subjoins a footnote as follows: "Tea purchased in small quantities is frequently enclosed in boxes containing one catty. I offer a diffident suggestion that this may possibly be the derivation of our familiar tea-caddy." I may add that the use of this weight is not confined to Borneo; it is used also in China and is (as I am informed) the only weight in use in Japan.' – Malay kati, a catty, or weight of which one hundred make a pikul of 133 $\frac{1}{2}$  pounds avoirdupois, and therefore equal to 21 $\frac{1}{2}$ or 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pound; it contains 16 tâi; Marsden's Malay Dict. p. 243. CADE, a barrel or cask. (L.) 'A cade of herrings;' 2 Hen. VI, iv. 2, 36. 'Cade of herrynge, or othyr lyke, cada, lacista;' Prompt. Parv. p. 57.—Lat. cadus, a barrel, wine-vessel, cask.

CADENCE, a falling; a fall of the voice. (F.,-L.) 'The golden cadence of poesy;' Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. 126. 'In rime; or elles in cadence;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 114. - F. cadence, 'a cadence, a just falling, round going, of words;' Cot. - Low Lat. cadentia, a falling. - Lat. cadere (pres. part. cadens, gen. cadentis), to fall. + Skt. cad, to fall. Connected with cedere, to give place, give way, depart; Fick, i. 545. Der, from the same source; cadent, K. Lear, i. 4. 307; cadenza, Ital. form of F. cadence. Doublet, chance, q. v.

CADET, a younger son, young military student. (F., -Low L., -L.) 'The cadet of an antient and noble family;' Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses (R.) 'The cadet of a very ancient family;' Tatler, no. 256 [not 265]. - F. cadet, 'a younger brother among gentlemen,' a Poitou word; Cot. The Prov. form is capdet (Brachet), formed from a Low Lat. catitetium, a neuter form not found, but inferred from the Provençal. This Low Lat. cafitettum would mean lit. 'a little head.' The eldest son was called caput, the 'head' of the family, the second the capitettum, or 'lesser head.' - Lat. caput, the head, cognate with E. kead, q. v. Der. cad (a slang word, being a mere abbreviation of cadet, like cab from cabriolet); cadet-ship. [†]

Celtic; there CADUCOUS, falling early, said of leaves or flowers. (L.) Fisher even uses the adj. caduke, i. e. transitory; Seven Psalms, Ps. cxliii. In early use. pt. ii.; which is also in an E. version of Palladius on Husbandry, Cadence CÆSURA, a pause in a verse. (L.) Mere Latin. - Lat. cæsura, a pause in a verse; lit. a cutting off. - Lat. cæsus, pp. of cædere, to cut. Allied to Lat. scindere, to cut. Gk. ox(ser, to split, Skt. chhid, to cut, E. shed; see Curtius, i. 306. - SKID, to cut. CAFTAN, a Turkish garment. (Turk.) - Turk. gafida, a dress.

CAGE, an inclosure for keeping birds and animals. (F., -L.) In early use. 'Ase untowe bird ine cage' = like an untrained bird in a cage; Ancren Riwle, p. 102. = O. F. cage (F. cage), a cage. - Lat. cauca, a hollow place, den, cave, cage for birds. [See the letter-changes explained in Brachet; cf. F. sauge, E. sage, from Lat. saluia.] -Lat. cause, hollow. See Cave; and see Cajole.

CAIRN, a pile of stones. (C.) In Scott, Lady of the Lake, c. v. st. 14, where it rimes with 'stern.' Particularly used of a pile of stones raised on the top of a hill, or set up as a landmark; always applied by us to a pile raised by artificial means. Of quite modern introduction into English. It seems to have come to us from the Gaelic in particular; and it is odd that we should have taken it in the form cairs, which is that of the genitive case, rather than from the nom. cars.  $\beta$ . The form cars (a rock) is common to Gaelic, Irish, Welsh, Manx, Cornish, and Breton ; the sense is, in general, 'a pile of stones,' and it was originally chiefly used of a pile of stones raised over a grave. The Irish carn also means an altar. Cf. Gael. carn, W. carnu, to pile up, heap together. See Chort, and Crag.

CAITUFF, a mean fellow, wretch.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$  It formerly meant 'a captive.' M. E. coitif, a captive, a miserable wretch. 'Caitif to cruel kynge Agamemnon '= captive to the cruel king A.; Chaucer, Troil, and Cres. iii. 331. – O.F. coitif, a captive, a poor or wretched man; now spelt cheif, which see in Brachet. - Lat. captious, a captive, prisoner; but used in Late Lat. in the sense of 'mean,' or 'poor-Booking, which Brachet explains. - Lat. captus, pp. of capere, to take, seize; cognate with E. have, q. v. Doublet, captive.
 CAJOLE, to allure, coax, deceive by flattery. (F., -L.) In Burnet, Hist, Reformation, an. 1522. - O. F. cageoler, to chatter like a bird in a cage; Roquefort. Roquefort also gives cageoleur, a chatterer, ore who amuses by his talk, a deceiver. Thus cageoleur also came to mean 'to amuse by idle talking,' or 'to flatter.' 'Cageoler, to prattle or jangle, like a jay in a cage; to babble or prate much, to little purpose; 'Cot. A word coined from O. F. cage, a cage. See Cage and Gaol. Der. cajol-er, cajol-er-y. ¶ Some have supposed that cajole meant 'to entice into a cage;' which contradicts the evidence. CAKE, a small mass of dough baked, &c. (Scand., -L.) In prov.

E., cake means 'a small round loaf;' see Chaucer, C.T. 4091. In early use. Spelt cake in Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 37, last line. -Icel. and Swed. kaka, a cake; found in O. Swedish; see Ihre. + Dan. kage. + Du. koek, a cake, dumpling. + G. kuchen, a cake, tart. B. The change of vowel in the Scandinavian forms, as distinguished from the Dutch and German ones, is curious, and must be regarded as due to corruption; the connection between all the forms is otherwise clear. The word is not Teutonic ; but merely borrowed from Latin. We cannot separate G. kuchen, a cake, from G. küche, cooking, and hochen, to cook. All from Lat. coquere, to cook; see Cook.

CALABASH, a vessel made of the shell of a dried gourd. (Port. or Span., - Arab.) Calabash, a species of cucurbita; Ash's Dict. 1775. Found in books of travel. Borrowed either from Port. calabaça, a gourd, pumpion, or the equiv. Span. calabaza, a pumpion, calabash; cf. Span. calabaza vinatera, a bottle gourd for wine. [The Or we sound of the Port. word comes much the nearer to English. may have taken it from the French, who in their turn took it from Portuguese. Cotgrave has: 'Callabasse, a great gourd; also, a bottle made thereof.'] - Arab. qar' (spelt with initial kaf and final ain), a gourd, and aybas, dry; the sense being 'dried gourd;' see Richardson's Arab. Dict. ed. 1829, pp. 1225, 215. Der. calabash-tree, a name given to a tree whence dried shells of fruit are procured. CALAMITY, a great misfortune. (F., -L.) In Shak. K. John, iii, 4. 60. And earlier, in Calvin, Four Godly Sermons, ser. 2.-F.

calamité, calamity; Cot. - Lat. acc. calamitatem, from nom. calamitas, a calamity, misfortune.  $\beta$ . Origin uncertain; the common suggestion of a connection with colonus, a stalk (E. houlm) is not satisfactory; cf. rather in-columis, unharmed. Der. coloni:-ous.

CALASH, a sort of travelling carriage. (F., -G., -Slavonic.) * From ladies hurried in caleches ;' Hudibras, c. iii. pt. 2 ; ed. Bell, ii. 156. - F. caleche, a barouche, carriage. - G. kalesche, a calash. B. Of Slavonic origin; Brachet gives the Polish kolaska as the source. Cf. Russ. koliaska, a calash, carriage; so called from being furnished with wheels; from Russ. koleso, dimin. of kolo, a wheel. - & KAL, to drive; see Celerity. B. The same word calask also came to mean (1) the bk. xii. st. 20. - Lat. caducus, easily falling. - Lat. cadere, to fall. See Richardson. - Lat. calcarius, pertaining to lime. - Lat. cale-, stem of calz. See Calx.

CALCINE, to reduce to a calx or chalky powder by heat. (F.,-L.) Chaucer has calcening, C. T. Group G, 771. Better spelt cal-cining; we find calcinacions in 1. 804 below. [Perhaps from Latin directly.] – F. calciner, 'to calcinate, burne to dust by irre any metalt or minerall;' Cot. – Low Lat. calcinare, to reduce to a calx; common in medieval treatises on alchemy. - Lat. calci-, crude form of cal#, stone, lime; used in alchemy of the remains of minerals after being subjected to great heat. See Calx. Der. calcin-at-ion, from Low

Lat. pp. calcinatus. CALCULATE, to reckon. (L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 34. This is a Latin form, from the Lat. pp. calculatus. [The older form is the M. E. calculen; see Chaucer, C. T. 11596;=F. calculer, to reckon.]-Lat. calculare, to reckon by help of small pebbles; pp. calculatus. - Lat. calculus, a pebble; dimin. of calz (stem calc-), a stone; whence also E. chalk. See Calz. Der. calcula-ble, calculation, calculat-ive, calculat-or; also calculus, from the Lat. sb.

CALDRON, CAULDRON, a large kettle. (F.,-L.) caldron; Gower, C. A. ii. 266. But more commonly caudron; Seven Sages, ed. Wright, l. 1231; Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, . 60. - O. F. caldron, caudron, forms given neither in Burguy nor Roquefort, but they must have existed. Most likely they were Picard forms (the Picard using c instead of the Ile of France ck; Brachet, Hist. Gram. Introd. p. 21), the standard O. F. forms being chaldron, chaudron, as shewn by mod. F. chaudron. The O. F. word caldarw, a cauldron, occurs in the very old Glossaire de Cassel; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 2, 1. 19. Cf. Ital. calderone, a cauldron. B. The O. F. chaldron is formed by the augmentative suffix -on (Ital. -one) from the sb. of which the oldest F, form is caldaru (as above). answering to mod. F. chaudière, a copper. - Lat. caldaria ; the phrase uas caldaria, a cauldron, being used by Vitruvins (Brachet); cf. Lat. caldarium, a cauldron, properly neuter of caldarius, adj., that serves for heating; caldaria being the feminine. - Lat. caldus, hot; contracted form of calidus, hot. - Lat. calere, to be hot. Cf. Skt. gra, to boil; Benfey, p. 969; Fick, i. 44. See Caloric, Chaldron. T The Span form calderon gave name to the great Spanish author.

CALENDAR, an almanac. (L.) In early use ; spelt kalender in Layamon, i. 308. - Lat. calendarium, an account-book of interest kept by money-changers, so called because interest became due on the calends (or first day) of each month; in later times, a calendar.-Lat. calenda, sb. pl., a name given to the first day of each month. The origin of the name is obscure; but it is agreed that the verbal root is the old verb calare, to call, proclaim, of which a still older form must have been calére. It is cognate with Gk. state, to call, summon. - / KAL, to shout. See Curtius, i. 171; Fick, iii. 529. CALENDER, a machine for pressing and smoothing cloth. (F., -Gk.) Best known from the occurrence of the word in Cowper's John Gilpin, where it is applied to a 'calender-er,' or person who calenders cloth, and where a more correct form would be calendrer. In Bailey's Dict., ed. 1731, vol. ii, I find : 'To calender, to press, smooth, and set a gloss upon linnen, &c.; also the machine itself.  $\beta$ . The word is French. The verb appears in Cotgrave, who has: Calendrer, to sleek, smooth, plane, or polish linnen cloth, &c.' The F. sb. (from which the verb was formed) is calandre. - Low Lat. celendra, explained in Migne's edition of Ducange by: 'instrumentum quo poliuntur panni; [French] calandre.' Y. Thus calandre is a corruption of celandre ; and the Low Lat. celendra is, in its turn. a corruption of Lat. cylindrus, a cylinder, roller; the name being given to the machine because a roller was contained in it, and (probably later) sometimes two rollers in contact. - Gk. κύλινδροs, a cylinder. See Cylinder. Der. calender, verb ; calendr-er, or calend-er, sb.

CALENDS, the first day of the month in the Roman calendar; see above. (L.) In early use. A.S. calend; Grein, i. 154. CALENTURE, a feverous madness. (F., - Span., - L.) In Mas-singer, Fatal Dowry, iii. 1 (Charalois). - F. calenture. - Span. calentura. - Lat. calent-, stem of pr. pt. of calere, to be hot. See Caldron. CALF, the young of the cow, &c. (E.) M. E. kalf, calf; sometimes kelf. Spelt kelf in Ancren Riwle, p. 136; the pl. calveren is in Maundeville's Travels, p. 105. - A. S. cealf; pl. cealfas, calfru, or cal-feru; Grein, i. 158. + Du. kalf. + Icel. kalfr. + Swed. kalf. + Dan. kalv. + Goth. kalbo. + G. kalb. B. Probably related to Gk. Bpiqos. an embryo, child, young one, and to Skt. garbha, a foctus, embryo; see Benfey, pp. 257, 258; Curtius, i. 81; Fick, i. 312. If so, all are from  $\sqrt{GRABH}$ , to seize, conceive; a Vedic form, appearing in later Skt. as grah; Benfey, p. 275. Der. colve, q. v. 4 The colf of the leg, from Icel. kalfi, seems to be a different word. Cf. Irish and Gael. kalta, the calf of the leg.

bood of a carriage, and (2) a hood for a lady's head, of similar shape. CALCAREOUS, like or containing chalk or lime. (L.) Better spelt calcarious, as in a quotation from Swinburne, Spain, Let. 29, in Caliber occurs in Reid's Inquiry, c. 6. s. 19 (R.) Neither form appears to be old. We also find the spellings caliver and caliper in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. -F. calibre, said to have been 'introduced in the 16th century from Ital. calibro;' Brachet. Cotgrave has: 'Calibre, a quality, state, or degree;' also: 'Qualibre, the bore of a gun, or size of the bore, &c. Il n'est pas de mon qualibre, he is not of my quality, ranke, or humour, he is not a fit companion for me.'  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin. Diez suggests Lat. quá librá, of what weight, applied to the bore of a gun as determined by the weight (and consequent size) of the bullet. See Librate.  $\gamma$ . Littré suggests quite a different origin, viz. Arab. kálib, a form, mould, model; cf. Pers. kálab, a mould from which anything is made; Rich. Dict. pp. 1110, 1111. Der. calipers, q. v.; also caliver, q. v.

pp. 1110, 1111. Der. calipers, q. v.; also caliver, q. v. CALICO, cotton-cloth. (East Indian.) Spelt callico in Drayton, Edw. IV to Mrs. Shore (R.); spelt callicoe in Robinson Crusoe, ed. J. W. Clark, 1866, p. 124; pl. callicoes, Spectator, no. 292. Named from Calicut, on the Malabar coast, whence it was first imported.

CALIGRAPHY, CALLIGRAPHY, good hand-writing. (Gk.) Wood, in his Athenæ Oxonienses, uses the word when referring to the works of Peter Bales (not Bale, as in Richardson). Spelt calligraphy; Prideaux, Connection, pt. i. b. v. s. 3. – Gk. salli- $\gamma papia,$  beautiful writing. – Gk. salli-, a common prefix, equivalent to and commoner than salo-, which is the crude form of salls, beautiful, fair; and  $\gamma papiers$ , to write. The Gk. salls is cognate with E. hale and whole. For Gk.  $\gamma papers,$  see Grave, verb.

CALIF, CALIPH, a title assumed by the successors of Mahomet. (F., - Arab.) Spelt caliphe in Gower, C. A. i. 245; califfe, Maundeville's Trav. p. 36. - F. calife, a successor of the prophet. - Arab. khalifah, lit. a successor; Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 620. - Arab. khalifah, lit. ceed; id. p. 622, s. v. khiläfat, succeeding. Der. caliph-ship, caliph-ate. CALIPEIRS, compasses of a certain kind. (F.) Compasses for measuring the diameter of cylindrical bodies are called calipers; a contraction and corruption of caliber-compasses. See Callipers in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. From caliber, the size of a bore; q.v. CALISTHENICS, CALLISTHENICS, graceful exercises.

CALLISTHENICS, CALLISTHENICS, graceful exercises. (Gk.) Modern. A coined word. – Gk.  $\kappa a\lambda\lambda u\sigma\theta er/ns$ , adorned with strength. – Gk.  $\kappa a\lambda\lambda - = \kappa a\lambda c$ , crude form of  $\kappa a\lambda \delta s$ , beautiful, fair, cognate with E. kals and whole; and  $\sigma\theta \acute{e} ros$ , strength, the fundamental notion being 'stable strength,' as distinguished from  $\beta \acute{\omega} \mu \eta$ , strength of impetus; Curtius, ii. 110, 111. Cf. Skt.  $sth \acute{a}$ , to stand still. Der. calistheric, adj.

CALIVER, a sort of musket. (F.) In Shak. I Hen. IV, iv. a. 21. The name was given from some peculiarity in the size of the bore. It is a mere corruption of caliber, q. v. 'Caliver or Caliper, the bigness, or rather the diameter of a piece of ordinance or any other fire-arms at the bore or mouth;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. (F) It has no connection with culverin, as suggested by Wedgwood. CALK, CAULK, to stop up the seams of a ship. (F., -L.) The sb. calkers occurs in the A. V. Ezek. xxvii. 9; the marg. note has: 'strengtheners, or stoppers of chinks.' The M. E. cauken signifies 'to tread;' P. Plowman, C. xv. 162; xiv. 171. The spelling with l was probably adopted to assimilate the word more closely to the orig. Lat. = O. F. cauquer, to tread; also, to tent a wound, i. e. to insert a roll of lint in it, to prevent its healing too quickly; Cotgrave. -Lat. calcare, to tread, trample, press grapes, tread down, tread in, press close. (The notion in calk is that of forcing in by great pressure.) -Lat. calca(stem calc.), the heel; cognate with E. Heel.  $\beta$ . Cf. Irish calcadh, driving, caulking; calcaire, a caulker. Also Gael. calc, to caulk, drive, ram, cram, push violently; calcaire, a driver, rammer. [Hence Lowland Sc. to ca' a nail, i. e. to drive it in with a hammer.] Der. calk-ar.

CALL, to cry aloud. (E.) M. E. callen, kallen; Havelok, 2897. – A. S. ceallian, to call, Grein, i. 158; an older form must have been callian, as seen in the compound hild-calla, a herald, lit. a 'warcaller,' Grein, ii. 73. + Icel. and Swed. kalla. to call. + Dan. kalde, to call. + Du. kallen, to talk, chatter. + O. H. G. ckallon, M. H. G. kallen, to call, speak loudly, chatter. B. These words have no relation whatever to Gk. maker (a supposition at once disproved by a knowledge of the laws of Aryan sounds), but are allied to Gk.  $\gamma mp$ iew, to speak, proclaim, Skt. gar, to call, seen in the derivative gri, to call. -  $\sqrt{GAR}$ . to call. See Curtius, i. 217; Benfey, p. 270; Fick, i. 72. Der. call-er; call-ing, sb., an occupation, that to which one is called.

CALLIGRAPHY; see Caligraphy.

CALLIPERS; see Calipers.

CALLISTHENICS; see Calisthenics.

CALLSOUS, hard, indurated.  $(F_{.}, -L_{.})$  Callous occurs in Holland's Pliny, bk. xvi. c. 31; and callosity in the same, bk. xvi. c. 7. – F. calleux, 'hard, or thick-skinned, by much labouring;' Cot. – Lat. callosus, hard or thick-skinned, callous. – Lat. callus, callum, hard skin; callers, to have a hard skin. Der. callos-ity (from Lat. acc. callositatem, hardness of skin); also callous-ly, callous-ness.

CALLOW, unfledged, said of young birds; also bald. (E.) See Milton, P. L. vii. 420. M. E. calu, calugh, calewe. 'Calugh was his heuede [head];' King Alisaunder, 5950. - A. S. calu, bald; Grein, i. 155. + Du. kaal, bald, bare, naked, leafless. + Swed. kal. bald; bare. + G. kahl. + Lat. caluus, bald. + Skt. khalati, bald-headed; khalvdta, bald-headed. The appearance of the k-sound both in Latin and Teutonic points to a loss of s. -  $\checkmark$  SKAR, to shear. [+]

CALM, tranquil, quiet; as sb., repose.  $(F_{n} - Gk.)$  M. E. calme, Gower, C. A. iii. 230. – F. calme, 'calm, still;' Cot. He does not give it as a substantive, but in mod. F. it is both adj. and sb. B. The l is no real part of the word, though appearing in Ital., Span., and Portuguese; it seems to have been inserted, as Diez suggests, through the influence of the Lat. calor, heat, the notions of 'heat' and 'rest' being easily brought together.  $\gamma$ . The mod. Provençal chanme signifies 'the time when the flocks rest;' cf. F. chomer, formerly chanmer, to rest, to be without work; see chomer in Brachet. 8. Derived from Low Lat. cauma, the heat of the sun; on which Maigne D'Arnis remarks, in his edition of Ducange, that it answers to the Languedoc caumas or calimas, excessive heat; a remark which shews that Diez is right. – Gk.  $\kappa a \tilde{\mu} \mu_a$  great heat. – Gk.  $\kappa a \ell \omega_r$ , to burn; from Gk.  $\checkmark$  KAT, to burn. Possibly E. heat is related to the same root; Curtius. i. 178. Der. calm-19, calm-ness. [†]

CALOMEL, a preparation of mercury. (Gk.) Explained in Chambers' Dict. as 'the white sublimate of mercury, got by the application of heat to a mixture of mercury and corrosive sublimate, which is black.' The sense is 'a fair product from a black substance;' and the word is coined from walo., crude form of Gk. walo, fair (cognate with E. hale); and  $\mu i \lambda$ -as, black, for which see Melancholy. CALORIC, the supposed principle of heat. (L.) A modern word; formed from the Lat. calor, heat, by the addition of the suffix-ic. The F. form is calorique, and we may have borrowed it from them;

CALORIFIC, having the power to heat. (L.) Boyle speaks of 'calorifick' agents;' Works, vol. ii. p. 594. – Lat. calorificus, making hot, heating. – Lat. calori-, crude form of calor, heat; and -ficus, a suffix due to the verb facere, to make. Der. calorific-at-ion. CALUMINY, slander, false accusation. (F., -L.) Shak. has calumny, Meas. ii. 4. 159; also calumniate, Troil. iii. 3. 174; and calumnious, All's Well, i. 3. 61. - F. calomnie, 'a calumnie;' Cot. - Lat. calumnia, false accusation. - Lat. calui, caluere, to deceive. Der. calumni-ous, calumni-ous-ly; also calumniate (from Lat. calumniatus, pp. of calumniari, to slander); whence calumniator, calumniation.

Doublet, challenge, q. v.

CALVE, to produce a calf. (E.) M. E. caluen (u for v); 'the cow caluyde;' Wyclif, Job, xxi. 10. – M. E. calf, a calf. See Calf.  $\P$  The A. S. forms cealfian, calfian, are unauthenticated, and probably inventions of Somner. However, the verb appears in the Du. kalven, Dan. kalve, Swed. kalfva, G. kalben, to calve; all derivatives from the sb. [\*]

CALX, the substance left after a metal has been subjected to great heat. (L.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. A word used in the old treatises on alchemy; now nearly superseded by the term oxide. Merely borrowed from Latin. - Lat. calx, stone, limestone, lime (stem calc-). + Irish carraice, Gael. carraig, a rock; W. careg, stone. + Goth. hallus, a rock, stone; Rom. ix. 33. + Gk. sposn, *sposed*A7, flint. + Skt. garkará, stone, gravel; karkara, hard; Benfey, pp. 936, 162. See Curtius, i. 177. Der. calc-ine, q. v.; calc-areous, q. v.; calc-int, calc-ul-us; calc-ul-ait, q. v.

CALYX, the cup of a flower. (L., -Gk.) A botanical term. 'Calyx, the cup of the flower in any plant;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. -Lat. calyx, a case or covering, bud, calyx of a flower. -Gk.  $\kappa \Delta \nu \xi$ , a case, covering, calyx of a flower. + Skt. kaliká, a bud.  $-\sqrt{KAL}$ , to cover, hide, conceal; from which comes, in English, the word helmet, q. v. ¶ This word is used differently from chalice, q. v.; though both are from the same root.

CAM, a projecting part of a wheel, cog. (Dan.) A technical term; fully explained in Webster's Dict., but not Celtic, as erroneously stated in some editions. – Dan. kam, a comb, ridge; hence a ridge on a wheel; kam' iul, a cog-wheel. + G. kamm, a comb, a cog of a wheel. See Comb.

CAMBRIC, a kind of fine white linen. (Flanders.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 208. Cotgrave gives: 'Cambray, ou Toile de Cambray, cambricke.' A corruption of Cambray, a town in Flanders, where it was first made. [†]

CAMEL, the name of an animal. (F., -L., -Gk., -Heb.) Spelt chamayle in Chaucer, C. T. 9072. The pl. camelis is in King Alisaunder, 854. The M. E. forms are camel, cameil, camail, chamel. chamail, &c. [The form camel, in the Old Northumbrian glosses of S. Mark, i. 6, is directly from Lat. camelus.]-O. F. chamel, camel; Roquefort. - Lat. camelus. -Gk. sciuplose. -Heb. gamdi. + Arab. jamal; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 173. Der. camelo-pard, caml-et, q. V.

CAMELLIA, a genus of plants. (Personal name.) The Camellia the Lapan rose.' The name was The Camellia Japonica is sometimes called the 'Japan rose.' given by Linnæus (died 1778), in honour of George Joseph Kamel (or Camellus), a Moravian Jesuit, who travelled in Asia and wrote

A history do plants of the island of Luzon; Encyl. Brit. 9th ed. CAMELOPARD, the giraffe. (L.,-Gk.) Spelt camelopardolis and camelopardus in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715, and in Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. After shortened to resemble F. camelopard, the giraffe. - Lat. camelopardalis. - Gk. καμηλοπάρδαλιε, a giraffe. - Gk. καμηλο-, crude form of  $\kappa \neq \mu \eta \lambda os$ , a camel; and  $\pi \neq \rho \phi a \lambda s$ , a pard, leopard, panther. See Camel and Pard.

CAMEO, a precious stone, carved in relief. (Ital.) The word occurs in Darwin's Botanical Garden, P. 1 (Todd's Johnson). The F. spelling camaieu is sometimes found in Eng. books, and occurs in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731.] - Ital. cammeo, a cameo. - Low Lat. cammæus, a cameo; also spelt camahutus, whence the F. camaieu. B. Etym. unknown; see the discussion of it in Diez, s. v. cammeo; and in Mahn, Etymologische Untersuchungen, Berlin, 1863. p. 73. Mahn suggests that commences is an adj. from comma, a Low Lat. version of a G. comme, which is a form due to G. pronunciation of O. F. game, a gem (Lat. gemma), for which Roquefort gives a quotation. In the same way comahutus might be due to a German form of the same Same way communes might be due to Land is camafeo. CAMERA, a box, chamber, &c. (L.) Chiefly used as an abbreviation of Lat. camera obscura, i. e. dark chamber, the name of what was once an optical toy, but now of great service in photography. See Chamber, of which it is the orig. form. Der. camera:ed, from a Lat. form cameratus, formed into chambers; a term in architecture.

CAMLET, a sort of cloth. (F., -Low Lat.) So called because originally made of camel's hair. Camlet is short for camelot, which occurs in Sir T. Browne's Vulg. Errors, bk. v. c. 15. § 3. – F. camelot, which Cotgrave explains by 'chamlet, also Lisle grogram.'-Low Lat. cameloum, cloth of camel's hair.-Lat. camelus, a camel. See Camel. [*] CAMOMILE; see Chamomile.

CAMP, the ground occupied by an army; the army itself. (F., -L.) Common in Shakespeare. Also used as a verb; All's Well, iii. 4. 14; and in the Bible of 1561, Exod. xix. 2. The proper sense is ' the field ' which is occupied by the army; as in 'the gate of the camp was open;' North's Plutarch, Life of M. Brutus; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 147; cf. Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 8, 33. [Perhaps taken directly from Latin.] = F. camp, 'a camp; an hoast, or army lodged; a field; 'Cot.-Lat. campus, a field. + Gk. κήπος, a garden. And probably further related to G. hof, a yard, court; see Curtius, i. 183; Fick, i. 519. Der. camp, verb, en-camp-ment, camp-estr-al, q. v., camp-aign, q. v. ¶ It is remarkable that camp in Middle-English never has the modern sense but is only used in the sense of 'fight' or 'battle.' Cf. 'alle the kene mene [men] of kampe,' i. e. all the keen fighting-men; Allit. Morte Arthure, 3703; cf. 1. 3671. And see Layamon, i. 180, 185, 336; ii. 162. This is the A.S. camp, a battle; camp-sted, a battle-ground. Allied words are the Du., Dan. and Swed. kamp, Icel. kapp, G. kampf, all signifying 'battle.' Notwithstanding the wide spread of the word in this sense, it is certainly non-Teutonic, and due, originally, to Lat. campus, in Low Lat.

'a battle' See also Champion, and Campaign. CAMPAIGN, a large field; the period during which an army keeps the field. (F.-L.) The word occurs in Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, an. 1666. - F. campaigne, an open field, given in Cotgrave as a variation of campagne, which he explains by 'a plaine field, large plain.' - Lat. campania, a plain, preserved in the name Campania, formerly given to the level country near Naples. - Lat. campus, a field. See Camp. Der. campaign-er. ¶ Shak. uses champaign (old edd. champion), K. Lear, i. 1. 65, for 'a large tract of land. This is from the O. F. champagne, the standard form ; the form campagne belongs properly to the Ficard dialect; see Brachet, Hist. Fr. Gram. p. 21 for the correct statement, which is incorrectly contradicted in the translation of his Dict., s. v. campagne. CAMPANIFORM, bell-shaped. (Low Lat.)

• Campaniformis, a term apply'd by herbalists, to any flower that is shap'd like a bell; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. From Low Lat. campana, a bell; and Lat. forma, form. Der. From the same Low Lat. campana are campan-ul-a, campan-ul-ate, campan-o-logy. CAMPESTRAL, growing in fields. (L.)

Modern, and rare. The form campestrian is in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. Formed from Lat. campestr-is, growing in a field, or belonging to a field, by adding the suffix -al. -Lat. compus, a field. See Camp. CAMPHOR, the solid, concrete juice of some kinds of laurel. (F., - Arab., - Malay.) Spelt camphire in the Song of Solomon, i. 14 (A. V.). Massinger speaks of camphire-balls; The Guardian, iii. 1. – | elli); afterwards, to obliterate in any way. Spelt cancell in the F. camphre, 'the gumme tearmed camphire;' Cot. [The i seems to have been inserted to make the word easier to pronounce in English.] arze;' Cot. – Law Lat. cancellare, to draw lines across a deed. – Lat.

-Low Lat. camphora, camphor; to the form of which the mod. E. camphor has been assimilated.  $\beta$ . A word of Eastern origin. Skt. karpára, camphor (Benfey, P. 164); Arabic kárár, camphor, Pal-mer's Pers. Dict. col. 480.  $\gamma$ . All from Malay kárár, lit. chalk; the full form being Barús kárár, i.e. chalk of Barous, a place on the W. coast of Sumatra; see J. Pijnappel's Malay-Dutch Dict. p. 74. Kápúr bárus, the camphor of Sumatra and Java, called also native camphor, as distinguished from that of Japan or kapur tohori, which undergoes a process before it is brought to our shops; Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 249; where we also find 'kapúr, lime. [†] CAN (1), I am able. (E.) A. The A.S. cunnan, to know, to know how to do, to be able, forms its present tense thus: ie can (or cann), bu canst (or const), he can (or cann); plural, for all persons, cunnon. The Moeso-Goth. kunnan, to know, forms its present tense thus: ik kann, thu kant, is kann; pl. weis hunnum, jus kunnuch, eis kunnum. B. The verb is one of those which (like the Gk. olda, I know) use as a present tense what is really an old preterite form, from which again a second weak preterite is formed. The same peculiarity is common to all the cognate Teutonic verbs, viz. Du. kunnen, to be able; Icel. kunna, to know, to be able; Swed. kunna, to know, to be able; Dan. kunde, to know, to be able; O. H.G. chuman, M. H. G. kunnen, G. können, to be able. C. The word is not the same as the word ken, to know, though from the same source ulti-The verb to ken is not English (which supplies its place by mately. the related form to know) but Scandinavian; cf. Icel. kenna, to know, Swed. känna, Dan. kiende, Du. kennen, G. kennen; all of which are weak verbs; whereas can was once strong. See Kon. D. The past tense is Could. Here the l is inserted in modern English by sheer blundering, to make it like would and should, in which the I is radical. The M. E. form is coude, a dissyllable; the A.S. form is cube. The long ú is due to loss of n; cube stands for cunde (pronounced koonth, with oo like oo in tooth, and th as in breathe). The loss of the n has obscured the relation to can. The n reappears in Gothic, where the past tense is kuntha; cf. Du. konde, I could; Icel. kunna (for kunda, by assimilation); Swed. and Dan. kunde; O. H. G. kunda, B. The past participle is Couth. This is only preserved, in mod. Eng., in the form uncouth, of which the original sense was 'unknown.' The A.S. form is cit, standing for curo, the n being preserved in the Goth. kunths, known. See Uncouth. F. The root of this verb is the same as that of E. ken (Icel. kenna) and of E. know, Lat. noscere (for gnoscere), and Gk. yupworker, which are extended forms of it. The Aryan form of the root is GAN or GA; Fick, i. 67. See Know, and Ken.

CAN (2), a drinking-vessel. (E.) M. E. canne. 'There weren sett sixe stonun cannes;' Wyclif, John, ii. 6. – A. S. canna, canne, as a gloss to Lat. crater; Ælf. Gloss. ed. Somner, p. 60. + Du. kan, a pot, mug. + Icel. kanna, a can, tankard, mug; also, a measure. + Swed. kanna, a tankard; a measure of about 3 quarts. + Dan. kande, a can, tankard, mug. + O. H. G. channa, M. H. G. and G. kanne, a can, tankard, mug, jug, pot. ¶ It thus appears like a true Teu-tonic word. Some think that it was borrowed from Lat. canna, Gk. kdwry, a reed; whence the notion of measuring. If so, it must have been borrowed at a very early period. The Low Lat. forms cana, canna, a vessel or measure for liquids, do not really help us much towards deciding this question.

CANAL, a conduit for water. (F., -L.) 'The walls, the woods, and long canals reply; ' Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 100. - F. canal, 'a channell, kennell, furrow, gutter;' Cot. - Lat. canalis, a channel, trench, canal, conduit; also, a splint, reed-pipe.  $\beta$ . The first a is short, which will not admit of the old favourite derivation from canna, a reed; besides which, a furrow bears small resemblance to a reed. The original sense was 'a cutting,' from ASKAN, longer form of ✓ SKA, to cut. Cf. Skt. khan, to dig, pierce; khani, a mine. See Fick, i. 802. The sense of 'reed-pipe' for canadis may have been merely due to popular etymology. ¶ Perhaps the accent on the merely due to popular etymology. ¶ Perhaps the accent on the latter syllable in E. was really due to a familiarity with Du. kanaal, itself borrowed from French. See also Channel, Kennel.

CANARY, a bird; a wine; a dance. (Canary Islands.) The dance is mentioned in Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 77; so is the wine, Merry Wives, iii. 2. 89. Gascoigne speaks of 'Canara birds;' Complaint of Philomene, l. 33. All are named from the Canaries or Canary Islands. These take their name from Canaria, which is the theorem islands. largest island of the group. 'Grand Canary is almost as broad as long, the diameter being about fifty miles;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 3. CANCEL, to obliterate. (F., -L.) Originally, to obliterate a deed by drawing lines over it in the form of lattice-work (Lat. canccancellus, a grating; gen. in pl. cancelli, railings, lattice-work; dimin. of cancer, a crab, also sometimes used in the pl. cancri, to signify See Cancer. 'lattice-work.' Der. cancell-at-ed, marked with cross-lines, from Lat. pp. cancellatus ; from the same source, chancel, chancery, chancellor, which see ; also cancer, canker, &c.

CANCEER, a crab, a corroding tumour. (L.) The tumour was named from the notion of 'eating' into the flesh. Cancer occurs as the name of a zodiacal sign in Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, 1. 644. - Lat. cancer, a crab; gen. cancri. + Gk. napnívos, a crab. + Skt. harkata, harkataka, a crab; also the sign Cancer of the zodiac.  $\beta$ . So named from its hard shell; cf. Skt. karkara, hard. Der. cancer-ous, cancriform, cancer-ate, cancer-at-ion ; and see Canker, Careen.

CANDELABRUM; see under Candle.

CANDID, lit. white; fair; sincere. (F.,-L.) Drvden uses candid to mean 'white;' tr. of Ovid, Metam. xv. l. 60. Camden has condidly; Elizabeth, an. 1598 (R.) Shak, has candidatus for candi-date; Titus Andron. i. 185. Ben Jonson has candor, Epigram 123. - F. candide, 'white, fair, bright, orient, &c.; also, upright, sincere, innocent;' Cot. - Lat. candidus, lit. shining, bright. - Lat. candere, to shine, be bright. - Lat. canders \*, to set on fire, only in ac-cenders, in-cendere. + Skt. chand, to shine. -  $\sqrt{SKAND}$ , to shine. Der. candid-ate, q. v.; candour, lit. brightness, from F. candeur, which from Lat. candorem, acc. case of candor, brightness; also candid-ly, candid-ness. From Lat. candere we also have candle, incense, incendiary, which see.

CANDIDATE, one who offers himself to be elected to an office. L.) Shak. has: 'Be candidatus then and put it on;' Titus, i. 185; (L) where the allusion is to the white robe worn by a candidate for office among the Romans. - Lat. candidatus, white-robed; a candidate for an office. - Lat. candidus, white. See Candid.

CANDLE, a kind of artificial light. (L.) In very early use. A. S. candel, a candle, Grein, i. 155. - Lat. candela, a candle, taper. -Lat. candere, to glow. - Lat. candere *, to set on fire; see further under Candid. Der. Candle-mas, with which cf. Christ-mas, q. v.; candle-stick (Trevisa, i. 223); candelabrum, a Lat. word, from Lat. candela; also chandel-ier, q.v.; chandl-er, q.v.; cannel-coal, q.v. CANDOUR; see under Candid.

CANDY, crystallised sugar; as a worb, to sugar, to crystallise. (F.,-Ital.,-Arab.) In old authors, it is generally a verb. Shak. has both sb. and verb. 1 Hen. IV, i. 3. 251; Hamlet, iii. 2. 65; Temp. ii. 1. 270. The verb is, apparently, the original in English. -F. se candir, 'to candie, or grow candide, as sugar after boyling ;' Cotgrave. [Here Cotgrave should rather have written candied ; there is no connection with Lat. candidus, white, as he easily might have imagined.] - Ital. candire, to candy. - Ital. candi, candy; zucchero candi, sugar-candy. - Arabic and Persian gand, sugar, sugar-candy; Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1149; Arab. quandat, sugar-candy, id.; quandi, sugared, made of sugar; id. p. 1150. [†] CANE, a reed, a stick. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) M. E. cane, canne.

*Reedes, that ben cannes; 'Maundeville, p. 189; see also pp. 190, 199. *Cane, canna; 'Wright's Vocab. i. 191. – F. canne, a cane. – Lat. canna, a cane, reed. - Gk. návva, návvy, a cane, reed. B. Perhaps cane is an Oriental word ultimately; cf. Heb. gáneh, a reed; Arab. ganát, a cane; Richardson's Dict. p. 1148. If so, the Lat. and Gk. words are both borrowed ones. Der. cane, verb; can-y, Milton, P. L. iii.

439; can-ister, q. v.; also cann-on, q. v.; can-on, q. v. CANINE, pertaining to a dog. (L.) In the Spectator, no. 209. -Lat. caninus, canine. -Lat. canis, a dog; cognate with E. kound. See Hound, and Cynic.

CANISTER, a case, or box, often of tin. (L., -Gk.) Originally, a basket made of reed or cane. Spelt cannisters in Dryden's Virgil, bk. i. 981, to translate ' Cereremque canistris Expediunt ;' Æn. i. 701. -Lat. canistrum, a basket made of twisted reed. - Gk. náraorpo w. a wicker-basket; properly, a basket of reed. - Gk. warn, a rarer form of savry, savra, a reed, cane. See Cane.

CANKER, something that corrodes. (L.) ' Canker, sekeness, cancer ;' Prompt. Parv. p. 60; it occurs very early, in Ancren Riwle, p. 330, where it is spelt cancre. - Lat. cancer, a crab, a cancer. See Cancer. Der. canker-ous, canker-worm (A. V.) Der. canker-ous, canker-worm (A. V.)

CANNEL-COAL, a coal that burns brightly. (L. and E.) Modern. Provincial Eng. cannel, a candle, and coal. Cannle, a candle ; cannie-coal, or kennie-coal, so called because it burns without smoke like a candle; 'F. K. Robinson, Whitby Glossary. [†] CANNIBAL, one who eats human-flesh. (Span., – W. Indian.) A corrupt form; it should rather be caribal. 'The Caribes I learned to be men-eaters or canibals, and great enemies to the islanders of Trinidad; 'Hackluyt, Voyages, vol. iii. p. 576 (R.); a passage imi-tated in Robinson Crusoe, ed. J. W. Clark, 1866, p. 126. See Shak. Oth. i. 3. 143.-Span. canibal, a cannibal, savage; a corruption of Caribal, a Carib, the form used by Columbus; see Trench, Study of Words. B. This word being ill understood, the smalling the cannibals had appetites like a dog ; cf. Span. canino, canine. voracious, greedy. As the word canibal was unmeaning in English, a second n was introduced to make the first vowel short, either owing to accent, or from some notion that it ought to be shortened. C. The word Canibal occurs in the following quotation from Herrera's Descripcion de las Indias Occidentales, vol. i. p. 11. col. 1, given in Todd's Johnson. 'Las Islas qui estan desde la Isla de San Juan de Porto rico al oriente de ella, para la costa de Tierra-Firme, se llamaron los Canibales por los muchos Caribes, comedores de carne humana, que truvo en ellas, i segun se interpreta en su lengua Canibal, quiere decir "hombre valiente," porque por tales eran tenidos de los otros Indios.' I. e. 'the islands lying next to the island of San Juan de Porto-rico [now called Porto Rico] to the East of it, and extending towards the coast of the continent [of South America] are called Canibales because of the many Caribs, eaters of human flesh, that are found in them, and according to the interpretation of their language Canibal is as much as to say 'valiant man,' because they were held to be such by the other Indians.' This hardly sufficiently recognises the fact that Canibal and Carib are mere variants of one and the same word; but we learn that the West Indian word Carib meant, in the language of the natives, 'a valiant man.' Other testimony is to the same effect; and it is well ascertained that cannibal is equivalent to Carib or Caribbean, and that the native sense of the word is 'a valiant man,' widely different from that which Europeans have given it. The familiar expression 'king of the cannibal islands' really means 'king of the Caribbean islands.' Der. cannibal-ism.

CANNON, a large gun. (F., -L., -Gk.) Frequent in Shak.; K. John, ii. 210, &c. And in Hackluyt, Voyages, vol. iii. p. 217 (R.) - F. conon, 'a law, rule, decree, ordnance, canon of the law; ... also, the gunne tearmed a cannon; also, the barrell of any gunne, &c.; Cot. Thus cannon is a doublet of canon, q. v. See Trench, Study of Words.  $\beta$ . The spelling with two n's may have been Study of vortes.  $p_i$  the specing with two uses of the word, the present word taking the double n of Lat. canna. The sense 'gunbarrel' is older than that of 'gun,' and points back to the sense of rod' or ' cane.' See Cane. Der. cannon-ade, cannon-eer. CANOE, a boat made of a trunk of a tree, &c. (Span., - W. Indian.) Formerly canoa, as spelt in Hackluyt's Voyages, iii. 646 (R.) - Span. canoa, an Indian boat. It is ascertained to be a native West Indian term for 'boat;' and properly, a Caribbean word. A drawing of 'a cance' is given at p. 31 of Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665

CANON, a rule, ordinance. (L., -Gk.) M. E. canon, canoun; Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pp. 3, 42; C. T. Group C, 890. A.S. canon; Beda, Eccl. Hist. (tr. by Ælfred), iv. 24; Bosworth. - Lat. canon, a rule. - Gk. naráv, a straight rod, a rule in the sense of 'carpenter's rule;' also, a rule or model, a standard of right. - Gk. sáry, a rarer form of sárry, a cane, reed. See Cane. Der. canon-ic, canon-ic-al, canon-ic-al-ly, canon-ist, canon-ic-ity, canon-ise (Gower, C. A. i. 254), canon-is-at-ion, canon-ry. Doublet, cannon, q. v. CANOPY, a covering overhead. (F.,-Ital., -L., -Gk.) Should be conopy; but the spelling canope occurs in Italian, whence it found its way into French as canape, a form cited by Diez, and thence into English; the proper F. form is conopée. In Shak. Sonn. 125. In Bible of 1551, Judith, xiii. 9; retained in the A. V. Cf. F. conopée, 'a canopy, a tent, or pavilion;' Cot. - Lat. conopeum, used in Judith, xiii. 9 (Vulgate). - Gk. κανωπεών, κανωπείον, an Egyptian bed with musquito-curtains. - Gk. nover-, stem of noverly, a gnat, mosquito; lit. 'cone-faced,' or an animal with a cone-shaped head, from some fancied resemblance to a cone. – Gk.  $\omega v - \sigma s$ , a cone; and  $\omega \psi$ , face, appearance, from Gk.  $\checkmark OII$ , to see – Aryan  $\checkmark AK$ , to see. See Cone. Der. canopy, verb.

CANOROUS, tuneful. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vii. c. 14. § 5. - Lat. caneres, singing, musical. - Lat. canere, to sing. See Cant (1).

CANT (1), to sing in a whining way; to talk hypocritically. (L.) Applied at first, probably, to the whining toon of beggars; used derisively. 'Drinking, lying, cogging, canting;' Ford, The Sun's Darling, Act i. sc. 1. 'A rogue, A very canter I, sir, one that maunds Upon the pad;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, Act ii. - Lat. cantare, to sing; frequentative of canere, to sing; from the same root with E. hen, q. v. - V KAN, to sound; Fick, i. 17; Curtius, i. 173. Der. cant, sb.; cant-er. From the same source, can-orous, q.v.; eant-icle, q. v.; cant-o, q. v. [†]

CANT (2), an edge, corner; as verb, to tilt or incline. (Dutch.) The sb. is nearly obsolete; we find 'in a cont' = 'in a corner,' in Ben Jonson, Coronation Entertainment; Works, ed. Gifford, vi. 445 (Nares). The verb means 'to turn upon an edge,' hence, to tilt, incline; said of a cask. The verb is derived from the sb. - Du. kant, a border, edge, side, brink, margin, corner. + Dan. and Swed. kant, a changed to canibal to give a sort of sense, from the notion that border, edge, margin; cf. Dan. kantre, to cant, upset, capsize. + G.

kante, a comer. a circle, Lat. canthus, the tire of a wheel, with which they are commonly compared. See Canton. Der. cant-een, q. v.; de-cant-er. [+] CANTEEIN, a vessel for liquors used by soldiers. (F., - Ital., -G.) Not in early use. The spelling is phonetic, to imitate the F. sound of i by the mod. E. ee. – F. cantine, a canteen; introduced from Ital. in the 16th century; Brachet. – Ital. cantina, a cellar, cave, grotto, cavern; cf. Ital. cantinetta, a small cellar, ice-pail, cooler. - Ital. canto, a side, part, corner, angle; whence cantina as a diminutive, i. e. 'a little corner.'-G. kante, a corner. See Cant (2).

CANTER, an easy gallop. (Proper name.) An abbreviation for Canterbury gallop, a name given to an easy gallop; from the ambling pace at which pilgrims rode to Canterbury. 'In Sampson's Fair Maid of Clifton (1633), he who personates the hobby-horse speaks of his smooth ambles and Canterbury paces;' Todd's Johnson. Boileau's Pegasus has all his paces. The Pegasus of Pope, like a Kentish post-horse, is always on the Canterbury;' Dennis on the Prelim. to the Dunciad (Nares). We also have 'Canterbury bells.' Der. canter, verb (much later than the sb.).

CANTICLE, a little song. (L.) 'And wrot an canticle,' said of Moses; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 4124. - Lat. canticulum, a little song; dimin. of Lat. canticum, a song. - Lat. cantare, to sing. See Cant (I).

CANTO, a division of a poem. (Ital., -L.) Shak. has cantons, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 289, which is a difficult form to account for. The more correct form cantion (directly from Lat. cantio, a ballad) occurs near the beginning of the Glosse to Spenser's Shep. Kal., October.-Ital. conto, a singing, chant, section of a poem; cf. Ital. contoniere, a seller of ballads. - Ital, cantare, to sing. - Lat. cantare, to sing. See Cant (1)

CANTON, a small division of a country. (F., - Low Lat.) Sir T. Browne uses cantons for ' corners ;' Religio Medici, pt. i. s. 15. In Heraldry, a canton is a small division in the corner of a shield; so used in Ben Jonson, Staple of News, A. iv (Piedmantle). And see Cotgrave. - F. canton, 'a corner or crosseway, in a street; also, a canton, a hundred ;' Cot. [Cf. Ital. cantone, a canton, district ; also, a corner-stone; Span. canton, a corner, part of an escutcheon, canton. - Low Lat. cantonum. a region, province. - Low Lat. canto (1), a squared stone; also (2), a region, province; whence cantonum. B. It is not at all certain that these two senses of Low Lat. canto are connected. The sense 'squared stone' evidently refers to G. hante, Du. hant, an edge ; but the sense of 'region' is not necessarily connected with this, and Brachet notes the etymology of canton as 'unknown.' It is hardly fair to play upon the various senses of E. border, or to try and connect the Teutonic kant, a corner, with W. cant, a rim of a circle, Lat. canthus, the tire round a wheel, Gk. nav bos, the corner of the eye, the felloe of a wheel. The Teutonic k is not a Celto-Italic c, nor is 'a corner' quite the same idea as 'rim.' It seems best to connect our own word canton in the sense of 'corner' with the Teutonic forms, and leave the other sense unaccounted for. Der. canton, verb; canton-al, cantonthen the second second a trisyllable in Chaucer, C. T. 12866. - F. canevas; which Brachet wrongly assigns to the 16th century ; see Littré. - Low Lat. canabacius, hempen cloth, canvas. - Lat. cannabis, hemp. - Gk. Kárraßıs, hemp, cognate with E. hemp, q. v. Cf. Skt. cana, hemp. ¶ It is supposed that the Greek word was borrowed from the East; Curtius, i. 173. Cf. Pers. kanab, hemp; Rich. Dict. p. 1208. Der. canvass, verb; q.v. CANVASS, to discuss, solicit votes. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. to take to task; I Hen. VI, i. 3. 36. Merely derived from the sb. canvas, the orig. meaning being 'to sift through canvas.' Similarly, Cotgrave explains the O.F. canabasser by 'to canvas, or curiously to examine, search or sift out the depth of a matter.' See above.

CANZONET, a little song. (Ital.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2, 124. - Ital. canzonetta, a little song; dimin. of canzone, a hymn, or of canzona, a song, ballad. - Lat. cantionem, acc. of cantio, a song; whence also F. chanson, a song, used by Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 438. -Lat. cantare, to sing ; frequentative of canere, to sing. See Cant (1). CAOUTCHOUC, india rubber. (F., - Caribbean.) Modern. Borrowed from F. caoutchouc, from a Caribbean word which is spelt cauchuc in the Cyclop. Metropolitana, q. v.

CAP, a covering for the head; a cover. (Low Lat.) In very early use. A. S. cappe, as a gloss to Low Lat. planeta, a chasuble ; Ælfric's Glossary, Nomina Vasorum. - Low Lat. cappa, a cape, a cope; see capparius in Ducange. [The words cap, cape, cope were all the same originally.] This Low Lat. cappa, a cape, hooded cloak, occurs in a document of the year 660 (Diez); and is spelt capa by Isidore of Seville, 19. 31. 3, who says : 'Capa, quia quasi totum capiat hominem ; capitis ornamentum.' ¶ The remoter origin is disputed ; Diez remarks that it is difficult to obtain the form capa from Lat. caput; and per- | capital, sb., which see below. And see Capitol.

¶ Probably distinct words from W. cant, the rim of haps the derivation from Lat. capere, to contain, suggested by Isidore, thus, the tire of a wheel, with which they are commany be right in this instance; though his guesses are mostly valueless. This would explain its indifferent application in the senses of cap and cape; besides which, cape would appear to be the older and OAPABLE, having ability. (F., -L.) In Shak. Troil. iii. 3. 310. -F. capable, 'capable, sufficient ;' Cot. - Low Lat. capabilis, lit. comprehensible, a word used in the Arian controversy.  $\beta$ . The meaning afterwards shifted to 'able to hold,' one of the senses assigned by Cotgrave to F. capable. This would be due to the influence of Lat. capaz, capacious, the word to which capabilis was probably indebted for its second a and its irregular formation from capere. - Lat. capere, to hold, contain; cognate with E. have; see Have. -  $\checkmark$  KAP, to hold; Fick, i. 518. Der. capabil-ity. OAPACIOUS, able to hold or contain. (L.) Used by Sir W.

Ralegh, Hist. of the World, bk. i. c. 6. Shak. expresses the same idea by capable. Ill formed, as if from a F. capacieux or Lat. capaciosus, but there are no such words, and the real source is the crude form capaci- of the Lat. adj. capax, able to contain - Lat. capare, to contain, hold; cognate with E. have, q. v. - V KAP, to hold; Fick, i. 518. Der. capacious-ly, capacious-ness; and (from Lat. capax, gen. capaci-s) capaci-t-ate, capaci-ty. From the Lat. capere we also have cap-able, cat-er; probably cap, cape, cope, q. v. Also conceive, deceive, receive, &c. Also captious, captivate, captive, captor, capture; an-ticipate, emancipate, participate; acceptable, conception, deception, except, intercept, precept, receipt, receptacle, susceptible; incipient, recipient; occupy; prince, principal; and all words nearly related to these. CAPARISON, the trappings of a horse. (F., - Span., - Low Lat.)

In Shak. Cor. i. 9. 12. - O. F. caparasson, 'a caparison;' Cot. - Span. caparazon, a caparison, a cover for a saddle or coach; formed as a sort of augmentative from Span. capa, a cloak, mantle, cover. - Low Lat. capa, a cloak, cape. See Cape. Der. caparison, verb; Rich. III,

CAPE (1), a covering for the shoulders. (F., - Low Lat.) In early use. In Layamon, ii. 122; and again in i. 332, where the later text has the equivalent word cope. And see Havelok, 429.-O. F. cape. - Low Lat. capa, which occurs in Isidore of Seville; see Cap, and The word, being an ecclesiastical one, has spread Cope. widely; from the Low Lat. capa are derived not only O. F. cape, but also Prov., Span., and Port. capa, Ital. cappa, A.S. cappe (whence E. cap), Icel. kápa (whence E. cope), Swed. kápa, kappa, Dan. kaabe, kappe, Du. kap, G. kappe. Dor. cap-arison, q. v.; and see chapel, chaperon, chaplet.

CAPE (a), a headland. In Shak. Oth. ii. I. I. - F. cap. 'a pro-montory, cape;' Cot. - Ital. capo, a head; a headland, cape. - Lat. caput, a head; cognate with E. head, q. v. In the phr. cap. a-pie, i.e. head to foot, the 'cap' is the F. cap here spoken of. [+]CAPER (1), to dance about. (Ital., -L.) In Shak. Temp. v. 238. The word was not borrowed from F. cabrer, but merely shortened (in imitation of cabrer) from the older form capreoll, used by Sir P. Sidney in his translation of Ps. 114, quoted by Richardson : ' Hillocks, why capreold ye, as wanton by their dammes We capreoll see the lusty lambs?' - Ital. capriolare, to caper, leap about as goats or kids. - Ital. capriolo, a kid; dimin. of caprio, a roe-buck, wild goat; cf. Ital. capra, a she-goat. - Lat. capra, a she goat; capra (stem capro-), a he-goat; caprea, a wild she-goat. Cf. Gk. maxpos, a boar; Curtius,

i. 174. Der. caper, sb.; capriole, q. v., and cf. cabriolet, cab. CAPER (2), the flower-bud of the caper-bush, used for pickling. (F., -L., -Ck., -Pers.). There is a quibble on the word in Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3, 129 - O. F. capre, cappre, a caper, Cot.; mod. F.capre. -Lat. capparis. - Gk. xánnap:s, the caper-plant ; also its fruit, the caper. - Pers. kabar, capers; Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1167. - Pers. kabar, capers; Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1167. - The z is here

CAPERCAILZIE, a species of grouse. (Gael.) The z is here no z, but a modern printer's way of representing the old 3, much better represented by y; thus the word is really capercailyie. [Similary Menzies stands for Menyies, and Dalziel for Dalyiel.] See the excellent article on the capercali, capercally, or capercallyie, in the Engl. Cycl. div. Nat. History. - Gael. capull-coille, the great cock of the wood; more literally, the horse of the wood. - Gael. capull, a horse (cf. E. cavalier); and coille or coill, a wood, a forest. [†

CAPILLARY, relating to or like hair. (L.) 'Capillary filaments;' Derham, Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 12. - Lat. capillaris, relating to hair. - Lat. copillus, hair ; but esp. the hair of the head ; from the same source as Lat. caput, the head; the base cap- being common to both words. See Curtius, i. 182; and see Head

CAPITAL (1), relating to the head; chief. (F., -L.) 'Eddren capitalen' = veins in the head, where capitalen is used as a pl. adj. : Ancren Riwle, p. 258. - F. capital, 'chiefe, capitall;' Cotgrave (and doubtless in early use). - Lat. capitalis, relating to the head. - Lat. caput (stem capit-), the head; cognate with E. head, q.v. Der. CAPITAL (2), wealth, stock of money. (F., -L.) Not in early use; apparently quite modern. - F. capital, 'wealth, worth, a stocke, a man's principal, or chiefe substance; 'Cotgrave. - Low Lat. capitale, wealth, stock; properly neuter of adj. capitalis, chief; see above. Der cotificient capitalis.

Der. capital-ist, capital-ise. See Cattle. CAPITAL (3), the head of a pillar. (Low Lat., -L.) 'The pilers... With har bas and capitals' = with their base and capital; Land of Cokayne, 1. 69. - Low Lat. capitellus, the head of a column or pillar; a dimin. from Lat. caput (stem capit-), a head; see Head. Doublet, chapiter ; also chapter.

CAPITATION, a tax on every head. (F.,-L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. vii. c. 11. § 1. - F. capitation, 'head-silver, pole-money; a subsidy, tax, or tribute paid by the pole' [i. e. poll]; Cot. - Low Lat. capitationem, acc. of capitatio, a capitation-tax. - Lat. caput (stem capit-), a head. See Head. CAPITOL, the temple of Jupiter, at Rome. (L.) The temple was situate on the Mons Capitolinus, named from the Capitolium, or temple of Jupiter, whence E. capitol is derived. The word is in Shak. Cor. i. I. 49, &c. 'The temple is said to have been called the Capitolium, because a human head (caput) was discovered in digging the foundations ; ' Smith's Classical Dictionary. For whatever reason, it seems clear that the etymology is from the Lat. caput, gen. capit-is. See Capital (1).

CAPITULAR, relating to a cathedral chapter. (L.) Properly an adj., but gen. used as a sb., meaning 'the body of the statutes of a chapter.' 'The capitular of Charles the Great joyns dicing and drunkenness together; ' Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, bk. iv. c. 1. - Low Lat. capitularis, relating to a capitulum, in its various senses ; whence neut. capitulare, a writing divided into chapters; capitulare institutum, a monastic rule; and sb. capitularium, a book of decrees, whence the E. capitulary, a more correct form, as a sb., than capitular. -Low Lat. capitulum, a chapter of a book; a cathedral chapter; dimin. from Lat. caput, the head. See Chapter. CAPITULATE, to submit upon certain conditions. (L.)

Trench, Select Glossary. It properly means, to arrange conditions, and esp. of surrender; as in ' to capitulate and conferre wyth them touchynge the estate of the cytie, the beste that they could, so that their parsones [persons] might be saued ;' Nicolls, tr. of Thucydides, p. 219. See Shak. Cor. v. 3. 82. - Low Lat. capitulatus, pp. of capi-tulare, to divide into chapters, hence, to propose terms. - Low Lat. capitulum, a chapter; dimin. from Lat. caput, a head. See Chapter. Der. capitulat-ion.

CAPON, a young cock castrated. (L., -Gk.) In very early use. A. S. capun, as a gloss to 'gallinaceus;' Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Somner, Nomina Avium. [Formed from Lat. caponem, whence also Du. kapoen, Swed. and Dan. kapun, &c.] - Lat. caponem, acc. case of capo, a capon. - Gk. same, a capon. - KAP, older form SKAP, to cut, whence also Ch. Slavonic skopiti, to cut, castrate, Russian skopite, to castrate; Gk. som-rear, to cut, &c.; Curtius, i. 187. See Comma; and see Chop (1).

CAPRICE, a whim, sudden leap of the mind. (F., - Ital.) word is now always spelt like the F. caprice, but we often find, in earlier writers, the Italian form. Thus Shak. has capriccio, All's Well, ii. 3. 310; and Butler has the pl. capriches to rime with witches; Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. 1. 18. - F. caprice, 'humour, caprichio, giddy thought;' Cot. - Ital. capriccio, a caprice, whim; whence the word was introduced into French in the 16th century (Brachet). B. Derived by Diez from Ital. caprio, a goat, as if it were 'a frisk of a kid;' but this is not at all sure. We find also Ital. caprezzo, a caprice, whim, freak; and it is remarkable that the orig. sense of Ital. capriccio seems to be 'a shivering fit.' Hence the derivation may really be, as Wedgwood suggests, from Ital. capo, head, and rezzo, an aguefit; cf. Ital. raccapriccio, horror, fright, raccapriceiare, to terrify. The difficult word rezzo occurs in Dante, Inf. xvii. 87; xxxii. 75; it also means 'a cool place,' and some connect it with orezza, a soft cool wind, Purg. xxiv. 150, a word founded on the Lat. aura, a breeze. But see Errata. [*]

CAPRICORN, the name of a zodiacal sign. (L.) Lit. 'a horned goat.' In Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, pt. i. sect. 17.-Lat. capricornus, introduced into the Norman-French treatise of P. de Thaun, in Pop. Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, l. 196. - Lat. capri-, for capro-, stem of Lat. caper, a goat ; and corns, a horn. See Caper and Horn

CAPRIOLE, a peculiar frisk of a horse. (F., - Ital., -L.) Not common. Merely F. capriole, 'a caper in dancing; also the capriole, sault, or goats leap, done by a horse ;' Cot. - Ital. capriola, the leap of a kid. - Lat. capra, a she-goat. See Caper (1). CAPSIZE, to upset, overturn. (Span.?-L.) Perhaps a nautical corruption of Span. cabeccar, to nod one's head in sleep, to incline to one side, to hang over, to pitch as a ship does; cf. cabezada, the pitching of a ship; caer de cabeza, to fall headlong. - Span. cabeza, the head. -

CAPSTAN, a machine for winding up a cable. (F., -Span.) 'The weighing of anchors by the capstan is also new;' Ralegh, Essays (in Todd's Johnson). - F. cabestan, 'the capstane of a ship;' Cot. - Span. cabrestante, a capstan, engine to raise weights; also spelt cabestrante. - Span. cabestrar, to tie with a halter. - Lat. capistrare, to fasten with a halter, muzzle, tie; pres. part. capistrans (stem capistrant-), whence the Span. cabestrante. Cf. also Span. cabestrage, cattle-drivers' money, also a halter, answering to Low Lat. capistragium, money for halters. - Lat. capistrum (Span. cabestro), a halter. - Lat. capere, to hold. See Capacious. ¶ Sometimes derived from cabra, a goat, engine to cast stones, and estante, ex-plained by 'standing,' i. e. upright ; but Span. estante means 'extant, being in a place, permanent; ' and the Span, pres, part, estando simply means ' being.'

neans 'being.' [+] CAPSULE, a seed-vessel of a plant. (F., -L.) 'The little cases or capsules which contain the seed; ' Derham, Physico-Theology, bk. x. note 1. Sir T. Browne has capsulary; Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 37. § 3. -F. capsule, 'a little chest or coffer;' Cot. - Lat. capsula, a small chest ; dimin. of capsa, a chest, repository. - Lat. capere, to hold, contain.  $- \sqrt{KAP}$ , to hold; Fick, i. 39. Der. capsul-ar, capsul-ar-y. CAPTAIN, a head officer. (F., -L.) M. E. capitain, capitein, capitain. Spelt capitain, Gower, C. A. i. 360; capitayn, Chaucer, C. T. 13997. - O. F. capitain, a captain; Roquefort. - Low Lat. capitaneus, capitanus, a leader of soldiers, captain; formed, by help of suffix -anus, -aneus, from stem capit- of Lat. caput, the head. See Head.

Der. captain-cy. Doublet, chieftain, q. v. CAPTIOUS, critical, disposed to cavil. (F.,-L.) ' They moued unto Him this captions question; why (quoth they) do Johns disciples and the Phariseis ofttimes fast, and thy disciples not fast at alle?' Udal, on S. Mark, cap. ii. - F. captioux, 'captious, cavil-ling, too curious;' Cot. - Lat. captiosus, sophistical, critical. - Lat. cap:io, a taking, sophistical argument. - Lat. captare, to endeavour to take, snatch at; frequentative of Lat. capere, to hold. - & KAP, to hold; Fick, i. 39. Der. captious-ness. See below. CAPTIVE, a prisoner. (L) In Hackluyt, Voyages, i. 149; as a verb, to capture, in Sir T. More's Works, p. 279 c. Generally ex-pressed by its doublet cairiff in Middle-English. - Lat. captions, a pressed by its doublet carry in bilduc-taginal. - Let, opin-, -captive. - Lat. captus, pp. of capers, to hold, take, catch, seize. -  $\checkmark$ KAP, to hold; Fick, i. 39. See Caltiff. Der. captiv-i-ty, captu-ate, captiv-at-ing; from the same source, capt-or, capt-ure, captions. CAPUCHIN, a hooded friar; a hood. (F., - Ital.) Not in early use; Cotgrave spells it capicin in his explanation of F. capucin, but this is, no doubt, a misprint, since the spelling capucine occurs twice immediately below. - F. capucin, 'a capicin [read capucin] frier; of S. Frances order; weares neither shirt, nor breeches;' Cot. He also has: 'Capuchon, a capuche, a monk, cowle, or hood; also, the hood of a cloake.' - Ital. cappucino, a capuchin monk, small cowl; the monk being named from the 'small cowl' which he wore. Dimin. of Ital, cappuccio, a cowl, hood worn over the head.-Ital. cappa, a cape. See Cape, Cap.

CAR, a wheeled vehicle. (F., -C.) In Shak. Sonnet 7, &c. He also has carman, Meas. ii. 1. 269. M.E. carre, Maundeville's Travels, p. 130. -O. F. car, char (mod. F. char), a car. - Lat. carrus, a kind of four-wheeled carriage, which Cæsar first saw in Gaul; a Celtic word. -Bret. karr, a chariot; W. car, a raft, frame, drag; O. Gael. cár, a cart, car, or raft for carrying things on ; Irish carr, a cart, dray, waggon. [Whence also G. karre, a cart, barrow.]  $\beta$ . Allied to Lat. currus, a chariot, and currere, to run; the Lat. and Celt. c being the same Curtius, i. 77; Fick, i. 521. Der. There are numerous derivatives; see career, cargo. carrack, carry, cart, charge, chariot; cf. caracole.

CARABINE; see Carbine.

CARACOLE, a half-turn made by a horseman. (F.,-Span.) Caracol, with horsemen, is an oblique piste, or tread, traced out in semi-rounds, changing from one hand to the other, without observing a regular ground; Bailey's Dict. ed. 2 (1731), vol. ii. - F. caracol, 'a snail; whence, faire le caracol [for] souldiers to cast themselves into a round or ring;' Cot. Mod. F. caracole, a gambol; intro-duced from Span. in the 16th cent. (Brachet). - Span. caracol, a snail, a winding stair-case, a wheeling about ; caracol marino, a periwinkle. Applied to a snail-shell from its spiral shape; the notion implied is that of 'a spiral twist,' or 'a turning round and round,' or 'a screw.' B. Said in Mahn's Webster to be a word of Iberian origin; but it may be Celtic. Cf. Gael. carach, meandering, whirling, circling, winding, turning; car, a twist, turn, revolution: Irish carachad, moving, carachd, motion; car, a twist, turn; see Car.

CARAT, a certain very light weight. (F., - Arab., - Gk.) Generally a weight of 4 grains. In Shak. Com. Err. iv. 1. 28. - F. carat, 'a carrat; among goldsmiths and mintmen, is the third part of an ounce, among jewellers or stone-cutters, but the 19 part; Cot. Cf. O. Port. quirate, a small weight, a carat; cited by Diez. - Arab. girrát, a carat, the 24th part of an ounce, 4 barley-corns; also, a bean or pen-shell, a pod, husk; Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1122. - Gk. Reparior, the fruit of the locust-tree ; also (like Lat. siliqua), a weight, the carat; the lit. sense being 'a little horn.' - Gk. kepas (stem kepar-), a horn, cognate with E. Horn, q. v. ¶ The locust-tree, carob-tree, or St. John's-bread-tree is the Ceratonia siliqua; 'The seeds, which are nearly of the weight of a carat, have been thought to have been the origin of that ancient money-weight; ' Engl. Cycl. div. Nat. Hist. s. v. Ceratonia. There need be little doubt of this; observe further that the name Cerat-onia preserves the two former syllables of the Gk.

carator. See Carob, which is, however, unrelated. CARAVAN, a company of traders or travellers. (Pers.) Tn Milton, P. L. vii. 428. - F. caravane, 'a convoy of souldiers, for the safety of merchants that travel by land;' Cot. - Span. caravana, a troop of traders or pilgrims. - Pers. karwan, a caravan; Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1182. [+] CARAVANSARY, an inn for travellers. (Pers.) Occurs in the Spectator, no. 289. – Pers. karwán-sarāy, a public building for caravans; Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1182. – Pers. karwan, a cara-van; and sarāy, a palace, public edifice, inn; id. p. 821. CARAWAY, CARRAWAY, the name of a plant. (Span., – Arab.) Spelt caroway or carowaies in Cotgrave, to explain F. carvi. -Span. alcarahueya, a caraway; where al is merely the Arab. def. article. – Arab. karwiyá-a, karawiyá-a, karawiyá-a, cartaway-seeds or plant; Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1183. Cf. Gk. κάρον, κάρου, cumin; Lat. careum, Ital. caro, F. carvi (i. e. caraway); Liddell and Scott. ¶ In Webster, the Arabic word is said to be derived from the Greek one, which may easily be the case; it is so with caral.

CARBINE, a short light musket. (F., - Gk.) Also spelt carabine or carabin; and, in Tudor English, it means (not a gun, but) a man armed with a carbine, a musketeer. In this sense, the pl. carabins is in Knolles' Hist. of Turks, 1186, K (Nares); and carbine in Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit without Money, v. 1.-F. carabin, 'a carbine, or curbeene; an arquebuzier, armed with a murrian and breast-plate and serving on horse-back; Cot. [Mod. F. carabine, introduced from Ital. carabina, a small gun, in the 16th century (Brachet); but this does not at all account for carabin as used by Cotgrave.] Corrupted from O. F. calabrien, calabrin, a carbineer, sort of light-armed soldier; Roquefort. This word originally meant a man who worked one of the old war-engines, and was afterwards transferred to a man armed with a weapon of a newer make. - O. F. calabre, a war-engine used in besieging towns; Roquefort. - Low Lat. chadabula, a war-engine for throwing stones; whence calabre is derived by the change of d into I (as in O. Latin dingua, whence Lat. lingua) and by the common change of final -la to -re. - Gk. καταβολή, overthrow, destruction. -Gk. καταβάλλειν, to throw down, strike down, esp. used of striking down with missiles. - Gk. rará, down; and Báhheir, to throw, esp. to throw missiles. Cf. Skt. gal, to fall. - & GAR, to fall; Curtius, i. 76; Fick, i. 73. And see carabina in Diez. Der. carbin-err. CARBON, charcoal. (F., -L.) A modern chemical word. -F.

carbone. - Lat. acc. carbonem, from nom. carbo, a coal. B. Perhaps 44. Der. carbon-i-fer-ous, carbon-ac-e-ous, carbon-ic, carbon-ise; see below.

CARBONADO, broiled meat. (Span., -L.) Properly 'a rasher.' Cotgrave, s. v. carbonade, explains it by 'a carbonadoe, a rasher on the coales.' Used by Shak. Cor. iv. 5. 199. - Span. carbonado, carbonada, meat broiled on a gridiron; properly a pp. from a verb carbonar*, to broil.-Span. carbon, charcoal, coal.-Lat. acc. carbonem, coal; from nom. carbo. See above. Der. carbonado, verb; K. Lear, ii. 2. 41.

CARBUNCLE, a gem; a boil; a live coal. (L.) M. E. carbuncle, Gower, C. A. i. 57. [Also charbucle, Havelok, 2145; this latter form being French.] The sense is, properly, 'a glowing coal;' hence 'an inflamed sore, or boil; ' also 'a bright glowing gem.'-Lat. carbunculus, I. a small coal; 2. a gem; 3. a boil. For carboni-cul-us, a double dimin. from Lat. carbo (stem carbon-), a coal, sometimes, a live coal. See Carbon. Der. carbuncul-ar, carbuncl-ed. CABCANET, a collar of jewels. (F., -C.) In Shak. Com. Errors, iii. 1. 4. Formed as a dim., with suffix -et, from F. carcan, 'a carkanet, or collar of gold, &c.; also, an iron chain or collar; Cot. = O. F. carcan, carchant, charchant, a collar, esp. of jewels; Roquefort. - Bret. kerchen, the bosom, breast; also, the circle of the neck ; eur groaz è deûz enn hè cherchen, she wears a cross round her neck, i.e. hung from her neck. The Breton word is also pro-an iron collar. - Bret. kelck, a circle, circuit, ring. Cf. W. selch, round, CARCASE, CARCASE, a dead body. (F.,-Ital.,-Pers.)

M. E. carcays, carkeys. Spelt carcays in Hampole, Pricke of Con-science, 873. 'Carkeys, corpus, cadaver;' Prompt. Parv. p. 62.-O. F. carquasse, in Colgrave, who explains it by 'a carkasse, or dead corps.' Mod. F. carcasse, introduced from Ital. in the 16th cent. (Brachet). - Ital. carcassa, a kind of bomb, a shell (a carcase being a shell); closely related to Ital. carcasso, a quiver, hull, hulk, whence F. carguois, a quiver. Corrupted from Low Lat. tarcasius, a quiver. F. carquois, a quiver. Corrupted nom 20. . Pers. tarkash, a quiver; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 133.

the sense of chari; Macb. i. 3. 17; also a playing-card, Tam. Shrew, ii. 407. In the latter sense it is in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. i. c. 26. A corruption of carte ; cf. chart. - F. carte, 'a paper, a card ;' Cot.-Lat. (late) carta, earlier charta, paper, a piece of paper. -Gk. xópry, also xáprys, a leaf of paper. Doublet, chart, q. v. Der. card-board.

CARD (2), an instrument for combing wool; as verb, to comb wool. (F., -L.) The sb. is the original word, but is rare. M. E. carde, sb.; carden, vb. 'Carde, wommanys instrument, eardns, di-cerpulum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 62. 'Cardyn wolle, carpo;' ibid. The pp. carded occurs in P. Plowman, B. x. 18. - F. carde; Cotgrave gives the pl. 'cardes, cards for wooll.' He also gives 'Carder de laine, to card wooll.'- Low Lat. cardus, Lat. carduus, a thistle; used for carding wool. - Lat. cārēre, to card wool. Fick suggests a relation to Skt. kash, to scratch (root KAS); i. 49. Cf. Russ. cnesses, to card wool. CARDINAL, adj., principal, chief; sb., a dignitary of the church. (Lat.) As adj. we find 'cardinale vertues;' P. Plowman, B. xix. 313. The sb. is much older in E., and occurs in Layamon, iii. 182.-Lat. cardinalis, principal, chief, cardinal; orig. 'relating to the hinge of a door.' - Lat. cardin-, stem of cardo, a hinge. Cf. Gk. noabáw. I swing; Skt. kúrdana, a leaping, springing. - & KARD, to spring, swing; Curtius, i. 188; Fick, i. 525.

CARE, anxiety, heedfulness. (E.) M. E. care, Layamon, iii. 145. The usual sense is 'anxiety, sorrow.' – A. S. caru, cearu, sorrow, care, Grein, i. 158. + O. Sax. kara, sorrow; karón, to sorrow, lament. + Icel. kari, complaint, murmur; kara, to complain, murmur. + Goth. kara, sorrow; karón, to sorrow. + O. H. G. chara, lament; O. H. G. charón, to lament; M. H. G. karn, to lament. B. Shorter forms appear in Icel. hurr, a murmur, uproar; O. H. G. queran, to sigh. Cf. Gk. yipus, speech, ynphes, I speak, sound - & GAR, to call. See Call. See Fick, iii. 43; Curtius, i. 217. Der. care-ful-dy, care-ful-ness, care-less, care-less-ly, care-less-ness; also chary, q. v. Wholly unconnected with Lat. cura, with which it is often confounded.

CAREEN, to lay a ship on her side. (F., -L.) 'A crazy rotten vessel, ... as it were new careened;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, 1665, p. 244. Used absolutely, as in 'we careen'd at the Marias;' in Dampier, Voyages, vol. ii. c. 13. Cook uses it with an accusative case, as 'in order to careen her;' First Voyage, b. ii. c. 6. It was once written carine. 'To lie aside until carined;' Otia Sacra (Poems), 1648, p. 162; Todd's Johnson. Lit. 'to clean the keel.' - O. F. carine, 'the keele of a ship;' Cot.; also spelt carene. - Lat. carina, the keel of a ship; also, a nut-shell. From a /KAR, implying 'hardness;' cf. Gk. vapuov, a nut, kernel; Skt. karaka, a cocoa-nut (Curtius), karanka, the skull, karkara, hard. See Cancer. Der.

careen-age. CAREFER, a race; a race-course. (F., -C.) Shak. Much Ado, ii. 3. 250. - F. carriere, 'an highway, rode, or streete (Languedoc); also, a careere on horseback; and, more generally, any exercise or place for exercise on horse-backe; as an horse-race, or a place for horses to run in; and their course, running, or full speed therein; Cot. - O. F. cariere, a road, for carrying things along. - O. F. carier, to carry, transport in a car. - O. F. car, a car. - Celto-Latin carrus, a car. See Car.

CARESS, to fondle, embrace. (F., -L.) The sb. pl. caresses is in Milton, P. L. viii. 56. The verb is in Burnet, Own Time, an. 1671. - F. caresse, 's. f. a cheering, cherishing;' and caresser, 'to cherish, hug, make much of;' Cot. The sb. is the original, and introduced from Ital. in the 16th cent. (Brachet). - Ital. carezza, a caress, endearment, fondness. - Low Lat. caritia, dearness, value. - Lat. carus, dear, worthy, belowed. + Irish cara, a friend; caraim, I love. + We caru, to love. + Skt. kam, to love; whence kam-ra, beautiful, charming=Lat. cā-rus; Benfey, p. 158; Fick, i. 34. From the same root, charity, q. v.; amorous, q. v.

CARFAX, a place where four ways meet.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  I enter this because of the well-known example of carfax at Oxford, which has puzzled many. M.E. carfoukes, a place where four streets met : it occurs in this sense in the Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, 1. 1819, where the French original has carrefourg. The form carfax occurs I kelchen, which is explained to mean a carcan, a dog-collar, in the Prompt. Parv. p. 62, col. 2, l. 1, as the Eng. of Lat. quadrivium.

-O. F. carrefourgs, pl. of carrefourg; the latter being an incorrect form, as the sb. is essentially plural. - Lat. quatuor furcas, lit. four forks; according to the usual rule of deriving F. sbs. from the accusative case of the Latin. - Lat. quatuor, four; and furca, a fork. See Four, and Fork.

CARGO, a freight. (Span., -Low Lat., -C.) 'With a good cargo of Latin and Greek;' Spectator, no. 494. -Span. cargo, also carga, a burthen, freight, load ; cf. Span. cargare, to load, freight. -Low Lat. carricare, to load, lade. See Charge.

CARICATURE, an exaggerated drawing. (Ital., -C.) 'Those burlesque pictures, which the Italians call caracatura's; ' Spectator, no. 537. - Ital. caricatura, a satirical picture; so called from being over-loaded or overcharged with exaggeration. - Ital. caricare, to load, burden, charge, blame. - Low Lat. carricare, to load a car. - Lat. carrus, a car. See Car, and Charge. Der. caricature, verb; caricatur-ist.

CARLES, rottenness of a bone. (L.) Modern and medical. Merely Lat. caries, rottenness. Der. cari-ous.

CARMINE, a crimson colour, obtained from the cochineal insect originally. (Span., - Arab.) 'Carmine, a red colour, very vivid, made of the cochineal mastique;' Bailey's Dict. vol. ii; 2nd ed. 1731. - F. carmin (Hamilton); or from Span. carmin, carmine, a contracted form of Span. carmesin, crimson, carmine. - Span. carmes, kermes, cochineal. – Arab. qirmizi, crimson; qirmiz, crimson; qirmiz i firengi, cochineal; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 470. See Crimson. CARNAGE, slaughter. (F., -L.) In Holland's Plutarch, p.

371 (R.) - F. carnage, 'flesh-time, the season wherein it is lawfull to eate flesh (Picardy); also, a slaughter, butcherie; ' Cot. - Low Lat. carnaticum, a kind of tribute of animals ; also (no doubt) the same as carnatum, the time when it is lawful to eat flesh (whence the notion of a great slaughter of animals easily arose). - Lat. caro (stem carn-), flesh. + Gk. spias, flesh. + Skt. kravya, raw flesh. - / KRU, to make (or to be) raw. See below.

CARNAL, fleshly. (L.) See Coventry Mysteries, p. 194; Sir T. More's Works, p. 1d; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 17. -Lat. carnalis, fleshly, carnal. - Lat. carn-, base of caro, flesh. + Gk. splas, flesh. + Skt. kravya, raw flesh. From √ KRU, to make (or be) raw. See Curtius, i. 190; Fick, i. 52, 53; Benfey, p. 238. Der. carnal-ly, carnal-ist, carnal-i-ty; and see carnage, carnation, carnival, carnivorous, also incarnation, carcase, carrion, crude.

CARNATION, flesh colour; a flower. (F., -L.) See Hen. V, ii. 3. 35; Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 82. - F. carnation, carnation colour. B. The difficulty about this derivation lies in the fact that Cotgrave omits the word carnation, and Sherwood, in his Eng. index to Cotgrave, gives only: 'Carnation colour, incarnat, incarnadin, couleur incarnate,' as if carnation was then unknown as a French word. We find, however, Ital. carnagione, 'the hew of ones skin and flesh, also fleshinesse' (Florio). - Lat. carnationem, acc. of Lat. carnatio, fleshiness. - Lat. carn., base of caro, flesh. See Carnal. [+] CARNELIAN, another form of Cornelian, q. v.

CARNIVAL, the feast held just before Lent. (F., - Ital., -L.) The spelling is a mistaken one; it should rather be carnaval, car-neval, or carnoval. 'Our carnivals and Shrove-Tuesdays;' Hobbes, of the kingdom of darkness, c. 45. 'The carnival of Venice; 'Addi-son, On Italy, Venice. It is rightly spelt carnival in Blount's Glosso-graphia, ed. 1674. – F. carnaval, Shrovetide; Cot. Introduced from Ital. in the 16th cent. (Brachet). – Ital. carnovale, carnevale, the last three days before Lent. - Low Lat. carnelevamen, carnelevarium, carnilevaria, a solace of the flesh, Shrovetide; also spelt carnelevale in a document dated 1130, in Carpentier's supplement to Ducange. Afterwards shortened from carnelevale to carnevale, a change promoted by a popular etymology which resolved the word into Ital. carne, flesh, and vale, farewell, as if the sense were 'farewell! O flesh.' [Not 'farewell to flesh,' as Lord Byron attempts to explain it.] = Lat. carne-m, acc. of caro, flesh ; and levare, to lighten, whence -levar-ium, a mitigation, consolation, -levale, i. e. mitigating, consoling, and levamen, a consolation; the latter being the true Lat. form. See Carnal and Alleviate. [†]

CARNIVOROUS, flesh-eating. (L.) In Ray, On the Creation, pt. i. Also in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – Lat. carnivorus, feeding on flesh. - Lat. carni-, crude form of caro, flesh ; and worare, to devour. See Carnal and Voracious.

CAROB-TREE, the locust-tree. (Arabic.) The Arabic name. - Arab. kharrúb, Pers. kharnúb, bean-pods; see Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 608. See Carat, which is, however, unrelated.

CAROL, a kind of song; orig. a dance. (F., -C.) 'Faire is carole of maide gent;' King Alisaunder, 1, 1845. -O. F. carole, orig. a sort of dance; later carolle, 'a sort of dance wherein many dance together; also, a carroll, or Christmas song;' Cot. - Bret. koroll, a choir, concert. + W. carol, a carol, song; caroli, to carol; coroli, to move in a circle, to dance. + Gael. carull, caireall, harmony, melody, carolling. B. The word is clearly Celtic ; not Greek, as Diez suggests, without any evidence ; see carol discussed in Williams's Corn. Lexicon. The root also appears in Celtic, as Williams suggests; the original notion being that of 'circular motion,' exactly the same as in the case of Car, q. v. Cf. Irish cor, 'music; a twist, turn, circular motion;' car, 'a twist, turn, bending;' W. cór, a circle, choir; Gael. car, cuir, 'a twist, a bend, a turn, a winding as of a stream; a bar of music; movement, revolution, motion.' Cf. Skt. char, to move. - V KAR, to move, run; see Fick, i. 43. CABOTID, related to the two great arteries of the neck. (Gk.) 'The carotid, vertebral, and splenick arteries;' Ray, On the Creation (Todd). 'Carotid Arteries, certain arteries belonging to the brain; so called because, when stopt, they immediately incline the person to sleep; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - Gk. raportioes, s. pl. the two great arteries of the neck; with respect to which the ancients believed that drowsiness was connected with an increased (?) flow of blood through Webster. - Gk. kapów, I plunge into heavy sleep, I stupefy. them;'

-Gk. κάροι, heavy sleep, torpor. Cf. Skt. kala, dumb. CAROUSE, a drinking-bout. (F.,-G.) Orig. an adverb meaning 'completely,' or 'all out,' i.e. 'to the bottom,' used of drinking. Whence the phrase, 'to quaff carouse,' to drink deeply. 'Robin, here's a carouse to good king Edward's self;' George a Greene, Old Plays, iii. 51 (Nares). 'The tippling sottes at midnight which to quaffe carowse do use, Wil hate thee if at any time to pledge them thou refuse; Drant's Horace, ep. to Lollius. (See Horat. Epist. i. 18. 91. Drant died A. D. 1578.) 'He in that forest did death's cup carowse,' i. e. drink up; Mirror for Magistrates, p. 646. 'Then drink they all around, both men and women ; and sometimes they carowse for the victory very filthily and drunkenly;' Hackluyt, Voyages, i. 96. Also spelt garouse. 'Some of our captains garoused of his wine till they were reasonably pliant;' also, 'And are themselves the greatest garousers and drunkards in existence; 'Raleigh, Discovery of Guiana, cited by Marsh (in Wedgwood). - F. carous, 'a carrouse of drinke; 'Cotgrave. He also gives: 'Carousser, to quaffe, swill, carousse it.'-G. garnus, adv., also used as a sb. to mean 'finishing stroke;' as in 'einer Sache das garaus machen, to put an end to a thing;' Flügel's Dict. The G. garaus signifies literally right out,' and was specially used of emptying a bumper to any one's health, a custom which became so notorious that the word made its way not only into French and English, but even into Spanish; cf. Span. caraos, 'drinking a full bumper to one's health ;' Meadows, G. gar, adv. completely (O. H. G. karo, allied to E. gear and yare, ¶ Similarly, which see); and aus, prep. out, cognate with E. out. the phr. allaus was sometimes used, from the G. all aus, i. e. all out, in exactly the same connection; and this phrase likewise found its way into French. Cotgrave gives: 'Alluz, all out; or a carouse fully drunk up.' It even found its way into English. Thus Beaum. and Fletcher: 'Why, give's some wine then, this will fit us all; Here's to you, still my captain's friend ! All out !' Beggar's Bush, Act ii. sc. 3. Der. carouse, verb; also carous-al, in one sense of it, but not always; see below. [†]

CAROUSAL, (1) a drinking-bout; (2) a kind of pageant. (I. F., -G.; 2. F., -Ital.) 1. There is no doubt that carousal is now generally understood as a mere derivative of the verb to carouse, and would be so used. 2. But in old authors we find cárousél (generally so accented and spelt) used to mean a sort of pageant in which some form of chariot-race formed a principal part. 'This game, these carousels Ascanius taught, And, building Alba, to the Latins brought ;' Dryden's Virgil, Æn. v. 777, where the Latin text (v. 596) has certamina. And see the long quotation from Dryden's pref. to Albian and Albanius in Richardson. - F. carrousel, a tilt, carousal, tilting-match. - Ital. carosello, a corrupt form of garosello, a festival, a tournament, a sb. formed from the ad). garosello, somewhat quarrelsome, a dimin. form of adj. garoso, quarrelsome. The form carosello is not given in Meadows' Dict., but Florio gives caroselle or caleselle, which he explains by 'a kind of sport or game used at Shrovetide in Italie.'- Ital. gara, strife, debate, contention. [Perhaps connected with Lat. garrire, to prattle, babble, prate; unless it be another form of guerra, war, which is from the O. H. G. werra, war, cognate with E. war.] ¶ No doubt garosello was turned into carosello by confusion with carricello, a little chariot or car, dimin. of carro, a car; owing to the use of chariots in such festivities. See Car.

CARP (1), a fresh-water fish. (E.?) 'Carpe, fysche, carpus.' Prompt. Parv. p. 62. [The word is very widely spread, being found in all the Teutonic tongues; and hence it may be assumed to be an E. word.] + Du. karper. + Icel. karfi. + Dan. karpe. + Swed. karp. + O. H. G. charpho, M. H. G. karpfe, G. karpfen. B. It even found its way into late Latin as early as the fifth century, being dance, a movement of the body in cadence; korolla, korolli, to dance, found its way into late Latin as early as the fifth century, being move the body in cadence. + Manx carval, a carol, + Corn. carol, a  $\oplus$  found in Cassiodorus, lib. xii. ep. 4: 'Destinet carpam Danubius; quoted by Brachet. From the late Lat. carpa are derived F. carpe, Span. carpa, Ital. carpione. Cf. Gael. carbkanach uisge, a carp-fish. As the word is merely a borrowed one in Latin, the suggested derivation from Lat. carpere, to pluck, is of no value. CABP (2), to cavil at. (Scand.) In Shak. Much Ado, iii. 1. 71;

K. Lear, i. 4. 222. a. There can be little doubt that the peculiar use of carp, in a bad sense, is due to its supposed connection with the Lat. carpere, to pluck, to calumniate. At the same time, it is equally cer-tain that the M. E. carpen is frequently used, as noted by Trench in his Select Glossary, without any such sinister sense. Very frequently, it merely means 'to say,' as in to harpe the solhe, to tell the truth ; Will. of Paleme, 503, 655, 2804. It occurs rather early. 'Hwen thou art on eise, carpe toward lhesu, and seie thise wordes '= when thou art at ease, speak to Jesus, and say these words; Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 287.  $\beta$ . The word is Scandinavian, and had originally somewhat of a sinister sense, but rather significant of boasting or pratting than implying any malicious intent, a use of the word which is remarkably absent from Middle English; see the a6 examples of it in Mätzner's Wörterbuch. - Icel. karpa, to boast, brag. + Swed. dial. karpa, to brag, boast, clatter, wrangle, rant; more frequently spelt garpa (Rietz); cf. garper, a contentious man, a prattler, great talker. Y. Shorter and more original forms appear in Swed. dial. karper, brisk, eager, industrious (Rietz); Icel. garpr, a warlike man, a bravo, a virago; Old Swed. garp, a warlike, active man; also, a boaster (Ihre). Der. carp-er.

CARPENTER, a maker of wooden articles. (F., -C.) In early use. M. E. carpenter, Chaucer, C. T. 3189; Rob. of Glouc. p. 537; Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 30, l. 155. - O. F. carpentier (mod. F. charpentier), a worker in timber. - Low Lat. carpentarius, a carpenter. - Low Lat. carpentare, to work in timber ; with especial reference to the making of carriages. - Lat. carpentum, a carriage, chariot, used by Livy; a word (like car) of Celtic origin. Cf. Gael. and Irish carbad, a carriage, chariot, litter, bier. A shorter form appears in Irish carb, a basket, litter, bier, carriage, plank, ship; O. Gael. carbh, a ship, chariot, plank; O. Gael. carb, a basket, chariot; Irish cairbh, Gael. cairb, a chariot, ship, plank.  $\beta$ . In these words Irish cairbh, Gael. cairb, a chariot, ship, plank.  $\beta$ . In these words the orig. sense seems to be 'basket;' hence, anything in which things are conveyed, a car. Probably allied to Lat. corbis, a basket. Der.

carpentr-y. CARPET, a thick covering for floors. (F., -L.) 'A carpet, tapes, -itis; 'Levins (A.D. 1570). 'A ladyes carpet; 'Hall, Edw. IV, p. 234. - O. F. carpite, a carpet, sort of cloth ; Roquefort. - Low Lat. carpeta, carpita, a kind of thick cloth or anything made of such cloth; a dimin. of Low Lat. carpia, lint; cf. mod. F. charfie, lint. -Lat. carpere, to pluck, pull in pieces (lint being made from rags pulled to pieces); also to crop, gather. Cf. Gk. maprice, what is gathered, fruit; spornor, a sickle; also E. harvest, q. v. Curtius, i. 176. CARRACK, a ship of burden. (F., -L., -C.) In Shak. Oth. i.

2. 50. M. E. caracke, Squyr of Low Degre, 1. 818. [We also find carrick, which comes nearer to Low Lat. carrica, a ship of burden.] -O. F. carraque (Roquefort). - Low Lat. carraca, a ship of burden; a less correct form of Low Lat. carrica. - Low Lat. carracare. better carricare, to lade a car. - Lat. carrus, a car. See Car.

CARRION, putrefying flesh, a carcase. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. caroigne, caroyne, a carcase; Chaucer, C. T. 2015; spelt charoine, Ancren Riwle, p. 84. -O. F. caroigne, charoigne, a carcase. -Low Lat. caronia, a carcase. - Lat. caro, flesh. See Carnal.

CARRONADE, a sort of cannon. (Scotland.) So called from Carron, in Stirlingshire, Scotland, where there are some celebrated iron works. 'The articles [there] manufactured are machinery, agricultural implements, cannon, carronades, which take their name from this place, &c.;' Engl. Cycl. s. v. Stirlingshire. CARBOT, an edible root. (F.,-L.) 'A carote, pastinaca;'

'A carote, pastinaca;' Levins (A. D. 1570). 'Their savoury parsnip next, and carrot, pleasing food ;' Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 20. - F. carote, carrote, the carrot, Cot.; mod. F. carotte. - Lat. carota, used by Apicius. (Apicius is probably an assumed name, and the date of the author's treatise uncertain.) Cf. Gk.  $m_{0}arr(r, a carrot (Liddell). Der. carrot-y. CARBY, to convey on a car. <math>(F_{..}-C.)$  M. E. carien, with one r; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 190. – O. F. carier, to carry, transport in a car. = 0. F. car, a cart, car. See Car. Der. carriage, formerly cariage, with one r, Prompt. Parv. p. 62; see Trench, Select Glossary. CART, a two-wheeled vehicle. (C.) In very early use. M. E. karte, carte; Ormulum, 53. Chaucer has carter, C. T. 7121. A.S. crat, for cart, by the common metathesis of r; pl. cratu, chariots, A.S. version of Gen. 1.9. Cf. 'verdus, crait-hors,' i.e. cart-horse; AElf. Gloss. ed. Somner, p. 56, col. 1. - W. cart, a wain. + Gael. cairt, Irish cairt, a cart, car, chariot. The word is a diminutive of car, a blank paper, seldom used but in this phrase, to send one a carte blanche, signed, to fill up with what conditions he pleases; ' Bailey's of which carte is a doublet. Dar. carte, a cart. See further under Card, of which carte is a doublet. Dar. cart-el (F. cartel, from Ital. cartello), the dimin. form; cart-oon (Span. carton, Ital. cartone), the augmentative form; also cartridge, cartulary, which see. Cartel is spelt chartel in Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 5. Cartoon is spelt carton in the Spectator, no. 226.

In Boyle's Works, vi. 735; CARTILAGE, gristle. (F.,-L.) Ray has the adj. cartilagineous (sic), On the Creation, pt. i. (R.)-F. cartilage, gristle; Cot. - Lat. cartilaginem, acc. of cartilago, gristle; of unknown origin. Der. cartilag-in-ous.

CARTOON; see under Carto. CARTRIDGE, CARTOUCHE, a paper case for the charge of a gun. (F., - Ital., - Gk.) Cartridge is a corruption of cartrage, a form which appears in Dryden's Annus Mirabilis, st. 149 (altered to cartridge in the Clar. Press ed. of Selections from Dryden.) Again, cartrage is a corruption of cartcucke, the true F. form. - F. cartoucke, the cornet of paper whereinto Apothecaries and Grocers put the parcels they retail; also, a cartouch, or full charge for a pistoll, put up within a little paper, to be the readier for use; Cot. 2. A tablet for an ornament, or to receive an inscription, formed like a scroll, was also called a cartouche, in architecture ; and Cot, also gives ; <sup>6</sup> Cartoche, [the same] as Cartouche; also, a cartridge or roll, in archi-tecture.' This shews that the corrupt form cartridge (apparently made up, by popular etymology, from the F. carte, a card, and the E. ridge, used for edge or projection) was then already in use. - Ital. cartoccio, an angular roll of paper, a cartridge. - Ital. carta, paper. -Lat. charta (late Lat. carta), paper. - Gk. xáprns, a leaf of paper. See Carte, Card.

CARTULARY, a register-book of a monastery. (Low Lat., -Gk.) 'I may, by this one, shew my reader the form of all those cartularies, by which such devout Saxon princes endowed their sacred structures;' Weever (in Todd's Johnson). Also in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. - Low Lat. cartularium, another form of chartularium, a register. - Low Lat. chartula, a document; dimin. of Lat. charta, a paper, charter. - Gk. χάρτηs, a leaf of paper. See Carte, Card, a Charter.

CARVE, to cut. (E.) M. E. kerven, keruen (u for v); Layamon, i. 250. – A. S. ceorfan, Grein, i. 159. + Du. kerven, + Icel. kyrfa; Icel. Dict., Addenda, p. 776. + Dan. karve, to notch. + Swed. karfwa, to cut. + G. kerben, to notch, jag, indent.  $\beta$ . The word is co-radicate with Grave, q.v. Der. carver. CARYATIDES, female figures in architecture, used instead of columns as supporters. (Gk.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Sometimes written Caryates, which is the Latin form, being the pl. of adj. Caryātis, i. e. belonging to the village of Caryæ in Laconia. Cary atides is the Gk. form, signifying the same thing. - Gk. Kapuáriðes,

s. pl., women of Caryze. CASCADE, a waterfall. (F., -Ital., -L.) Not given in Cotgrave. Used by Addison, in describing the Teverone (Todd's Johnson); and in Anson's Voyages, bk. ii. c. 1. Given in Kersey's Dict: ed. 1715. - F. cascade, introduced from Ital. in the 16th century, according to Brachet; but perhaps later. - Ital. cascata, a waterfall; formed as a regular fem. pp. from cascare, to fall; which is formed from Lat. casare, to totter, to be about to fall, most likely by the help of suffix -ic-, so that cascare may stand for casicare. β. Lat. casare is a secondary verb, formed from casum, the supine of cadere, to fall. See Chance.

CABE (1), that which happens; an event, &c. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. cas, seldom case; it often means 'circumstance,' as in Rob. of Glouc. p. 9; also 'chance,' id. p. 528. -O. F. cas, mod. F. cas. - Lat. casus (crude form casu-), a fall, accident, case. - Lat. casus, pp. of cadere, to fall. See Chance. Der. casu-al, casu-al-ty, casuist, casu-ist-ic, casu-ist-ic-al, casu-ist-ry; all from the crude form casuof Lat. casus. Casual occurs in Chaucer, Tro. and Cress. iv. 391. Casuist is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. CASE (2), a receptacle, cover. (F., -L.) M. E. casse, bace. 'Kace, or casse for pynnys, capcella; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 369. -O. F. casse, 'a box, case, or chest; 'Cot. (mod. F. cai:se). - Lat. capsa, a receptacle, chest, box, cover. - Lat. capser, to receive, contain, hold. - V KAP. to hold; Fick, i. 39. Dor. case, verb; cash, q. v.; also en-case, case-CASEMATE, a bomb-proof chamber. (F., - Ital.) Originally, a bomb-proof chamber, furnished with embrazures; later, an embrazure. ' Casemate, a loop-hole in a fortified wall to shoot out at ; or, in fortification, a place in a ditch, out of which to plague the as-Jonson, Staple of News, i. 3. - F. casemate, 'a casemates; 'Ben Jonson, Staple of News, i. 3. - F. casemate, 'a casemate, a loop, or loop-hole, in a fortified wall; 'Cot. - Ital. casamatta, 'a casamatt. q.v.; for the final t, see Chariot. Der. cart, v.; cart-age, cart-er. CABTE, a paper, a card, bill of fare. (F., -Gk.) Modern, and mere French. First used in the phrase carte blanche. 'Carte blanche, 'Car low under the wall or bulwarke not arriving vnto the height of the ditch, and serues to annoy or hinder the enemie when he entreth the ditch to skale the wall; 'Florio. – Ital. casa, a house; and matta, fem. of adj. matto, mad, foolish, but also used nearly in the sense of E. 'dummy;' whilst the Sicilian mattu, according to Diez, means dim, dark. Hence the sense is dummy-chamber, or dark chamber. Cf. Ital. carromatto, 'a block carriage vsed sometimes to spare field-carriages;' Florio. – Lat. casa, a cottage; and Low Lat. mattus, sad, foolish, dull, lit. check-mated, for the origin of which see Chockmate. And see Casino.

nate. And see Casino. CASEMENT, a frame of a window. (F., -L.) A casement is a small part of an old-fashioned window, opening by hinges, the rest of the window being fixed; also applied to the whole window. It occurs in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 4. 2. We also find 'casement, a concave moulding,' in Halliwell's Dict., without any reference.  $\beta$ . In β. Ιn the latter case, the word stands for enchasement, from the verb to enchase; just as the verb to chase, in the sense ' to engrave, adorn,' is short for enchase. Observe, too, that enchase is a doublet of encase; see Enchase. Y. The two senses of casement are, in fact, connected; and, just as casement in the sense of 'moulding' is from the verb to enchase, so comment in the sense of window, or rather ' window-frame,' is from the verb to encase. 8. In other words, casement is short for encasement; and was formed from the O. F. encasser, 'to case, or in-chest, to make up in, or put up into, a case or chest; 'Cot. Cf. O. F. enchassiller, 'to set in, to enclose, compass, bind, hold in with a wooden frame;' id. Also enchasser en or, 'to enchace, or set in gold;' also 'enchassement, an enchacing or enchacement;' and 'enchasseure, an enchacement, an enchacing, or setting in;' id. e. The O.F. form of enchassement would have been encassement, from which casement followed easily by the loss of the prefix. Similarly, Shak, has case for mease, Com. Err. ii. 1. 85. The suffix -ment is, properly, only added to verbs. Both case and the suffix -ment are of Lat. origin. See Encase, and Case (a). ¶ The Ital. casamento, a large house, is quite a different word. Observe a similar loss of the first syllable in fence, for defence, cen er for incenser, &c.

CASH, coin or money. (F., -L.) So in Shak. Hen. V, ii. 1. 120. But the original sense is 'a chest,' or 'a till,' i. e. the box in which the ready money was kept; afterwards transferred to the money itself. 'So as this bank is properly a general cash [i. e. till, moneybox], where every man lodges his money;' Sir W. Temple, On the United Provinces, c. 2 (R.) And see the quotation from Cotgrave below. -F. casse, 'a box, case, or chest, to carry or keep weares [wares] in; also, a merchant's cash or counter;' &c. -Lat. capsa, a chest. Thus cash is a doublet of Case (2), q.v. Der. cash-ier, sb.; but see cashier below.

CASHIER, v. to dismiss from service. (G., -F., -L.) [Quite unconnected with eashier, sb., which is simply formed from cash.] In Shak, Merry Wives, i, 3.6. A. Originally written cash. 'He cashed the old souldiers and supplied their roumes with yong beginners;' Golding, Justine, fol. 63 (R.) And the pp. cashed, for cashiered, occurs in a Letter of The Earl of Leicester, dated 1585; Nares, ed. Wright and Halliwell. Also spelt cass. 'But when the Lacedæmonians saw their armies cassed;' North's Plutarch, 180 E; quoted in Nares, s. v. casse, q. v. -F. casser, 'to breake, burst, ... quash asunder, also to casse, cassere, discharge; 'Cot. -Lat. cassare, to bring to nothing, to annul, discharge; used by Sidonius and Cassiodorus. -Lat, casses, from Lat. quassare, to break in pieces, shatter; but this only applies to casser in the sense 'to break;' casser in the sense 'to discharge' is really of different origin, though no doubt the distinction between the two verbs has long been lost.] B. The above etymology strictly applies only to the old form cask. But it is easy to explain the suffix. The form cassere has been already quoted from Cotgrave; this is really the High-German form of the word, viz, G. cassirem, to cashier, destroy, annihilate, annul; cf. Du. casseren, to cast off, break, discard. This G. cass-ren is nothing but the F. casser with the common G. suffix-iren, used in forming G. verbs from Romance ones; ex. isoliren, to isolate, from F. isoler. Hence we have cashier from G. cassiren, which from F. casser, Lat. cassare.

CASHMERE, a rich kind of stuff. (India.) A rich kind of ahawl, so called from the country of Cashmere, which lies close under the Himalayan Mountains, on the S. side of them. Also a name given to the stuff of which they are made, and to imitations of it. See Cassimere.

CASINO, a house or room for dancing. (Ital., -L.) Modern. -Ital. casino, a summer-house, small country-box; dimin. of casa, a house. - Lat. casa, a cottage. - √ SKAD, to cover, defend; Curtius, i. 206; cf. Fick, i. 806.

CASK, a barrel or tub for wine, &c. (Span., -L.) 'The caske will have a taste for evermore With that wherewith it seasoned was before;' Mirror for Magistrates, p. 193. -Span. caseo, a skull, sherd, coat (of an onion); a cask; helmet; casque; cf. Span. cascara, peel, rind, hull. See Casque, of which cask is a doublet. ¶ I see no connection with E. case (2), which is from Lat. capsa, from capere.

CASKET, a little chest or coffer.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  In Shak. Mer. of Ven. i. 2. 100. The dimin. of cask, in the sense of 'chest.' 'A jewel, locked into the wofullest cask; '2 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 400. This word cask is not the same with 'a cask of wine,' from the Spanish, but is a corruptly formed doublet of cask in the sense of 'chest;' see Caah. And this cask is but another form of case. All three forms, case, cask, and cask, are from the French. B. Corrupted from F. cassette, 'a small casket, chest, cabinet,' &c.; Cot. A dimin. form. - F. casse, a box, case, or chest, -Lat. capaa, a chest. -Lat. capare, to contain. - $\sqrt{KAP}$ , to hold. See Case (2).

CASQUE, a helmet. (F., -Ital., -L.) In Shak. Rich. II, i. 3. 81. -F. casque, 'the head-piece tearmed a casque, or casket;' Cot. - Ital. casco, a helmet, casque, head-piece. [We cannot well derive this word from Lat cassis and casida, a helmet, head-piece; Diez remarks that the suffix -ic- is only used for feminine substantives.]  $\beta$ . The etymology comes out better in the Spanish, which uses caseo in a much wider sense; to wit, a skull, sherd, coat (of an onion), a cask, helmet, casque. The Span. has also cascara, peel, rind, shell (cf. Port. casea, bark, rind of trees); and these words, with numerous others, appear to be all derivatives from the very common Span. verb cascar, to burst, break open; formed (as if from Lat. quasi-icare) from an extension of Lat. quasi-are, which also gives F. casser, to break. See Quash. Doublet, cask, q. v.

CASSIA, a species of laurel. (L., - Heb.) Exod. xxx. 24; Psalm, xlv. 8 (A. V.), where the Vulgate has casia. - Lat. casia, cassia. - Gk. xacla, a spice of the nature of cinnamon. - Heb. qetsi'dtk, in Ps. xlv. 8, a pl. form from a fem. qetsi'dtk, cassia-bark, from the root qdtad, to cut; because the bark is cut or peeled off. ¶ We also find Heb. gidddk, Exod xxx. 24, from the root gddad, to cut; with which cf. Arab. qdti, cutting, in Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1110. But this is a different word. See Smith, Dict. of the Bible. [†] CASSIMERE, a twilled cloth of fine wool. (India.) Also spelt

CASSIMERE, a twilled cloth of fine wool. (India.) Also spelt kerseymere in Webster. These terms are nothing but corruptions of Cashmere, q. v.; and distinct from Kersey, q. v. Cashmere is spelt Cassimer in Herbert's Travels, 1665, p. 70.

Cashmere, q. v.; and distinct from Kersey, q. v. Cashmere is spelt Casimer in Herbert's Travels, 1665, p. 70. CASSOCK, a kind of vestment. (F., -Ital., -L.) Sometimes 'a military cloak;' All's Well, iv. 3. 192. - F. casaque, 'a cassock, long coat;' Cot. - Ital. casacca, a great coat, surtout. Formed from Ital. casa, properly 'a house;' hence 'a covering,' used in a half jocular sense. Cf. Ital. casaccia, a large ugly old house. Indeed, Florio gives casacca as meaning 'an habitation or dwelling; also, a cassocke or long coate.' - Lat. casa, a cottage. -  $\checkmark$  SKAD, to cover, protect. See Casino. And see Chasuble, a word of similar derivation.

CASSOWARY, a bird like an ostrich. (Malay.) "Cassowary or Emeu, a large fowl, with feathers resembling camel's hair;" Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. In Littré (s. v. casoar), it is derived from the Malay kassuwaris, the name of the bird. 'The cassowary is a bird which was first brought into Europe by the Dutch, from Java, in the East Indies, in which part of the world it is only to be found;" Eng. tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., ii. 9; London, 1792.

In the East nucles, in which part of the world it is only to be round, Eng. tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., ii. 9; London, 1792. CAST, to throw. (Scand.) In early use, and one of the most characteristic of the Scand. words in English. M. E. casten, kesten; St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, pp. 4, 7; Havelok, II. 1784, 2101. – Icel. kasta, to throw. + Swed. kasta. + Dan. kaste.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense was probably to 'throw into a heap,' or 'heap up;' cf. Icel. köstr, kös, a pile, heap; Lat. con-genere, to heap together, pp. congestus. Perhaps from  $\checkmark$  GAS, to carry, bring. Fick, iii. 45; i. 569. Der. cast, sb.; cast-er, cast-ing, cast-away, out-cast. [†] CASTE, a breed, race. (Port., -L.) Sir T. Herbert, speaking of CASTE, a breed, race. (Port., -L.) Sir T. Herbert, speaking of men of various occupations in India, says: 'These never marry out of their own casts;' Travels, ed. 1665, p. 53. 'Four casts or sorts of men;' Lord's Discovery of the Banians [of India], 1630, p. 3 (Todd). Properly used only in speaking of classes of men in India. -Port. casta, a race, stock; a name given by the Portuguese to classes of men in India. - Port. casta, adj. fem., chaste, pure, in allusion to purity of breed; from masc. casto. - Lat. castus, chaste. See Chaste.

CASTIGATE, to chastise, chasten. (L.) In Shak. Timon, iv. 3. 240. – Lat. castigatus, pp. of castigare, to chasten. The lit. sense is 'to keep chaste' or 'keep pure.' – Lat. castus, chaste, pure. See Chaste. Der. castigat-ion, castigat-or. Doublet, chasten.

Chaste. Der. tashgar-ton, casingar-or. Doublet, chasten. CASTLE, a fortified house. (L.) In very early use. A.S. castel, used to represent Lat. castellum in Matt xxi. 2. – Lat. castellum, dimin. of castrum, a camp, fortified place. –  $\checkmark$  SKAD, to protect; a secondary root from  $\checkmark$  SKA, to cover; whence also E. shade, shadow; see Curtius, i. 206. See Shade. Der. castell-at-ed, castell-an.

CASTOR, a beaver; a hat. (L., -Gk.) 'Castor, the beaver; or H a fine sort of hat made of its fur;' Kersey's Dict. 1715. Mere Latin. -Gk. masrup, a beaver.  $\beta$ . Of Eastern origin. Cf. Malay kasturi, Skt. kastúri, musk ; Pers. khaz, a beaver. Dor. castor-oil, q. v.

CASTOR-OIL, a medicinal oil. (L.) Apparently named from some resemblance to castoreum. 'Castoreum, a medicine made of the liquor contained in the little bags that are next the beaver's groin; ' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. See above. ¶ Explained in Webster Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. See above. ¶ Explained in Webster as a corruption of castus-oil, because the castor-oil plant was formerly called Agnus castus. Surely a mistake. The castor-oil plant, or palma-Christi, is Ricinus communis; but the Agnus castus is the Vitex The two are quite distinct.

agnus castus. The two are quite distinct. CASTRATE, to cut so as to render imperfect. (L.) 'Ye castrate the desires of the flesh;' Martin, Marriage of Priests, 1554, Yi, b (Todd's Johnson). G. kater, chazzá; G. kater, katze. + W. cath. + Irish and Gael. cat. + Bret. kaz. + Late Lat. catws. + Russian kot', koskka. + Arab. gitt; Richardson's Dict. p. 1136. + Turkish kedi. β. Origin and history of the spread of the word alike obscure. Der. cat-call; cat-kin, q. v.; kitt-en, q. v.; cat-er-waul, q. v.; also caterpillar, q. v.

CATA-, prefix; generally 'down.' (Gk.) Gk. Mara-, prefix; Gk. Mara, prep., down, downward, hence, in composition, also 'thoroughly,' or 'completely.' Conjectured by Benfey to be derived from the pronom. stem ka- (Skt. kas, who), by help of the suffix -ra which is seen in el-ra, then : Curtius, ii. 67. Der. cata-clysm, cata-comb, &c. CATACLYSM, a deluge. (Gk.) In Hale, Origin of Mankind, p. 217 (R.) And in Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. - Gk. κατακλυσμόs, a dashing over, a flood, deluge. - Gk. κατακλυζειν, to dash over, to deluge. - Gk. ward, downward; and whifew, to wash or dash (said of waves). Cf. Lat. cluere, to cleanse. - & KLU, to wash ; see Curtius, i. 185; Fick, i. 552.

CATACOMB, a grotto for burial. (Ital., -Gk.) In Addison's Italy, on Naples; and in the Tatler, no. 129. And in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - Ital. catacomba, a sepulchral vault. - Low Lat. catacumba, chiefly applied to the Catacombs at Rome. - Gk. sará, downwards, below; and  $\kappa i \mu \beta \eta$ , a hollow, cavity, hollow place; also a goblet. Cf. Skt. kumbha, a pot. 'We may infer that the original signification of the verb kubk was "to be crooked;"' Benfey, p. 196. which see CATALEPSY, a sudden seizure. (Gk.) Spelt catalepsis in Kersey, ed. 1715. A medical term. – Gk. sardànyis, a grasping, seizing. – Gk. sará, down; and  $\lambda a\beta$ , appearing in  $\lambda a\beta \epsilon i \nu$ , to seize, aorist infin. of  $\lambda a \mu \beta \acute{a} r \epsilon i \nu$ , to seize. Cf. Skt. labh, lambh, to obtain, get; rabh, to seize - A RABH, to seize.

CATALOGUE, a list set down in order. (F.,-Gk.) In Shak. All's Well, i. 3. 149. – F. catalogue, 'a catalogue, list, rowl, register,' &c.; Cot. – Late Lat. catalogus. – Gk. κατάλογοs, a counting up, enrolment. – Gk. κατά, down, fully; and λέγειν, to say, tell. See Logic.

CATAMARAN, a sort of raft made of logs. (Hindustani.) Given as a Deccan word in Forbes' Hindustani Dict. ed. 1859, p. 280; 'katmaran, a raft, a float, commonly called a catamaran. word is originally Tamul, and signifies in that language tied logs.' [+] CATAPLASM, a kind of poultice. (F.,-Gk.) In Hamlet, iv. 7. 144. - F. cataplasme, 'a cataplasme, or poultis; a soft, or moyst plaister; ' Cot. - Lat. cataplasma. - Gk. narán hao µa, a plaster, poultice. - Gk. saranláooew, to spread over. - Gk. sará, down, over; and  $\pi\lambda$ áσσειν, to mould, bring into shape. See Plaster.

CATAPULT, a machine for throwing stones. (Low Lat., – Gk.) In Holland's Pliny, bk. vii. c. 56 (R.) – Low Lat. catapulta, a war-engine for throwing stones. – Gk.  $\kappa a \tau a \pi i (\lambda \tau \eta s)$ , the same. – Gk.  $\kappa a \tau d s$ , down; and wather, to brandish, swing, also, to hurl a missile. -✓ PAL, to drive, hurl; cf. Lat. pellere, to drive; Fick, iii. 671.

CATARACT, a waterfall. (L., -Gk.) In King Lear, iii. 2. 22. M. E. cateracte (rare), Towneley Mysteries, pp. 29, 32. - Lat. cateracta, in Gen. vii. 11 (Vulgate). - Gk. sarapparrys, as sb., a waterfall; as adj., broken, rushing down.  $\beta$ . Wedgwood derives this from Gk. surapáooew, to dash down, fall down headlong; but this is not quite clear. Littré takes the same view.  $\gamma$ . In Webster's Dict., it is said to be from  $kara \beta bh \gamma numeric (root <math>F \rho a \gamma)$ , I break down; of which the aorist pass.  $kare \beta \beta a \gamma \eta \nu$  was esp. used of waterfalls or storms, in the sense of 'rushing down;' as well as in the sense of 'discharging,' said of a tumour, &c. The latter verb is a comp. from ward, down, and phyroum, I break; cognate with E. break, q.v. In other words, according to this view, the syllable -ppart- stands for Fpart-, which is equivalent to Lat. fract- in fractus, broken. See Fraction. [+] cold. (Gk.) In Shak. Troilus, v. 1. 22. Spelt cattare, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 17. - Lat. catarrhus, a Latinised form from the Gk. saráppoos, a catarrh, lit. a flowing down. - Gk. sará, down; and blow, I flow. - V PT, XPT, to flow, Curtius, i. 439; SRU, to flow, Fick, i. 837. See Stream.

CATASTROPHE, an upset, great calamity, end. (Gk.) In Shak, L. L. L. iv. 1. 77. - Gk. naraorpooph, an overthrowing, sudden turn. - Gk. sará, down, over; and orpique, to turn. See Strophe. CATCH, to lay hold of, seize. (F., -L.) M. E. cachen, cacchen, in very common and early use. In Layamon, iii. 266. - O. F. cachier. cacier, a dialectal variety (probably Picard), of chacier, to chase. [Cf. Ital. cacciare, to hunt, chase; Span. cazar, to chase, hunt.]-Low Lat. caciare, to chase ; corrupted from captiare, an assumed late form of captare, to catch; the sb. captia, a chase, is given in Ducange .-Lat. captare, in the phr. ' captare feras,' to hunt wild beasts, used by Propertius (Brachet, s. v. chasser). Captare is a frequentative form from Lat. capere, to take, lay hold of, hold, contain. See Capacious. Der. catch-word, catch-penny, catch-poll (used in M.E.). Doublet, chase.

CATECHISE, to instruct by questions. (Gk.) Used of oral instruction, because it means 'to din into one's ears.' In Shak. Much Ado, iv. 1. 79. - Low Lat. catechizare, to catechise; an ecclesiastical word. - Gk. narnxifeir, to catechise, to instruct; a longer and derived form of saryxées, to din into one's ears, impress upon one; lit. 'to din down.' - Gk. sar-á, down; and  $\eta \chi \eta$ , a sound,  $\eta \chi os$ , a ringing in the ears. See Echo. Der. catechis-er; catechism (Low Lat. catechismus); catechist (Gk. Karyx107/18); catechist-ic, catechist-ic-al; catechetic (from Gk. warnxnrhs, an instructor), catechet-ic-al, catechet-ic-al-ly; catechumen (Gk. rarn xoúµeros, one who is being instructed).

CATEGORY, a leading class or order. (Gk.) 'The distribution of things into certain tribes, which we call categories or predicaments; Bacon, Adv. of Learning, bk. ii. sect. xiv. subject 7. - Gk. warnyopia, an accusation; but in logic, a predicament, class. - Gk. κατηγορείν, to accuse. - Gk. ward, down, against; and dyopever, to declaim, to address an assembly, from dyopá, an assembly. Cf. Gk. dyeipew, to assemble. Dor. categor-ic-al, categor-ic-al-ly.

CATER, to buy, get provisions.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  Properly a sb. and used as we now use the word cancer, wherein the ending -r of the agent is unnecessarily reduplicated. So used by Sir T. Wyat, Satire i. l. 26. To cater means 'to act as a cater,' i. e. a buyer. The old spelling of the sb. is catour. 'I am oure catour, and bere oure aller purs' = I am the buyer for us, and bear the purse for us all; Gamelyn, . 317. 'Catour of a gentylmans house, despensier;' Palsgrave.  $\beta$ . Again, catour is a contracted form of acatour, by loss of initial a. Acatour is formed (by adding the O. F. suffix -our of the agent) from acate, a buying, a purchase; a word used by Chaucer, Prol. 573.-O. F. acat, achat, a purchase (mod. F. achat). - Low Lat. acaptum, a purchase, in a charter of A.D. 1118 (Brachet); written for accaptum. -Low Lat. accaptare, to purchase, in a charter of A.D. 1000 (Brachet, s. v. acheter). A frequentative of accipere, to receive, but sometimes 'to buy. - Lat. accipere, to receive, take to oneself. - Lat. ad, to (which becomes ac- before c), and capere, to take; from  $\checkmark$  KAP, to

CATERPILLAR, a kind of grub. (F.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 3. 166. Used also by Sir Jo. Cheeke, Hurt of Sedition (R.) Spelt catyrpel, Prompt. Parv. p. 63; to which the suffix -ar or -r of the agent was afterwards added. Palsgrave has: 'caterpyllar worme, chattepeleuse.' The M. E. catyrpel is a corruption of O. F. chattepeleuse or chatepeleuse. Cotgrave has: 'Chatepeleuse, a corne-devouring mite, or weevell.' β. A fanciful name, meaning literally 'hairy she-cat,' applied (unless it be a corruption) primarily to the hairy caterpillar. -O.F. chate, a she-cat (Cotgrave); and pelouse, orig. equivalent to Ital. peloco, hairy, from Lat. pilosus, hairy, which again is from Lat. pilus, a hair. Cf. E. pile, i. e. nap upon cloth, q. v. And see Cat. CATERWAUL, to cry as a cat. (E.) M. E. caterwawen. Chaucer has 'gon a caterwawed' = go a-caterwawling (the pp. -ed being used with the force of the -ing of the (so-called) verbal substantive, by an idiom explained in my note on blakeberyed in Chaucer); C. T. 5936. Formed from cat, and the verb waw, to make a noise like a cat, with the addition of -I to give the verb a frequentative force. The word waw is imitative; cf. wail, q. v.

CATHABTIC, purgative, lit. cleansing. (Gk.) Cathartical and catharticks occur in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Cathartics or purgatives of the soul,' Spectator, no. 507. - Gk. nataprinds, purgative, purifying. -Gk. sabalpers, future sabap-ŵ, to cleanse, purify. - Gk. sabapós, clean, pure. + Lat. castus (for cad-tus), chaste, pure. See Chasto. Der. cathartic, sb.; cathartic-al.

CATHEDRAL, a church with a bishop's throne. (L., -Gk.) Properly an adi. being an abbreviation for cathedral church. 'In the and βηγνυμ, I break; cognate with E. break, q.v. In other words, according to this view, the syllable -ppart-stands for fpart-, which is equivalent to Lat. fract- in fractus, broken. See Fraction. [†] CATABRH, a fluid discharge from the mucous membrane: a whence cathedralis ecclesia, a cathedral church. -Lat. cathedra, a raised seat; with adj. suffix -alis. - Gk. nabiopa, a seat, bench, pulpit. -Gk. nard, down (which becomes na0- before an aspirate); and topa, a seat, chair, a longer form from toos, a seat. - Gk. topau (root to), I sit. The Gk. root hed is cognate with E. sit; cf. Gk. hex = E. six. See Bit.

CATHOLIC, universal. (Gk.) Spelt eatholyke; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. iii. c. 22. - Lat. catholicus, used by Tertullian, adv. Marc. ii. 17. - Gk. καθολικόs, universal, general; formed with suffix ----- from Gk. Rabohov, adv., on the whole, in general. -- Gk. καθ' όλου, the older form of καθόλου, where καθ' stands for κατά (on account of the following aspirate), and  $\delta \lambda ov$  is the gen. case of  $\delta \lambda os$ , whole, governed by the prep. sard, according to; thus giving the sense 'according to the whole,' or 'on the whole.' The Gk. ölos is cognate with the Lat. sol-id-us, whence E. solid, q.v. Der. catholici-'y, catholic-ism.

CATKIN, a loose spike of flowers resembling a cat's tail. (E.) Used in botany; but originally a provincial Eng. expression. Cotgrave has: 'Chattons, the catkins, cat-tailes, aglet-like blowings, or bloomings of nut-trees, &c. From eat-, by affixing the dimin. suffix -kin. Called kattekens in Old Dutch; see katten, kattekens, the blossom of the spikes of nuts and hazels; Oudemans. See Cat.

CATOPTRIC, relating to optical reflection. (Gk.) A scientific term; spelt catoptrick in E. Phillips, World of Words (1662). Bailey has ' catopirical telescope ' for reflecting telescope ; vol. ii. ed. 1731. -Gk. Karonrpunds, reflexive. - Gk. Karonrpor, a mirror. - Gk. Kar-á, downward, inward; and onr-o-pau, I see. See Optics. Der. catop-

CATTLE, animals; collectively. (F., -L.) In early use. Properly without necessary reference to 'capital,' or 'chattel,' i. e. property, without necessary reference to live stock. The M. E. words catel and chatel are mere variants of one and the same word, and alike mean 'property.' Spelt catel, Havelok, 224; Layamon, iii. 232, later text. Spelt chatel, Old Eng. Homilies, p. 271; chetel, Ancren Riwle, p. 224. – O. F. catel, chatel. – Low Lat. capitale, also capitale, capital, property, goods; neut. sb. formed from adj. capitalis. [Whence Low Lat. winum capitale, i. e. live stock, cattle. Capitale also meant the 'capital' or principal of a debt.]-Lat. capitalis, excellent, capital; lit. belonging to the head. - Lat. caput (stem capit-), the head; cognate with E. head, q. v. ¶ Hence it appears that capital is the Latin form, and cattle, chattel are the Anglo-French forms, of the same word. From chattel is formed a pl. chattels, in more common use than the singular.

CAUDAL, belonging to the tail. (L.) 'The caudal fin;' Pen-nant's Zoology, The Cuvier Ray (R.) Cf. 'caudate stars,' i. e. tailed stars, comets; Fairfax's Tasso, xiv. 44. Formed by suffix -al (as if from a Lat. caudalis), from Lat. caud-a, a tail.

CAUDLE, a warm drink for the sick. (F., -L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 3. 174. 'A caudel, potio;' Levins, col. 56 (A.D. 1570). But found much earlier, viz. in Rob. of Glouc. p. 561. - O. F. caudel, chaudel, a sort of warm drink - O. F. chand, formerly chald, hot; with adj. suffix -el, properly dimin., as in Lat. -ellus (see Brachet, Introd. sect. 204). - Late Lat. caldus, hot, a contr. form of calidus; Quinctilian, i. Root uncertain; cf. Gk. one Aler, to parch?

CAUL, a net, covering, esp. for the head. (F., -C.) M. E. calle, kalle. 'Reticula, a lytell nette or calle; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 270, note I. Chaucer, C. T. 6600. Also spelt kelle; as in 'kelle, reticulum; ' Frompt. Parv. p. 270. And see Wyclif, Exod. xxix. 13. – O. F. cale, 'a kinde of little cap;' Cot. Of Celtic origin; cf. Irish calla, a veil, hood, cowl; O. Gael. call, a veil, hood. –  $\checkmark$  KAL; see Cell.

CAULDRON; see Caldron. CAULIFLOWER, a variety of the cabbage. (F., -L.) Spelt collyflory in Cotgrave, who gives : 'Chou, the herb cole, or coleworts. Chouz fleuris, fleurs, et floris, the collyflory, or Cypres colewort. Thus the word is made up of the M. E. cole, corrupted to colly; and flory, a corruption of the F. floris or fleuris. 1. The M.E. cole, a cabbage, is from O. F. col, a cabbage, from the Lat. caulis, a cabbage, orig. the stalk or stem of a plant, cognate with Gk. maulos, a stalk, stem, cabbage, orig. a hollow stem, and connected with Gk. noilos, hollow; see Curtius, i. 192. [From the Lat. caulis was also formed O. F. chol, whence mod. F. chou, a cabbage, the exact equivalent of E. cole. The corruption of cole to colly was probably due to an attempt to bring the word nearer to the original Lat. caulis, an attempt which has been fully carried out in the modern spelling couli-] 3. The F. floris or fleuris is the pl. of fleuri, the pp. of the verb fleurir, to flourish; from Lat. florere, to flourish. See Flourish. We have also modified this element so as to substitute the sb. fleur (E. flower) for the pp. pl. of the verb. The spelling colliflower occurs in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, 1665, p. 400.

CAULK; see Calk.

CAUSE, that which produces an effect. (F., -L.) In early use.

caus-al-i-ty, caus-at-ion, caus-at-ive, cause-less. And see ac-cuse, ex-cuse, re-cus-ani

CAUSEWAY, a raised way, a paved way. (F.,-L.) A corruption effected by popular etymology, the syllable way being made full of meaning at the expense of the rest of the word, which is rendered unintelligible. Formerly spelt causey, Milton, P. L. x. 415; and in Berners' tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 413. Still earlier, caused occurs in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xviii. 128, 140; spelt causee, xviii. 146. – O. F. caucie = chauciè (mod. F. chaussée, Prov. causada, Span. calzada) = to Low Lat. calciata, short for calciata uia, a causeway. - Low I.at. calciatus, pp. of calciare, to make a roadway with lime, or rather, with mortar containing lime. - Lat. calz (stem calc-), lime. See Chalk. ¶ A similar corruption is seen in crayfish.

CAUSTIC, burning, corrosive, severe. (Gk.) Properly an adjective; often used as a sb., as in 'your hottest causticks;' Ben Jonson, Elegy on Lady Pawlet. - Lat. causticus, burning. - Gk. Kaworikos, burning. - Gk. sales, fut. savo-e, to burn (base KAT); see Curtius. i. Der. caustic, sb.; caustic-i-ty; and see cauterise.

CAUTERISE, to burn with caustic. (F., - Gk.) The pp. cauterized is in Holland's Pliny, bk. xxxvi. c. 7. - F. cauterizer, ' to cauterize. seare, burne;' Cotgrave. - Low Lat. cauterizare, a longer form of cauteriare, to cauterise, sear. - Gk. καυτηριάζειν, to sear. - Gk. καυτήρiov, wavryp, a branding-iron. - Gk. waleiv, to burn (base KAT); Curtius, i. 177. Der. cauteris-at-ion, cauteris-m; also cautery (from Gk. And see Caustic. καυτήριον).

CAUTION, carefulness, heed. (F., -L.) M. E. caucion, Rob. of Glouc. p. 506. Spelt kaucyon, K. Alisaunder, 2811. - O. F. caution. Lat. cautionem, acc. of cautio, a security; occurring in Luke, xvi. 6 (Vulgate) where Wyclif has caucioun. - Lat. cautus, pp. of cauere, to take heed. -  $\checkmark$  SKAW, which appears in E. shew or show; Curtus, i. 187; Fick, i. §16. See Show. Der. caution-ar-y; also cautious (expanded from Lat. cautus, heedful), cautious-ly, cautious-ness; and see caveat CAVALCADE, a train of men on horseback. (F., - Ital., -L.) In Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 1816. - F. cavalcade, 'a riding of horse;' Cotgrave. Introduced from Ital. in the 16th century. - Ital. cavalcata, a troop of horsemen. - Ital. cavalcare (pp. cavalcato, fem. pp. cavalcaid, a torigo – Ital. cavallo, a horse. – Lat. cavallus, a horse. Cf. Gk. καβάλληs, a horse, nag; W. ceffyl, a horse; Gael. capull, a mare; Icel. kapall, a nag; Russian kobuila, a mare. See below.

CAVALIER, a knight, horseman. (F., - Ital., -L.) In Shak Hen. V, iii. chor. 24. - F. cavalier. 'a horseman, cavalier; 'Cotgrave. -In Shak. Ital. cavaliere, a horseman. - Ital. cavallo, a horse. See Cavalcade.

Der. cavalier, adj.; cavalier-ly. Doublet, chevalier, q. v. CAVALRY, a troop of horse. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) Spelt cavallerie in Holland's Ammianus, p. 181 (R.)-O. F. cavallerie, in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'horsemanship, also, horsemen.'- Ital. cavalleria, knighthood ; also cavalry .- Ital. cavaliere, a chevalier, knight .- Ital. cavallo, a horse. See Cavalcade. Doublet, chivalry, q. v.

CAVE, a hollow place, den. (F., -L.) In early use; see Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1137.-O. F. cave, caive, a cave. - Lat. cauea, a cave, also a cage. - Lat. cauus, hollow. + Gk. suap, a cavity, a hollow. - 4 KU, to take in, contain ; Curtius, i. 192 ; Fick, i. 551. Der. cav-i-ty ; cav-ern (Lat.cauerna), cavern-ous. From the same root, concave, ex-cav-ate. Doublet, cage, q. v.; and see cajole.

CAVEAT, a notice given, a caution. (L.) From the Lat. caueat, let him beware. 'And gave him also a special caueat; ' Bacon's life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 85.-Lat. cauere, to take heed. See Caution

CAVIARE, the roe of the sturgeon. (F.,-Ital.,-Turkish.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 457; see the excellent article on it in Nares. -F. caviar, formerly also spelt cavial (Brachet). - Ital. caviaro, in Florio, who explains it by 'a kinde of salt blacke meate made of roes of fishes, much used in Italie; ' also spelt caviale. - Turkish havyár or hávyúr, given as the equivalent of E. caviare in Redhouse's Eng.-Turkish Dictionary. [It is, however, made in Russia; but the Russian name is ikra ruibeya. The Turkish word begins with the letter há, a strong pectoral aspirate, here rendered by c.]

CAVIL, to raise empty objections. (F., -L.) Spelt cauyll (u for v), in Udal, on St. Mark, c. 2 (R.); cauil, Levins, 126. 48. The sb. cavillation occurs early; spelt cavillations (u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 7717.-O. F. caviller, 'to cavill, wrangle, reason crossely;' Cot.-Lat. cavillari, to banter.-Lat. cavilla, cavillum, or cavillus, a jeering, cavilling. Origin obscure; see Fick, i. 817. Dor. caviller CAW, to make a noise like a crow. (E.) Shak. Mid Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 22. The word is merely imitative, and may be classed as English. Cf. Du. kaauw, a jackdaw, Dan. kaa, Swed. kaja, a jackdaw; all from the same imitation of the cry of the bird. See Chough.

CEASE, to give over, stop, end. (F., -L.) M. E. cessen, P. Plow-man, B. vi. 181; vii. 117; iv. 1. - F. cesser. - Lat. cessare, to loiter, So spelt in the Ancren Riwle, p. 316. - O. F. and F. cause. - Lat. man, B. vi. 181; vii. 117; iv. 1. - F. cesser. - Lat. cescare, to loiter, causa, a cause; better spelt causa. Of obscure origin. Der. caus-al, go slowly, cease; frequent. of cedere, pp. cessus, to go away, yield, give place. See Codo. Dor. cease-less, cease-less-ly; also cessat-ion (from Lat. cessationem, acc. of cessatio, a tarrying ; from cessatus, pp. of cessare)

H<sub>2</sub>

CEDAR, a large fine tree. (L., -Gk.) In very early use. A.S. ceder-beám, a cedar-tree; Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, ii. 578. -Lat. cedrus. -Gk. ktôpos. Der. cedar-n; Milton, Comus, 990.

CEDE, to give up, to yield. (L.) A modern word; not in Pope's poems. It occurs in Drummond's Travels (1754), p. 256 (Todd). [Probably directly from the Lat. rather than from F. ceder.] - Lat. cedere, pp. cessus, to yield; related to Lat. cadere, to fall. See ¶ From the Lat. cedere Chance, and Cease. Der. cess-ion. we have many derivatives ; such as cease, accede, concede, exceed, intercede, precede, proceed, recede, secede, succeed, and their derivatives.

Also antecedent, decease, abcess, ancestor, predecessor, &c. CEIL, CIEL, to line the inner roof of a room. (F.,-L.) Older form syle. And the greater house he syled with fyre-tree; Bible, torm syste. And the greater house he syste with tyre-tree; bloc, 1551, 2 Chron. iii. 5. Also spelt seile (Minsheu); and ciel, as in most modern Bibles. M. E. celen; as in 'Ceelyn wythe syllure, celo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 65; and see p. 452. The sb. is seeling in North's Plutarch, p. 36; and ceeling in Milton, P. L. xi. 743 (R.) See cieled, cieling in the Bible Wordbook, by Eastwood and Wright. β. The  $\beta$ . The verb to ciel, seile, or syle is purely an English formation from the older sb. syle or cyll, a canopy; in accordance with the common E. practice of converting sbs. to verbs ; cf. to hand, to head, to foot, &c. y. The sb. cyll meant 'a canopy,' as in: 'The chammer was hanged of [with] red and blew, and in it was a cyll of state of cloth of gold;' Fyancells of Margaret, dau. of K. Hen. VII, to Jas. of Scotland (R.) 8. Hence the verb to syle meant, at first, to canopy, to hang with canopies, as in : 'All the tente within was syled wyth clothe of gold and blew velvet; 'Hall, Hen. VIII, p. 32. e. The word was afterwards extended so as to include the notion of covering with side-hangings, and even to that of providing with wainscoting or flooring. Cotgrave has: 'Plancher, a boorded floor; also, a seeling of boords.' But all are mere developments from syll, a canopy, or from the Lat. caelum, used in the sense of cieling in the 13th century; Way's note to Prompt. Parv. p. 65. - F. ciel, pl. ciels, which Cotgrave explains by: 'a canopy for . . a bed; also, the canopie that is carried over a prince as he walks in state; also, the inner roofe [i.e. ceiling] of a room of state.' [This word is precisely the same as the F. ciel, heaven, pl. cieux; though there is a difference of usage. The Ital. cielo also means (1) heaven, (2) a canopy, (3) a cieling; see Florio.]-Lat. coelum, heaven, a vault; a 'genuine Lat. word, not to be written with or; 'Curtius, i. 193. + Gk. koltos, hollow. -4 KU, to take in, contain (Curtius). From the same root is E. hollow, q. v. ¶ The derivation is plain enough, but many efforts have been made to render it confused. The word has no connection with E. sill : nor with E. seal; nor with F. siller, to seel up the eyes of a hawk (from Lat. cilium, an eyelid); nor with Lat. celare, to hide; nor with Lat. calare, to emboss; nor with A. S. pil, a plank. Yet all these have been needlessly mixed up with it by various writers. If any of them have at all influenced the sense of the word, it is the Lat. calare, to emboss, which is the word intended by the entry 'celo' in the Prompt. Parvulorum. The other words are not at all to be considered. Dor. ceil-ing.

CELANDINE, a plant; swallow-wort. (F.,-Gk.) It occurs in Cotgrave. It is spelt celadine in Ash's Dict. (1775). But Gower has celidoine, C. A. iii. 131. - F. celidoine, 'the herbe celandine, tetter-wort, swallow-wort;' also spelt chelidoine by Cotgrave. - Late Lat. chelidonium (the botanical name). - Gk. xehidoviov, swallow-wort; neut. from xehiddrios, adj. relating to swallows. - Gk. xehiddr (stem Xelidor-), a swallow. + Lat. hirundo, a swallow; Curtius, i. 245.  $\P$  Celandine stands for celidoine; the n before d is intruded, like n before g in messenger, for messager; cf. the remarkable instance in the word sta-n-d. CELEBRATE, to render famous, honour. (L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 84. Chaucer has the adj. celebrable, noted, in his tr. of Boethius, ed. Morris, pp. 84, 147. - Lat. celebratus, pp. of celebrare, to frequent ; also, to solemnise. - Lat. celeber, frequented, populous; also written celebris. (Form of the root KAR or KAL; sense doubtful.) Der. celebrat-ion ; celebri-ty (from Lat. celebris).

CELLERITY, quickness, speed. (F, -L.) In Shak. Meas. v. 399.-F. celerité, 'celerity, speedinesse; 'Cotgrave.-Lat. celeritatem, acc. of celeritas, speed.-Lat. celer, quick.+Gk. κέληs, a racer.-✓ KAL, to drive; Curtius, i. 179; cf. Skt. kal, to drive, urge on.

CELERY, a vegetable; a kind of parsley. (F., -Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. – F. celeri, introduced from prov. Ital. seleri, a Piedmontese word (Brachet); where r must stand for an older n. – Lat. selinon, parsley. - Gk. of Auror, a kind of parsley. See Parsley. CELESTIAL, heavenly. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 122; and in Gower, C. A. iii. 301.-O. F. celestiel, 'celestiall, heavenly;'

caelesti-, the crude form of Lat. caelestis, heavenly.-Lat. caelum, heaven; related to Gk. Koilos, and E. hollow. See Coil.

CELLBATE, pertaining to a single life. (L.) Now sometimes as sb., 'one who is single; ' formerly an adj. 'pertaining to a single life.' And, when first used, a sb. signifying ' the single state,' which is the true sense. Bp. Taylor speaks of 'the purities of calibate,' i.e. of a single life; Rule of Conscience, bk. iii. c. 4. - Lat. caelibatus, sb. celibacy.-Lat. caelebs (stem caelib-), adj. single, unmarried. Der. celibac-v CELL, a small room, small dwelling-place. (L.) In early use. M. E. celle, Ancren Riwle, p. 152. – Lat. cella, a cell, small room, hut. + Gk. καλία, a hut. + Skt. khala, a threshing-floor; cálá, a stable, + GK. walia, a hut. + Skt. khala, a threshing-floor; çala, a stable, house. - / KAL, to hide; whence Lat. celare, and E. con-ceal; see Curtius, i. 171. Der. cell-ul-ar; also cell-ar (M. E. celer, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 24, from O. F. celier, Lat. cellarium), cell-ar-age; see caul. CEMENT, a strong kind of mortar, or glue. (F., -L.) In Shak. Cor. iv. 6. 85; and Tyndal's Works (1572), p. 6, col. 2. Chaucer has cementinge, C. T. 12744. - O. F. cement, 'cement;' Cotgrave. -Lat. caementum, a rough stone, rubble, chippings of stone; apparently for caedimentum. - Lat. caedere, to cut; related to Lat. scindere (base seid), to cut, cleave. Cf. also Gk.  $\sigma$  sifes, to split, Skt. child, to cut, E. shed. - SKAD, to cut; Curtius, i. 306; Fick, i. 815. See Shed. Der. cement, vb.; cement-at-ion.

CEMETERY, a burial-ground. (L., -Gk.) In Bp. Taylor's Holy Dying, s. 8. § 6. - Low Lat. cometerium. - Gk. Kolynthouor, a sleepingroom, sleeping-place, cemetery. – Gk.  $\kappa_{0,\mu}\omega_{\alpha}$ . I lull to sleep; in pass, to fall asleep, sleep. The lit. sense is 'I put to bed,' the verb being the causal from  $\kappa_{i}\mu\omega_{i}$ . I lie down. –  $\checkmark$  KI, to lie, rest; whence also CENOBITE, CCENOBITE, a monk who lives socially. (L., - Gk.) 'The monks were divided into two classes, the canobites, who lived under a common, and regular, discipline; and the anachorets [anchorites], who indulged their unsocial independent fanaticism; Gibbon, History, c. 37. Bp. Taylor has the adj. conobilick; Lib. of Prophesying, s. 5. - Lat. conobila, a member of a (social) fraternity; used by St. Jerome.-Lat. comobium, a convent, monastery (St. Jerome).-Gk. κοινόβιον, a convent; neut. of adj. κοινόβιοs, living socially. - Gk. Koiro-, crude form of Koirós, common; and Bios, life.

CENOTAPH, a empty memorial tomb. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) ' An honorarie tomb, which the Greeks call cenotaphium ; ' Holland's Suetonius, p. 153. Dryden has cenotaph, tr. of Ovid, Metam. bk. xii. 1. 3. - O. F. cenotaphe ; Cotgrave. - Lat. cenotaphium. - Gk. Kevoráquor, an empty tomb. - Gk. Kevo-, for Kevós, empty; and ráp-os, a tomb.

CENSER, a vase for burning incense in.  $(F_{\cdot}, -L_{\cdot})$  Chaucer has censer, and pres. pt. censing, C. T. 3342, 3343. In P. Plowman, C. xxii. 86, the word sense occurs (in some MSS. cense), with the meaning 'incense.' Thus the word is a familiar contraction for 'incenser,' probably taken from the French. - F. encensoir, 'a censer, or perfuming-pan;' Cot. - Low Lat. incensorium, a censer. - Low Lat. incensum, incense, lit. ' that which is burnt.' - Lat. incensus, pp. of incendere, to kindle, burn. - Lat. in, in, upon; and candere, to set on fire. See Candle.

CENSOR, one who revises or censures. (L.) In Shak. Cor. ü. 3. 252; and North's Plutarch, Life of Paulus Æmilius. ed. 1631, p. 265 (Rich. says p. 221). - Lat. censor, a taxer, valuer. assessor, censor, critic. - Lat. censere, to give an opinion or account, to tax, appraise. [Cf. Skt. coms, to praise, report, say; Benfey, p. 924; Fick, i. 549.] - KAS, to praise. Der. censor-i-al, censor-ship, censor-i-ous, censor-i-ous-ly, censor-i-ous-ness. From Lat. censere are also derived census (Lat. census, a register); and censure (Lat. censura, an opinion), used by Shak. As You Like It, iv. 1. 7; whence also censure, verb, censura-ble, censur-a-ble-ness, censur-a-bl-y.

CENT, a hundred, as in 'per cent.' (L.) In America, the hun-dredth part of a dollar. Gascoigne has 'por cento,' Steel Glas, l. 783; an odd phrase, since por is Spanish, and cento Italian. The phr. per cent stands for Lat. per centum, i. e. 'for a hundred;' from Lat. per, for, and centum, a hundred, cognate with A.S. hund, a hundred. See Hundred. Der. cent-age, in phr. per centage; and see centenary, centennial, centesimal, centigrade, centipede, centuple, centurion, century.

CENTAUR, a monster, half man, half horse.  $(L_{.,-}Gk_{.})$  Spelt Centauros in Chaucer, C. T., Group B, 3289; where he is translating from Boethius, who wrote: 'Ille Centauros domuit superbos;' De Cons. Phil. lib. iv. met. 7. And see Mid. Nt. Dream, v. 44.-Lat. Centaurus.-Gk. Kévravpos, a Centaur. Origin uncertain. Der.

centaur-y, q. v. CENTAURY, the name of a plant. (L., - Gk.) M. E. centaurie, Chaucer, C. T. 14969.-Lat. centaurea, centaureum, centaury.-Gk. wer, C. A. III. 301. - O. F. certein, certein, -LLat. cert-us, determined; with the adjunction of suffix -anus (= F. -ain).  $\beta$ . Closely connected with Lat. cernere, to sift, discriminate; Gk. noiver, to separate, decide; and Icel. skilja, to separate, which again is related to E. skill, q'v. - SKAR, to separate; Curtius, i. 191; Fick, i. 811. Der. certain-ly, certain-ty; also from Lat. certus we have certi-f9, q. v. CERTIFY, to assure, make celtain: (F., .. L.) M. E. certifien, Hampole, Pr. of Conscience, 6543; 'Covet C. A. i. 192. - O. F. certifier, certifier. - Low Lat. certificare, pp. certifications to certify. -turns and the university of the second se Lat. certi-, for certus, certain; and facere, to make, where for- turns to fic- in forming derivatives. See Certain and Fact. Der. certificate ; certificat-ion (from Lat. pp. certificatus).

CERULEAN, asure, blue, (L.) Spenser has 'cærnle stream ;' tr. of Virgil's Gnat, l. 163. The term. -on seems to be a later E. ad-dition. We also find : 'Cærnleous, of a blue, azure colour, like the sky; 'Bailey's Dict. vol. ii (1731). – Lat. carelleus, carrulus, blue, bluish; also sea-green.  $\beta$ . Perhaps caerulus is for caelulus, i.e. sky-coloured; from Lat. caelum, the sky (Fick, ii. 62); see Colostial.

But this is not certain; Curtius, ii. 164. CERUSE, white lead. (F., - L.) In Chaucer, C. T. prol. 630. -O. F. ceruse, 'ceruse, or white lead ;' Cot. - Lat. cerussa, white lead ; connected with Lat. cera, wax ; see Core.

CERVICAL, belonging to the neck. (L.) In Kersey's Dict., 2nd ed. 1715 .- Lat. ceruix (stem ceruic-), the neck ; with suffix -al ; cf.

Lat. ceruicale, a bolster.  $\beta$ . Ceruix is derived from  $\checkmark$  KAR, to project, and  $\checkmark$  WIK, to bind; in Vanicek, Etym. Worterbuch. CERVINE, relating to a hart. (L.) 'Cervine, belonging to an hart, of the colour of an hart, tawny;' Blount's Glossographia, 1674. - Lat. ceruins, belonging to a hart. - Lat. ceruins, a hart; cognate with E. hart, q. v.

CESS, an assessment, levy. (F., -L.) Spelt cesse by Spenser, View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed. p. 643, col. 2. He also has cessors, id. p. 648, col. 1. These are mere corruptions of assess and assessors. See Assess.

CESSATION, discontinuance. (F., -L.) 'Withowte cessacion ; Coventry Myst. p. 107. - F. cessation, 'cessation, ceasing;' Cotgrave - Lat. cessationem, acc. of cessatio, a ceasing. See Cease. CESSION, a yielding up. (F., -L.) 'By the cession of Maestricht;

Sir W. Temple, To the Lord Treasurer, Sept. 1678 (R.) - F. cession, 'yeelding up;' Cotgrave. - Lat. cessionem, acc. of cessio, a ceding. -

Lat. cessus, pp. of cedere, to cede. See Code. CESS-POOL, a pool for drains to drain into. (C. f) Also spelt sess-pool; both forms are in Halliwell, and in Webster. In Brockett's Glossary of North-Country Words, ed. 1846, we find: 'Sess-pool, an excavation in the ground for receiving foul water. I do not find the word in any dictionary, though it is in use by architects; see Laing's Custom-house Plans. Sus-pool occurs in Forster on Atmospheric Phenomena.'  $\beta$ . The spelling sws-pool, here referred to, gives us a probable source of the word. Suss in prov. Eng. means hogwash see Halliwell), and is equivalent to prov. E. soss, a mixed mess of food, a collection of scraps, anything muddy or dirty, a dirty mess (Halliwell); also a puddle, anything foul or muddy (Brockett). This is of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. sos, any unseemly mixture of food, This is of cente origin; cf. Gael, so, any unseemly initiate food, a coarse mess. The word pool is also Celtic; see Pool. Hence cess-pool or sus-pool is probably a corruption of soss-pool, i. e. a pool into which all foul messes flow.  $\gamma$ . I suggest, further, that soss is connected with Gael. sugh, juice, sap, moisture, also spelt sogh; W. sug (Lat. succus), moisture, whence W. soch, a drain, and the prov. E. soggy, wet, swampy, socky, moist, prov. E. sock, the drainage of a farmyard, sock-pit, the receptacle for such drainage (Halliwell). These words are obviously connected with E. suck and E. soak. Hence, briefly, a cess-pool is, practically, a soal-pool, which very accu-rately describes it. The derivation suggested in Webster, from rately describes it. the A.S. sessian, to settle, is most unlikely; this verb is so extremely rare that it is found once only, viz. in the phrase: 'sé sessade,' i. e. the sea grew calm, St. Andrew (Vercelli MS.), l. 453, ed. Grein. In any case, the initial letter should surely be s.

CESURA; see CÆSURA

CETACEOUS, of the whale kind. (L.,-Gk.) * Cetaceous ishes; 'Ray, On the Creation, pt. i. A coined word, from Lat. cete, cetus, a large fish, a whale. – Gk. κήτσs, a sea-monster, large fish. CHAFE, to warm by friction, to vex. (F., – L.) The orig. sense was simply to warm;' secondly, to inflame, fret, vex; and, intransi-tively, to rage; see Schmidt, Shak. Lex. M. E. chaufen, to warm. to hide, contain. Der. chalic-ed; Cymb. ii. 3. 24. 'Charcoal to chaufen the knyste,' Anturs of Arthur, st. 35. 'He was chaufed with win' (incaluisset mero); Wyclif, Esther, i. 10. – O. F. chaufer (mod. F. chauffer), to warm; cf. Prov. calfar, to warm. - Low Lat. caleficare (shortened to calef 'care) to warm ; late form of Lat. calefacere, to make warm. - Lat. cale-, stem of calere, to grow. warm; and facere, to make. See Caldron.

CHAFER, COCK-CHAFER, a kind of beetle. (E.). Regu-larly formed from A.S. ceafor or ceafar, a chafer. Bruchus, seafor; Ælfric's Gloss. ed. Somner (De Nominibus Insectorum); And again, reafar is a gloss to bruchus in Ps. civ. 34 (Vulgate), where the A. V. has 'caterpillars ;' Ps. cv. 34. [The A.S. crae; becomes cha-, as in A.S. cealc, E. chalk.] + Du. kever. + G. kafer. CHAFF, the husk of grain. (C.) M. E. chaf, Layamon, iii. 172; caf, chaf, Cursor Mundi, 35948. A.S. ceaf (later version chaf), Luke, iii. 17. + Du. kaf + G. kaff. ¶ The vulgar English 'to chaff' is a mere correlpion of the verb to chafe, q.v. The spelling chaff keeps up the old propunciation of the verb. For the change of pron., com-pare the moll. pron. of 'half-penny' with that of 'half a penny.' CHAFFERE, to huv. to haggle harging (F). The verb is

CHAFFER, to buy, to haggle, bargain. (E.) The verb is formed from the sb., which originally meant 'a bargaining.' The verb is M.E. chaffare, Chaucer, C. T. 4549. The sb. is M.E. chaf-fare, Gower, C. A. ii. 278; and this is a corruption of the older chapfare, occurring in the Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, pp. 35, 44, 45.  $\beta$ . Chapfare is a compound of chap and fare, i. e. of A. S. ceáp, a bargain, a price, Gen. xli, 56; and of A. S. farw, a journey (Grein), afterwards used in the sense of 'procedure, business.' Thus the word meant 'a price-business,' or 'price-journey.' See Cheap, Chap-Thus the word man, and Fare

CHAFFINCH, the name of a bird. (E.) 'Chaffinch, a bird so called because it delights in chaff;' Kersey's Dict. and ed. 1715. This is quite correct; the word is simply compounded of chaff and finch. It often 'frequents our barndoors and homesteads;' Eng. Cycl. s.v. Chaffinch. Spelt cafinche, Levins, 134. 42. CHAGRIN, veration, ill-humour. (F.) 'Chagrin, care, melancholy;' Coles' Dict. (1684). In Pope, Rape of the Lock, c. iv. l. 77. - F. chagrin, 'carke, melancholy, care, thought;' Cotrave. Origin unknown; Brachet.  $\beta$ . Diez, however, identifies the word with F. chagrin, answering to E. shagreen, a rough substance sometimes used for rasping wood; hence taken as the type of corroding care. [Cf. Ital. 'limare, to file; also, to fret or gnaw;' Florio.] He also cites the Genoese sagrind, to gnaw; sagrindse, to consume oneself with anger. See Shagreen, which is spelt chagrin in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. From Pers. saghrí, shagreen ; Palmer's Dict. col. 354. CHAIN, a series of links. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. chaine, cheine; Chaucer, C. T. 2990; Wyclif, Acts, xii. 6.-O. F. chaëne, chaine. - Lat. catena (by the loss of t between two vowels). Root uncertain. Der. chain, verb, chign-on (= chain-on); and see catenary. CHAIR, a moveable seat. (F., - L., - Gk.) M. E. chaiere, chaire, chaire; spelt chaiere, Gower, C. A. ii. 201; chaere, King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 1261; Rob. of Glouc. p. 321. - O. F. chaiere, chaere, a chair (mod. F. chaire, a pulpit, modified to chaise, a chair). - Lat. cathedra. a raised seat, bishop's throne (by loss of th between two vowels, by rule, and change of dr to r; see Brachet). - Gk.  $\kappa \alpha \partial \ell \delta \rho a$ , a seat, chair, pulpit. See Cathedral. Der. chaise, q. v.; and note that cathedral is properly an adj., belonging to the sb. chair. CHAISE, a light carriage. (F. - L. - Gk.) In Cook's Voyages, vol. ii. bk. ii. c. 10. 'Chaise, a kind of light open chariot with one horse; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. – F. chaise, a Parisian corruption of F. chaire, orig. a seat, pulpit. Thus chaise is a doublet of chair; for the change of sense, cf. sedan-chair. See Chair. CHALCEDONY, a variety of quartz. (L.,-Gk.)

fM. E. calsydoyne, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1003; with reference to Rev. xxi. 19. Also calcydone, An Old Eng. Misc., ed. Morris, p. 98, l. 171. These are French forms, but our mod. E. word is from the Latin.] -Lat. chalcedonius, in Rev. xxi. 19 (Vulgate). - Gk. χαληγδών, Rev. xxi. 19; a stone found at Chalcedon, on the coast of Asia Minor, nearly opposite to Byzantium. CHALDRON, a coal-measure; 36 bushels. (F., -L.) Spelt chaldron in Phillips, New World of Words, 1662; chaldron and chalder in Coles, 1684. - O. F. chaldron (whence mod. F. chaudron), a caldron.  $\beta$ . The word merely expresses a vessel of a large size, and hence, a capacious measure. The form chalder answers to the O.F. caldaru, noticed under Caldron, q. v.

CHALICE, a cup; a communion-cup. (F., -L.) 'And stele away the chalice; 'Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Luxuria. Spelt calice in O. Eng. Homilies, and Ser. p. 91; and caliz in Havelok, l. 187. [We also find A. S. calic, Matt. xxvi. 28; taken directly from the Latin.] -O. F. calice (Burguy); of which chalice was, no doubt, a dialectal intion. - Lat. calicem, acc. of calix, a cup, goblet (stem calic-). + the jaw; allied to Gk. γ 'λιf, a drinking-cup. + Skt. kalaça, a cup, water-pot. - KAL, Chew, Chaps, Jaw.

This word is different from calys; yet they are from the same root.

CHALK, carbonate of lime. (L.) M. E. chalk, Chaucer, C. T. Group G, 1222. A. S. cealc, Orosius, vi. 32. - Lat. calz (stem calc-), limestone. ¶ It seems uncertain whether we should connect Lat. cals with Gk.  $\chi d\lambda_{\xi}$ , rubble, or with Gk.  $\kappa \rho \delta \kappa \eta$ , a pebble,  $\kappa \rho \delta \kappa \delta \lambda \eta$ , flint; see Fick, iii. 813; Curtius, i. 177. [The G. kalk, Du., Dan. and Swed. kalk are all borrowed from Latin.] Der. chalk-y, chalk-i-ness. See Calx.

CHALLENGE, a claim; a defiance. (F., -L.) M. E. chalenge, calenge; often in the sense of 'a claim.' 'Chalaunge, or cleyme, vendi-cacio; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 68. It also means 'accusation;' Wyclif, Gen. xliii. 18. [The verb, though derived from the sb., was really in earlier use in English; as in 'to calengy . . the kynedom '= to claim the kingdom; Rob. of Glouc. p. 451; and in 'hwar of kalenges tu me' = for what do you reprove me; Ancren Riwle, p. 54. Cf. Exod. xxii. 9 (A. V.).] - O. F. chalonge, chalenge, calonge, calenge, a dispute; pro-perly 'an accusation.' - Lat. calumnia (whence F. calonge is regularly formed), a false accusation. - Lat. calui, caluëre, to deceive. Der. challenge, verb. Doublet, calumny, q. v.

CHALYBEATE, water containing iron. (L.,-Gk.) Properly an adj. signifying ' belonging to steel,' as explained in Kersey's Dict. and ed. 1715; he adds that ' chalybeate medicines are medicines prepared with steel.' A coined word, formed from Lat. chalybs (stem chalyb-), steel. - Gk. χάλυψ (stem χαλυβ-), steel; so called from Gk. Xálußes, the nation of the Chalybes in Pontus, who were famous for the preparation of steel. Hence Milton has: 'Chalybean-tempered steel;' Sams. Agonistes, l. 133.

CHAMBER, a room, a hall. (F.,-Gk.) The b is excrescent. In early use. M. E. chaumbre, chambre, chamber ; 'i chaumbre' = in the chamber, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 285. - O. F. chambre, cambre. - Lat. camera, a chamber, a vault; older spelling camara. - Gk. saµápa, a vault, covered waggon. Cf. Skt. kmar, to be crooked. - ✓ KAM, to curve, be bent; whence the very common Celtic form cam, crooked; seen in W., Irish, and Gael. cam, crooked, Manx cam, Bret. kamm; and in the river Cam. See Akimbo. Der. chamber-ed, chamber-ing (Rom. xiii. 11); also chamber-lain, q. v.

CHAMBERLAIN, one who has the care of rooms. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. chaumberlein, Floriz and Blauncheflur, ed. Lumby, I. 18. [The form chaumberling in the Ancren Riwle, p. 410, is an accommodation, yet shews an exact appreciation of the O. H. G. form.] -O. F. chambrelenc, later chamberlain ; a hybrid word, made up from O. F. chambre, a chamber, and the termination of the O. H. G. chamer ling, M. H. G. kamerlinc. β. This O. H. G. word is composed of O. H. G. chamera, a chamber, merely borrowed from Lat. camera; and the suffix -ling or -linc, answering to the E. suffix -ling in hire-Y. This suffix is a compound one, made up of -I-, giving a ling. frequentative force, and -ing, an A.S. suffix for some substantives that had originally an adjectival meaning, such as atheling, lording, whiting, &c.; see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, sect. 321. Thus O. H. G. chamerling meant 'frequently engaged about cham-bers.' See above. Der. chamber-lain-clip bers. See above. Der. chamber-lain-ship. CHAMELEON, a kind of lizard. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. Two Gent. of Ver. ii. 1. 178. M. E. camelion, Gower, C. A. i. 133. - Lat. chamaleon. - Gk. xaµaillow, a chameleon, lit. ground-lion or earthlion, i. e. dwarf lion. - Gk. xaµaí, on the ground (a word related to Lat. humi, on the ground, and to Lat. humilis, humble); and  $\lambda for, a$ lion. The prefix xaµaı-, when used of plants, signifies 'creeping;' also 'low,' or 'dwarf;' see Chamomile. And see Humble and Lion.

CHAMOIS, a kind of goat. (F., -G.) See Deut. xiv. 5, where it translates the Heb. zemer. - F. chamois. 'a wilde goat, or shamois; also, the skin thereof dressed, and called ordinarily Shamois leather; Cot. A word of Swiss origin; Brachet. Corrupted from some dialectal pronunciation of M. H. G. gamz, a chamois (mod. G. gemse). Remoter origin unknown.

CHAMOMILE, CAMOMILE, a kind of plant. (Low L.,-Gk.) In Shak. I Hen. IV, ii. 4. 441. -Low Lat. camemilla. -Gk. χαμαίμηλον, lit. earth-apple; so called from the apple-like smell of its flower; Pliny, xxii. 21.-Gk. xaµal, on the earth (answering to Lat. humi, whence humilis, humble); and µηλov, an apple, Lat. malum. See Humble; and see Chameleon.

CHAMP, to eat noisily. (Scand.) 'The palfrey.. on the formy bit of gold with teeth he champes;' Phaer's Virgil, bk. iv. The older form is cham for chamm, and the p is merely excressent. 'It must be chammed,' i. e. chewed till soft; Sir T. More, Works, p. 241 h. 'Chamming or drinking;' Tyndal's Works, p. 316, col. 2. Of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. kämsa, to chew with difficulty, champ (Rietz). Note also Icel. kiapta, to chatter, gabble, move the jaws; Icel. kiaptr, the jaw; allied to Gk. yaupal, jaws; Skt. jambha, a jaw, tooth. See CHAMPAGNE, a kind of wine. (France.) So named from Champagne in France.

CHAMPAIGN, open country. (F., -L.) In Shak. King Lear, i. 1. 65; Deut. xi. 30 (A. V.); also spelt champion (corruptly), Spenser, F. Q. vi. 5. 26; but champain, id. vii. 6. 54. -F. champaia, a plaine same as campaigne, 'a plaine field;' Cot. - Lat. campania, a plain. For the rest, see Campaign, of which it is a doublet.

CHAMPION, a warrior, fighting man. (F., -L.) In very early use. Spelt chamfium, Ancren Riwle, p. 236. - O. F. champium, champion, campion, a champion. - Low Lat. campionem, acc. of camfio, a champion, combatant in a duel. - Low Lat. campus, a duel, battle, war, combat; a peculiar use of Lat. campus, a field, esp. a field of battle. See Camp. ¶ We still have Champion and Campion as proper names; we also have Kemp, from A.S. cempa, a champion. The latter, as well as all the numerous related Teutonic words, e.g. G. kamp/en, to fight, A.S. camp, Icel. kapp, a contest, are ultimately non-Teutonic, being derivatives from the famous Lat. campus. Der. champion-ship. CHANCE, what befals, an event. (F., -L.) M.E. chaumee. 'That swych a chaunce myght hym befalle;' Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, l. 5632 (A.D. 1303).-O.F. chaanee (Roquefort); more commonly cheance, chance. - Low Lat. cadentia, that which falls out, esp. that which falls out favourably; esp. used in dice-playing (Brachet).- Lat. cadeno, of which chance is a doublet. Der. chance, verb (I Cor. xv. 37); mischance, chance. Rec.

verb (1 Cor. xv. 37); mis-chance, chance-comer, &c. CHANCEIL, the east end of a church. (F., -L.) So called, because formerly fenced off with a screen with openings in it. M. F. chancel, canciel, an enclosure; esp. one defended by a screen of latticework.-Low Lat. cancellus, a latticed window; a screen of latticework; a chancel; Lat. cancellus, a grating; chiefly used in pl. cancelli, lattice-work. See further under Cancel. Der. chancelor, v.; chance-ry (for chancel-ry), q. v.

CHANCELLOB, a director of chancery. (F, -L.) In early use. M.E. chaunceler, chaunseler; spelt chaunselere, King Alissaunder, l. 1810. -O.F. chancelier, cancelier. -Low Lat. cancellarius, a chancellor; orig. an officer who had care of records, and who stood near the screen of lattice-work or of cross-bars which fenced off the judgment-seat; whence his name. -Lat. cancellus, a grating; pl. cancelli, lattice-work. See Chancel and Cancel.  $\P$  For a full account, see cancellarius in Ducange. Der. chancery, q. v.

CHANCERY, a high court of judicature. (F., -L.) M. E. chancerye, P. Plowman, B. prol. 93. An older and fuller spelling is chancelerie or channeellerie, as in Gower, C. A. ii. 191; Life of Beket, ed. Black, 359. [Hence chancery is short for chancelry.] - O. F. chancellerie, chancelrie (not given in Burguy or Roquefort), 'a chancery court, the chancery, scale office, or court of every parliament;' Cot. - Low Lat. cancellaria, orig. a place where public records were kept; the record-room of a chancellor.- Low Lat. cancellarius, a chancellor. See Chancellor.

CHANDLER, a candle-seller; CHANDELLER, a candleholder. (F., - L.) Doublets; i. e. two forms of one word, made different in appearance in order to denote different things. The former is the older sense, and came at last to mean 'dealer;' whence cornchandler, a dealer in corn. The latter is the older form, better preserved because less used. See Candelere in Prompt. Parv. p. 60, explained by (1) Lat. candelarius, a candle-maker, and by (2) Lat. candelabra, a candle-holder. M. E. candelere, as above; chaundeler, a chandler; Eng. Gilds, p. 18; chandler, Levins. -O. F. chandleir, a chandler; a candlestick. -Low Lat. candelarius, a chandler; candelaria, a candle-stick. -Lat. candela.

CHANGE, to alter, make different. (F., -L.) M. E. chaungen, changen. The pt. t. changede occurs in the later text of Layamon's Brut, l. 3791. Chaungen, Ancren Riwle, p. 6. -O.F. changier, to change; later, changer. - Late Lat. cambiare, to change, in the Lex Salica. - Lat. cambire, to exchange; Apuleius. CHAPERON, lit. a kind of hood or cap.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  Chiefly used in the secondary sense of 'protector,' esp. one who protects a young lady. Modern, and merely borrowed from French. 'To chaperon, an affected word, of very recent introduction into our language, to denote a gentleman attending a lady in a public assembly;' Todd's Johnson. But seldom now applied to a gentleman. -F. chaperon, 'a hood, or French hood for a woman; also, any hood, bonnet, or letice cap;' Cot. An augmentative form from F. chape, a cope. See Chaplet. [†]

CHAPITER, the capital of a column. (F., = L.) See Exod. xxxvi. 38; 1 Kings, vii. 16; Amos, ix. 1; Zeph. ii. 14 (A.V.) 'The chapiter of the piller;' Holinshed's Chron. p. 1006, col. 2. [A corruption of O. F. chapitel, and (nearly) a doublet of capital, q. v. The same change of l to r occurs in chapter, q. v.] = O. F. chapitel (mod. F. chapiteau), the capital of a column; Roquefort. = Lat. capitellum, a capital of a column. Dimin. from Lat. caput (stem capit-), the head. See Head.

CHAPLET, a garland, wreath ; rosary. (F., -L.) M. E. chapelet, a garland, wreath ; Gower, C. A. ii. 370.-O. F. chapelet, a little head-dress, a wreath. 'The chapelet de roses, a chaplet of roses placed on the statues of the Virgin (shortly called a rosaire, or rosary), came later to mean a sort of chain, intended for counting prayers, made of threaded beads, which at first were made to resemble the chaplets of the Madonna; 'Brachet.-O. F. chapel, a head-dress, hat; with dimin. suffix -et.-O. F. chape, a cope, hooded cloak; with dimin. suffix -et. (for -el).-Low Lat. capa, cappa, a hooded cloak. See Cape, Cap. CHAPS, CHOPS, the jaws. (Scand.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 22.

CHAPS, CHOPS, the jaws. (Scand.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 22. The sing. appears in the compounds chapfallen, i. e. with shrunken jaw, or dropped jaw, Hamlet, v. 1. 212; chapless, without the (lower) jaw, Hamlet, v. 1. 97. A Southern E. corruption of the North E. chafts or chaffs. 'Chaffs, Chafts, the jaws:' Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary.-Icel. kjaptr (pt pron. as ft), the jaw. + Swed.  $k\ddot{a}f_t$ , the jaw. + Dan. kiaft, the jaw, muzzle, chops. The same root appears in the A. S. ceaft, the jaw, juzzle, chops. The Same root appears in the A. S. ceaft, the jaw, whence were formed kaf-t (Swed.  $k\ddot{a}f_t$ ) and kaf-t(A. S. ceaff). And this form kaf is clearly related to Gk.  $\gamma a\mu\phi ai$ , the jaws, Skt. jambka, the jaws.

CHAPTER, a division of a book; a synod or corporation of the clergy of a cathedral church. (F.,-L.) Short for chapiter, q.v. M. E. chapitre, in very early use. The pl. cheapitres, in the sense of chapters of a book, occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 14. The comp. chapitre-hous (spelt chaptire-hous) occurs in Piers Ploughman's Crede, g ed. Skeat, l. 395; and (spelt chapitelhous) in P. Plowman, B. v. 174; the sense being 'chapter-house.'-O. F. chapitre' (mod. F. chapitre). a corruption of an older form chapille; Brachet. - Lat. capitulum, a chapter of a book, section; in late Lat. a synod. A dimin. (with

CHAR (1), to turn to charcoal. (E.) Charcoal occurs in Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. L 424. In Boyle's Works, v. ii. p. 141, we read: 'His profession... did put him upon finding a way of charring sea-coal, wherein it is in about three hours . . brought to charcoal; of which having ... made him take out some pieces, ... I found them upon breaking to be properly charr'd' (R.) To char simply means 'to turn.' Cf. 'Then Nestor broil'd them on the cole-turn'd wood;'

Chapman's Odyssey, bk. iii. 1. 623. And again: 'But though the whole world turn to coal;' G. Herbert's Poems; Vertue. M. E. cherren, charren, to turn. See below. [†] CHAR (2), a turn of work. (E.) Also chare; 'and does the meanest chares;' Ant. and Cleop. iv. 15. 75; cf. v. 2. 231. Also cheure, as in: 'Here's two cheures cheur'd,' i.e. two jobs done, Beaumont and Fletcher. Love's Cure iii 2. Also cheere a modern Beaumont and Fletcher, Love's Cure, iii. 2. Also chore, a modern Americanism. Cf. mod. E. 'to go a-charing ;' and see my note to The Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 2. 21; and see Nares. M. E. cherr, chearr, cher, char; of which Mätzner gives abundant examples. It means: (1) a time or turn; Ancren Riwle, p. 408; (2) a turning about, Bestiary, 653 (in Old Eng. Misc. ed. Morris); (3) a movement; Body and Soule, 157 (in Mätzner's Sprachproben); (4) a piece or turn for work, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 341; Towneley Myst. p. 106. A. G. kér, a turning about; O. H. G. chéran, M. H. G. kéren, mod. G. kehren, to turn about. Perhaps related to Gk. dyeipeur, to assemble ; Fick, i. 73. The form of the root is GAR.

Der. char-woman; and see above. [+] CHAR (3), a kind of fish. (C.) The belly is of a red colour; whence its name. 'Chare, a kind of fish;' Kersey's Dict. and ed., 1715. 'Chare, a kind of fish, which breeds most peculiarly in Winandermere in Lancashire; ' Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1662. [The W. name is torgoch, i.e. red-bellied; from tor, belly, and coch, red.] Of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. ceara, red, blood-coloured, from cear, blood; Irish cear, sb., blood, adj. red, ruddy; W. gwyar, gore, blood. These words are clearly cognate with E. gore, since both Irish c and E. g are deducible from Aryan k. See Gore.

CHARACTER, an engraved mark, sign, letter. (L. - Gk.) In Shak. Meas. iv. 2. 208; and, as a verb, As You Like It, iii. 2. 6. [Shak. also has charaet, Meas. v. 56; which answers to the common [6] M. E. caract, careet, Wyclif, Rev. xx. 4; from O. F. caracte, recorded in Roquefort with the spelling caracte. This is merely a clipped form of the same word.] – Lat. character, a sign or mark engraven. – Gk. xapasrhp, an engraved or stamped mark. – Gk. xapasreev, to furrow, to scratch, engrave. (Root-form SKAR?) Der. character-ise, character-ist-ic. character-ist-ic-al-ly.

CHARADE, a sort of riddle. (F., - Prov.?) Modern; and borrowed from F. charade, a word introduced into French from Provençal in the 18th century; Brachet. B. Origin uncertain; but we may observe that the Span. charrada means 'a speech or action of a clown, a dance, a showy thing made without taste;' Meadows. (Littré assigns to the Languedoc charade the sense of ' idle talk.') This Span. sb. is from Span. (and Port.) charro, a churl, peasant; possibly connected with G. karl, for which see Churl.

CHARCOAL; see Char (1). [†] CHARGE, lit. to load, burden. (F., -L., -C.) M. E. chargen, to load, to impose a command. 'The folk of the contree taken camayles [camels], . . . and chargen hem,' i. e. lade them ; Maundeville's Travels, p. 301. 'Chargede thre hondret schippes;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 13.-O. F. (and mod. The origin of the former syllable is unknown; usually, char is 'to turn;' but this gives no satisfactory sense. ¶ Not A. S. cedelc, which means 'dog's mercury.' CHARM, a song, a spell.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  M. E. charme; King Alis-aunder, ed. Weber, l. 81; charmen, verb; id. l. 342.-O. F. charme; an enchantment. - Lat. carmen, a song. Carmen is for casmen, a song of praise; from  $\sqrt{KAS}$ , to praise. Cf. Goth. hazian, A. S. herian, Skt. pams, to praise. CHARNEL, containing carcases. (F., -L.) Milton has: 'charmed raults and sepulchres;' Comus. 471. Usually in comp. charmedvaults and sepulchres; Comus, 471. Usually in comp. charnel-house (Macb. iii. 4. 71), where charnel is properly an adj.; but we also find M.E. charnelle as a sb., in the sense of 'charnel-house.' 'Undre the cloystre of the chirche . . is the charnel of the Innocentes. where here [their] bones lyin' [lie]; Maundeville's Trav. p. 70.-O. F. carnel, charnel, adj. carnal; carnel, charnier, sb. a cemetery.-

Lat. carnelis, carnal. – Lat. caro (stem carn-), flesh. See Carnal. CHART, a paper, card, map. (L., – Gk.) Richardson quotes from Skelton, Garl. of Laurell, 1. 503, for this word; but the word is hardly so old; chart in that passage is a misreading for charter; see Dyce's edition. However 'charts and maps' is in North's Plutarch, p. 307 (R.) [But a map was, at that time, generally called a card.] = Lat. charta, a paper.  $-Gk. \chi dorry, \chi dorry, a sheet of paper.$ See Card (1). Der. chart-er, q. v.; also chart-ist, chart-ism, words much in use A.D. 1838 and 1848.

CHARTER, a paper, a grant.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.,-}Gk.)$  In early use. M. E. charter, chartir; see Rob. of Glouc. pp. 277, 324; also spelt cartre, id. p. 77. Chartre in Havelok, l. 676.–O. F. chartre, cartre, a charter. – Lat. chartarius, made of paper; whence Low Lat. char-tarium, archives. – Lat. charta, paper. – Gk.  $\chi \alpha \rho \tau \eta$ , a sheet of paper. See above

CHARY, careful, cautious. (E.) See Nares. M. E. chari, full of care; hence (sometimes) sad. For turrile ledeth chari; lif' = for the turtle leads a mournful life; Ormulum, l. 1274. (Not often used.) – A.S. cearig, full of care, sad; Grein, i. 158. – A.S. cearw, carw, care; id. Thus chary is the adj. of care, and partakes of its double sense, viz. (1) sorrow, (2) heedfulness; the former of these being the older See Care. Der. chari-ly, chari-ness. sense.

CHASE (1), to hunt after, pursue. (F., -L.) M. E. chasen, chacen; Will. of Palerne, 1306; Maundeville's Trav. p. 3. -O. F. chacier, cacier, cachier, to chase .- Low Lat. caciare, to chase. Chase is a doublet of catch; see further under Catch. Der. chase, sb. CHASE (2), to enchase, emboss. (F.,-L.) Chase is a contraction of enchase, q. v.

CHASE (3), a printer's frame for type. (F., -L.) Merely a doublet of case. -F. chasse, a shrine. - Lat. capsa, a box, case. See Case (2)

CHASM, a yawning gulf. (L.,-Gk.) 'The chasms of thought;' Spectator, no. 471. – Lat. chasma, an opening. – Gk.  $\chi \acute{a}\sigma \mu a$ , an open-ing, yawning. – Gk.  $\checkmark$  XA, to gape. –  $\checkmark$  GHA, to gape. See Chaos. CHASTE, clean, pure, modest. (F., – L.) In early use. Chaste and chastete (chastity) both occur at p. 368 of the Ancren Rivle. – O. F. chaste, caste. - Lat. castws (for cad-tws), chaste, pure. + Gk.  $\kappaa\theta$ -apis, pure. + Skt. cuddka, pure; from cudk, to be purified, become pure. -  $\sqrt{KWADH}$ , to clean, purify. See Curtius, i. 169; and Vanicek. Der. chaste-ness, chaste-ly; chast-i-ty; also chast-en, chastise; see below.

CHASTEN, to make pure, to correct. (F., -L.) M. E. chastien, chasten; often written chasty in the infinitive (Southern dialect). [The preservation of the final -en is probably due to the free use of the old dissyllabic form chasty; in course of time a causal force was assigned to the suffix -en, though it really belonged rather to the vowel -i- in the full form chastien.] = O. F. chastier, castier, to chasten, castigate. - Lat. castigare, to castigate, make pure. - Lat. castus, chaste. See Chaste. Der. chasten-ing ; also chast-ise ; see below. Doublet, chastien, to chasten, by the addition of the M.E. suffix -isen, Lat. -izare. See Chaston. Der. chastise-ment; formed from chastise in imitation of M.E. chastiement (Ancren Riwle, p. 72, Cursor Mundi, 26004), which is a derivative of M. E. chastien, to chasten. [+]

CHASUBLE, an upper priestly vestment. (F., -L.) M. E. chesible, P. Plowman, B. vi. 12. - F. chasuble, which Cotgrave explains as 'a chasuble.' [The M. E. chesible points to an O. F. chasible.] -Low Lat. casubla, casubula, Ducange; also casibula (Brachet); dimin. forms of Low Lat. casula, used by Isidore of Seville to mean 'a mantle,' and explained by Ducange to mean 'a chasuble.' The Lat. casula means properly a little cottage or house; being a dimin. of casa, a house, cottage. The word cassock was formed in much the same way. See Cassock. CHAT, CHATTER, to talk, talk idly. (E.) The form chat (though really nearer the primitive) is never found in Early English, and came into use only as a familiar abbreviation of M.E. chateren (with one t). I find no earlier use of it than in Turberville, as quoted in R. M. E. ekateren, cheateren, to chatter; with a dimin. form chi'eren, in very early use. 'Sparuwe is a cheaterinde brid, cheatered ever ant chirmeo = the sparrow is a chattering bird; it ever chatters and chirps; Ancren Riwle, p. 152. 'As eny swalwe chitering in a berne' [barn]; Chaucer, C. T. 3258. The word is imitative, and the ending -er (M. E. -eren) has a frequentative force. The form chiteren is equivalent to Scot. guhitter, to twitter; Du. hwetteren, to warble, chatter; Dan. kviddre, to chirp; Swed. kvittra, to chirp. The form of the root of chat would be KWAT, answering to Aryan GAD; and this form actually occurs in Sanskrit in the verb gad, to recite, and the sb. gada, a speech. A variant of the same root is KWATH, occurring in A.S. cuedan, to say, and preserved in the mod. E. quoth. See Fick, i. 53. See Quoth. Der. chatter-er, chatter-ing; chatt-y. CHATEAU, a castle. (F.,-L.) Modern; and mere French.-Mod. F. château; O. F. chastel, castel. - Lat. castellum. A doublet of Castle, q. v. CHATTELS, goods, property. (F.,-L.) Used also in the singular in old authors. M. E. chatel (with one t), a mere variant of M. E. catel, cattle, goods, property. 'Aiwher with chatel mon mai lune cheape' = everywhere with chattels may one buy love; Old Eng. Homilies, i. 271. See further under Cattle, its doublet.

CHATTER; see Chat.

CHAW, verb, to chew; see Chew.

CHAWS, s. pl. the old spelling of jaws, in the A. V. of the Bible; Erek. xxix. 4; xxxviii. 4. So also in Udal's Erasmus, John, fol. 73;

Holland's Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 2 (end). See Jaw. CHEAP, at a low price. (not E., but L.) Never used as an adj. in the earlier periods. The M.E. chep, cheep was a sb., signicheap, a good price; used to mean cheap, in imitation of the F. phr. bom marché. 'Tricolonius..., Maketh the corn good chepe or dere;' Gower, C. A. ii. 168, 169. A similar phrase is 'so liht cheap,' i.e. so small a price; Ancren Riwle, p. 398. We have the simple sb. in the phrase 'hire cheap wes the wrse,' i.e. her value was the worse [less]; Layamon, i. 17.-A. S. ceáp, price; Grein, i. 159; whence the verb ceápian, to cheapen, to buy. + Du. koop, a bargain, purchase; goed-koop, cheap, lit.' good cheap;' koopen, to buy. + Icel. kaup, a bargain; "It worse a bad burgain ; cout koup, a cond burgain, a bargain; illt kaup, a bad bargain; gott kaup, a good bargain; kaupa, to buy.+ Swed. höp, a bargain, price, purchase; köpa, to buy. + Dan. höb, a purchase; kiöke, to buy. + Goth. kaupon, to traffic, trade; Lu. xix. 13. + O. H. G. coufón, M. H. G. koufen, G. kaufen, to buy; G. kauf, a purchase. B. Curtius (i. 174) holds that all these words, however widely spread in the Tentonic tongues, must be borrowed from Latin; indeed, we find O. H. G. choufo, a huckster, which is merely the Lat. caupo, a huckster. Hence Grimm's Law does not apply, but the further related words are (with but slight change) the Lat. caupo, a huckster, innkeeper, copa, a barmaid, caupona, an inn; Gk. κάπηλοs, a peddler, καπηλεύειν, to hawk wares, καπηλεία, retail trade ; Church Slav. kupiti, to buy, Russian kupite, to buy; &c. If this be right (as it seems to be), the word is not English, after all. Der.

cheap-ly, cheap-ness, cheap-en; also chap-man, q. v.  $\mathbf{CHEAT}$ , to defraud, deceive. (F., -L.) The verb is formed from the M. E. chete, an escheat; to cheat was to seize upon a thing as escheated. The want of scruple on the part of the escheator, and the feelings with which his proceedings were regarded, may be readily imagined. The verb is scarcely older than the time of Shakespeare, who uses it several times, esp. with the prep. of, with relation to the thing of which the speaker is defrauded. 'We are merely cheated of our lives ;' Temp. i. 1. 59 ; ' hath cheated me of the island,' id. iii. 2. 49; 'cheats the poor maid of that;' K. John, ii. 573; 'cheated of feature;' Rich. III, i. 1, 19. In Merry Wives, i. 3. 77, Shak. uses cheaters in the very sense of 'escheators,' but he probably rather inβ. The tended a quibble than was conscious of the etymology.

M. E. chete, as a contraction of escheat, was in rather early use. <sup>6</sup>Chete for the lorde, caducum, confiscarium, fisca; <sup>6</sup> Prompt. Parv. p. 73. <sup>6</sup>The kynge . . . seide . . I lese many chetes, <sup>6</sup> i. e. I lose many escheats; P. Plowman, B. iv. 175, where some MSS. have eschetes. Hence were formed the verb shelen, to confiscate, and the sb. cheling, confiscation. 'Chelyn, confiscor, fisco;' Prompt. Parv. p. 73. 'Chel-ynge, confiscacio;' id. For further information see Escheat, of which cheat is a doublet. ¶ See further remarks on the word in Trench's Select Glossary. He gives a clear example of the serious use of cheater with the sense of escheatour. We also find a description of some rogues called cheatours in Awdelay's Fratemitye of Vaca-bonds, ed. Furnivall, pp. 7, 8; but there is nothing to connect these with the cant word cheie, a thing, of which so many examples occur in Harman's Caveat, and which Mr. Wedgwood guesses to be the origin of our word cheat. On the contrary, the word cheat seems to have descended in the world; see the extract from Greene's Michel Mumchance, his Discoverie of the Art of Cheating, quoted in Todd's Johnson, where he says that gamesters call themselves cheaters ; 'borrowing the term from our lawyers, with whom all such casuals as fall to the lord at the holding of his leets, as waifes, straies, and such like, be called chetes, and are accustumably said to be escheated to the lord's use.' Again, E. Müller and Mahn are puzzled by the occurrence of an alleged A. S. ceat or ceatta, meaning a cheat; but though there appears to be an A. S. ceat, glossed by 'res,' i. e. a thing, in a copy of Elfric's Glossary [which may perhaps account for the slang term chete, a thing], there is no such word in the sense of fraud beyond the entry ' ceatta, circumventiones, cheats ' in Somner's Dictionary, which is probably one of Somner's numerous fictions. There is no such word in Middle English, except the F. word eschete.

CHECK, a sudden stop, a repulse. (F., -Pers.) M.E. chek, found (perhaps for the first time) in Rob. of Brunne's tr. of Peter Langtoft. He has: ' for they did that chek' = because they occasioned that delay, p. 151; see also pp. 100, 225. Chaucer has chek as an interjection, meaning 'check l' as used in the game of chess: 'Ther-with Fortune seyde "chek here 1" And "mate" in the myd poyat of the chekkere,' i. e. thereupon Fortune said 'check ! here !' and 'mate' in the middle of the chessboard; Book of the Duchesse, 658. B. The word was clearly taken from the game of chess, according to the received opinion. [The game is mentioned earlier, in the Ro-mance of King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 2096.] The orig. sense of the interj. check I was 'king !' i. e. mind your king, your king is in danger. - O. F. eschec, eschec, which Cotgrave explains by 'a check at chess-play; 'pl. eschers, the game of chess. [The initial e is dropped in English, as in stable from O. F. estable, and in chess, q. v.] - Pers. shah, a king, the principal piece in the game of chess; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 374; whence also shah-mat, check-mate, from shah, the king, and mát, he is dead, id. col. 518; the sense of check-mate being ' the king is dead.' Der. check, verb; check-mate; check-er, q.v.; chess, q.v.; exchequer, q.v.; cheque, put for check. ¶ There need be no besitation in accepting this etymology. In the same way the Pers. word has become skak (chess) in Icelandic, and has produced the verb skáka, to check. So the mod. F. échec means 'a repulse, a defeat ; but echecs means 'chess.' The Ital. scaces means 'a square of a chessboard;' and also 'a rout, flight.' The Port. saguate means 'a check, rebuke,' evidently from Port. xaque, check ! [+]

CHECKER, CHEQUER, to mark with squares. (F.) The term checky in heraldry means that the shield is marked out into squares like a chess-board. To checker in like mauner is 'to mark out like a chessboard; ' hence, to mark with cross-lines; and, generally, to variegate. The verb is derived from the M. E. chekker, cheker, or chekere, a chess-board; used by Rob. of Glouc. p. 192; Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 659. The word is still used in the plural form. The Checkers, not uncommon as the name of an inn; see below. -O. F. eschequier, a chess-board; also an exchequer. -O. F. eschec, check (at chess) 1 See Cheok, and Exchequer. CHECKERS, CHEQUERS, the game of draughts. (F.) Sometimes so called, because played on a checkered board, or chessboard. As the sign of an inn, we find mention of the 'Cheker of the hope, i.e. the chequers on [or with] the hoop, in the Prologue to the Tale of Beryn, 1. 14; and Canning, in his Needy Knife-grinder, makes mention of 'The Chequers.' See Larwood, Hist. of Signboards, p. 488; and see above. CHECKMATE; see Check.

CHEEK, the side of the face. (E.) M. E. cheke; earlier, cheoke, as spelt in the Ancren Riwle, pp. 70, 106, 156. – A. S. ceice, the check; of which the pl. ceican occurs as a gloss to maxillas, Ps. xxxi. 12. We also find the Northumb. and Midland forms ceica, ceke, as Subsect to maxillà in Matt. v. 39. – Du. kaak, the jaw, the cheek. + Swed. kok, jaw; käk, cheek (Tauchnitz Dict., p. 54). Nearly related to jaw, once spelt chaw. See Jaw, and also Chaps. [†] commonly meaning 'the face; 'hence, mien, look, demeanour; cf.  $\notin$  whence also E. yearn; and  $\phi^{i\lambda}\lambda_{0\nu}$  is cognate with Lat. folium. See the phr. 'be of good cheer,' and 'look cheerful.' 'With glade chere' = |Yearn and Foliage. with pleasant mien ; Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 33. 'Maketh drupie chere' = makes drooping cheer, looks sad ; Aneren Riwle, p. 88. - O. F. chere, chiere, the face, look. - Low Lat. cara, a face, counte-(Brachet). - Gk. sdpa, the head. + Skt. ciras, the head. Cf. also Lat. cere-brum, Goth. hwair-nei, G. hir-n, Du. her-sen, the brain; Scot. harns, the brains. Dor. cheer-ful, cheer-ful-ly, cheer-ful-ness; cheerless, cheer-less-ness; cheer-y, cheer-i-ness.

CHEER, mien; entertainment. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. cl.ere,

CHEESE, the curd of milk, coagulated. (L.) M. E. chese, Havelok, 643; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 53. – A. S. ess, cyse; the pl. essas (cysas in some MSS.) occurs in the Laws of Ina, sect. 70; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 147. - Lat. cāseus, cheese. + Irish cais, Gael. caise, W. caus, Corn. caus, cés. The Teutonic forms were probably all borrowed from Latin; the Celtic ones are perhaps cognate. Dor. chees-y.

CHEMISE, a lady's shift. (F., - L., - Arab.) 'Hire chemise smal and hwit ;' Reliquize Antiquze, ed. Halliwell and Wright, i. 129 ; also ' Hire chemise smal in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 2nd Ser. p. 162. - F. chemise. - Late Lat. camisia, a shirt, a thin dress. - Alab. yums, kind of inner garment of linen; also a tunic, a surplice (of cotton, but not of wool); 'Rich. Arab. Dict. p. 1148. Der. chemis-ette. [+]

CHEMIST, CHYMIST, a modern 'alchemist.' (Gk.) double spelling (of chemist and chymist) is due to the double spelling of alchemy and alchymy. 'Alchymist (alchymista) one that useth or is skilled in that art, a chymick ;' Blount's Glossographia, 1674. Chymist is merely short for alchymist, and chemist for alchemist; see quotations in Trench's Select Glossary. 'For she a chymist was and Nature's secrets knew And from amongst the lead she antimony drew;' Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 26. [Antimony was a substance used in alchemy.] Dropping the al-, which is the Arabic article, we have reverted to the Gk. xnµeia, chemistry. See further under Alchemy. Der. chemistry; and, from the same source, chem-ic, chem-ic-al.

CHEQUER, CHEQUERS; see Checker, Checkers.

CHERISH, to fondle, take care of. (F., -L.) M. E. cherischen, chericen; whence the sb. cherissing, cherishing, P. Plowman, B. iv. 117. Spelt cherisch, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 138.-O. F. cherir, pres.

pt. cherische, And F. cheris, etc. Monis, etc. b. ras-of F. cheris, pt. sherischer, pt. cherischer, and (M. G. F. cheris, pres. pt. cheriss-ant), to hold dear, cherish. = O. F. (and F.) cher, dear. = Lat. carus, dear. See Caress. CHERRY, a tree bearing a stone-fruit. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. chery, chiri (with one r). 'Ripe chiries manye;' P. Plowman, B. vi. 296; A. vii. 281. Cheri or chiri was a corruption of cheris or chiris, the final s being mistaken for the pl. inflection; the same mistake occurs in several other words, notably in pea as shortened from pease (Lat. pisum). Cheris is a modification of O. F. cerise. - Lat. cerasus, a cherry-tree; whence also the A.S. cyrs. We find the entry 'Cerasus, cyrs-treow,' in Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Somner, Nomina Arborum. - Gk. kipagos, a cherry-tree; see Curtius, i. 181, who ignores the usual story that the tree came from Cerasos, a city in Pontus. Cf. Pliny, bk. xv.

c. 25. CHERT, a kind of quartz. (C.?) 'Flint is most commonly found in this strates when 'tis in nodules; but 'tis sometimes found in thin stratæ, when 'tis In hodules; but its sometimes found in thin strate, when its called chert; Woodward, qu. in Todd's Johnson (no reference). Woodward the geologist died A.D. 1738. The word was probably taken up from provincial English. 'Churty, [of] rocky soil; mineral; Kent; 'Halliwell's Dict. 'Chart, common rough ground over-run with shrubs, as Brasted Chart; Seale Chart. Hence the Kentish expression charty ground; 'Pegge's Kenticisms; E. D. S., Gl. C. 3. The word, being thus preserved in place-names in Kent, may very well be Celtic; and is fairly explicable from the Irish ceart, a pebble, whence chart, stony ground, and churty, rocky. Cf. the Celtic car, a rock; evidenced by Irish carrach, rocky, Gael. carr, a shelf of rock, W. careg, stone; and in the Northumbrian gloss of Matt. vii. 24, we find carr vel stan, i. e. ' carr or stone.' as a gloss to petram. Perhaps Cairn may ultimately be referred to the same root, as signifying 'a pile of stones.' See Cairn, Crag. Der. chert-y. [+] CHERUB, a celestial spirit. (Heb.) 'And he stegh ouer

Cherubin, and flegh thar ' = and He ascended over the cherubim, and flew there ; Metrical English Psalter (before A.D. 1300), Ps. xviii. 11, where the Vulgate has: 'et ascendit super cherubim.' The Heb. pl. is cherubim, but our Bibles wrongly have cherubims in many passages. -Heb. k'rúv, pl. k'rúvím (the initial letter being kaph), a mystic figure. Origin unknown; see Cherub in Smith's Concise Dict. of the Bible. Der. cherub-ic. [†]

CHERVIL, the name of a plant. (L., -Gk.) M.E. chervelle. The pl. chervelles is in P. Plowman, B. vi. 296. - A. S. carfille. The entry cerefolium, carfille' is in Ælfric's Glossary (Nomina Herbarum). -Lat. carefolium (Pliny, 19. 8. 54); charophylon (Columella, 10. 8. 110). -Gk. χαιρέφυλλον, chervil; lit. 'pleasant leaf.'-Gk. χαίρ-ειν, to rejoice; and φύλλον, a leaf. The Gk. χαίρειν is from V GHAR, CHESS, the game of the kings. (F., - Pers.) M. E. ches, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1. 2096; Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 1. 631. A corrupted form of checks, i. e. 'kings;' see Check. Grammatically, chess is the pl. of check. - O. F. eschecs, eschacs, chess, pl. of eschec, eschac, check! lit. 'a king.'-Pers. shidh, a king. ¶ The corruptions of the Eastern word are remarkable. The Persian shah became in O. F. eschae, later eschec, whence E. check; Pro-vençal escae; Ital. scaeco; Span. jaque, xaque; Port. xaque; G. schach; Icel. skák; Dan. skak; Swed. schack; Du. schaak; Low Lat. ludus scaccorum CHEST, a box; trunk of the body. (L.,-Gk.) M. E. cheste, chiste. Spelt chiste, Havelok, 220; also kiste, Havelok, 2017. Also found without the final e, in the forms chest, chist, kist. - A. S. cyste, as a tr, of Lat. loculum in Luke, vii. 14. The Northumb. gloss has ceiste; the later A. S. version has cheste. - Lat. cista, a chest, box. - Gk. The Northumb. gloss has corη, a chest, a box. ¶ The G. histe, &c. are all borrowed forms. CHESTNUT, CHESNUT, the name of a tree. (Proper name; κίστη, a chest, a box. F., -L., -Gk.) Chesnut is short for chestnut, and the latter is short for chesten-nut. The tree is properly chesten simply, the fruit being the chesten-nut. M. E. chestein, chesten, chastein, castany, &c. 'Med-lers, plowmes, perys, chesteyns;' Rom. of the Rose, 1375. 'Grete forestes of chesteynes;' Maundeville's Trav. p. 307; chesteyn, Chaucer, C. T. 2924. - O. F. chastaigne (mod. F. châtaigne). - Lat. castanea, the chestnut-tree. - Gk. κάστανον, à chestnut ; gen. in pl. κάστανα, chestnuts; also called rapva Kastaraîa, from Kastara [Castana] or Kas-bavaia, the name of a city in Pontus where they abounded. CHEVAL-DE-FRISE, an obstruction with spikes. (F.) in pl. chevaux-de-frise. The word is a military term, and mere French. - F. cheval de Frise, lit. a horse of Friesland, a jocular name for the contrivance. The form ' Chevaux de Frise' is given in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. See below. CHEVALLER, a knight, cavalier. (F., -L.) A doublet of cavalier. In Shak. K. Brachet says: 'Before being used for sharp practice in lawsuits, it meant a dispute in games, particularly in the game of the mall; and, originally, it meant the game of the mall: in this sense chicane represents a form zicanum *, which is from the medieval Gk. r (undarior, a word of Byzantine origin.' Y. This Low Gk. word is evidently borrowed from Pers. chaugan, a club or bat used in the game of 'polo;' Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 189; Rich. Dict. p. 545, col. 2. ¶ Diez supposes the word to be connected with O. F. chic, little (cf. 'de chic à chic, from little to little ' in Cotgrave); and derives it from Lat. ciccum, that which is of little worth, whence mod.

F. chiche, niggardly. See an article on Chic in N. and Q. 5 S. viii. 261. CHICKEN, the young of the fowl. (E.) The form chick is a mere abbreviation of chicken, not the oldest form. M. E. chiken. * Chekyn, pullus; * Prompt. Parv. p. 74. The pl. chiknes is in Chau-cer, Prol. 382. – A. S. eicen; of which the pl. cicenu, chickens, occurs in Matt. xxiii. 37. This form is a diminutive, from A. S. cocc, a cock; formed by adding -en, and at the same time modifying the vowel; cf. kitten, dimin. of cat. + Du. kieken, kuiken, a chicken; dimin. of O. Du. cocke, a cock (Kilian, Oudemans). + M. H. G. kuchin (cf. mod. G. kücklein), a chicken; dimin. of a form cognate with E. cock, but lost. See Cock. Der. chick-ling, dimin. (cf. Icel. kjuklingr); chickenhearted, chicken-pox; chick-weed (Levins). [*]

CHICORY, a plant; succory. (F., -L., -Gk.) It does not appear to be in early use. Merely borrowed from French. - F. chicoree, cichorée, 'succorie;' Cot. - Lat. cichorium, succory. - Gk. suxuptor; also κιχώρη; also as neut. pl. κίχορα, succory [with long i]. The form succory is more corrupt, but in earlier use in English. See Succory

CHIDE, to scold; also, to quarrel. (E.) M. E. chiden; in Old Eng. Homilies, i. 113. - A. S. cidan, to chide, brawl; Exod. xxi. 18; Luke, iv. 35, where the pt. t. cidde occurs. ¶ There do not seem to be cognate forms. Perhaps related to A. S. cwedan, to speak; whence E. quoth, q. v. [†] CHLEF, adj. head, principal; sb. a leader. (F, -L) Properly a sb., but early used as an adj. M. E. chef, chief. Rob. of Glouc. has Goth. kinnus, the cheek; Matt. v. 39. + O. H. G. chinni, M. H. G. chef, sb., p. 212; chef, adj., p. 231. - O. F. chef, chief, the head. - Lat. kinne, G. kinn, the cheek. + Lat. gena, the cheek. + Gk. Yérve, the caput (stem capit-), the head; cognate with E. head, g. v. Der. chief-ly; chief-tain, q. v.; also ker-chief, q. v. CHIEFTAIN, a head man; leader. (F.,-L.)

A doublet of captain. In early use. M. E. cheuetein, chiftain, &c. Spelt cheuetein, Layamon, i. 251 (later text). - O. F. chevetaine, a chieftain. - Low Lat. capitanus, capitaneus, a captain. - Lat. caput (stem capit-), the head. See above; and see Captain. Der. chieftain-ship.

CHIFFONIER, an ornamental cupboard. (F.) Modern ; and mere French. Lit. 'a place to put rags in.'-F. chiffonnier, a ragpicker; also, a piece of furniture, a chiffonier (Hamilton and Legros). -F. chiffen, a rag; an augmentative form (with suffix -on) from chiffe, a rag, a piece of flimsy stuff; explained by Cotgrave as 'a clout, old ragge, over-worn or off-cast piece of stuffe.' (Origin unknown.) CHILBLAIN, a blain caused by cold. (E.) Lit. 'chill-blain,' i. e. cold-sore, sore caused by cold. In Holland's Pliny, ii. 76 (b. xx. C. 22). See Chill and Blain.

CHILD, a son or daughter, a descendant. (E.) M. E. child, very early; also cild. Spelt child, Layamon, i. 13; cild, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 217. - A. S. cild; Grein, i. 160. Cf. Du. and G. kind, β. We need not suppose that cild stands for cind, but may a child. rather refer A.S. ei-ld to the A GA, to produce, which appears as a collateral form of V GAN, to produce, bring forth, whence Du. and G. kin-d. Cf. Goth. kilthei, the womb. See Curtius, i. 214. See Chit, Kin. Der. child-ish, child-ish-ness, child-like, child-less; childbed; child-hood = A. S. cild-had, Grein, i. 160.

CHILIAD, the number 1000. (Gk.) Used by Sir T. More to mean 'a period of a thousand years;' Defence of Moral Cabbala, c. a (R.) – Gk. χιλιάs (stem χιλιαδ.), a thousand, in the aggregate. – Gk. XIAM, pl. a thousand ; Æolic Gk. XIAAM, which is probably an older form.

CHILL, a sudden coldness; cold. (E.) Properly a sb. 'Chil, cold, algidus,' and 'To chil with cold, algere' occur in Levins, col. 123, ll. 46, 28. Earlier than this, it is commonly a sb. only; but the pp. clild (i.e. chilled) occurs in P. Plowman, C. xviii. 49. M. E. e il, Trevisa, i. 51; but more commonly chele, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 33; Layamon, iii. 237. – A. S. cile, cile, chilliness, great cold; Grein, i. 157, 182. – A. S. cilan, to cool, make cool; Grein, i. 157. [Here é stands for ö, the mutation of o, by rule ] - A. S. col, cool; Grein, i. 167. See Cool. Cf. also Du. kill, a chill, chilly; killen, to chill; koel, cool. + Swed. kyla, to chill; kulen, kylig, chilly, + Lat. gelu, frost; gelidus, cold. Der. chill-y, chill-ness, chill-i-ness, chil-blain; and see gelid. [†] CHIME, a harmonious sound. (F., -L., -Gk.) The word has lost a b; it should be chimb. M.E. chimbe, chymbe. belle [i.e. chimbe-bell] he doth rynge; 'K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1852. The true old sense is 'cymbal.' In the Cursor Mundi, ed. Morris, l. 12193, the Trin. MS has : 'As a chymbe or a brasen belle' (with evident reference to 1 Cor. xiii. 1); where the Göttingen MS. has chime, and the Cotton MS. has chim. [Cf. Swed. kimba, to ring an alarm-bell.] Chimbe or chymbe is a corruption of chimbale or chymbale, a dialectic form of O. F. cimbale or cymbale, both of which forms occur in Cotgrave, explained by 'a cymball.' – Lat. cymbalum, a cymbal. – Gk. κυμβαλον, a cymbal. See further under Cymbal.

Der. chime, verb. [†] CHIMÆRA, CHIMERA, a fabulous monster. (L.,-Gk.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 628. - Lat. chimæra, a monster. - Gk. xiµaıpa, a she-goat; also, a monster, with lion's head, serpent's tail, and goat's body; Iliad, vi. 181. - Gk. xiµapus, a he-goat. + Icel. gymbr, a ewe-body; Inad, vi. 161. - GK. Xiapos, a negoat. + 162. gymor, a ewe-lamb of a year old; whence prov. Eng. gimmer or gimmer-lamb; Curtius, i. 249. Der. chimer-ic-al., chimer-ic-al-ly. [†] CHIMNEY, a fire-place, a flue. (F., -Gk.) Formerly, 'a fire-place;' see Shak. Cymb. ii. 4. 40. 'A chambre with a chymneye;' P. Plowman, B. x. 98. - O. F. cheminée, 'a chimney;' Cotgrave. - Low Lat. cominata, lit. 'provided with a chimney;' hence 'a room with a chimney; 'and, later, the chimney itself. - Lat. cominus, a hearth (imrace forme stove flue - Gk rélaves an over flurace) hearth, furnace, forge, stove, flue. - Gk. xóµvos, an oven, furnace. Perhaps from Gk. sales, to burn; but this is not very certain; Curtius, ii. 226. Der. chimney-piece, chimney-shaft. CHIMPANZEE, a kind of ape. (African.) In a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., published in London in 1792, vol. i. p. 324, there is a mention of 'the orang-outangs, which he [M. de la Bresse] calls guimpenzes.' The context implies a reference to Loango, on the W. African coast. I am informed that the word is tsimpanzee or tshimpanzes in the neighbourhood of the Gulf of Guinea, the Fantee name of the animal being akatsia or akatshia.

CHLIN, part of the lower jaw. (E.) M.E. chin, Layamon, l. 8148. - A.S. cin: we find 'mentum, cin' in Ælfric's Gloss. ed. Somner, p. 70, col. 2. + Du. kin. + Icel. kinn, the cheek. + Dan. kind, the cheek. + Swed. kind, the check; kindbåge, checkbone, but also jawbone. + [91. For the change of vowel from chop (older form chap), cf. clink

CHINA, porcelain-ware. (China.) Shak. has 'china dishes;' Meas. ii. 1. 97; see Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 268; Rape of the Lock, ii. 106. 'China, or China-ware, a fine sort of earthen ware made in those parts' [i. e. in China]; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Named from the country.

CHINESE, an inhabitant of China. (China.) Milton, P. L. iii. 438, has the pl. Chineses, correctly. The final -se has come to be regarded as a plural; and we now say Chinese in the plural. Hence, as a 'singular' development, the phrase 'that heathen Chinee.' Cf.

cherry, pea, sherry, shay (for chaise), &c. CHINCOUGH, the whooping-cough. (E.) 'No, it shall ne'er be said in our country Thou dy'dst o' the chin-cough; ' Beaum. and Fletcher; Bonduca, i. 2. It stands for chink-cough; prov. Eng. and Scot. kink-cough or link-host, where host means 'a cough.' Cf. Scot. kink, to labour for breath in a severe fit of coughing; Jamieson. It is an E. word, as shewn by 'cincung, cachinnatio' in a Glossary, pr. in Wright's Vocab. i. 50, col. 2; which shews that kink was also used of a loud fit of laughter. Kink is a nasalised form of a root kik, signifying 'to choke,' or 'to gasp;' an imitative word, like Cackle, q.v. + Du. kinkhoest, the chincough, whooping-cough; O. Du. kiechhoest, kichhoest, the same (Kilian). + Swed. kikhosta, the chincough; kik-na, to gasp, to pant (where the -n- is formative, to give the word a passive sense, the lit. meaning being 'to become choked'). + Dan. kighoste, the whooping-cough. + G. keichen, to pant, (asp.  $\beta$ . A stronger form of this root KIK, to gasp. appears in the Cough. See particularly the note to Cackle; and see Chink (2). CHINE, the spine, backbone. (F., -0, H. G.) 'Me byhynde, at my chyne, Smotest me with thy spere; 'K. Alisaunder, I. 3977.-O. F. eschine (mod. F. échine), the spine.-O. H. G. skind, a needle, a prickle, Graff, vi. 499 (=G. schiene, a splint); see Diez. β. An exactly similar change (or rather extension) of meaning is seen in the Lat. spina, a thorn, spine, back-bone. It is difficult to resist the con-clusion that the O. H. G. word is in some way related to the Latin ¶ Quite unconnected with M. E. chine, a chink, one. See Spine. cleft ; see below.

CHINK (1), a cleft, crevice, split. (E.) 'May shine through every chinke;' Ben Jonson; Ode to James, Earl of Desmond, l. 16. And see Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 66. Formed, with an added k, expressive of diminution, from the M. E. chine, a chink; cf. prov. Eng. chine, a rift in a cliff (Isle of Wight). 'In the chyne of a ston-wall;' Wyclif, Song of Solomon, ii. 14. – A. S. cinu, a chink, crack; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 154.-A.S. cinan, to split, crack (intransitively), to chap; 'eal tocinen,' i. e. chapped all over, Ælfric's Hom. i. 336. + Du. keen, a cleft; also, a germ; O. Du. kene, a split, rift; kenen, to shoot up, as a plant, bud. Cf. G. keimen, to germinate ; keim, a bud. β. The notion is clearly that a chine signified originally a crack in the ground caused by the germination of seeds; and the connection is clear between the A.S. cinu, a rift, cleft, crack, and the Goth. keinan, to spring up as plant, Mark, iv. 27; uskeinan, to spring up, Luke, viii. 8; uskeian, to produce, Luke, viii. 6. The Gothic root is Ki, to germinate, Fick, iii. 45; cognate with Aryan AGA, another form of AGAN, to generate; Curtius, i. 214. The From the same root we have prov. Eng. chick, explained by 'to germinate; also, to crack; a crack, or flaw; 'Halliwell. Also Chit, Child.

CHINK (2), to jingle; a jingling sound; money. (E.) In Shak. chinks means 'money,' jocularly; Romeo, i. 5, 119. Cf. 'he chinks his purse;' Pope, Dunciad, iii. 197. An imitative word, of which jingle may be said to be the frequentative. See Jingle. The same form appears in chincough, i.e. chink-cough. See Chinoough. A similar word is Clink, q. v.

CHINTZ, parti-coloured cotton cloth. (Hindustani.) In Pope, Moral Essays, i. 248; ii. 170. Hindu chkint, spotted cotton cloth; chhinta, a spot; chhintna, to sprinkle. More elementary forms appear in chhit, chintz, also, a spot; chhitki, a small spot, speck; chhitna, to scatter, sprinkle. Chintz is accordingly so named from the variegated patterns which appear upon it. For the above words, see Duncan Forbes, Hindustani-Eng. Dict., p. 120. The simpler form chhit appears in Du. sits, G. zitz, chintz. [+]

CHIP, to chop a little at a time. (E.) The dimin. of chop. M. E. chippen, chyppen. 'I chyppe breed, je chappelle du payn; I chyppe wodde, je coepelle;' Palsgrave. The sb. chip is a derivative from the verb, yet it happens to occur rather earlier ; M. E. chippe, a chip, Chaucer, C. T. 3745; spelt chip, Rob. of Brunne's tr. of Langtoft, p.

a variant of O. Swed. kappa, to chop, Ihre (s. v. kappa). See Chop.

Der. chip, sb. CHIROGRAPHY, handwriting. (Gk.) 'Chirograph (chirographum) a sign manual, a bill of ones hand, an obligation or handwriting;' Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674. [The term chirography is, however, rather formed directly from the Gk. than from the Low Lat. chirographum, a contract, indenture, or deed.] - Gk. xeipoypapeiv, to write with the hand. - Gk. xeepo., from xeep, the hand; and ypeop-eur, to write. The Gk. xeep is cognate with O. Lat. hir, the hand; cf. Skt. hri (base har), to seize; Curtius, i. 247. - A GHAR, to seize; Fick, i. 580. Der. chirograph-er, chirograph-ic, chirograph-ist; from the same Gk. xeipo- we have also chiro-logy, chiro-mancy, chiro-podist; also chir-urgeon, q. v. CHIRP, to make a noise as a bird. (E.) Sometimes extended to chirrup, by the trilling of the r. M. E. chirpen, whence the sb. chirpinge. 'Chyrpynge, or claterynge, chirkinge or chaterynge of byrdys, garritus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 76. 'To churpe, pipilare;' Levins, Man. Voc. p. 191. This M. E. chirpen is a mere variation of M. E. chirken. Chaucer has: 'And chirketh as a sparwe;' C. T. 7386. We also find the form chirmen. 'Sparuwe cheatered ever and chirmed'= the sparrow ever chatters and chirms; Ancren Riwle, p. 152. B. These forms, chir-p, chir-k, chir-m, are obvious extensions of the more primitive form chir-, or rather kir, which is an imitative word, intended to express the continual chattering and chirping of birds; cf. Du, kirren, to coo. But kir is even more than this; for the same Aryan root gar or gir occurs very widely to express various sounds in which the vibration is well marked. Cf. O. H. G. kirran, to creak; Lat. garrire, to chatter, Gk. γηρυs, speech, Skt. gir, the voice; &c. See Curtius, i. 217. - 4 GAR, to shout, rattle; Fick, i. 72. CHIRURGEON, a surgeon. (F.,-Gk.) Now always written

• F. chirurgien, 'a surgeon; 'Cotgrave. - F. chirurgie, surgery. - Gk. xespoupyia, a working with the hands. handicraft, art; esp. the art of surgery (to which it is now restricted). - Gk. xeepo-, from xeep, the hand; and i prev, to work, cognate with E. work, q.v. On Ck. Xeip, see Chirography. From the same source we have chirwrg-ic, chirurg-ic-al, words now superseded by surgical. ¶ The vowel u is due to Gk. ov, and this again to the coalescence of o and e.

CHISEL, a sharp cutting tool. (F. - L.) M. E. chisel, chysel; Prompt. Parv. p. 76; Shoreham's Poems, p. 137. Older spellings schetelle, sceselle, in Wright's Vocab. p. 376. – O. F. eisel (and pro-bably scisel), mod. F. eiseau. Cotgrave gives the verb 'ciseler, to carve. or grave with a chisell; also, to clip or cut with shears. – Low Lat. cisellus, forceps; sciselum, a chisel.  $\beta$ . Etym. doubtful; it seems most likely that cisellus should be scisellus, and that this is for sicilicellus, a late form of Lat. sicilicula, a small instrument for cutting, dimin. of sicilis, a sickle. The contraction can be accounted for by the stress falling on the long i; so that sicilicellus would become 'cilicellus, and then 'ci'cellus. Y. Such a corruption would be favoured by confusion with various forms deducible from Lat. scindere, to cut; but see the Errata. [+] 8. It hardly seems possible to derive chisel itself from scindere; and Diez is probably right in explaining the Span. form cincel, a chisel, as deducible from 'cilicellus by the change of l to n. If the above be correct, the base is, of course, the Lat. secare, to cut. See Sickle. Der. chisel, verb. CHIT, a shoot or sprout, a pert child. (E.) 'There hadde diches the yrchoun, and nurshede out little chittes;' Wyclif, Isa. xxxiv. 15. where the Vulg. has: 'ibi habuit foueam ericius, et enutriuit catulos; so that chit here means 'the young one' of a hedgehog. Halliwell gives: 'Chit, to germinate. The first sprouts of anything are called chits.' - A. S. elo, a germ, sprig, sprout; Grein, i. 161. [The change of the initial e to ek is very common; that of o to final e is rarer, but well seen in the common phrase ' the whole kit of them;' i.e. the whole kith, from A.S. cyo.] - Low G. root ki, to germinate, seen in Goth. keian, or uskeian, to produce as a shoot; cognate with Aryan & GA, another form of & GAN, to generate; Curtius, i. 214. See Chink (1). Both kin and kith are from the same prolific root; and see Child.

CHIVALRY, knighthood. (F., -L.) M. E. chivalrie, chivalerye. In K. Alisaunder, l. 1495, we have 'with al his faire chivalrie' = with all his fair company of knights; such being commonly the older meaning. - O. F. chevalerie, horsemanship, knighthood. - O. F. cheval, a horse. - Lat. caballus, a horse. See Cavalry. Der. chivalr-ic, chivalr-ous (M. E. chivalerous, Gower, C. A. i. 89), chivalr-ous-ly.

CHLORINE, a pale green gas. (Gk.) Modern. Named from its colour. The gas was discovered in 1774; the name was conferred on it by Sir H. Davy, about 1809; Engl. Cyclopædia. From Gk.  $\chi \lambda \omega \rho \delta s$ , pale green; cf. Gk.  $\chi \lambda \delta \eta$ , verdure, grass;  $\chi \lambda \delta o s$ , green co-lour; Skt. hari, green, yellow. See Curtius, i. 249, who makes both yellow and green to be related words. The root seems to be  $\checkmark$  GHAR, with clank, click with clack.  $\beta$ . Cf. G. kippen, to chip money;  $\beta$  to glow; Fick, i. 81; iii. 103. See Green. Der. chlor-ic, chlor-ide, O. Du. kippen, to strike, knock to pieces, Kilian; O. Swed. kippa, as | chlor-ite; also chloro-form, where the latter element has reference to formic acid, an acid so called because originally obtained from red

CHOCOLATE, a paste made from cacao. (Span., - Mexican.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, ii. 135; Spectator, no. 54. R. also quotes from Dampier's Voyages, an. 1682, about the Spaniards making chocolate from the cacao-nut. Todd says that it was also called chocolata at first, and termed 'an Indian drink ;' for which he refers to Anthony Wood's Athense Oxonienses, ed. 1692, vol. ii. col. 416. - Span. chocolate, chocolate. - Mexican chocolatl, chocolate; so called because obtained from the cacao-tree; Prescott's Conquest of Mexico, cap. v. See Cacao. [+] CHOICE, a selection. (F., -O. Low G.) Not English, so that the connection with the verb to choose is but remote. M. E. chois, choys, Rob. of Glouc. p. 111, l. 17.-O. F. chois, choice.-O. F. choisir, to choose; older spelling coisir. B. Of O. Low G. origin; cf. Goth. kausjan, to prove, test, kiusan, to choose. - V GUS, to choose. See Choose.

CHOIR, a band of singers; part of a church.  $(F_{..}-L_{..}-Gk_{..})$ Also quire. The choir of a church is so called because the choir of singers usually sat there. In the former sense, we find the spellof singers usually set there. In the former sense, we find the spen-ings queir; Barbour's Bruce, xx. 203 (l. 287 in Pinkerton's edi-tion). We also find 'Queere, chorus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 420. Choir is in Shak. Hen. VIII, iv. 1. 90; but it was certainly also in earlier use. = O. F. choeur, 'the quire of a church; also, a round, ring, or troop of singers;' Cotgrave. = Lat. chorus, a band of singers. = Gk.  $\chi$ opós, a dance in a ring, a band of dancers and singers. B. The orig, sense is supposed to have been 'a dance within an enclosure,' so that the word is nearly related to Gk. xopros, a hedge, enclosure, cognate with Lat. hortus and E. garth and yard. If so, it is (like Gk.  $\chi\epsilon i\rho$ , the hand) from the  $\checkmark$  GHAR, to seize, hold; see Curtius, i. 246; Fick, i. 580. Doublet, chorus; whence chor-al, chor-al-ly, chor-i-ster.

CHOKE, to throttle, strangle. (E.) Thus doth S. Ambrose choke our sophisters; Frith's Works, p. 130, col. 1. Chekenyd or qwerkenyd, chowked or querkened, suffocatus, strangulatus.' The form cheke, to choke, occurs in Rob. of Brunne, Handling Synne, l. 3192; see Stratmann, s.v. cheokien, p. 114. [Cf. chese as another form of choose.] Prob. an E. word; Somner gives 'accord, suffocatus.' but without a reference; and he is not much to be believed in such a case. + Icel. koka, to gulp, gulp as a gull [bird] does; kýka, to swallow; kok, the gullet, esp. of birds. Probably related also to Chincough, q.v. ¶ Some compare A.S. ceoca, the jaw, but there does not seem to be such a form ; the right form is ceace, given under Cheek. The word is rather to be considered imitative, and a stronger form of the root KIK, to gasp, given under Chincough, q.v. This brings us to an original Low German root KUK, to gulp (the Icel. i being due to original w); see Cough. And see Cackle, and the note upon it. Also Chuckle. Der. choke-ful.

CHOLER, the bile; anger. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) The k is a 16th century insertion, due to a knowledge of the source of the word. M. E. coler, bile; Gower, C. A. iii. 100. The adj. colerik is in Chaucer's Prol. 589. - O. F. colere, which in Cotgrave is also written cholere, and explained by 'choler, anger, . . also the complexion or humour tearmed choler.'-Lat. cholera, bile; also, cholera, or a bilious complaint (Pliny). - Gk. χολέρα, cholera ; χολή, bile; χόλοο, bile, also wrath, anger. The Gk. χολή is Lat. fel, and E. gall. See Gall. Der. choler-ic. Doublet, cholera, as shewn.

CHOOSE, to pick out, select. (E.) M. E. cheosen, chesen, chusen; of which chesen is the most usual. Spelt chus in the imperative, St. Marharete, p. 103; cheosen, Layamon, ii. 210. - A.S. ceósan, to choose; Grein, i. 160. + Du. kiezen. + G. kiesen. + Icel. kjósa. + Dan. kaare. + Swed. kåra in comp. utkåra, to elect. + Goth. kiusan, to choose, also to prove, test; kausjan, to prove, test. + Lat. gus-tare, to taste. + Gk.  $\gamma \epsilon i \omega \mu \alpha u$ , I taste. + Skt. jusk, to relish, enjoy. -  $\checkmark$  GUS, to choose, taste; Fick, i. 77; Curtius, i. 217. From the same root, choice, q. v; also gust (2). CHOP (1), to cut suddenly, strike off. (E.) M. E. choppen, to cut up, strike off. 'Thei choppen alle the bodi in smale peces;' Maunde-ville's Traveis, p. 201. The imperative chop occurs in P. Plowman, A. iii. 253. Of O. Low G. origin, and may be claimed as English. + O. Du. koppen, to cut off, behead, Kilian, Oudemans; Du. kappen, to chop the period beau else to be pursue to cut a cubb. to chop, cut, mince, hew; also, to lop, prune, to cut a cable. + Dan. kappe, to poll trees, to cut a cable. + Swed. kappa, to cut, cut away the anchor. + G. happen, to cut, poll, chop, lop, strike, to cut the cable. All of these are from a Teutonic  $\checkmark$  KAP, to cut, which has lost an original initial s, and stands for SKAP, to cut. [Hence Grimm's law does not apply here.] + Low Lat. cappare, coppare, copare, to cut; cf. Low Lat. capulare, capolare, capellare, to cut off, especially used of lopping trees. Thus the right of cutting trees was

(1) a tree that has been pollarded; (2) a capon. + Gk. morrew, to cut. + Russian skopite, to castrate; Ch. Slavonic skopiti, to cut. All from Aryan ✓ SKAP, to cut, hew, chop. See Curtius, i. 187; Fick,

i. 807. Der. chop, sb.; chopp-er. And see Capon, and Chump. CHOP (1), to barter, exchange. (O. Du., -L.) A variant of cheapen, for which see Cheap. Cheapen is the older word, chop being borrowed from O. Dutch. Chop is a weakened form of the M.E. copen, to buy. 'Where Flemynges began on me for to cry, Master, what will you copen or buy?' Lydgate's London Lyckpeny, st. 7. - O. Du. (and mod. Du.) koopen, to buy, purchase; orig. to barter. A word ultimately of Lat. origin; see further under Cheap. Hence also the phr. 'to chop and change;' also, 'the wind chops,' i. e. changes, veers CHOPS, the jaws, cheeks ; see Chaps.

CHORD, a string of a musical instrument. (L.,-Gk.) The same word as cord, which spelling is generally reserved for the sense 'a thin rope.' Milton has chords, P. L. xi. 561. In old edd. of Shak., it is spelt cord. – Lat. chorda. – Gk.  $\chi opoh$ , the string of a musical instrument. See further under Cord.

CHORUS, a company of singers. (L., -Gk.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 275. - Lat. chorus. - Gk. xopós. See further under Choir. CHOUGH, a bird of the crow family. (E.) M. E. chough. 'The crowes and the choughes;' Maundeville, p. 59. - A. S. ceó; we find 'Gracculus vel monedula, ceo;' Ælf. Gloss. ed. Somner; Nomina Avium. + Du. kaauw, a chough, jackdaw. + Dan. kaa, a jackdaw. + Swed. kaja, a jackdaw. So named from cawing; see Caw. [†] CHOUSE, to cheat; orig. a cheat. (Turkish.) Now a slang word; but its history is known. It was orig. a sb. Ben Jonson has chiaus in the sense of 'a Turk,' with the implied sense of 'a cheat.' In his Alchemist, Act i. sc. 1, Dapper says: 'What do you think of me, That I am a chiaus? Face. What's that? Dapper. The Turk was [i.e. who was] here: As one would say, do you think I am a Turk?' The allusion is to a Turkish chiaus, or interpreter, who, in 1609, defrauded some Turkish merchants resident in England of £40:0; a fraud which was very notorious at the time. See Richardson, Trench's Select Glossary, and Gifford's Ben Jonson, iv. 27. The pl. chouses occurs in Ford's Lady's Trial, ii. 2; and the pp. chous'd in Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 1011 (ed. Bell, ii. 53). - 'Iurk. cha'ush, a sergeant, mace-bearer; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 183; spelt chaush (without the ain), and explained 'a sergeant, a lictor; any officer that precedes a magistrate or other great man; a herald, a pursuivant, a messenger; the head of a caravan;' Richardson's Pers. Dict. p. 534. CHBISM, holy unction, holy oil. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Anointed with the holye crisme; 'Sir T. More, Works, p. 377c. It occurs also in Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1. 2456. Hence chrisome-child, a child wearing a chrisome-cloth, or cloth with which a child, after baptism and holy unction, was covered. [The o is merely inserted for facility of pronunciation.] The spelling crisme or chrisme is due to a knowledge of the Greek source. It was formerly also spelt creim or creym, as in William of Shoreham's Poems, De Baptismo, I. 144 (in Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat). - O.F. cresme, chresme, explained by Cotgrave as ' the crisome, or oyle wherewith a baptised child is anointed.'-Low Lat. chrisma, sacred oil.-Gk. xpioµa, an unguent. -Gk. xpiw. I graze, rub, besmear, anoint. + Skt. ghrish, to grind, rub, scratch ; ghri, to sprinkle ; ghrita, clarified butter. B. Another allied word is the Lat. friare, to crumble, with its extension fricare, to rub. See Friable, Friction. The form of the root is GHAR, to rub, rather than ghars, as given by Fick, i. 82. See Cur-tius, i. 251. Der. chrism-al; chrisome-cloth, chrisome-child. CHRIST, the anointed one. (Gk.) Gk. Χριστός, anointed. - Gk. χρώ, Γιαμό, anoint. See further under Christin. Hence A. S. erist, Christ; A. S. cristen, a Christian (Boethius, cap. i), afterwards altered to Christian to agree with Lat. Christianus ; also A.S. cristnian, to christen, where the suffix -ian is active, so that the word is equivalent to cristen-ian, i. e. to make a Christian; also A.S. cristen-dom, cristen-ian, i. e. to make a Christian; also A.S. cristen-dom, cristenan-dom, Christendom, Christianity, the Christian world; Boe-thius, cap. i. These words were introduced in very early times, and were always spelt without any k after the c. The k is now inserted, to agree with the Greek. Der. Christian (formerly eristen, as explained above); Christen-dom (i. e. Christian-dom, as shewn); Christian-like, Christian-ly, Christian-ity, Christian-ise; also christen (A.S. cristnian, explained above); also Christ-mas, for which see below.

CHRISTMAS, the birth-day of Christ. (Hybrid; Gk. and L.) M. E. cristesmesse, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 213; cristenmas, Gawain, 1. 985; cristemasse, Chaucer, C. T. Group B, l. 126. From A.S. crist, i. e. Christ ; and M. E. messe (A. S. mæsse), a mass, festival. See Der. Christmas-box. [+] MASS.

CHROMATIC, lit. relating to colours. (Gk.) Holland has the expression 'never yet to this day did the tragedy use chromatick Der. chuck-le, in the sense of 'cluck;' also in the sense 'f music nor rhyme;' Plutarch, p. 1022. And Dryden speaks of 'the both of which senses appear in Dryden, as cited by Todd.

called cafellaticum and capellatio. We also find Low Lat. capellus, "third part of painting, which is chromatique or colouring;" Pref. to Parallel bet. Poetry and Painting. - Gk. xpouparinos, suited for colour. and the other set of  $\chi_{\rho}$  and  $\chi_{\rho}$ name. The word is a modern scientific one, coined from Gk,  $\chi \rho \hat{\omega} \mu a$ , See above. Der. chrom-ic. colour.

CHRONICLE, a record of the times. (F.,-Gk.) M. E. cronicle (always without h after c); Trevisa, ii. 77; Prompt. Parv. p. 104. The pp. cronyculd, i.e. chronicled, occurs in Sir Eglamour, 1339. The sb. cronicler also occurs, Prompt. Parv. B. Formed as a dimin., by help of the suffix - I or -le, from M. E. cronique or cronike, a word frequently used by Gower in his C. A. pp. 7, 31, &c. - O. F. cronique, pl. croniques, ' chronicles, annals; ' Cotgrave. - Low Lat. chronica, a catalogue, description (Ducange); a sing. sb., formed (mistakenly) from the Gk. plural. - Gk. xpovina, sb. pl. annals. - Gk. xpovinos, relating to time (mod. E. chronic).-Gk. xporos, time; of uncertain origin. Der. chronicl-er; from the same source, chron-ic, chron-ic-al; also chrono-logy, chrono-meter, for which see below. CHRONOLOGY, the science of dates. (Gk.)

Raleigh speaks of 'a chronological table;' Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 22. s. 11. Either from F. chronologie (Cotgrave), or directly from the Gk. χρονολογία, chronology. - Gk. χρονο-, stem of χρόνοs, time; and λόγιοs, learned, which from λόγοs, discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. Der. chronolog-ic, chronolog-ic-al, chronolog-ic-al-ly, chronolog-er, chronolog-ist.

CHRONOMETER, an instrument for measuring time. (Gk.) 'Chronometrum or Chronoscopium perpendiculum, a pendulum to mea-sure time with;' Kersey's Dict. 2nd ed. 1715.-Gk. Xpore, stem of yporos, time ; and µérpor, a measure.

CHRYSALIS, a form taken by some insects. (Gk.) Given in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. - Gk. Xpusallis, the gold-coloured sheath of butter-files, a chrysalis; called in Lat. aurelia (from aurum, gold). -Gk. Xpur-os, gold, cognate with E. gold, q. v.; see Curtius, i. 251. The pl. is properly chrysalides. [7] CHRYSOLITE, a stone of a yellow colour. (L., -Gk.) M.E.

erysolyt, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1009; with ref. to Rev. xxi. 20. -Lat. chrysolithus (Vulgate).-Gk. χρυσόλιθοs, Rev. xxi. 20; lit. 'a CHUB, a small but fat fish. (Scand.) 'A chubbe, bruscum;' Levias, Manip. Vocab. col. 181, 1. 29. [Sometimes said to be named from its large head, but it is rather its body which is thick and fat. Besides, the resemblance to A.S. cop, which signifies 'top, summit' rather than 'head,' is but slight.]  $\beta$ . Not to be separated from the adj. chubby, i. e. fat; nor (perhaps) from the M. E. chuffy, fat and fleshy; see Prompt. Parv. p. 77, note 1. Marston even speaks of a chub-faced fop; Antonio's Revenge, A. iii. sc. 2. 9. The word is Scandinavian; cf. Dan. kobbe, a seal (i. e. the animal), prov. Swed. kubb-sæl, a spotted seal (Rietz), similarly named from its fatness. So also prov. Swed. hubbug, chubby, fat, plump (Rietz); from prov. Swed. (and Swed.) hubb, a block, log of a tree; with which cf. Icel. tre-kumbr, tré-kubbr, a log of a tree, a chump. These words are clearly derived from prov. Swed. kabba, kubba, to lop, words probably allied to E. chop. q. v. See Chump. ¶ The word chub does not appear to have been in early use; we commonly find the fish described as 'the chevin,' which is a French term. Cotgrave gives 'Cheviniau, a chevin, a word apparently derived from chef, the head, and properly applied rather to the 'bull-head' or 'miller's-thumb,' by which names Florio explains the Ital. capitone, derived from Lat. capito, large-headed, from Lat. caput, the head. Der. chubb-y (see explanation above); chubb-i-ness.

CHUCK (1), to strike gently; to toss. (F., -O. Low Ger.) We use the phrase 'to chuck under the chin.' Sherwood, in his Index to Cotgrave, writes 'a chocke under the chinne.' Chuck, to toss, was also formerly chock, as shewn by a quotation from Turberville's Master Win Drowned (R., s. v. Chock). - F. choquer, 'to give a shock;' Cotgrave. - Du. schokken, to jolt, shake; schok, a shock, bounce, jolt; allied to E. shake. Thus chuck is a doublet of shock, q. v. shuck-farthing, i. e. toss-farthing; Sterne, Tristr. Shandy, c. 10. Der.

CHUCK (2), to cluck as a hen. (E.) A variant of cluck. (Alaucer has chuk for the sound made by a cock, when he had found a grain of corn; C. T. 15180. The word is clearly imitative, like Cluck. Der. chuck-le, in the sense of 'cluck;' also in the sense 'to fondle; variant of chicken, q. v.

CHUCKLE, to laugh in the throat. (E.) Chuckle, to laugh by fits;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. The suffix -le gives it a frequentative force. The sense refers to suppressed laughter. Prob. related to choke more immediately than to chuck. See Choke, Chuck (2).

CHUMP, a log of wood. (Scand.) 'Chump, a thick and short log, or block of wood;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. – Icel. kumbr, as seen in tré-kumbr, a tree-chump, a log. - Icel. kumbr, equivalent to kubbr, a chopping. - Icel. kubba, to chop; closely related to E. chop. See Chop, Chub. Der. chump-end, i. e. thick end.

CHURCH, the Lord's house. (Gk.) In very early use. M. E. chirche, chireche, cherche; also (in Northern dialects), kirk, kirke. <sup>6</sup> Chireche is holi godes hus, . . . and is cleped on boc kiriaka i. domi-nicalis; ' the church is God's holy house, and is called in the book kiriaka, i.e. dominical; O. Eng. Hom. ii. 23. A.S. cyrice, cirice, circe; the pl. ciricean occurs in Gregory's Liber Pastoralis, tr. by Ælfred; ed. Sweet, p. 5. See Trench, Study of Words. + O. Sax. kerika, kirika. + Du. kerk. + Dan. kirke. + Swed. kyrka. + Icel. kirkja. + O. H. G. chirichá, M. H. G. kirche, G. kirche. β. But all these are borrowed from Gk. πυριακόν, a church ; neut. of adj. πυριακόs, belonging to the Lord; from Gk. rupor, the Lord. Kupios orig. signified 'mighty; from Gk. suppos, might, strength. Cf. Skt. supros orig. signified 'mighty;' from Gk. suppos, might, strength. Cf. Skt. sura, a hero; sui, to swell, grow; Zend sura, strong. -  $\checkmark$  KU, to grow, be strong; Curtius, i. 104; Fick, i. 58. ¶ The etym. has been doubted, on account of the runners of the Ch. the rareness of the Gk. word suprasiv; but it occurs in the canon of the sixth council, and Zonaras in commenting on the passage says that the name of nuplanóv for 'church' was frequently used. See Wedgwood, who quotes from a letter of Max Müller in the Times newspaper. Observe too the remarkable quotation at the beginning of this article; and the form of (early) A.S. cirice. Der. church-man; church-warden (see warden); church-yard (see yard).

CHURL, a countryman, clown. (E.) M.E. cherl, cheorl; spelt cherl, Ormulum, 14786. - A. S. ceorl, a churl; also 'husband,' as in John, iv. 18. + Du. karel, a clown, fellow. + Dan. and Swed. karl, a man. + Icel. karl, a male, man (whence Scot. carle, a fellow). + O. H. G. charal, G. karl, a man, a male (whence Charles). Fick (iii. 43) gives the theoretical Teutonic form as karla, from the & KAR, to turn, go about (A. S. cerran). Der. churl-ish, churl-ish-ly. CHURN, to curdle, make butter. (Scand.) M. E. chirne, chyrne. 'Chyrne, vesselle, cimbia, cumbia. Chyrne botyr, cumo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 76. [The alleged A.S. cernan is probably one of Somner's scarcely pardonable fictions.] - Icel. kirna, a chum; kjarna-mjolk, chum-milk; Dict. p. 775. + Swed. kärna, a chum; kärna, to chum; O. Swed. kerna, both sb. and verb. + Dan. kierne, to churn, a churn. + Du. kernen, to churn; kernemelk, churn-milk. + G. kernen, to curdle, to churn. B. The orig. sense is 'to curdle,' to form into curds, or to extract the essence. The root-words to those above given are Icel. kjarna, a kernel, the pith, marrow, best part of a thing; Swed. kärna, the same; Dan. kierne, kiærne, pith, core; Du. kern, grain, kernel, pith, marrow; G. kern, kernel, pith, granule, marrow, quintessence. And all these words are closely related to E. corn, with all its Teutonic cognates, and to E. kernel; see Corn, Kernel. The root of these latter is ~ GAR, to grind, pulverise; see Fick, i. 71; Curtius, i. 216; and Benfey, p. 337, on the Skt. jri, to grow old, causal jaraya, to consume. From the same root, and from the same notion of 'grinding,' comes the remarkably similar M. E. quern, a handmill (Chaucer, C. T. 14080), with its numerous Teutonic cognates, including the Goth. kwairnus, a mill-stone, Mark, ix. 42. CHYLE, juice, milky fluid. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) A white fluid, due to a mixture of food with intestinal juices; a medical term. In Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave we have : 'the Chylus, chyle, chile ;' so that it was at first called by the Latin name, which was afterwards shortened to the F. form chyle (given by Cotgrave), for convenience. Both F. chyle and Lat. chylus are from the Gk. xulds, juice, moisture.-Gk. χύω, also χίω, I pour.- GHU, to pour; whence also E. gush, q. v. Dor. chyl-ous, chyl-ac-e-ous.

CHYME, juice, liquid pulp. (L., - Gk.) 'Chymus, any kind of juice, esp. that of meat after the second digestion ;' Kersey's Dict., and ed. 1715. Afterwards shortened to chyme, for convenience ; chymus being the Lat. form. – Gk.  $\chi \nu \mu \delta s$ , juice, liquid, chyme. – Gk.  $\chi \nu \omega s$ , also  $\chi \delta \omega$ , I pour. See further under Chyle. Der. chym-ous, CHYMIST, CHYMISTRY; see Chemist.

CICATRICE, the scar of a wound. (F., -L.) In Shak. Haml. iv. 3. 62. - F. cicatrice, 'a cicatrice, a skarre;' Cot. - Lat. cicatricem, acc. of cicatrix, a scar.  $\beta$ . Supposed to be formed from a lost verb cicare, to form a skin over, which from a lost sb. cicus, a skin, film, cognate with Skt. kach-a, hair, lit. 'that which binds up,' from Skt. kach (root kak), to bind. The Lat. cingere and E. hedge appear to be from the same root ; see Cincture. Der. cicatrise, verb.

CHUCK (3), a chicken; Shak. L. L. L. v. 1, 117, &c. Merely a CICERONE, a guide who explains. (Ital., -L.) Used by Shen-rariant of chicken, q. v. Ciceronem, acc. of Cicero, the celebrated orator. Der. From the same name, Ciceron-ian.

CIDER, a drink made from apples. (F.,-L.,-Gk.,-Heb.) There is no reason why it should be restricted to apples, as it merely means 'strong drink.' M. E. sicer, cyder, syder. In Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 3245, some MSS. have ciser, others siser, sythir, cyder; the allusion is to Judges, xiii. 7: 'cave ne uinum bibas, nec siceram.' Sicer is the Lat. form, and cider the F. form. - F. cidre, cider. - Lat. sicera, strong drink. – Gk. oixepa, strong drink. – Heb. shekkir, strong drink. – Heb. skakar, to be intoxicated. Cf. Arab. sukr, sakr, drunkenness; Rich. Dict. p. 838. [†] CIELING, CIEL; see Ceil.

CIGAR, a small roll of tobacco. (Span.) 'Give me a cigar !' Byron, The Island, c. ii. st. 10. Spelt segar in Twiss's Travels through Spain, A.D. 1733 (Todd).-Span. cigarro, a cigar; orig. a kind of tobacco grown in Cuba (Webster). [†] CIMETER; see Soimetar.

CINCHONA, Peruvian bark. (Peruvian.) The usual story is that it was named after the countess of Chinchon, wife of the governor of Peru, cured by it A.D. 1638. Her name perhaps rather modified than originated the word. See Humboldt, Aspects of Nature, tr. by Mrs. Sabine, 1849, pp. 268, 305. Humboldt calls it 'qwina-bark.' If the statement in the Engl. Cycl. Nat. Hist. s. v. Ginchona, be correct, 'the native Peruvians called the trees kina or kinken.' The form kina easily produces quinine, and kinken would give both quinquina and (by modification) einchona. Cf. F. quinquina, which Brachet derives from the Peruvian kinakina, a reduplicated form, answering to kinken above. [*] CINCTURE, a girdle, belt. (L.) In Milton, P.L. ix. 1117. Not in Shakespeare, though sometimes inserted wrongly in K. John, iv. 3. 155.] - Lat. cinctura, a girdle. - Lat. cingere, pp. cinctus, to gird. - & KAK, to bind; whence also E. hedge, q. v.; Fick, i. 515. Cf. Skt. kánchí, a girdle, from kach, to bind.

CINDER, the refuse of a burnt coal. (E.) M. E. sinder, sindyr. cyndir, cyndyr. 'Syndyr of smythys colys, casma;' Prompt. Parv. p. 456; 'Condyr of the smythys fyre, casuma; 'id. p. 78. – A. S. sinder, scoria, dross of iron; cf. 'Scorium, synder;' Wright's Vocab. i. 86, col. I. [Om signifies 'rust;' so that sinder-om is lit. 'rust of dross.'] + Icel. sindr, slag or dross from a forge. + Dan. sinder, sinner, a spark of ignited iron; also, a cinder. + Swed. sinder, slag, dross. + Du. sintels, cinders, coke. + G. sinter, dross of iron, scale. [The Icel. verb. sindra, to glow or throw out sparks, is a derivative from sindr, not vice versa; and therefore does not help forward the etysince , not vice versa; and interfore does not help forward the ery-mology.]  $\beta$ . The true sense is 'that which flows; 'hence 'the dross or slag of a forge; ' and hence ' cinder ' in the modern sense. The parallel Skt. word is sindku, that which flows, hence 'a river,' also 'the juice from an elephant's temples; ' and, in particular, the famous river Sind, now better known as the Indus; from the Skt. syand, to flow. See Fick, iii. 322; Benfey, p. 1045. ¶ The spelling einder has superseded sinder, through confusion with the F. cendre (with excrescent d), which is a wholly unconnected word, from the Lat. acc. cinerem, accus. of cinis, a cinder. The F. cendre would have given us cender, just as F. genre has given us gender. See below. The correct spelling sinder is not likely to be restored. Der. cinder-y. [†] CINERARY, relating to the ashes of the dead. (L.) Not in Johnson. Modern; seldom used except in the expression 'cinerary urn,' i. e. an urn for enclosing the ashes of the dead. [The word is wholly unconnected with cinder (see above), and never used with reference to common cinders.]-Lat. cinerarius, relating to the ashes of the dead. - Lat. cinis (stem ciner-), dust or ashes of the dead. + Gk.

KÓVIS, dust. + Skt. kona, a grain, powder, a drop, a small fragment. CINNABAR, CINOPER, red sulphuret of mercury. (Gk., -Pers.) Spelt cynoper ; Wyclif, Jerem. xxii. 24. 'Cinnaber or Cinoper (cinnabaris), vermillion, or red lead, is either natural or artificial; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Late Lat. cinnabaris, the Latinised name. -Gk. κιννάβαρι, cinnabar, vermilion; a dye called 'dragon's blood ' (Liddell and Scott). Of oriental origin. Cf. Pers. zinjarf, zingifrah, zinjafr, red lead, vermilion, cinnabar; Richardson's Dict. p. 784. [+] CINNAMON, the name of a spice. (Heb.) In the Bible, Exod. xxx. 23, where the Vulgate has cinnamomum. Also in Rev. xviii. 13, where the Gk. has niváµwµov. Both are from the Heb. ginnámón, cinnamon; a word probably connected with Heb. ganek, a reed, wheat-stalk (Gen. xli, s, 22); cf. ganeh haltob, A. V. 'sweet cane,' in Jer. vi. 20. (Concise Dict. of the Bible, ed. Smith, s. v. Reed.) ¶ In M. E., cinnamon was called canel, from the O. F. canelle, which Cotgrave explains by 'our modern cannell or cannamon,' though he explains F. cinnamome by 'cinnamon,' so that 'cannamon' is probably a misprint. This canelle is a dimin. of O. F. cane, cane. See Cane. [+] CINQUE, the number five. (F.,-L.) Formerly used in diceplay. See cinq in Chaucer, C. T., Group C, l. 653. – F. cinq. – Lat. quinque, five; cognate with E. five, q. v. Der. cinque-foil (see foil); cinque-face, Much Ado, ii. 1. 77; see Nares.

CIPHER, the figure o in arithmetic. (F., - Arab.) M. E. siphre, Richard the Redeles, ed. Skeat, iv. 53. - O. F. eifre (mod. F. chiffre, which see in Brachet). - Low Lat. cifra, denoting 'nothing.' - Arab. side, a cipher; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 402 (the initial letter being side). Cipher is a doublet of zero, q. v. Der. cipher, verb. CIRCLE, a ring, in various senses. (L.) In very early use. 'Feower circulas;' i. e. four circles, A. S. Chron. A. D. 1104; where circulas is the pl. of A. S. circul. [The spelling circle is due to the influence of F. cercle.] - Lat. circulus, a circle, small ring, dimin. of circus, a circle, a ring; cognate with E. ring, q. v. + Gk. spinos, sipros, a ring. + A. S. hring, a ring, circle. –  $\checkmark$  KAR, to move (esp. used of circular motion); see Car, Carol. Der. circle, verb; circlet, circul-ar, circul-ar-ly, circul-ar-i-ty, circul-ate, circul-at-ion, circul-at-or, circul-at-or-y; and see circuit, circum-, circus.

CIRCUIT, a revolving, revolution, orbit. (F.,-L.) Spelt cireuite, Golden Boke, c. 36 (R.); eyreuie, Froissart's Chron. vol. ii. c. 52 (R.)-F. circuit, 'a circuit, compasse, going about;' Cot.-Lat. circuitus, a going about. - Lat. circuitus, circumitus, pp. of circuire, circumire, to go round, go about. - Lat. circum, around (see Circum.); and ire, to go. -  $\checkmark$  1, to go; cf. Skt. i, to go. Der. circuit-ous, CIRCUM-, prefix, around, round about. (L.) Found in M. E. circuit-ous-ly.

circum-stance, Ancren Riwle, p. 316; and in other words. - Lat. circum, around, about. Orig. the accus. of circus, a circle. See Circus, Circle. For compounds, see below.

CIRCUMAMBIENT, going round about. (L.) Used by Bacon, On Learning, ed. G. Wats, b. iii. s. 4 (R.); Sir T. Browne has circumambiency, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. – Lat. circum, around; and ambientem, acc. of ambiens, surrounding. See Ambient.

CIRCUMAMBULATE, to walk round. (L.) Used in Wood's Athen. Oxon. (R.) - Lat. circum, around; (L.) "Used in wood's ambulare, to walk. See Ambulation. CIRCUMCISE, to cut around. (L.) "Circumcited he was;" Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1200. The M. E. also used the form circumcide, Wyclif, Gen. xvii. 11; Josh. v. 2. The latter is, strictly, the more correct form. - Lat. circumcidere, to cut around; pp. circumci us. - Lat. circum, around ; and cædere (pt. t. ce-cid-i), to cut. - ✓ SKID, to cut. See Cessura. Der. circumcis-ion. CIRCUMFERENCE, the boundary of a circle. (L.) Elyot has circum pec ion, The Governour, b. i. c. 24 (numbered 23). - Lat. circum pectus, prudent; orig. the pp. of circum picere, to look around. - Lat. circum, around; and spicere, also spelt specere, to look, cognate with E. spy.

See Spy. Der. circumspect-ly, -ness, -ion. CIRCUMSTANCE, detail, event. (L.) In early use. M. E. circumstaunce, Ancren Riwle, p. 316 .- Lat. circumstantia, lit. 'a standing around,' a surrounding; also, a circumstance, attribute, quality. (But the Lat. word has been treated so as to have a F. suffix, by turning -tia into -ce; the F. form is circonstance.) - Lat. circumstant-, stem of circumstans, pres. pt. of circumstare, to stand round, surround. - Lat. circum, around; and stare, to stand, cognate with E. stand. See Stand. Der. circumstant-i-al, -i-al-ly, -i-ate.

CIRCUMVALLATION, a continuous rampart. (L.) 'The lines of circumvallation ;' Tatler, no. 175. Formed from a Lat. acc. circumuallationem, from a supposed sb. circumuallatio, regularly formed from the verb circumvallare (pp. -vallatus), to surround with a rampart. - Lat. circum, around; and wallare, to make a rampart. - Lat. wallum, a rampart; whence also E. wall. See Wall.

CIRCUMVENT, to delude, deceive. (L.) 'I was thereby cir-cumuented; 'Barnes' Works, p. 222; col. 2. Formed, like verbs in -ate, from the pp. of the Lat. verb. - Lat. circumuentus, pp. of circumuenire, to come round, surround, encompass, deceive, delude. Lat. circum, around; and uenire, to come, cognate with E. come, q. v. Der. circumvent-ion, -ive.

CIRCUS, a circular theatre. (L.) 'Circus, a circle, or rundle, a ring; also a sort of large building, rais'd by the ancient Romans, for shews, games, &c. Also a kind of hawk, or bird of prey called a cryer; the falcon-gentle;' Kersey's Dict. 2nd ed. 1715. - Lat. circus, a place for games, lit. a ring, circle. + Gk. mpixos, minores, a ring. + A. S. hring, a ring. See Ring, Circle. Der. circ-le, q. v. CIRRUS, a tuft of hair; fleecy cloud; tendril. (L.) In Kersey's Dict. and ed. 1715; explained as 'a tuft or lock of hair curled;' he also explains cirri as having the sense of tendrils, but without using the term 'tendril.' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, has the adj. cirrows, 'belonging to curled hair.' - Lat. cirrus, curled hair. From the same root as Circle, q. v.

CIST, a chest, a sort of tomb. (L.,-Gk.) Sometimes used in modern works on antiquities, to describe a kind of stone tomb. The true E. word is chest, which is a doublet of cist. - Lat. cista, a chest.

-Gk. κίστη, a chest. See Chest; and see below. CISTERN, a reservoir for water. (F.,-L.) M. E. cisterne; Maundeville's Trav. pp. 47, 106; Wyclif, Gen. xxxvii. 23, Deut. vi. M. E. cisterne; 11.-O. F. cisterne.-Lat. cisterna, a reservoir for water; apparently extended from Lat. cista, a chest, box; see above.

CIT, short for 'citizen,' q. v. Used by Dryden, Prologue to Albion and Albanius, l. 43.

CITADEL, a fortress in a city. (F., - Ital., -L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 773; Shak. Oth. ii, 1. 94, 211, 292. - F. citadelle, 'a citadell, strong fort;' Cotgrave. - Ital. cittadella, a small town; dimin. of cittade, another form of cittate (mod. Ital. citta), a city. - Lat. civilatem, acc. of civitas, a city. - Lat. civi-, crude form of civis, a citizen. See City.

CITE, to summon, to quote. (F.,-L.) The sb. citation (M. E. citacion) is in early use, and occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 473. The pp. cited is in Sir T More, Works, p. 254 f. - F. citer, 'to cite, summon, . . . to alledge as a text;' Cotgrave. - Lat. citare, pp. citatus, to cause to move, excite, summon; frequentative of ciere, cière, to rouse, excite, call.+Gk. sia, I go; sirupa, I hasten.+Skt. ci, to sharpen. -  $\sqrt{KI}$ , to sharpen, excite, rouse, go. Der. cital-ion. CITHERN, CITTERN, a sort of guitar. (L.,-Gk.) Spelt cithern, 1 Macc. iv. 54 (A. V.); cittern, Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 614. The same as gyterne, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 23,3. The n is merely excressent, and the time form in cither I is in ord fourd in A. S. in the form and the true form is cither. It is even found in A.S. in the form cytere, as a gloss to Lat. cithara in Ps. lvi. 11; Spelman's A. S. Psalter. - Lat. ci:hara. - Gk. moapa, a kind of lyre or lute. Doublet, guitar,

q. v. CITIZEN, an inhabitant of a city. (F., -L.) M. E. citerein, citizein, citesain. 'A Roman citeseyn; 'Wyclif, Acts, xxii, 28; citezein, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 422. The pl. citizenis occurs in Chaucer, tr. of Boe-CIRCUMSCRIBE, to draw a line round. (L.) Sir T. More thius, ed. Morris, bk. i. pr. 4, p. 14. The z (sometimes tuined into s) .

is a corrupt rendering of the M. E. symbol 3, which properly means y, when occurring before a vowel; the same mistake occurs in the Scotch names Menzies, Dalziel, miswritten for Menyies, Dalyiel, as proved by the frequent pronunciation of them according to the old spelling. Hence ci izen stands for M. E. citizen = citiyen. = O. F. citeain (cf. mod. F. citoyen), formed from sb. cite, a city, by help of the suffix -ain = Lat. -anus. = O. F. cite, F. cité, a city. See City. CITRON, the name of a fruit. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Milton, P. L.

v. 22. [Cf. M. E. citir, citur, Prompt. Parv. p. 78, directly from the Lat.] - F. citron, 'a citron, pome-citron ;' Cot. - Low Lat. citronem, acc. of citro, a citron ; an augmentative form. - Lat. citrus, an orangetree, citron-tree. - Gk. xirpor, a citron; xirpior, xirpia, xirpia, a citrontree. Der. citr-ine, Chaucer, C T. 2169; citr-in-al-ion, id., C. T.

12743. CITY, a state, town, community. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. cite, Ancren Riwle, p. 228. - O. F. cite, F. cité, a city. - Lat. citatem, an abbreviated form of Lat. ciuitatem, acc. of ciuitas, a community (Brachet.) - Lat. ciui-s, a citizen. B. Closely related to Lat. gries, (Brachet.) = Lat. rules, a chizen. b. Closely related to Lat.  $q_{1es}$ , rest; the radical meaning is an inhabitant of a 'hive' or resting-place; cf. Gk.  $\kappa \omega \mu \eta$ , a village, Goth. haims, a home, heiwa, a hive, house; see Curtius, i. 178. Thus the related words in English are kive, home, and quiet.  $-\sqrt{KI}$ , to lie, to rest; whence Skt. ci, to lie, Gk.  $\kappa \epsilon i \mu a_i$ , I lie, rest. Der. citizen, q. v., citadel, q. v.; and see civic, civil.

CIVES, a sort of garlic or leek. (F., -L.) 'Chives, or Cives, a small sort of onion;' also 'Cives, a sort of wild leeks, whose leaves are us'd for sallet-furniture;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. The pl. of cive. - F. cive, 'a scallion, or unset leek;' Cotgrave. - Lat. caepa, cepe, an onion. Probably allied to Lat. caput, a head, from its bulbous form; cf. Gk. wawa, onions; G. kopflauch, lit. head-leek; see Curtius, i. 182.

CIVET, a perfume obtained from the civet-cat. (F., - Arab.) In Shak. Much Ado, iii. 2. 50; As You Like It, iii. 2. 66, 69.-F. civette, 'civet, also the beast that breeds it, a civet-cat: 'Cot. Brachet says: 'a word of Eastern origin, Arab. zebed; the word came into French through the medieval Gk. (arérue).' The Arabic word is better spelt zabad, as in Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 317; or zubád, as in Rich. Dict. p. 767. (The initial letter is zain.)

CIVIC, belonging to a citizen. (L.) 'A civick chaplet;' Hol-land's Pliny, b. xvi. c. 4. - Lat. civicus, belonging to a citizen. - Lat. civis, a citizen. See City.

CIVIL, relating to a community. (L.) 'Civile warre;' Udal, Matt. c. 10; civily'ye is in Sir T. More's Works, p. 951 h. - Lat. civilis, belonging to citizens. - Lat. eiwis, a citizen. Der. eivil-ly, eivil-i-ty; civil-ise, Dryden, Stanzas on Oliver Cromwell, st. 17; civil-is-at-ion, clukten. And see City. [†] CLACK, to make a sudden, sharp noise. (E.) M. E. clacken, clakken. 'Thi bile [bill of an owl] is stif and scharp and hoked... Tharmid [therewith] thu elackes oft and longe;' Owl and Nightingale, 11. 79-81. Of A.S. origin, though only represented by the derivative elarrung, a clattering; see Clatter. + Du. klak, a crack; klakken, to clack, to crack (cf. Du. klakkebos, a cracker, a popgun).+ Icel. klaka, to twitter as a swallow, to chatter as a pie, to wrangle.+ M. H. G. klac, a crack, break, noise; G. krachen, to crash, crack, The first and Gael. clag, to make a din. +Gk.  $\#Ad\{ev, to make a din. See Clank. <math>\beta$ . Evidently a variant of Crack, q.v.; cf. also Swed. knaka, to crack, make a noise. [Fick however (iii. 45) makes klak to be an extension of the Teutonic root kal, to call, seen in E. call, q. v.] Note the analogies; as clink: clank :: click: clack; and again, as clack : crack : : «λάζειν : «ράζειν.

CLAIM, to call out for, demand. (F.,-L.) M. E. clamen, claimen, cleimen, to call for; Will. of Palerne, 4481; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 327.-O. F. clamer, claimer, cleimer, to call for, cry out.-Lat. clamare, to call out; a secondary verb, formed from the base cal- appearing in Lat. ealare, to cry out, publish, and in the Gk. καλείν, to convoke, summon. Similarly, in Greek, the vowel disappears in κλήσιs, a call, κλητείω, I summon. - V KAL, to make a noise, cry out (Fick, i. 529); which is weakened from & KAR, with the same sense ; cf. Gk. wipouf, a herald; Skt. kal, to sound. Der. claim-able, claim-ant; and, from the same source, clam-our, clam-or-ous, &cc.; see clamour.

CLAM, to adhere, as a viscous substance. (E.) Dryden has: 'A chilling sweat, a damp of jealousy Hangs on my brows, and clams upon my limbs; ' Amphitryon, Act iii (R.) [This word is not to be confused with clem, to pinch, starve, as in Richardson. See clam and clem distinguished in Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary; and see Clamp.] The verb is merely coined from the adj. clammy, sticky, which again is formed from the A.S. clam, clay (also a plaster), occurring in Exod. 14: cf. prov. Eng. cloam, earthenware, clomer, a potter. The A.S.

clamm-y, i.e. clay-like, sticky, as explained above; cf. Du. klam, clammy, moist ; clamm-i-ness

CLAMBER, to climb with hands and feet. (Scand.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 226. The b is excrescent, and the true form is clamer. (R.) Clamer a up occurs in Harrington's Orlando, b. xix. st. 20 (R.) Clamer occurs even earlier, in Palsgrave's Dict.; for quotation, see Clasp. M. E. clameren, clamberen; 'clameryn, repto;' Prompt. Parv. p. 79. The M. E. clameren also meant 'to heap closely to-gether;' see examples in Mätzner, e.g. Gawain and the Grane The form clamer'd up occurs in Harrington's Orlando, b. xix. st. 20 Knight, ll. 801, 1722. - Icel. klambra, to pinch closely together, to clamp. + Dan. klammer, to grasp, grip firmly. + G. klammern, to clamp, clasp, fasten together.  $\beta$ . Thus clamber stands for clamer. the frequentative of clam (now spelt clamp), and signifies literally 'to grasp often.' See Clamp. The connection with climb is also obvious. See Climb.

CLAMOUR, an outery, calling out. (F.,-L.) M. E. clamour, Chaucer, C. T. 6471.-O. F. clamur, clamor, claimor.-Lat. clamour, acc. of clamor, an outcry.-Lat. clamare, to cry out. See Claim. Der. clamor-ous, clamor-ous-ly, clamor-ous-ness.

CLAMP, to fasten tightly; a clasp. (Du.) 'And they were ioyned close both beneth, and also aboue, with clampes; ' Bible, ed. 1551, Exod. xxxvi. 29. 'Clamp, in joyners work, a particular manner of letting boards one into another;' Kersey. [Not in early use, though the A.S. clom, a bond, is, of course, almost the same word.] - Du. klamp, a clamp, cleat, heap; klampen, to clamp, grapple. + Dan. klampe, to clamp, to cleat; klamme, a clamp, a cramp, cramp-iron. + Swed. klamp, a cleat. + Icel. klömbr, a smith's vice, a clamp. + G. klampe, a clamp. B. All these forms, and others, are due to the root seen in the M.H.G. klimpfen, to press tightly together, cited by Fick, iii. 51, and are further related on the one hand, to E. elip, and on the other, to E. cramp; also to E. climb and clamber. Y. By the loss of p in our word clamp, we have a form clam, signifying 'a bond,' represented by A.S. clom, a bond, which occurs in the A.S. Chron. an. 042. Hence, by vowel-change, Swed. klämma, to squeeze, wring, Dan. klemme, to pinch, Du. and G. klemmen, to pinch, prov. Eng. clem, to pinch with hunger. See Cramp, and Clump.

CLAN, a tribe of families. (Gaelic.) Milton has clans, pl., P. L. ii. 901.-Gael. clann, offspring, children, descendants. + Irish cland, clann, children, descendants; a tribe, clan. Dor. clann-ish, -ly, -ness; clan-ship, clan:-man. [†] CLANDESTINE, concealed, secret, sly. (F.,-L.) Fuller speaks of a 'clandestine marriage;' Holy State, b. iii. c. 22, maxim 2. - F. clandestin, 'clandestine, close;' Cot. - Lat. clandestinus, secret. B. Perhaps for clam-dies-tinus, hidden from daylight ; in any case, the first syllable is due to clam, secretly; see Vanicek, p. 1093. Clam is short for O. Lat. callim, from AKAL, to hide; whence also Lat. celare, to hide, appearing in E. conceal, q. v. Der. clandestine-ly.

CLANG, to make a sharp, ringing sound. (L.) As sb., the sound of a trumpet; Shak. Tam. Shrew, i. 2. 207. We also find clangor, 3 Hen. VI, ii. 3. 18. The vb. clang occurs in 'the olanging horns;' Somervile, The Chase, bk. ii. - Lat. clangere, to make a loud sound, to resound; whence sb. clangor, a loud noise. + Gk. κλαγγή, a clang, to resound; whence sb. clanger, a loud noise. + Gk.  $\lambda a_{T}\gamma\eta$ , a clang, twang, scream, loud noise; where the nasal sound is unoriginal;  $\lambda d\xi(sv, to clash, clang, make a din. Cf. *pd\xi(sv (base *pa\gamma-), to$  $croak, scream; *pav<math>\gamma\eta$ , a shouting, clamour, din.  $-\sqrt{KARK}$ , weak-ened to KLAG, KRAG, to make a din; an imitative word. See Fick, i. 534. 538, 540. Der. clang-or; and see clank. CLANK, to make a ringing sound. (E.) 'He falls! his armour clanks against the ground;' Cowley, Davideis, b. iv (R.) 'What slanks were heard, in German skies afar;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Georg. bk i 6.18 (where the original has 'armonum cosing' 1. (a.). The bk. i. 638 (where the original has 'armorum sonitum,' 1. 474). The word is perhaps E., formed from clink by the substitution of the fuller  $\beta$ . The probability that it is English vowel a; cf. clack with click. is strengthened by the Du. form klank, a ringing sound. Cf. Swed. and Dan. klang, a ringing sound; and see Clang. The word is imitative; see Clink.

CLAP, to strike together rather noisily. (Scand.) Very common in Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 107, &c.; and frequently in Chaucer, C. T. 7163, 7166, &c. 'He ... elapte him on the crune' (crown of the head); Havelok, l. 1814. [The A.S. clappan is a fiction of Somner's.] - Icel. klappa, to pat, stroke, clap the hands. + Swed. klappa, to clap, knock, stroke, pat. + Dan. klappe, to clap, pat, throb. + Du. klappen, to clap, smack, prate, blab. + O. H. G. ehlafon, M. H. G. klaffen, to clap, strike together, prate, babble.  $\beta$ . Cf. Gael. clabar, a mill-clapper, clack; clabaire, a loud talker; also Russian chlopate, to clap, the interview of the interview. strike together noisily. An imitative word, allied on the one hand to clip, q.v., and on the other to clack, q.v. Der. clapper, clap-trap, clap-dish.

CLARET, a sort of French wine. (F., -L.) Properly a 'clear' or 'clarified' wine, but used rather vaguely. M. E. elaret, often ably stands for gelám; in any case, it is clearly a variant or or 'clarified' wine, but used rather vaguely. M. E. claret, often orm of A. S. lám, clay, mod. E. loam. See Loam. Der. shortened to clare, and corrupted to clarry. 'Claret, wyne, claretum;

Prompt. Parv. p. 79. Spelt clarett, Allit. Motte Arthur, ed. Brock, l. 200; clarè, Havelok, l. 1728; clarrè, Chaucer, C. T. 1472.-O. F. clairet, claret; see Cotgrave.-Low Lat. claretum, a sweet mixed wine, clarified with honey, &c.-Lat. clarus, clear, clarified, bright. See Clear.

CLARIFY, to make clear and bright. (F., -L.) M. E. clarifien, sometimes 'to glorify,' as in Wyclif, John, xii. 28, where the Vulgate has clarifica. - O. F. clarifier, to make bright. - Lat. clarificare, to make clear or bright, to render famous, glorify. - Lat. clarificare, to clarus, clear, bright, glorious; and ficare, to make, put for facere, to make, in forming compounds. See Clear and Fact. Der. clarifier, clarific-at-ion. See below. CLARION, a clear-sounding horn. (F., -L.) M. E. clarioun, clarown; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 150. - O. F. clarion, claron;

CLARION, a clear-sounding horn. (F., -L.) M. E. clarioun, claryoun; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 150. - O. F. clarion, claron; Roquefort gives the form claron, and the O. F. clarion must have been in use, though not recorded; the mod. F. is clairon. - Low Lat. clarionem, acc. of clario, a clarion; so named from its clear ringing sound. - Lat. clario- claroo, crude form of clarus, clear. See Clear. Der. clarion-et, clarin-ette, dimin. forms. See above.

CLASH, a loud noise; to make a loud noise. (E.) This seems to be an Eng. variant of clack; it was probably due rather to the usual softening of the ck (by the influence of Danish or Norman pronunciation) than to any borrowing from the Du. Matten, to splash, clash. Cf. crash with crack; hash with kack. 'He let the speare fall, ... and the heed of the speare made a great clashe on the bright chapewe [hat] of steel; 'Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 186. See Clack. The word is imitative; cf. Swed. and G. klatsch, a clash, similarly extended from the base klak.

CLASP, to grasp firmly, fasten together. (E.) M. E. claspen, clapsen (the ps and sp being convertible as in other words; cf. prov. E. waps, a wasp). Spelt clapsed, clapsud, clasped in Chaucer, C. T. prol. 275 (Six-text print). 'I clamer [clamber] or clymme up upon a tree ... that I may claspe bytwene my legges and myn armes;' Palsgrave, s. v. clamer. The form claf-s-en is an extension of clap or clup, to embrace, seen in A. S. clyppan, to embrace, grasp, M. E. cluppen, clippen, to embrace; and there is also an evident connection with clamp, to hold tightly. See Clip, Clamp; and observe the connection of grasp with grab, gribe, grobe. Der. clasp-er. clasp-knife.

claimy, to fold tightly. See Only, Champ; and observe the connection of grasp with grade, gripe, grope. Der. clasp-er, clasp-knife. CLASS, a rank or order, assembly. (F., -L.) Bp. Hall speaks of 'classes and synods;' Episcopacy by Divine Right, s. 6 (R.) Milton has classick, Poem on the New Forcers of Consciences, 1. 7. -F. classe, 'a rank, order;' Cot:-Lat. classem, acc. of classis, a class, assembly of people, an army, flect. - ✓ KAL, to cry out, convoke, seen in Lat. class-ic-al-ly, class-ic-al-ness, class-ic-di-i-ty, class-ic; also class-i-fy, class-i-fic-al-ion (for the ending -ify see Clarify).

also class-i-fy, class-i-fic-at-ion (for the ending -ify see Clarify). CLATTER, to make repeated sounds; a rattling noise. (E.) As sb.; M. E. clater, Towneley Mysteries, p. 190. As verb; M. E. clateren, Chaucer, C. T. 2360. A frequentative of clack, formed by adding the frequentative suffix -er, and substituting clat- for clat- for convenience of pronunciation; hence clat er-en stands for clak-er-en, i.e. to make a clacking sound frequently, or in other words, to rattle. Found in A. S. in the word clatrung, a clattering, a rattle, glossed by crepicarulum (Bosworth). + Du. klater, a rattle; klateren, to rattle. See Clack.

CLAUSE, a sentence, part of a writing. (F., -L.) In very early use. M.E. clause, Chaucer, Tr. and Cres. ii. 728; Ancren Riwle, p. 46. -F. clause, 'a clause, period;' Cotgrave. - Lat. clausa, fem. of pp. clausus, used in the phr. oratio clausa, a flowing speech, an eloquent period; hence clausa was used alone to mean 'a period, a clause.' Clausus is the pp. of claudere, to shut, enclose, close. See Close, and Clavicle below. Doublet, close, sb.

CLAVICLE, the collar-bone. (F., -L.) Sir T. Browne has 'clavicles or collar-bones;' Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 1. § 8.-F. clavicules, 'the kannel-bones, channel-bones, neck-bones, craw-bones, extending on each side from the bottom of the throat unto the top of the shoulder;' Cot.-Lat. clauicula, lit. a small key, a tendril of a vine; dimin. of Lat. clauis, a key, which is allied to Lat. claudere, to shut. + Gk.  $\kappa\lambda \epsilon is$ , a key;  $\kappa\lambda \epsilon i\omega$ , I shut. + Russian kliuch', a key. Cf. O. H. G. sliuzan, sliozan, M. H. G. sliezen (G. schliessen), to shut; connected with E. slot, q.v.  $- \checkmark$  SKLU, to shut; Curtius, i. 183. Der. clauicul-ar; and see clef, con-claue.

CILAW, the talon of a best or bird. (E.) M.E. claw, claw, clow, clee, clei. 'Claw, or cle of a beste, ungula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 80, 'Oxë gab o clofenn fot and shædepb [divides] hisë clauwes; 'Ormulum, 1224.-A.S. cláww, pl. cláwe, as in 'cláwe tódælede,' i.e. divided hoofs, Levit. xi. 3; also clá, cleo, Grein, i. 162, 163.+ Du. Maano, a paw, claw, clutch, talon, weeding-hook; Maanwen, to claw, scratch. + Icel. kló, a claw; klá, to scratch. + Dan. klo, a claw; klöw, to scratch. + Swed. klo, a claw; klá, to scratch. + O. H. G. chláwa, M. H. G. klá, G. Mawe, a claw, talon. B. Claw is related to clev, a ball though originally Scandinavian.

of thread, q. v., and to cleave in the sense of 'hold fast.' It means that by which an animal cleaves or holds on. See Cleave (2). [†] CLAY, a tenacious earth. (E.) M.E. clai, clei, clay, cley. 'What es man bot herth [earth] and clay;' Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 1, 411.-A.S. clag, in Ælfric's Closs.; Wright's Vocab. i. 37, col. 1. + Dan. klag, klag, clay.+Du. klai.+G. klei. B. Related to Clew, q. v.; also to Clog, and Cleave (2). Der. clay-ty.

CLAYMORE, a Scottish broadsword. (Gaelic.) Spelt glaymore by Dr. Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands (Todd); but better claymore, as in Jamieson's Sc. Dict. – Gael. claidheamh mor, a broad-sword, lit. 'sword-great;' where the dk is but slightly sounded, and the mk is a v. The sound somewhat resembles that of cli- in cli-ent, followed by the sound of E. keave.  $\beta$ . The Gael. claidheamh, a sword, is cognate with W. cleddyf, cleddeu, a sword, and Lat. gladius, a sword; see Glaive. The Gael. mor, great, is cognate with W. mawr, great, Irish mor, Corn. mawr, Breton meur, great, Lat. magnus; see Curtius, i. 409.

CLEAN, pure, free from stain. (E.) M. E. clend, cleand (dissyllabic), Layamon, i. 376. – A.S. cleane, clean, pure, chaste, bright; Grein, i. 162. [Not borrowed from Celtic, the change from A.S. e to Celtic g being quite regular.] + W. glain, glan, pure, clear, clean. + Irish and Gael. glan, clean, pure, bright. + O. H. G. chleini, M. H. G. kleine, fine, excellent, small; mod. G. klein, small. [The last comparison, cited by Grein, is somewhat doubtful.] B. The original sense seems to have been 'bright,' but there is little to prove it, unless the word be derived from a root GAL, to shine; Curtius, i. 212. Der: clean-ness, clean-ly, clean-li-ness, cleanse (A.S. cleansian, Grein, i. 163).

CLEAR, loud, distinct, shrill, pure.  $(F_n - L_n)$  M. E. eler, eler, 'On morwe, whan the day was elere; 'King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 1978; cf. Floriz and Blauncheflur, 280.–O. F. eler, eleir, elar, pure, bright.–Lat. elarus, bright, illustrious, clear, loud.  $\beta$ . Curtius remarks that the r belongs to the suffix, as in mi-rus, so that the word is ela-rus. It is probably related to elamare, to cry aloud; see Claim. Others connect it with cal-ëre, to glow, the orig. sense being 'bright.' Der. elear, verb; elear-ance, elear-lug, elear-ly, CLEAVE (1), strong verb, to split asunder. (E.) The pt.t. is CLEAVE (1), strong verb, to split asunder. (E.) The pt. t. is clave, Ps. lxxviii. 15 (A. V.), sometimes clove; the pp. is cloven, Acts, ii. 3, sometimes cleve, leven, leven. 'Ful wel kan ich kleven shides;' Havelok, l. 917. – A. S. cleófan (pt. t. cleáf, pp. clofen), Grein, i. 163. + Du. kloven. + Icel. kliúfa (pt. t. klauf, pp. klofinn). + Swed. klyfva. + Dan. klöve. + O. H. G. chlioban, G. klieben.  $\beta$ . Perhaps related to Gk.  $\gamma\lambda \dot{v}\phi ev$ , to hollow out, to engrave; Lat. glubere, to peel. The form of the European base is KLUB; Fick, iii. 52; which answers to an Aryan base GLUBH, as seen in Gk.  $\gamma\lambda \dot{v}\phi ev$ . Der. cleav-age, cleav-er; also cleit, q. v. [But not cliff.] CLEAVE (2), weak werb, to stick, adhere. (E.) The true pt. t.

CLEAVE (2), weak verb, to stick, adhere. (E.) The true pt. t. is cleaved, pp. cleaved; but by confusion with the word above, the pt. t. most in use is clave, Ruth, i. 14 (A. V.) Writers avoid using the pp., perhaps not knowing what it ought to be. However, we find pt. t. cleaved in Job, xxix. 10; and the pp. cleaved, Job, xxii. 7. M. E. cleavien, clivien, clevien, cliven. 'Al Egipte in his wil clived;' Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 2384. 'Cleouieô faste;' Layamon, i. 83. – A. S. cliftan, clevien, Grein, i. 163; a weak verb, pt. t. clifode, pp. clifod. + Du. kleven, to adhere, cling. + Swed. klibba sig, to stick to. + Dan. klabe, to stick, adhere. + O. H. G. chleben, G. kleben, to cleave to; cf. also O. H. G. kliban, M. H. G. klibba, to cling to, take root. Cf. also Icel. klifa, to climb, viz. by grasping tightly or holding to the tree. B. The European base is KLIB, Fick, iii. 52; whence the nasalised form klimb, to climb, which is closely connected with it; see Clip. [The loss of m perhaps accounts for the long i in Icel. klifa and O. H. G. kliban] ¶ Observe the complete separation between this word and the preceding one; all attempts to connect them are fanciful. But we may admit a connection between E. cleave and Gk.  $\gamma\lambda ia, \gamma\lambda oia, Lat. gluten, glus, glue. See Glue. [†]$ CLEF, a key, in music, (F., -L.) Formerly also spelt cliff.'Whom art had never taught cliffs, moods, or notes;' Ford, Lover'sMelancholy, A. i. sc. 1. - F. el.', 'a key, ... a cliffe in musick;'Cot. - Lat. clausis, a key. See Clauviele.

CLEFT, CLIFT, a fissure, a crack. (Scand.) Spelt elift, Exod. xxxiii. 22 (A. V.); some copies have elifts for elifts, Job, xxx. 6. 'Clyff, elyft, or ryfte, scissura, rima,' Prompt. Pav. p. 81; elifte in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. 4. pr. 4, 1. 3721. The form eliff is corrupt; the final t distinguishes the word from eliff, and shews the word to be Scandinavian. - Icel. Muft, a cleft. + Swed. Myft, a cave, den, hole. + Dan. Möft, a cleft, chink, crack, crevice.  $\beta$ . The Icel. Muft is related to Myfa (weak verb) and Mjúfa (strong verb), to cleave, split; cf. Swed. Myfwa, Dan. klöwe, to cleave. See Cleave (1). T he mod. spelling eleft is due to the feeling that the word is connected with cleave, so that the word is now thoroughly English in form, CLEMATIS, a kind of creeping plant. (Gk.) matis, a twig, a spray; a shoot, or young branch: among herbalists, it is more especially applied to several plants that are full of young twigs;' Kersey's Dict. and ed. 1715. - Late Lat. clematis, which is merely the Gk. word in Latin letters. - Gk. «ληματί», brushwood, a creeping plant; dimin. from κληματ-, stem of κλήμα, a shoot or twig. -Gk. «Asiv, to break off, to lop or prune a plant. - √ KAL, to strike, break; Fick, ii. 58. CLEMENT, mild, merciful. (F., -L.) Rare; in Cymb. v. 4. 18. -F. element, 'element, gentle, mild;' Cot. - Lat. elementem, acc. of clemens, mild. Origin uncertain; see Fick, i. 48. Dor. clement-ly, clemenc-y (clemencie, Gascoigne, The Recantation of a Lover, 1.9; from Lat. clementia, mildness).

CLERGY, the ministry, body of ministers. (F., -Gk.) M. E. clergie, frequently used in the sense of 'learning;' but also with the modern meaning, as: 'Of the clergie at London . . . a conseil he made<sub>i</sub>' Rob. of Glouc. p. 563. - O. F. clergie, formed as if from a I ow Lat. clericia, a form not given in Ducange; the mod. F. clerge answers to Low Lat. elericatus, clerkship. - Low Lat. elericus, a clerk, clergyman. - Gk. κληρικός, belonging to the clergy, clerical. - Gk. κλήρος, a lot, allotment, portion; in eccl. writers, the clergy, because 'the Lord is their inheritance,' Deut. xviii. 2; cf. Gk. των κλήρων, A. V. 'God's heritage,' in 1 Pet. v. 3. Der. clergy-man. [†] CLERK, a clergyman, a scholar. (F., -L., -Gk.) Orig. a clergyman; M. E. elere, clerk, Ancren Riwle, p. 318. A. S. elere, a priest, A. S. Chron. an. 963. Either from O. F. elere, or immediately from Lat. elericus, by contraction. - Gk. κληρικόε, belonging to the elergy, clerical, one of the clergy. See further under Clorgy. Der. clerkcheckal, one of the clergy. See the hader one of the clerk, the ship; and, from the Lat. cleric-us, we have cleric, clerk-al. CLEVER, skilful, dexterous. (F, -L, ? or E, ?) Not in early use. 'As cleverly as th'ablest trap;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. 1. 398 (first published A. D. 1663). It is not easy to find an earlier example. Sir T. Browne cites clever as a Norfolk word, in his Trate Will when a Will be a set of the set VIII (Works, ed. Wilkins, iv. 205); see my edition of Ray's Collec-tion of Eng. Dialectal Words, Eng. Dial. Soc. pp. xv, xvii. The Norfolk word is commonly pronounced 'klav-ur,' and is used in many various senses, such as 'handsome, good-looking, healthy, tall, dex-terous, adroit' (Nall); also, 'kind, liberal' (Wilkin). A. Some have supposed that clever is a corruption of the M. E. deliver, meaning 'agile, nimble, ready of action, free of motion,' and the supposition is strengthened by the historical fact that clever seems to have come into use just as deliver went out of use, and it just supplies its place. Deliver occurs in Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 84: 'And wonderly deliver [quick, active], and grete of strengthe.' So, too, in Chaucer's Pers. Tale, De Superbia, we have: 'Certes, the goodes of the body ben hele of body, strength, delivernesse [agility], beautee, gentrie, fraunchise.' And the word occurs as late as in Holinshed, Drayton, and Warner; see examples in Nares. β. This M. E. deliver is from O. F. delivre, free, prompt, diligent, alert; whence the adv. à delivre, promptly, answering to Low Lat. delibere, promptly, which shews that the adj. delivre stands for de liber, a word coined (as Burguy says) by prefixing the Lat. prep. de to the Lat. adj. liber, free. See Deliver. This solution of the word seems to me the best. See Leaves from a Word-hunter's Note-book, by A. S. Palmer, ch. x. B. Mr. Wedgwood ingeniously suggests a connection with M. E. cliver or clivre, a claw, Owl and Nightingale, 11. 78, 84, 209; in this case 'clever' would have meant originally 'ready to seize' or 'quick at seizing,' and the connection would be with the words claw, cleave (2), to adhere to, Scot. clever (to climb), climb, and M. E. clippen, to embrace. But historical proof of this fails; though we may notice that the word cliver once occurs (in the Bestiary, l. 220, pr. in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris) as an adj. with the apparent sense of 'ready to seize.' If this suggestion be right, the word is English. C. I would add, that it is by no means unlikely that the modern E. clever is an outcome of a confusion of M.E. deliver, nimble, with a provincial English cliver or clever, meaning ' ready to seize ' originally, but afterwards extended to other senses. ¶ Neither of these suggestions is quite satisfactory, yet either is possible. The suggestion (in Webster) that dever is from the A.S. gleáw, sagacious, is not possible. The latter word is obsolete, but its Icelandic congener glöggr has produced the Scottish gleg, quick of eye; whilst the A S. gleáw itself became the M.E. glew, Owl and Nightingale, 1. 193; a form far removed from clever. Der, clever-ness.

CLEW, CLUE, a ball of thread. (E.) The orig. sense is 'a mass' of thread; then a thread in a ball, then a guiding thread in a maze, or 'a clue to a mystery;' from the story of Theseus escaping from the Cretan Labyrinth by the help of a ball of thread. Thus Trevisa, ii. 385: ' 3if eny man wente thider yn withoute a cleue of threde, it were ful harde to fynde a way out.' Cf. ' a clue of threde ;'

'Clema or Cle- of the final n. We find 'glomus, clywen;' Ælfric's Gloss., ed. Somner, Nomina Vasorum. And the dat. cliwene occurs in Gregory's Pastoral, sect. xxxv; ed. Sweet, p. 240. + Du. kluwen, a clew; kluwenen, to wind on clews (cf. E. to clew up a sail). + O. H. G. chlinnon, chlinnor, c'liwe, M. H. G. kluwen, a ball, ball of thread.  $\beta$ . And, as E. cl B. And, as E. d is Lat. gl, the supposed connection of A. S. cliw-en with Lat. glo-mus, a clue, a ball of thread, and glo-bus, a ball, globe, is probably correct. y. We may also connect A.S. cliwen, a clew, with A.S. cliftan, to cleave together. See Cleave (2). Der. clew, verb (Dutch).

CLICK, to make a quick, light sound. (E.) Rather oddly used by Ben Jonson : "Hath more confirm'd us, than if heart'ning Jove Had, from his hundred statues, bid us strike, And, at the stroke, click'd all his marble thumbs; Sejanus, ii. 2. An imitative word, derived, as a diminutive, from clack, by the thinning of a to i. This is clearly shewn by the Du. klikklak, the clashing of swords, and klikklakken, to clash together, lit. 'to click-clack.' See Clack, and Clink.

CLIENT, one who depends on an adviser. (F., -L.) M.E. clien, Gower, C. A. i. 284; P. Plowman, C. iv. 396. - F. client, 'a client or suitor;' Cot. - Lat. clientem, acc. of cliens, a client, a dependent on a patron. Cliens stands for cluens, one who hears, i.e. one who listens to advice; pres. pt. of cluëre, to hear, listen. The Lat. cluere is cognate with Gk. advice; pres. pt. of cinere, to hear, listen. The Lat. cinere is cognate with Gk. adview, to hear, and Skt. gru, to hear,  $-\phi$  KRU, KLU, to hear; whence also E. loud. Curtius, i. 185. See Loud. Der. client-kip. CLIFF, a steep rock, headland. (E.) M. E. clif, clef, cleve. Spelt clif, Layamon, i. 82, where the later text has clef; spelt cleve, id. i.

81 (later text). - A.S. clif, a rock, headland; Grein. i. 164. + Du. klif, a brow, cliff. + Icel. klif, a cliff. We also find Du. klip, a crag, G. and Dan. klippe, Swed. klippa, a crag, rock. ¶ The usual reckless association of this word with the verb cleave, to split, rests on no authority, and is probably wrong. Comparison of the old forms shews that it is more like to be connected with the totally distinct verb cleave, to adhere to (A. S. clifian), with its related words clip, to 'a climbing-place,' or 'a steep.' Fick (iii 52) unhesitatingly associates the Teutonic base kliba, a cliff, with the Teutonic root klib, to climb. Cf. A. S. clif, cliff, with cliffan, to cleave to; Icel. klif with Icel. klifa, to climb; O. H. G. clep, a cliff, with O. H. G. kliban, to take root, chlimban, to climb. See Cleave (2).

CLIMACTER, a critical time of life. (F., -Gk.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 12. § 18. Now only used in the derivative adj. climacter-ic, often turned into a sb. 'This Is the most certain climacterical year;' Massinger, The Old Law, Act i. sc. 1. 'In my grand climacterick;' Burke, Reflections on the French Revolution. And see further in Richardson. - F. climactere, 'climatericall (sic); whence l'an climactere, the climatericall year; every 7th, or oth, or the 63 yeare of a man's life, all very dangerous, but the last most ;' Cotgrave. - Late Lat. climacter, borrowed from Gk. - Gk. κλιμακτήρ, a step of a staircase or ladder, a dangerous period of life. - Gk. κλîμαξ, a ladder, climax. See Climax. Der. climacter-ic.

CLIMATE, a region of the earth. (F., -Gk.) See Climate in Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. elimat; Chaucer's treatise on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, p. 48; Maundeville, p. 162; Gower, C. A. i. 8. -O. F. elimat (mod. F. elimat), a elimate. - Lat. elimatem, according to Brachet; but this is a false form, as the true accusative of clima was originally clima, the sb. being neuter. Still, such a form may easily have occurred in Low Latin; and at any rate, the form of the stem of Lat. clima is climat-, the gen. being climatis. - Gk. Klipa, gen. κλίματος, a slope, a zone or region of the earth, climate. - Gk. κλίver, to lean, slope ; cognate with E. lean. See Lean. Der. climatie, climat-ic-al, climat-ise. Doublet, clime. OLIMAX, the highest degree. (Gk.) Climax, a ladder, the step of a ladder, a stile; in Rhetorick, a figure that proceeds by degrees from one thing to another ;' Kersey's Dict. 2nd ed. 1715. - Lat. climax. - Gk. xlipat, a ladder, staircase; in rhetoric, a mounting by degrees to the highest pitch of expression, a climax. - Gk. alireir, to lean, slope, incline ; cognate with E. lean. See Lean.

CLIMB, to ascend by grasping. (E.) Very common. M. E. climben, Layamon, i. 37; pt. t. 'he clomb,' Ancren Riwle, p. 354; 'the king ... clam,' Rob. of Glouc. p. 333. – A. S. climban, pt. t. clamb, pl. clumbon; A. S. Chron, an. 1070. We find also the form clymmian, Grein, i. 164, + Du. klimmen. + O. H. G. cklimban, M. H. G. klimmen, o climban, M. H. G. klimmen, M. H. G. klimmen, M. H. G. klimmen, to climb.  $\beta$ . The original sense is 'to grasp firmly,' as in climbing a tree; and the connection is with O. H. G. kliban, to fasten to, A. S. elifian, to cleave to. See Clip, Cleave (2), and Clamber.

CLIME, a region of the earth. (Gk.) In Shak. Rich. II, i. 3. 285. - Lat. clima, a climate. - Gk. KAiµa, a climate. Doublet, climate. See Climate.

CLINCH, CLENCH, to rivet, fasten firmly. (E.) clenchen. 'Clenchyn, retundo, repando;' Prompt. Parv. p. 80. 'I clynche nayles;' Palsgrave. 'The cros was brede, whon Crist for us Gower, C. A. ii 306.-A. S. cliwe, a shortened form of cliwen, by loss b theron was cleynt,' i. e. fastened; Legends of the Holy Rood, ed.

Morris, p. 138. The pp. cleynt points to an infin. clengen, just as the pp. meynt, mingled, comes from mengen, to mix. We also find M. E. Menken, to strike smartly, Allit. Morte Arthure, l. 2113. This is the causal of clink, and means 'to make to clink,' to strike smartly. See Clink. + Du. klinken, to sound, tinkle ; to clink, to rivet ; klink, a blow, rivet. + Dan. klinke, a latch, rivet; + linke, to clinch, to rivet. + Swed. klinka, a latch; also, to rivet. + O. H. G. chlankjan, chlen-ken, M. H. G. klenken, to knot together, knit, tie; M. H. G. klinke, a bar, bolt, latch. ¶ The word is English, not French; the change of k to ch was due to a weakened pronunciation, and is common in many pure English words, as in teach, reach. The O.F. clenche, a latch of a door, is itself a Teutonic word, answering to Dan. and G. klinke, a latch. Clicket, or cliket, a latch (in Chaucer) is from the like source, the words click and clink being closely related; cf. also cling. Der. clinch-er CLING, to adhere closely. (E.) M. E. clingen, to become stiff; also, to adhere together. 'In cloddres of blod his her was clunge,' i. e. his hair was matted; Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 142. - A.S. clingan, to shrivel up by contraction, to dry up; Grein, i. 164. + Dan. klynge, to cluster; klynge, a cluster; cf. Dan. klumpe, to clot, klump, a clump. See Olump. [+] OLINICAL, relating to a bed. (F.,-Gk.) Sometimes clinick occurs, but it is rare; it means one lying in bed; 'the clinick or sick person; 'Bp. Taylor, Sermons, Of the Office Ministerial; see too his Holy Dying, s. 6. c. 4. = F. clinique, 'one that is bedrid;' Cotgrave. - Lat. clinicus, a bedrid person (St. Jerome); a physician that visits patients in bed (Martial). - Gk. KAIVIROS, belonging to a bed; a physician who visits patients in bed; # «λινική, his art. - Gk. «λίνη, a bed. - Gk. alirar, to slope, to lie down; cognate with E. lean. See Lean.

CLINK, to tinkle, make a ringing noise. (E.) Intrans.: 'They herd a belle clinke;' Chaucer, C. T. 14079. Also trans.: 'I shal clinken yow so mery a belle,' id. 14407. + Du. klinken, to sound, tinkle; klink, a blow. + Dan. klinge, to sound, jingle; klinge, to low in a blow. + I and klinge, to sound. jingle (frequentative) + Swed. Minga, to ring, clink, tingle. + Icel. kling, interj. ting ! tang ! klingja, to ring. Clink is the nasalized form of click, and the thinner form of clank. As click : clack :: clink : clank. Der. clink-er.

CLINKER, a cinder, or hard slag. (Du.) 'Clinkers, those bricks that by having much nitre or salt-petre in them (and lying next the fire in the clamp or kiln) by the violence of the fire, run and are glazed over; ' Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. Not (apparently) in early use, and prob. borrowed from Dutch; however, the word simply means ' that which clinks,' from the sonorous nature of these hardened bricks, which tinkle on striking together. - Du. klinker, that which sounds; a vowel; a hardened brick; from klinken, to clink. + Dan. klinke, a hard tile, a rivet; from klinke, to rivet, orig. to clink. See above.

CLIP, to shear, to cut off. (Scand.) M. E. clippen, to cut off, shear off; Ormulum, 11. 1188, 4104, 4142. - Icel. klippa, to clip, cut the hair. + Swed. klippa, to clip, shear, cut. + Dan. klippe, to clip, shear. All cognate with A. S. clyppan, to embrace, M. E. clipten, to embrace, clip in Shak. Cor. i. 6. 29.  $\beta$ . The original sense was 'to draw tightly together,' hence (1) to embrace closely, and (2) to draw closely together the edges of a pair of shears. Moreover, the A.S. elyppan is connected with cliftan, to adhere, and climban, to climb.

See Cleave (2), and Climb. Der. clipp-er, clipp-ing. CLIQUE, a gang, set of persons. (F., -Du.) Modern. From F. clique, 'a set, coterie, clique, gang ;' Hamilton and Legros, French Dict. = O. F. cliquer, to click, clack, make a noise; Cotgrave. = Du. klikken, to click, clash; also, to inform, tell; whence klikker, a telltale. [Perhaps, then, clique originally meant a set of informers. Otherwise, it merely meant a noisy gang, a set of talkers.] The Du. word is cognate with E. click. See Click.

CLOAR, CLOKE, a loose upper garment. (F.,-C.) Cloke in S. Matt. v. 40 (A. V.). M. E. cloke, Chaucer, C. T. 12499; Layamon, ii. 122 (later text). -O. F. cloque, also spelt clocke, cloce; Burguy, s. v. clocke. - Low Lat. cloca, a bell; also, a horseman's cape, because its chore areambled that of a bell. Sase further under Clock which is shape resembled that of a bell. See further under Clock, which is its doublet.

CLOCK, a measurer of time. (Celtic.) M. E. clok, Chaucer, C. T. 163. C. A. S. cluck, a bell (Lat. campana), Alifed's tr. of Beda, iv. 28 (Bosworth). The clock was so named from its striking, and from the bell which gave the sound. 'A great clock set up at Canterbury, A. D. 1292;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. a. The origin of a. The origin of the word is disputed, and great difficulty is caused by its being so widely spread; still, the Celtic languages give a clear etymology for it, which is worth notice, and Fick sets down the word as Celtic. Cf. Irish clog, a bell, a clock; clozan, a little bell; clogaim, I ring or sound as a bell, clogas, a belfry; all secondary forms from the older clagaim, as a bell, clogas, a beltry; all secondary forms from the order clagaine, a mus, glo-bus. See Clow, and Cloave (2). Dor. clot, verb. [†] I make a noise, ring, cackle; clag, a clapper of a mill; clagaire, a mus, glo-bus. See Clow, and Cloave (2). Dor. clot, verb. [†]

clapper of a bell; clagan, a little bell, noise; all pointing to the Irish root clag, to clack. So Gaelic clog, a bell, clock ; clog, to sound as a bell; clag, to sound as a bell, make a noise; clagadh, ringing, chiming; &c. So Welsh clock, a bell, cleca, to clack; clegar, to clack, tattle; clocian, to cluck; &c. Corn. cloch, Manx clagg, a bell. In other languages we find Low Lat. clocca, cloca, a bell (whence F, clocke), Du. klok, a bell, clock; Icel. klukka, old form klocka, a bell; Dan. klokke, a bell, clock; Swed. klocka, a bell, clock, bell-flower; Du. klok, a clock, orig. a bell; G. glocke, a bell, clock. See Clack. Der. clock-work. CLOD, a lump or mass of earth. (E.) A later form of clot, which has much the same meaning. 'Clodde, gleba;' Prompt. Parv. p. 83. Pl. cloddes, Palladius on Husbandry, bk. ii. st. 3; bk. xii. st. 2. But, earlier than about A. D. 1400, the usual spelling is clot. 'The but, called there of ben gold, 'Lat. glebee illus aurum; Wyclif, Job, xxviii.
6. See further under Clot. Der. clod-hopper (a hopper, or dancer, over clods); clod-poll, clod-pate. over clods); clod-poll, clod-pate. GBT The A. S. clud, a rock, is not quite the same word, though from the same root. It gave rise to the M. E. clowd, as in 'clowdys of clay;' Coventry Mysteries, p. 402; and to mod. E. clowd, q. v. We find Irish and Gael. clod, a turf, sod; but these words may have been borrowed from English. [†]

CLOG, a hindrance, impediment. (E.) The verb to clog is from the sb., not vice versa. The sense of 'wooden shoe' is merely an exthe sb., not vice versa. The sense of 'wooden snoe is merciy an ca-tension of the notion of block, clump, or clumsy mass. M. E. clogge, as in: 'Clogge, truncus,'i.e. a block; Prompt. Parv., p. 83. 'Clogge, billot;' Palsgrave. a. The Lowland Scottish form is clag. 'Clag, an encumbrance, a burden lying on property;' Jamieson. 'Clag, to obstruct, to cover with mud or anything adhesive; claggit, clogged. In Wallace, vi. 452, is the phrase " in clay that claggit was m that was bedaubed with clay; 'id. He also gives: 'elag, a clot, a coagulation;' and 'elaggy, unctuous, adhesive, bespotted with mire.'  $\beta$ . Hence it appears that the form elag, with the sense of 'block,' is later, the earlier form being elag, with the sense of clot, esp. a clot of clay. This connects it clearly with the word clay itself, of which the A.S. form was clag. See Clay. Cf. Dan. klag, kleg, clay, loam mixed with clay; Hag, Heg, loamy; Hagt bread, i.e. clagged or clogged bread. There is also a clear connection with Clew and Cleave (2), q. v. ¶ The sense of 'cleaving' well appears again in the prov. E. cleg, Icel. kleggi, a horse-fly, famous for cleaving to the horse. Der. clog, verb.

CLOISTER, a place of religious seclusion. (F., -L.) M.E. cloister, cloistre ; Chaucer, C. T. prol. 181. - O. F. cloistre (mod. F. cloftre). -Lat. claustrum, a cloister, lit. 'enclosure.' - Lat. claudere, pp. clausus, to shut, shut in, enclose. See Close. Der. cloistr-al, claustr-al, cloister-ed. CLOKE, old spelling of Cloak, q. v.

CLOSE (1), to shut in, shut, make close. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. closen; the pt. t. closed, enclosed, occurs in Havelok, l. 1310. The verb was formed from the pp. clos of the French verb. - O. F. clos, pp. of O. F. clore, to enclose, shut in. – Lat. clausus, pp. of clau-dere, to shut, shut in. + Gk. κλείω, I shut. + O. H.G. sliuzan, sliozan, M. H. G. sliezen (G. schliessen), to shut ; connected with E. slot, q. v. - V SKLU, to shut. Curtius, i. 183.

CLOSE (2), adj., shut up, confined, narrow. (F., -L.) In Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 183. Also as sb., M. E. clos, closs, closs, an en-closed place; Rob. of Glouc. p. 7.-O. F. clos; see above. Der. close-ly, close-ness, clos-ure; clos-et, q. v.

CLOSET, a small room, recess. (F.) 'The highere closet of his hows,' Wyclif, Tobit, iii. 10; Chaucer, Troil. and Cres. ii. 1215. O. F. closet, in Roquefort, who gives : 'Closeau, closet, closier, clousier, petit jardin de paysan, un petit clos fermé de haies ou de fagotage. A dimin. from O. F. clos, an enclosed space, a close, by affixing the dimin. suffix et. Clos is the pp. of O. F. clore, to shut, Lat. claudere; see above. Der. closet, verb.

CLOT, a mass of coagulated matter. (E.) Still in use, and now somewhat differentiated from clod, of which it is an earlier spelling. M. E. clot, clotte; 'a clot of corthe' = a clod of earth, Ancren Riwle, p. 172. 'Stony clottes,' Trevisa, ii. 23, where the Lat. text has 'globos saxeos.' The orig. sense is 'ball,' and it is a mere variant of M. E. clote, a burdock, so called from the balls or burs upon it. - A. S. cláte, a burdock, or rather a bur; see ' cláte, Arctium lappa' (i.e. burdock), in Gloss. to Cockayne's Leechdoms, with numerous references. Du. kluit, a clod; klont, a clot, clod, lump. O. Du. klootken, a small clod of earth (Oudemans); Du. kloot, a ball, globe, sphere, orb. + Icel. klot, a ball, the knob on a sword-hilt. + Dan. klode, a globe, sphere, ball (which suggests that the change from clot to clod may have been due to Danish influence, this change from t to d being common in Danish). + Swed. klot, a bowl, globe; klots, a block, stub, stock. + G. kloss, a clot, clod, dumpling, an awkward fellow (cf. clod-hopper), where the ss answers to E. t; klotz, a block, trunk, blockhead. B. The form clo-t or clo-d is an extension of clew or clue, orig. 'a ball,' by the addition of a suffixed -t or -d; cf. Lat. glo-

CLOTH, a garment, woven material. (E.) M. E. clath, cloth; Ancren Riwle, p. 418; Layamon, ii. 318. - A. S. clab, a cloth, a gar-ment; Grein, i. 162. + Du. kleed, clothes, dress. + Icel. klabi, cloth. + Dan. and Swed. klade, cloth. + G. kleid, a dress, garment. Origin unknown, but evidently a Teutonic word. The Irish cludaim, I cover, hide, cherish, warm, is clearly related to Irish clud, a clout. patch, and to E. clout, q. v.; and is therefore not to be connected with cloth unless cloth and clout may be connected. The connection, if correct, leaves us nearly where we were. Dor. cloth-es, from A. S. cládas, the pl. of cláo; also clothe, verb, q. v.

CLOTHE, to cover with a cloth. (E.) M. E. clathen, clothen, cleben; Ormulum, 2709; Havelok, 1137. The pt. t. is both clothede and cladde, the pp. both clothed and clad. Clad occurs in the Romaunt of the Rose, l. 210; and is still in use. Not found in A.S.; the example in the Ormulum is perhaps one of the earliest. Qbviously formed from A.S. cláo, cloth; see above. + Du. kleeden. + Icel. klæda. + Dan. klæde. + Swed. kläda. + G. kleiden. Dor. clothi-er, cloth-ing.

CLOUD, a mass of vapours. (E.) M. E. cloude, cloude. 'Moni clustered cloude' = many a clustered cloud, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, The spellings cloyd, clowde, cloud, cloude, clod, occur in the ii. 367. Cursor Mundi, 2580, 2781. Earlier examples are scarcely to be found, unless the word is to be identified, as is almost certainly the case, with M. E. elude, a mass of rock, a hill. The hulle was biclosed with cludes of stone'= the hill was enclosed with masses of stone; Layamon, ii. 370, 371.  $\beta$ . In corroboration of this identification, we may observe (1) that the sense of 'mass of rock' passed out of use as the newer application of the word came in; (2) that bo'h words are sometimes found with a plural in -en as well as in -es; and (3) the O. Flem. close occurs in the sense of ' cloud,' and is closely related to Flem. clot, a clot, clod, and cloot, a bail; see Delfortrie, Mémoire sur les Analogues des Langues Flamande, Allemande, et Anglaise, 1858, p. 193. Further, we find the expression clowdys of clay,' i. e. round masses of clay, Coventry Mysteries, p. 401. -A. S. elid, properly 'a round mass,' used in A. S. to mean 'a hill' or 'mass of rock,' but easily transferred to mean 'cloud' at a later period, because the essential idea was 'mass' or 'ball,' and not 'rock.' In Orosius, iii. 9. sect. 13, we read of a city that was 'mid clúdum ymbweaxen,' i. e. fortified with masses of rock. B. The A.S. clu-d is connected with the root seen in clew, and cleave (2); in the same way as is the case with clo-d and clo-d. See Clow, Cleave (2), Clot, and Clod. The same root appears in Lat. ¶ The same root appears in Lat. glo-mus, glo-bus; so that a cloud may be accurately defined as a 'conglo-meration,' whether of rock or of vapour. Der. cloud-y, cloud-i-ly, cloud-i-ness, cloud-less, cloud-let (diminutive).

CLOUGH, a hollow in a hill-side. (E.) 'A clough, or clowgh, is a kind of breach or valley downe a slope from the side of a hill, where commonly shragges, and trees doe grow. It is the termination of Colclough or rather Colkclough, and some other simames;' Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. g. M. E. clow, clough; 'Sende him to seche in clif and clow;' Cursor Mundi, Trin. MS., l. 17590. Also spelt clew, Allit. Morte Arthur, 1639; and (in Scottish) cleuch, Wallace, iv. 539. [The alleged A.S. clough is a fiction of Somner's.] An Eng. form with a final guttural, corresponding to Icel. klofi, a rift in a hill-side, derived from Icel. kliufa, to cleave. Similarly clough is connected with A. S. cleofan, to cleave; and is a doublet of Cleft, q. v. CLOUT, a patch, rag, piece of cloth. (Celtic.) M. E. cloue, chu; Ancren Riwle, p. 256. – A. S. clút; we find 'commissura, clút' in Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Somner, Nomina Vasorum, p. 61. [Not a In Azinte's clossary, etc. solmet, it comme vasorum, p. on. [Not a true A. S. word, but of Celtic origin.] – W. clwt, Com. clut, a piece, patch, clout. + Irish and Gael. clud, a clout, patch, rag. + Manx clooid, a clout. Der. clout, verb. CLOVE (1), a kind of spice. (Span., -L.) There is another fruit that cometh out of India, like unto pepper-cornes, and it is called cloves;' Holland's Pliny, bk, xii. c. 7. Cotgrave has: 'clow de girofle, a clove.' The modern word clove was not borrowed from French, but from Spanish, the slight corruption of the vowel from the sound ah to long o being due to the previous existence of another E. clove, which see below. – Span. clavo, a nail, a clove; the clove being named from its close resemblance to a nail. - Lat. clauus, a nail. (Root uncertain ; perhaps the same as that of clavis, a key; see Clavicle.) See Cloy. Der. clow-pink. GP The M. E. form clow (Chaucer, C. T. 15171) is from F. clow; but see Errata. [*] CLOVE (a), a bulb, or tuber. (E.) 'A bulb has the power of property ing itself by devicing in the artic of its parts are power of propagating itself by developing, in the axils of its scales, new bulbs, or what gardeners call cloves; 'Lindley, qu. in Webster. - A.S. cluf, preserved in the compounds eluf pung, crowfoot, Ranunculus sceleratus, where cluf means 'tuber,' and jung, crownoot, kunnuculus acris principle of the juices; and in clufwyrt, the buttercup, Ranunculus acris; see 'oss. in Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 319. [I suspect the cluf-wyrt in a clump together;' Bacon, Of a War with Spain (R.) Probably is rather the Ranunculus bulbosus, or bulbous buttercup; at any rate cluf-wyrt means ' bulb-wort.'] I suppose this A. S. cluf to be related to A. S. cliwe, a clew, ball, and to the Lat. globus. ¶ The clowe, used as a measure of weight, is hardly the same word; see Addenda. [†] CLOVEIR, a kind of trefoil grass. (E.) M. E. elaver, clover; spelt clauer, Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 3241.-A. S. clafre, to Cockavne's Leechdoms, q. v. + Du. fem. (gen. clafran); Gloss. to Cockayne's Leechdoms, q. v. + Du. klaver, clover, trefoil, + Swed. klöfver, clover, buck-bean. + Dan. klöver. + O. H. G. chléo, G. klee. B. The suggestion that it is derived from A.S. cleofan, to cleave, because its leaf is three-cleft, is a probable one, but not certain; cf. Du. kloven, Swed. klyfva, Dan. klove, O. H. G. chlioban, to cleave. See Cleave (1).

CLOWN, a clumsy lout, rustic, buffoon. (Scand.) 'This loutish clown; 'Sidney's Arcadia, bk. i (R.; s. v. Low). 'To brag upon his pipe the clowns began; 'Turberville, Agaynst the lelous Heads, &c. Not found much earlier. Of Scandinavian origin. - Icel. klunni, a clumsy, boorish fellow; cf. klunnalegr, clumsy. + North Friesic klönne, a clown, bumkin (cited by Wedgwood). + Swed, dial. klunn, a log; kluns, a hard knob, a clumsy fellow; Rietz. + Dan. klun, a log, a block; kluntet, blockish, clumsy, awkward.  $\beta$ . It is probably connected with E. clump, q. v.; cf. Icel. klumba, a club; Dan. klump, a clump, klumpfod, a club-foot; Swed. klump, a lump, klumpig, clumsy. See Clump, Club, Clumsy. ¶ The derivation from Lat. colonus is wrong. Der. cloum-ish (Levins), -ly, -ness. CLOY, to glut, satiate, stop up. (F., - L.) In Shak. Rich. II, i.

CLOY, to glut, satiate, stop up.  $(F_1, -L_1)$  In Shak. Rich. II, i. 3. 296; also cloyment, Tw. Nt. ii. 4. 102; cloyless, Ant. ii. 1. 25. 'Cloyed, or Accloyed, among farriers, a term used when a horse is pricked with a nail in shooing; 'Kersey's Dict. and ed. 1715. Cot-grave has: 'Enclouer, to naile, drive in a naile; enclouer artillerie, to cloy a piece of ordnance; to drive a naile or iron pin, into the touch-hole thereof; ' also: ' Enclové, nailed, fastened, pricked, cloyed with a nail;' also: ' Encloyer (obsolete), to cloy, choak, or stop up.' Hence the etymology. = O. F. cloyer, a by-form of clouer (as shewn above); Cotgrave gives: 'Clouer, to naile: to fasten, join, or set on with nailes.' The older form is cloar (Burguy).=O. F. clo, later clow, a nail.=Lat. cloues, a nail. See Clove (1). Der. cloy-less. GF It is probable that cloy was more or less confused, in the English mind, with clog, a word of different origin.

CLUB(1), a heavy stick, a cudgel. (Scand.) M. E. clubbe, clobbe, club, clob; Layamon, ii. 216, iii. 35; Havelok, l. 1927, 2289. – Icel. klubba, klumba, a club. + Swed. klubba, a club; klubb, a block, a club; klump, a lump. + Dan. klub, a club; klump, a clump, lump; klumpfod, a club-foot; klumpfodet, club-footed. Cf. Dan. klumt, a log. a block. B. The close connection of club with clump is apparent; in fact, the Icel. klubba stands for klumba, by the assimilation so common in that language. The further connection with clumy and clown is also not difficult to perceive. See Clump, Clumsy, Clown. Der. club-foot, club-foo'ed.

CLUB (2), an association of persons. (Scand.) Not in very early One of the earliest examples is in the Dedication to Dryden's Medal, where he alludes to the Whigs, and asks them what right they have 'to meet, as you daily do, in factious clubs.' In Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave, A. D. 1660, we find: "To clubbe, mettre ou despendre à l'egual d'un autre." The word is really the same as the last, but applied to a 'clump' of people. See Rietz, who gives the Swed dial. klubb, as meaning 'a clump, lump, dumpling, a tightly packed heap of men, a knoll, a heavy inactive fellow, 'i.e. a clown; see Clown. So we speak of a knot of people, or a clump of trees. The word appears in G. as klub. Der. club, verb. CLUB (3), one of a suit at cards. (Scand.) A. The name is a translation of the Span. bastos, i. e. cudgels, clubs; which is the Span. name for the suit. Thus the word is the same as Club (1) and Club (2). B. The figure by which the clubs are denoted on a card is a trefoil; the F. name being trifle, a trefoil, a club (at cards); cf. Dan. klöver, clover, a club (at cards); Du. klaver, clover, trefoil, a club (at cards). See Clover.

CLUCK, to call, as a hen does. (E.) "When she, poor hen, hath eluck'd thee to the wars;' Cor. v. 3. 163; where the old editions have elock'd. M. E. clokken. 'Clokkyn as hennys;' Prompt. Parv. p. 83. [Cf. 'He chukketh,' said of a cock; Chaucer, C. T. 15188.] Not found in A.S.; the alleged A.S. cloccan is perhaps an invention of Somner's, but gives the right form, and there may have been such a word. The mod. E. form may have been influenced by the Danish.+ Word. The mod. E. form may have been innerneed by the Dansh. T Du. klokken, to cluck. + Dan. klukke, to cluck; kluk, a clucking; kluk-köne, a clucking hen. + G. glucken, to cluck; gluckhenne, a clucking-hen. + Lat. glocire, to cluck. An imitative word; see Claok. [+] CLUE; see Clew. CLUMP, a mass, block, cluster of trees. (E.?) 'England, Scotan E. word, though not found in early writers; still it occurs in "examples in Bosworth), renders the identification of the words Dutch and (ierman, as well as Scandinavian. + Du. klomp, a lump, clog, wooden shoe; cf. klont, a clod, lump, + Dan. klomp, a lump, lump; klumpe, to clot; cf. klunt, a log, block. + Swed. klump, a lump; klumpe, to clot; cf. klunt, a log, block. + Swed. klump, a lump; klumpe, to clot; cf. klunt, a log, block. + Swed. klump, a lump; klumpe, clod, pudding, dumpling; klumpen, a lump, mass, heap, cluster; cf. klunker, a clod of dirt.  $\beta$ . Besides these forms, we find Dan. klimp, a clod of earth; Swed. klimp, a clod, a lump, a dumpling; these are directly derived from the root preserved in the M. H. G. klimpfon (strong verb, pt. t. klampf), to draw together, press tightly together, cited by Fick, iii. 51. Y. From the same press tightly together, cited by Fick, iii. 51.  $\gamma$ . From the same root we have E. clamp, to fasten together tightly; so that clamp and clump are mere variants from the same root. See Clamp; and see Club (1), a doublet of clump.

CLUMSY, shapeless, awkward, ungainly. (Scand.) 'Apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded ... even by clumsy fingers;' Ray, On the Creation, pt. ii. In Ray's Collection of Provincial Eng. Words we find : • Clumps, Clumpst, idle, lazy, unhandy, a word of common use in Lin-colnshire; see Skinner. This is, I suppose, the same with our clumzy, in the South, signifying unhandy; clumps with cold, i. e. be-nummed; ' and again he has: ' Clussumed, adj. "a clussumed hand," a clumsie hand; Cheshire.' a. All these forms are easily explained, being alike corruptions of the M. E. clumsed, benumbed. From this word were formed (1) clussumed, for clusmed, which again is for elumsed, by a change similar to that in clasp from M. E. clapter; (2) elumps, by mere contraction; (3) elumps, by loss of final i in the last; and (4) elumsy, by the substitution of -y for -ed, in order to make the word look more like an adjective.  $\beta$ . The M. E. elumsed, also spelt clomsed, is the pp. of the verb clumsen or clomsen, to benumb, also, to feel benumbed. It is passive in the phrase 'with clumsid hondis,' as a translation of 'dissolutis manibus;' Wyclif, Jerem. xlvii. 3; see also Issiah, xxxv. 3. 'He is outher elonssed [stupefied] or wode' [mad]; Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1651. See further in my note to Piers the Plowman, C. xvi. 253, where the intransitive use of the verb occurs, in the sentence : ' whan thow elomsest for colde' = when thou becomest numb with cold. y. Of Scandinavian origin. Cf. Swed. dial. klummsen, benumbed with cold, with frozen hands; spelt also klumsun, klaumsen, klomsen, klummshändt (i.e. with benumbed hands), &c., Rietz, p. 332; who also gives krumpen (p. 354) with the very same sense, but answering in form to the E. cramped. In Icelandic, klumsa means 'lockjaw.' 8. It is easily seen that M. E. clumsen is an extension of the root clam, or cram, to pinch, whence also E. clamp and cramp. See Clamp, Cramp. So in Dutch we find kleumsch, chilly, numb with cold; from kleumen, to be benumbed with cold; which again is from klemmen, to pinch, clinch, oppress. Cf. prov. E. clem, to pinch with hunger. CLUSTER, a bunch, mass, esp. of grapes. (E.) M. E. cluster, elustre, closter ; Wyclif, Deut: xxxii. 32, Numb. xiii. 25, Gen. xl. 10. - A. S. clyster, cluster; the pl. clystru, clusters, occurs in Gen. xl. 10. + Icel. klastr, an entanglement, tangle, bunch; an extension of Masi, a cluster, bunch, esp. of berries.  $\beta$ . Thus cluster is an extension of the base klas, which appears in Icel. klasi, a cluster, bunch; Dan. and Swed. klass, a cluster (prob. in Du. klos, a bobbin, block, log, bowl); and is again extended into Swed. and Dan. klister, paste, Icel. Mistra, to paste or glue together. The Swed. dialects also have klysse, a cluster, as a contraction of klifsa, with the same meaning, from the verb klibba, to stick to, to adhere. Similarly, klas probably stands for an older klafs. Y. The root is, accordingly, to be found in the Teutonic  $\checkmark$  KLIB, to adhere to, to cleave to (Fick, iii. 52); cf. A. S. clifian, to cleave to, adhere to. And a cluster means a bunch of things adhering closely together, as, e.g. in the case of a cluster of grapes or of becs. See Cleave (2). ¶ Similarly the Dan. klynge, a cluster, is derived from the Teutonic  $\checkmark$  KLING, to cling together; see Cling CLUTCH, a claw; to grip, lay hold of. (E.) The sb. seems to be more original than the verb. The verb is M. E. clucchen; 'to clucche or to clawe;' P. Plowman, B. xvii. 188. The sb. is M. E. cloche, clouche, cloke; 'and in his cloches holde;' P. Plowman, B. prol. 154; 'his kene clokes,' Ancren Riwle, p. 1 30. As usual, -tch stands for -che, and -che for -ke or -k; thus the word is the same as the Lowl. Scot. cleuck, cluik, cluke, clook, a claw or talon. And this sb. is clearly connected with Lowl. Scot. cleik, clek, cleek, to catch as by a hook, to lay hold of, to seize, snatch; Eng. dial. click, to catch or snatch away (Halliwell). β. In fact, beside the M.E. clocke, a claw, clucchen, to claw, we find the forms clecke, a hook, crook (Ancren Riwle, p. 174), and the verb clechen, clichen, or kleken, to snatch; as in 'Sir Gawan bi the coler clechis the knyghte; 'Anturs of Arthur, st. 48. The pt. t. of M. E. clechen is clachte (Ancren Riwle, p. 102) or clauchte (Scot. claucht), as in Wallace, ii. 97; and the pp. is claht, Lyric Poems, p. The exact correspondence of clechen, pt. t. clauchte, pp. claht 37. with A. S. gelæccan, to catch, seize, pt. t. gelæhe, pp. gelæht (see caste (F. cote), a rib, slope of a hill, shore. - Lat. costa, a rib, side.

tolerably certain.  $\gamma$ . Hence, instead of clutch being derived immediately from the A.S. gelæccan (as suggested, perhaps by guess.'in Todd's Johnson), the history of the word tells us that the connection is somewhat more remote. From A.S. gelæccan, we have M.E. clechen, to seize, whence M.E. cleche, that which seizes, a hook, with its variant M. E. cloche, a claw, whence lastly the verb clucchen. 8. In the A.S. gelæccan, the ge is a mere prefix, and the true verb is læccan, to seize, M.E. lacchen, spelt latch in Shak. Macb. iv. 3. 195; see Latch. CLUTTER (1), a noise, a great din. (E.) Not common; Rich. quotes from King, and Todd from Swift; a mere variation of Clutter, q. v. And cf. Clutter (3). CLUTTER (2), to coagulate, clot. (E.) 'The cluttered blood;' Holland, Pliny, b. xxi. c. 25. M. E. cloteren; the pp. clotered, also written clothred, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 2747. The frequentative form of clot ; see Clot.

CLUTTER (3), a confused heap; to heap up. (Welsh.) 'What a clutter there was with huge, over-grown pots, pans, and spits;' L'Estrange, in Rich. and Todd's Johnson. 'Which clutters not praises together;' Bacon, to K. Jas. I: Sir T. Matthew's Lett. ed. 1660, p. 32 (Todd).-W. cludair, a heap, pile; cludeirio, to pile up. CLYSTER, a injection into the bowels. (L.,-Gk.) The pl.

clisters is in Holland's Pliny, b. viii. c. 27; the verb clysterize in the same, b. xx. c. 5; and Massinger has: 'Thou stinking clyster-pipe;' Virgin Martyr, A. iv. sc. 1. - Lat. clyster. - Gk. alugrip, a clyster, a syringe;  $\kappa \lambda i \sigma \mu a$ , a liquid used for washing out, esp. a clyster, a drench. – Gk.  $\kappa \lambda b \zeta_{euv}$ , to wash. – Gk.  $\sqrt{K}\Lambda T$ , to wash; cf. Lat. cluere, to purge, Goth.  $\lambda lutrs$ , pure. –  $\sqrt{K}LU$ , to cleanse; Fick, i. 552.

CO., prefix; a short form of con. See Con., COACH, a close carriage. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Merry. Wives, ii. 2. 66. – F. cocke, 'a coach;' Cotgrave. – Lat. concha, 'which from its proper sense of shell, conch, came to that of a little boat. The word was early applied to certain public carriages by the common transfer of words relating to water-carriage to land-carriage; Brachet. And see Diez. [The F. cocke also means 'boat,' and has a doublet coque, a shell.] – Gk. κόγκη, a mussel, cockle, cockle.shell; also κόγκον, a mussel, cockle, shell. + Skt. çankha, a conch-shell. See Conch, Cockle, Cock-boat. [*] COADJUTOR, assistant. (L.) Spelt coadiutour, Sir T. Elyot, Governour, b. ii. c. 10. § 3. - Lat. co-, for con, which for cum, together; and adjutor, an assistant .- Lat. adjuntus, pp. of adjunare, to assist. See Adjutant. Der. coadjutr-ix, coadjutor-kip. COAGULATE, to curdle, congeal. (L.)

Shak. has coagulate as pp. = curdled; ' coagulate gore ;' Hamlet, ii. 2. 484. - Lat. coagulatus, pp. of coagulare, to curdle. - Lat. coagulum, rennet, which causes things to curdle. - Lat. co- (for con or cum, together), and ag-ere, to drive; (in Latin, the contracted form cogers is the common form); with suffix -ul-, having a diminutive force; so that co-ag-ul-um would mean 'that which drives together slightly.'- / AG, to drive. See Agent. Der. coagulat-ion, coagul-able, coagul-ant.

COAL, charcoal; a combustible mineral. (E.) M. E. col, Layamon, 1. 2366. – A. S. col, coal; Grein, i. 166. + Du. kool. + Icel. and Swed. kol. + Dan. kul. + O. H. G. chol, cholo, M. H. G. kol, G. kokle. The Skt. jval, to blaze, burn, is probably from the same root; see ¶ Of course any connection with Lat. calere, to be Fick, iii. 48. hot, is out of the question; an E. c and a Latin c are of different origin. Der. coal-y, coal-fish, coal-keaver, &c.; also collier, q. v.; also collied, i. e. blackened, dark, in Mid. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 145. COALESCE, to grow together. (L.) Used by Newton (Todd); in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; also by Goodwin, Works, v. iii. pt. iii. p. 345 (R.) R. doubtless refers to the works of T. Goodwin, 5 vols., London, 1681-1703 .- Lat. coalescere, to grow together. - Lat. co-, for con or cum, together; and alescere, to grow, frequentative verb from alere, to nourish. See Aliment. Der. coalescence, coalescent, from coalescent, stem of the pres. part. of coalescere; also coalition (used by Burke) from Lat. coalitus, pp. of coalescere.

COARSE, rough, rude, gross. (F., -L.?) In Shak. Henry VIII, iii. 2. 239. Also spelt course, course; 'Yea, though the threeds [threads] be course; 'Gascoigne, Complaint of the Grene Knight, I. 25; cf. 'Course, vilis, grossus;' Levins, 224. 39. a. The origin of coarse is by no means well ascertained; it seems most likely that it stands for course, and that course was used as a contracted form of in course, meaning 'in an ordinary manner,' and hence 'ordinary,' or 'common.' The phrase in course was also used for the modern of course; Meas. for Meas. iii. 1. 259.  $\beta$ . The change from in course to i' course, and thence to course, would have been easy.

From the course, the fourse, and there to tourse, which have been easy. If this be right, see Course. Der. coarse-ly, course-ness. [†] COAST, side, border, country.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.})$  M. E. coste. Low Lat. cottus, a tunic. -M. H. G. kutte, kotte, O. H. G. choz, chozzo, a coarse mantle; whence G. kutte, a cowl. β. Cognate with A.S. cote, a cote or cot, the COAX, to entice, persuade. (Celtic.?) Formerly spelt cokes. 'They neither kisse nor cokes them; 'Puttenham, Arte of Poesie, lib. i. c. 8; ed. Arber, p. 36. The words cokes as a sb., meant a simple-ton, gull, dupe. 'Why, we will make a cokes of this wise master;' Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, ii. 2. 'Go, you're a brainless coar, a toy, a fop;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit at Sev. Weapons, iii. 1. [This sb. is probably the original of the verb coce, to barter; Levins, Manip. Vocab. 155, 17; cf. 'to cope [barter] or coase, cam-bire; 'Baret.]  $\beta$ . Earlier history unknown; prob. allied to the difficult word Cockney, which see. ¶ We may note that Cotgrave seems to have regarded it as equivalent to the F. cocard. He has: 'Cocard, a nice doult, quaint goose, fond or saucie cokes, proud or forward meacock.' Under the spelling coquart, he gives 'undis-creetly bold, peart, cocket, jolly, cheerful.' Thus the F. coquart became cocket, and now answers to the school-slang cocky, i. e. like a fighting cock. But coast does not well answer to this, whereas the Celtic words quoted under Cockney give a close result as to meaning

COB(1), a round lump, or knob, a head. (C.) Such seems to be the original sense, the dimin. being cobble, a round lump, as used in cobble-stones. As applied to a pony or horse, it seems to mean dumpy or short and stout. M. E. cob, a head, a person, esp. a wealthy person; the pl. cobbis is used by Occleve; see quotation in Halliwell.-W. cob, a tuft, a spider; cop, a tuft, summit; copa, top, tuft, crest, crown of the head; cf. copyr, a tuft, spider. + Gael. copan, the boss of a shield, cup. B. Cf. Du. kop, a head, pate, person, man, cup; G. kopf, the head. Perhaps these words, like M. E. cop, a top, were orig. of Celtic origin; this would explain their close similarity to the Gk. κυβη, the head; Lat. cuta, a cup. See Cup. Der. cob-use, q. v; c:bb-le, sb. q. v.; and see cup. GP The true G. word cognate with Lat. caput is kaupt, answering to E. kead, q. v. COB (2), to beat, strike. (C.) In sailor's language and provincial

E. - W. cobio, to thump; probably orig. to thump with something bunchy, so as to bruise only, or perhaps to thump on the head. - W. cob, a tuft; cop, a head, bunch. See Cob (1).

COBALT, a reddish-gray mineral. (G., -Gk.) One of the very few G. words in English; most of such words are names of minerals. Used by Woodward, who died A. D. 1728 (Todd). - G. kobalt, cobalt.  $\beta$ . The word is a nick-name given by the miners because it was poisonous and troublesome to them; it is merely another form of G. kobold, a demon, goblin; and cobalt itself is called kobold in provincial German; see Flügel's Dict. - M. H. G. kobolt, a demon, sprite; cf. Low Lat. cobalus, a mountain-sprite. - Gk. κόβαλοε, an splite; cf. Low Lat. robusts, a mountain splite. – Ch. appendix, an impudent rogue, a mischievous goblin. See Goblin. COBBLE (1), to patch up.  $(F_{-,}=L)$  'He doth but cloute [patch] and cobbill; Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Court, 1. 524. The sb. cobbiere, a cobbler, occurs in P. Plowman, B. v. 327.– O. F. cobler, coubler, to join together, lit. to couple; Roquefort - Lat. copulare, to bind or join together. See Couple, Copulate. Der. cobbl-er.

COBBLE (2), a small round lump. (C.) Chiefly used of round stones, commonly called cobble-stones. 'Hic rudus, a cobylstone;' Wright's Vocab. i. 256. A dimin. of cob, with the suffix -le (for -el). See Cob (1)

COBLE, a small fishing-boat. (C.) 'Cobles, or little fishing-boats;' Pennant, in Todd's Johnson. - W. ceubal, a ferry-boat, skiff. Cf. W. ceubren, a hollow tree ; ceufad, a canoe. - W. ceuo, to excavate, hollow out; boats being orig. made of hollowed trees. - VKU, to contain.

COBWEB, a spider's web. (E.) Either (1) from W. cob, a spider, and E. web; or (2) a shortened form of attercop-web, from the M.E. attercop, a spider; cf. the spelling copuebbe, Golden Boke, c. 17 (R.) β. In Wyclif's Either way, the etymology is ultimately the same. Bible we find: 'The webbis of an attercop,' Isaiah, lix. 5; and: 'the web of attercoppis,' Job, viii. 14. The M. E. attercop is from A. S. attorcoppa, a spider, Wright's Vocab. i. 24; a word compounded of A. S. dior, poison (Bosworth), and coppa, equivalent to W. cop, a head, tuft, W. cob, a tuft, a spider; so that the sense is 'a bunch of poison.' See Cob (1), Cup.

COCHINEAL, a scarlet dye-stuff. (Span., - L., - Gk.) Cochineal consists 'of the dried bodies of insects of the species Coccus cacti, native consists 'of the dried bodies of insects of the species Coccus cacti, native in Mexico, and found on several species of cactus, esp. C. cochimillifer;' Webster. [These insects have the appearance of berries, and were COCKATOO, a kind of parrot. (Malay.) The pl. is spelt in Mexico, and found on several species of cactus, esp. C. cochinillifer;"

(Origin unknown.) Der. coast. v., coast-er, coast-wise. From the same source is ac-cost, q. v.; also cullet, q. v. COAT, a garment, vesture. (F., -G.) M. E. cote, kote; K. Ali-neal; cf. Ital. cocciniglia, the same. - Lat. coccineus, coccinus, of a scarlet colour. - Lat. coccum, a berry; also, 'kermes,' supposed by the ancients to be a berry. - Gk. Kónkos, a kernel, a berry; esp. the kermes-berry, used to dye scarlet. [+]

COCK (1), the male of the domestic fowl.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.,-}Gk_{.})$ M. E. cok; see Chaucer's Nun's Priest's Tale. [Not really an E. word, though commonly referred to A.S. coc. The fact is that the A.S. coc is of late occurrence, only appearing in the latest MS. of the A. S. Gospels (written after A. D. 1100) in Mark, xiv. 72, where all the earlier MSS. have the word hana, the masc. word corresponding to E. hen. See Hen. Thus the A.S. coc is merely borrowed from French.] = O. F. cor (F. coq). = Low Lat. coccum, an accus. form oc-curring in the Lex Salica, vii. 16, and of onomatopoetic origin (Brachet). - Gk. κόκκν, the cry of the cuckoo; also the cry of the cock, since the phrase κοκκοβόαs όρνιε occurs to signify a cock; lit. it means 'the cock-voiced bird,' or the bird that cries cock 1  $\beta$ . Chaucer, in his Nur's Priest's Tale, ll. 455, 456, says of Chanteler: 'De Chantel's thing ne liste him thanne for to crowe, But cryde anon cok l cok l and up he sterte.' Cf. Skt. kd, to cry; kdj, to cry as a bird. See Cuckoo, and Coo. ¶ The W. cog does not mean a cock, but a cuckoo. Der. cock-er-el, a little cock, apparently a double diminu-tive, M. E. cokerel, Prompt. Parv. p. 80; cock-fight-ing, sometimes contracted to cock-ing ; cock-er, one who keeps fighting-cocks ; cockpil; cock's-comb, a plant; and see cock-ade, cock-adre, cf. G. kahn, a cock; also, a faucet, stop-cock. See Cock (4). [\*] COCK (2), a small pile of hay. (Scand.) 'A cocke of hay; COCK (2), a small pile of hay. (Scand.) Plowman, C. vi. 13, and my note upon it. -Dan. kok, a heap, pile; cited by Wedg-wood, but not given in Ferrall and Repp. + Icel. kökkr, a lump, a $ball. + Swed. koka, a clod of earth. <math>\P$  This is the word of which the Du. kogel, a ball, bullet, Dan. kogle, a cone, G. kugel, a ball, is the diminutive. Cf. Swed. koka, a clot, clod of earth, with Swed.

dial. kokkel, a lump of earth, which Rietz identifies with Du. kogel. COCK (3), to stick up abruptly. (C.) We say to cock one's eye, one's hat; or, of a bird, that it cocks up its tail. This slightly vulgar word, like many such very common monosyllables, is probably Celtic. - Gael. coc, to cock, as in coc do bhoineid, cock your bonnet; cf. Gael. coc-shron, a cock-nose; coc-shronach, cock-nosed. Der. cock, sb., in the phrase 'a cock of the eye, '&c.

COCK (4), part of the lock of a gun. (Ital.) 'Pistol's cock is up;' Hen. V, ii. I. 55. [On the introduction of fire-arms, the terms relating to bows and arrows were sometimes retained; see artillery in I Sam. xx. 40.] - Ital. cocca, the notch of an arrow; coccare, to put the arrow on the bowstring (cf. E. 'to cock a gun').  $\beta$ . So also F. cocke means a nock, nitch, notch of an arrow; also 'the nut-hole of a cross-bow' (Cotgrave); cf. F. décocher, to let fly an arrow, Ital. scoccare, to let fly to shoot; F. incocker, to let fly an arrow to the bow-string.  $\gamma$ . The origin of Ital. cocca, F. cocke, a notch, is unknown; but see Cog.  $\P$  The Ital. cocca, being an unfamiliar word, was confused with F. cog, a cock, and actually translated into German by behavior the physical difference is a the cock (a work). hahn in the phrase den Hahn stannen, i. e. to cock (a gun).

COCK (5), COCKBOAT, a small boat.  $(F_{..}-L_{..}-Gk_{.})$  The addition of boat is superfluous; see cock in K. Lear, iv. 6. 19.–0. F. coque, a kind of boat; cf. Ital. cocca, Span. coca, a boat.  $\beta$ . The word also appears in the form cog or cogge, as in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 476; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, Ypsiphyle, 113. This is the Du. and Dan. kog, Icel. kuggr, a boat; the same word. It also appears in Corn. coc, W. cuck, a boat; Bret. koked, a small boat of the Let cure work or cost of bret. koked, a small boat, skiff; Low Lat. cocco, cogo, a sort of boat. boat, skiff; Low Lat. cocco, cogo, a sort of boat.  $\gamma$ . The word was very widely spread, and is probably to be referred, as suggested by Diez, to the Lat. concka, whence both mod. F. cocke, a boat, and coue, a shell, as also E. coach; see Coach. S. The Celtic words may be looked upon as cognate with the Latin, and the Teutonic words as borrowed from the Celtic; the Romance words being from the Latin. - Lat. concha, a shell. - Gk. κόγκη, a mussel, cockle-shell; κόγκοs, a mussel, cockle, cockle-shell. + Skt. gankha, a conch-shell. See Conch; and see Cockle (1). Der. cock-swain, by the addition of swain, q. v.; now gen. spelt coxswain. COCKADE, a knot of ribbon on a hat. (F.) 'Pert infidelity is wit's cockade; 'Young's Nt. Thoughts, Nt. 7, l. 109 from end. The a was formerly sounded ak, nearly as ar in arm; and the word is, accordingly, a corruption of cockard. - F. coquarde, fem. of coquard, ' foolishly proud, saucy, presumptuous, malapert, undiscreetly peart, cocket, jolly, cheerful; Cotgrave. He also gives : 'coquarde, bonnet à la eacatoes, and the birds are said to be found in the Mauritius; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 383 (Todd's Johnson); or ed. 1665, p. 403.-Malay kakatúa. a cockatoo; a word which is doubtless imitative, like our cock: see Cock (1). This Malay word is given at p. 84 of Pijnappel's Malay-Dutch Dictionary; he also gives the imitative words bakak, the cackling of hens, p. 75; and bukuk, the crowing of a cock, p. 94. So also 'kakatúa, a bird of the partot-kind;' Marsden's Malay Dict. p. 261. Cf. Skt. kukkuta, a cock; so named from its See Cock. Cuckoo. CTV.

COCKATRICE, a fabulous serpent hatched from a cock's egg. (F.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4, 215. M. E. cocatryse, kokatrice, Wy-clif, Ps. xc. 13; Isa. xi. 8, xiv. 9.-O. F. cocatrice, a crocodile; Roquefort, q.v. Cf. Span. cocotriz, a crocodile. - Low Lat. cocatricem, acc. of cocatriz, a crocodile, basilisk, cockatrice.  $\beta$ . The form cocatriz is a corruption of Low Lat. cocodrillus, a crocodile; it being noted that the r in crccodile was usually dropped, as in Span. cocodrilo, Ital. coccodrillo, and M. E. cokedrill. The word being once corrupted, the fable that the animal was produced from a cock's egg was invented to account for it. See Cock (1), and Crocodile.

COCKER, to pamper, indulge children. (C.?) 'A beardless boy, a cockered silken wanton;' K. John, v. 1. 70. 'Neuer had so cockered us, nor made us so wanton ;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 337d; see Eastwood and Wright's Bible Word-book. 'Cokerya, carloved', Prompt. Parv. p. 85. β. Of uncertain origin. The W. cocri, to fondle, indulge, cocr, a coaxing, fondling, cocraeth, a fondling, are obviously related. So also F. coqueliner, of which Cotgrave says: "coqueliner un enfant, to dandle, cocker, fondle, pamper, make a wanton of a child." The original sense was probably to rock up and down, to dandle; cf. W. gozi, to shake, agitate; and see Cockle (3). Y. Cocker may be, in fact, regarded as a frequentative of cock or cog, to shake; further treated of under cockle (3). COCK-EYED, squinting. (C. and E.) See Halliwell. - Gael. coog, to wink, take aim by shutting one eye; caog: huil, a squint eye. COCKLE (1), a sort of bivalve. (C.) In P. Plowman, C. x. 95, occurs the pl. cockes, with the sense of cockles, the reading in the llchester MS. being cokeles. Thus the M. E. form is cokel, obviously a dimin. of cok or cock, the orig. sense of which is ' shell.' The word was rather of Celtic origin than borrowed from the French coquille, though the ultimate origin is the same either way. - W. cocs, cockles. Cf. Gael. and Irish cuach, a bowl, cup; Gael. cogan, a loose husk, a small drinking bowl; Gael. cochull, Irish cochal, a husk, the shell of a nut or grain, a cap, hood, mantle; W. cockl, a mantle.  $\beta$ . Thus M. E. cockes answers to W. cocos, cccs, cockles; which, with the addition of the dimin. suffix -el, became cokeles, mod. E. cockles, the audition of the dimin. sum -2i, became consist, mod. E. cockies, answering to the W. cockl, a mantle. The consecutive senses were obviously 'shell, 'husk,' hood,' and 'mantle.' The shorter form cock is the same word with Cock (5), q. v. ¶ The cognate Lat. word is cockles, a snail; cf. Gk.  $\kappa_0\chi\lambda$ ias, a snail with a spiral shell; róx los, a fish with a spiral shell, also a bivalve, a cockle; allied to Lat. concha, Gk. Kóyxy, a mussel, a cockle. The F. coquille is from Lat. conchylium, Gk. κογχύλιον, the dimin. of κόγκη. See Coach, Conch., Cockle (2), Cocoa. [+]

COCKLE (a), a weed among corn; darnel. (C.) M. E. cokkel. 'Or springen [sprinkle, sow] cokkel in our clene corn; 'Chaucer, C. T. 14403. A.S. coccel, tares, translating Lat. zizonia, Matt. xiii. 27. - Gael. cogall, tares, husks, the herb cockle; cogull, the corn-cockle; closely allied to Gael. cochull, a husk, the shell of a nut or grain. The form is diminutive; cf. Gael. cogan, a loose husk, covering, small drinking-bowl, a drink. + Irish cogal, corn-cockle, beards of barley; cf. Irish cog, cogan, a drink, draught.  $\beta$ . The word is clearly formed by help of the dimin. suffix -al from the root cog, signifying originally a shell, husk; hence, a bowl, and lastly, a draught from a bowl; cf. Gael. and Irish euack, a bowl, cup. Thus Cotcockle (2) is ultimately the same word as cockle (1), q. v. grave explains F. coquiol as 'a degenerate barley, or weed commonly growing among barley and called haver-grasse; ' this is a slightly different application of the same word, and likewise from a Celtic source. See Cock (5), Cockle (2), Cocoa.

COCKLE (3), to be uneven, shake or wave up and down. (C.) 'It made such a rough cockling sea, . . that I never felt such un-certain jerks in a ship;' Dampier, Voyage, an. 1683 (R.) Formed as a frequentative, by help of the suffix -le, from a verb cock or cog, to shake, preserved also in the prov. E. coggle, to be shaky (Halliwell); cf. prov. E. cockelly, unsteady, shaky. - W. gogi, to shake, agitate ; whence also prov. E. gogmire, a quagmire (Halliwell). Cf. also Gael. gog, a nodding or tossing of the head, goic, a tossing up of the head in disdain; Irish gog, a nod, gogach, wavering, reeling.

COCKLOFT, an upper loft, garret. (Hybrid; F. and Dan.) * Cocklofts and garrets; Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. iii. 1. 329. From originally a place in the rafters where cocks roosted, hence, a little room among the rafters; called also in Danish loftkammer, i. e. loft-chamber. See Loft. ¶ The W. coelofft. a garret. is nothing chamber. See Loft. ¶ The W. cosgloff, a garret, is nothing but the E. cockloft borrowed, and not a true W. word.

COCKNEY, an effeminate person. (Unknown.) a. Much has been written on this difficult word, with small results. One great difficulty lies in the fact that two famous passages in which the word occurs are, after all, obscure; the word cokeney in P. Plowman, B. vi. 287, may mean (1) a young cock, or (2) a cook, scullion, or may even be used in some third sense; and but little more can be made of the passage in the Tournament of Tottenham in Percy's Reliques, last stanza. B. It is clear that cockney was often a term of reproach, and meant a foolish or effeminate person, or a spoilt child; see Cockney in Halliwell. It is also clear that the true M. E. spelling was cokeney or cokeney, and that it was trisyllabic. 'I sal be hald a daf, a cokeney; Unhardy is unsely, as men seith;' Chau-Cer, C. T. 4266.  $\gamma$ . The form cokenay does not well suit Mr. Wedgwood's derivation from the F. coqueliner, 'to dandle, cocker, pamper, make a wanton of a child;' Cotgrave: nor do I find that 8. Nor do I see how cokeney can be conveliner was in early use. twisted out of the land of Cohayne, as many have suggested. The e. I would only suggest etymology remains as obscure as ever. that we ought not to overlook the possible connection of cokney, in the sense of simpleton, with the M. E. cokes, a word having precisely the same meaning, for which see under Coax. The only suggestion (a mere guess) which I have to offer is that the word, after all, may be Welsh, and related to coax and to cog, to deceive. The M.E. coheney bears a remarkable resemblance to the W. coeginaidd, signifying conceited, coxcomb-like, simple, foppish, formed by annexing the adjectival suffix aidd to the sb. coegyn, a conceited fellow; we find also W. coegenod, a coquette, vain woman, a longer form of coegen, with the same sense, a fem. form answering to the masc. coegyn. That these words are true W. words is clear from their having their root in that language. The forms coegyn, coegen, are from the adj. corg, vain, empty, saucy, sterile, foolish. Cf. Corn. gocyneik, folly, gocy, foolish, from coc. empty, vain, foolish (equivalent to W. corg). Cf. also Gael. goigeanach, coxcomb-like, from goigean, a coxcomb; goganach, light-headed; Old Gael. coca, void, hollow. Der. cockney-dom, cockney-ism. ¶ But see Errata. [\*]

COCOA (1), the cocoa-nut palm tree. (Port.) 'Give me to drain the cocca's milky bowl;' Thomson, Summer, 1. 677. – Port. and Span. Portuguese in India on account of the monkey-like face at the base of the nut, from coco, a bugbear, an ugly mask to frighten children see De Barros, Asia, Dec. iii. bk. iii. c. 7;' Wedgwood. Cf. Port. fazer coco, to play at bo-peep; Span, ser wa coco, to be an ugly-looking person.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense of Port. coco was head or skull; cf. Span. cocole, the back of the head; F. corne, a shell,  $\gamma$ . All related to Lat. concha, a shell; see Coach, Conch.

COCOON, the case of a chrysalis. (F., -L., -Gk.) Modern. - F. cocon; a cocoon; formed by adding the suffix -on (gen. augmenta-tive, but sometimes diminutive) to F. coque, a shell. - Lat. concha, a shell. – Gk. κόγκη, a shell; see Conch. Der. cocoos-ery. COCTION, a boiling, decoction. (L.) In Boyle's Works, vol. ii.

p. 109 (R.) Formed from Latin, by analogy with F. words in -tion. - Lat. coctionem, acc. of coctio, a boiling, digestion. - Lat. coctus, pp. of coquere, to cook. See Cook. COD (1), a kind of fish. (E.?) In Shak. Othello, ii. 1. 156. 'Codde, a fysshe, cableau; Palsgrave; cf. 'Cabilaud, the chevin;' and 'Cabillau, fresh cod;' Cot.  $\beta$ . I suppose that this word cod must be the same as the M. E. codde or cod, a husk, bag, bolster; though the resemblance of the fish to a bolster is but fanciful. It is obvious that Shakespeare knew nothing of the Linnsean name gadus (Gk.  $\gamma \dot{a} \delta os$ ); nor is the derivation of cod from gadus at all satisfactory.

See Cod (2), and Cuttle. Der. cod-ling, q. v. COD (2), a husk, shell, bag, bolster. (E.) Perhaps obsolete, except in slang. In Shak, in cod-piece, Gent. of Verona, ii. 7. 53; peas-cod, i. e. pea-shell, husk of a pea, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 191. M. E. cod, codde; 'codde of pese, or pese codde;' Prompt. Parv. p. 85. The pl. coddis translates Lat. siliquis, Wyclif, Luke, xv. 16. Cod also means pillow, bolster; as in: 'A cod, hoc ceruical, hoc puluinar;' Cath. Ang. - A. S. cod, codd, a bag; translating Lat. pera in Mark, vi. 8. + Icel. koddi, a pillow; kodri, the scrotum of animals. + Swed. kudde, a cushion. ¶ The W. ewd or cod, a bag, pouch, may have been borrowed from English, cf. also Bret. god, kod, a pouch, pocket. CODDLE, to pamper, render effeminate. (E.) 'I'll have you coddled;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, A. v. sc. 4, 1. 31. The context will shew how utterly Richardson has mistaken the word in cock (1) and 10%. So in German we find hahnbalken, a roost, a cock-loft; and in Danish hanebielkeloft, lit. a cock-balk-loft. It meant render effeminate. Formed, by suffix -le from cod, orig. a bag, but $\beta$ . In the passage afterwards used in another sense; see Cod (2). from Dampier's Voyages, i. 8 (R.), the word coddled may well mean 'boiled soft.' ¶ There is no sure reason for connecting the word with caudle. [\*]

CODE, a digest of laws. (F., -L.) Not in early use. Pope has the pl. codes, Sat. vii. 96. - F. code. - Lat. codes, caudes, a trunk of a tree; hence, a wooden tablet for writing on, a set of tablets, a book. β. The orig. form was probably scaudez, connected with scauda (later cauda), a tail, and the orig. sense a shoot or spray of a tree, thus identifying Lat. cauda with E. sout, the tail of a hare or rabbit. See Scut. - & SKUD, to spring forth, jut out; a secondary form from & SKAND, to spring; see Fick, i. 806, 807. Der. cod-i-fy, cod-fic-at-ion; also cod-ic-il, q. v.

CODICIL, a supplement to a will. (L.) Used by Warburton, Divine Legation, bk. iv. note 22 (R.) - Lat. codicillus, a writing-tablet, a memorial, a codicil to a will. - Lat. codic-, stem of codex, a tablet, a memorial, a content to a will. - Lat. contec, stem of contex, a tablet, code; with addition of the dimin. suffix -illus. See Code.

 CODLING (1), a young cod. (E.?) M. E. codlyng. 'Hic mullus, a codlyng;' Wright's Vocab. i. 189. 'Codlynge, fysche, morus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 85. Formed from cod (1) by help of the dimin. suffix -ling; cf. duck-ling.
 CODLING (2), CODLIN, a kind of apple. (E.) In Shak. Tw.

Nt. i. 5. 167, where it means an unripe apple. Bacon mentions quadins as among the July fruits; Essay 46, Of Gardens. Formed from cod (2) by help of the dimin. sufix ling; compare codlings in the sense of 'green peas' (Halliwell) with the word pease cod, shewing that codlings are properly the young pods. Compare also A.S. cod-appel, 'a quince-pear, a quince, malum cydoneum; MS. Cott. Cleop. fol. 44 a (Cockayne). ¶ This is Gifford's explanation in Cleop. fol. 44 a (Cockayne). ¶ This is Gifford's explanation in his ed. of Ben Jonson, iv. 24. He says: 'codling is a mere diminutive of cod, and means an involucre or kele, and was used by our old writers for that early state of vegetation when the fruit, after shaking off the blossom, began to assume a gobular or determinate form.

See Cod (2). [+] COEFFICIENT, coöperating with; a math. term. (L.) R. quotes coefficiency from Glanvill, Vanity of Dogmatising, c. 12 (A.D. 1655).-Lat. co-, for con, i.e. cum, with; and efficient-, stem of

And see Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, pp. 135, 224, 297. = O. F. cofre, also cofin, a coffer. The older form is cofin; the like change of n to in cofin; E. Forder form is cofin and the coffer of the coffer. r is seen in E. order, F. ordre, from Lat. ordinem. Thus coffer is a doublet of coffin. See Coffin. Der. coffer-dam.

COFFIN, a chest for enclosing a corpse. (F., -L., -Gk.) Originally any sort of case ; it means a pie crust in Shak. Tit. And. v. 2. 189. M. E. cofin, coffin. The pl. cofines is in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 135. – O. F. cofin, a chest, case. – Lat. cophinum, acc. of cophinus, a basket. - Gk. nóquros, a basket; Matt. xiv. 20, where the Vulgate version has cophinos and Wyclif has cofyns.

COG (1), a tooth on the rim of a wheel. (C.) M.E. cog, kog. 'Scariaballum, kog;' Wright's Vocab. i. 180. 'Hoc striabellum, a cog of a welle,' id. p. 233. 'Cogge of a mylle, scarioballum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 85. And see Owl and Nightingale, l. 85. – Gael. and Irish cog, a mill-cog; W. cocos, cocs, cogs of a wheel. The Swed. kugge, a cog is pathage of Caltic origin. B The origin sense was probable a cog, is perhaps of Celtic origin.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense was probably notch, as preserved in Ital cocca, F. coche, the notch of an arrow. Note also the sense of 'hollowness' in O. Gael. coca, void, empty,

W. corgio, to make void, to trick, pretend. - W. corg, empty, vain. See Coax, Cockney. COCHENT, powerful, convincing. (L.) In More, Immortality of the Soul, bk. i. c. 4.—Lat. cogene., stem of cogenes, pres. part. of cogere, to compel. -Lat. co, for con, which for cum, with; and -igere, the form assumed in composition by Lat. agere, to drive. See Agent.

Der. cogene-y. COGITATE, to think, consider. (L.) Shak. has cogitation, Wint. Ta. i. 2. 271. But it also occurs very early, being spelt cogitacium in the Ancren Riwle, p. 288 .- Lat. cogitatus, pp. of cogitare, to think. Cogitare is for coagitare, i.e. to agitate together in the mind. "Lat. co., for con, which for cum, with, together; and agitare, to agitate, frequentative of agere, to drive. See Agitate, Agent.

Der. cogitat-ion, cogitat-ive. COGNATE, of the same family, related, akin. (L.) In Howell's Letters, bk. iv. lett. 50. Bp. Taylor has cognation, Rule of Conscience, bk. ii. c. 2; and see Wyclif, Gen. xxiv. 4. - Lat. cognatus, allied by blood, akin. - Lat. co-, for con, which for cum, together; and gnatus, born, old form of natus, pp. of gnasei, later nasei, to be born. - & GAN, to produce. See Nation, Nature, Generation, Kin.

COGNISANCE, knowledge, a badge,  $(F_{..}-L)$  We find constants in the sense of 'badges' (which is probably a scribal error for conisances) in P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 185; also conoi sounce, Gower, C. A. iii. 56. Cognisance for 'knowledge' occurs in the spurious piece called Chaucer's Dream, l. 3092.-O.F. connoissance, knowledge; at a later time a g was inserted to agree more closely with the Latin; see cognoissance in Cotgrave. = O. F. connois-sant, knowing, pres. pt. of O. F. constre, to know. = Lat. cognoscere, to know.-Lat. co., for con, i.e. cum, together; and gnoscere, to know, cognate with E. know. See Know. Der. From the same F. verb we have cognis-able, cognis-ant.

COGNITION, perception. (L.) In Shak. Troil. v. 2. 63. Spelt cognicion, Sir T. More, Works, p. 42. - Lat. cognitionem, acc. of cognitio, a finding out, acquisition of knowledge. - Lat. cognitus, pp. of cognoscere, to learn, know. - Lat. co-, for con, which for cum, together ; and gnoscere, to know, cognate with E. know. See Know. And see Cognisance.

COGNOMEN, a surname. (L.) Merely Latin, and not in early use. Cognominal occurs in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. iii. c. 24. § 3. - Lat. cognomen, a surname. - Lat. co-, for con, i.e. cum, together with ; and gnomen, nomen, a name. See Noun, Name.

COHABIT, to dwell together with. (L.) In Holland, Suetonius, p. 132. Barnes has cohabitation, Works, p. 322, col. 1. - Lat. cohabi-tare, to dwell together. - Lat. co., for con, i.e. cum, with; and habitare, to dwell. See Habitation, Habit. Der. cohabit-at-ion.

COHERE, to stick together. (L.) In Shak. Meas. ii. 1. 11.-Lat. cohærere, to stick together. - Lat. co., for con, i. e. cum, together; and hærere, to stick. Cf. Lithuanian gaisz-ru, to delay, tarry (Fick, i. 576); also Goth. usgaisjan, to terrify. - V GHAIS, to stick fast. See Aghast. Der. coher-ent, coher-ent-ly, coher-ence; also, from the pp. cohasus, we have cohes-ion, cohes-ive, cohes-ive-ness.

COHORT, a band of soldiers. (F., -L.) In Shak. K. Lear, i. a. 162. - F. cohorts, 'a cohort, or company... of souldiers;' Cotgrave. - Lat. cohortem, acc. of cohors, a band of soldiers. The orig. sense of cohors was an enclosure, a sense still preserved in E. court, which is a doublet of cohort; see Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. ii. 277.-Lat. co-, for con, i. e. cum, together; and hort-, a stem which appears in Lat. kortus, E. garik and garden, Gk.  $\chi \delta \rho ros$ , a court-yard, enclo-sure.  $- \checkmark$  GHAR, to seize, grasp, enclose; see Curtius, i. 246; Fick, i. 82. F. coif, coiffe, Roquefort; spelt coiffe, Cotgrave. -Low Lat. cofa, a cap;also spelt cuphia, cofea, cofa. -M. H. G. huffe, hupfe, O. H. G. chuppá, chupphá, a cap worn under the helmet.  $\beta$ . This word is, as Diez points out, a mere variant of M. H. G. koff, O. H. G. chuph, a cup, lated to F. and Coiffe, cocordingly a doublet of cup See Cup related to E. cup. Coif is, accordingly, a doublet of cup. See Cup. Dor. coiff-ure. [+]

COIGN, a corner. (F., -L.) In Shak. Macb. i. 6. 7. - F. coing, given by Cotgrave as another spelling of coin, a corner; he also gives the dimin. coignet, a little corner. The spellings coign, coing, were convertible. - Lat. cuneus, a wedge. See Coin. COIL (1), to gather together. (F., -L.) 'Coil'd up in a cable;'

Beaum. and Fletcher, Knight of Malta, ii. 1.-O. F. coillir, cuillir, cueillir, to collect; whence also E. cull. - Lat. colligere, to collect. See Cull, Collect. Der. coil, sb.

hollow, W. cogan, a bowl, and W. cuch, a boat. See Cock (4), Cock (5), and Cockle (1). Der. cog-wheel. COG (2), to trick, delude. (C.) Obsolete. Common in Shak; see Merry Wives, iii. 1. 123. 'To shake the bones and cog [load] the crafty dice; 'Turbervile, To his Friend P. Of Courting (R.) – Geoileid, a stir, movement, noise. – Gael. and Ir. goil, to boil, rage, COIL (2), a noise, bustle, confusion. (C.) Like many half-slang words, it is Celtic. It occurs frequently in Shak.; see Temp. i. 2. 207. Gael. goil, boiling, fume, battle, rage, fury; O. Gael. goill, war, fight; Irish goill, war, fight; Irish and Gael. goileam, prattle, vain tattle; Gael.

9044. = O. F. coin, a wedge, a stamp upon a coin, a coin, is so name from its being stamped by means of a wedge. - Lat. cursus, a wedge; related to Gk. winos, a peg, a cone; also to E. hone; Curtius, i. 195. See Cone, Hone. A doublet of coign, a corner, q. v. Der. coinage, coin, verb.

COINCIDE, to agree with, fall in with. (L.) In Wollaston. Relig. of Nature, s. 3; the word coincident is in Bp. Taylor, On Repentance, c. 7, s. 3. - Lat. co-, for con, i. e. cum, together with ; and incidere, to fall upon. - Lat. in, upon; and cadere, to fall. See Cadence. Der. coincid-ent, coincid-ence.

COIT, another spelling of Quoit, q. v. COKE, charred coal. (Unknown.) Not in early use, unless it is to be identified with M. E. colke, the core of an apple, which I much doubt, notwithstanding the occurrence of prov. E. coke, the core of an apple. 'Coke, pit-coal or sea-coal charred ;' Coles, Dict. ed. 1684. B. Perhaps a mere variety of cake; we talk of a lump of earth as being caked together; see Cake. There is no evidence for connecting the word with Swed. koka, a clod of earth, Icel. kökkr, a ball, lump, which are words of a different origin; see Cock (2). COLANDER, a strainer. (L.) 'A colander or strainer; 'Holland, Plutarch, p. 223. Also in Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Georg. ii. 328; see also his tr. of Ovid, Metam. bk. xii. 1, 588. [Also spelt cullender.] A coined word; evidently formed from the stem colant- of the pres. part. of Lat. colare, to strain. - Lat. colum, a strainer, colander, sieve. Of unknown origin.

COLD, without heat, chilled. (E.) M. E. cold, cald, kalde; Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, pp. 251, 283.-O. Northumbrian cald, Matt. x. 42; A.S. ceald. + Icel. kaldr. + Swed. kall. + Dan. kold. + Du. koud. + Goth. kalds. + G. kall.  $\beta$ . The Swed. kall prob. stands for kald, by assimilation; still the d is suffixed, as in Lat. gelidus, and a shorter form appears in E. cool, chill, and in Icel. kala, to freeze. See Cool, Chill. Der. cold-ly, cold-isk, cold-ness. COLE, COLEWORT, cabbage. (L.) For the syllable -wort, see Wort. M. E. col, caul; spelt cool in Palladius on Husbandry, bk. ii. st. 32. The comp. cole-plantes is in P. Plowman, B. vi. 288. - A. S. cawel, cawl; see numerous examples in Gloss to Cockayne's Leechdoms. Not an E. word. - Lat. caulis, a stalk, a cabbage. + Gk. anulos, a stalk; lit. a hollow stem, cf. Gk. noilos, hollow, cognate with E. kollow. - V KU, to swell, to be hollow. See Curtius, i. 192. See Hollow. ¶ The numerous related Teutonic words, including G. kohl, are all alike borrowed from the Latin. Cole is also spelt kail, q. v. COLEOPTERA, an order of insects. (Gk.) A modern scientific term, to express that the insects are 'sheath-winged.'-Gk. roleó-s, roleó-v, a sheath, scabbard; and  $\pi \tau \epsilon \rho$ -óv, a wing. Perhaps roleós is related to roilos, hollow; but this is doubtful. The Gk.  $\pi \tau \epsilon \rho \delta v$  is for  $\pi \epsilon \tau - \epsilon \rho o v$ , from  $\checkmark$  PAT, to fly; see Feather. Der. coleopter-ous.

COLIC, a pain in the bowels. (F., -L., -Gk.) Also spelt cholic; Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 83. Properly an adjective, as in 'collick paines;' Holland, Pliny, bk. xxii. c. 25 (Of Millet). – F. colique, adj. 'of the chollick,' Cotgrave; also used as sb. and explained by 'the chollick, a painful windinesse in the stomach or entrailes.' – Lat. colicus, affected with colic. - Gk. Roulinos, suffering in the colon. - Gk. Roulow, the colon, intestines. See Colon (2).

COLLEUM, a bad spelling of Colosseum ; see Colossus. COLLABORATOR, a fellow-labourer. (L.) A modern word ; suggested by F. collaborateur, and formed on a Latin model.-Lat. collaborator, a modern coined word, formed by suffixing the ending -or to collaborat-, the stem of collaboratus, pp. of collaborare, to work together with - Lat. col-, for con- before i, which for cum, together

With ; and laborars, to labour, from the sb. labor. See Labour. COLLAPSE, to shrink together, fall in. (L.) The sb. is in much later use than the verb, and is omitted in Todd's Johnson; Richardson's three examples give only the pp. collapsed, as in 'collapsed state,' Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 588. This pp. is a translation into English of the Lat. collapsus, pp. of collabi, to fall together, fall in a heap.-Lat. col-, put for con- before I, which is for cum, with; and labi, to glide down, lapse. COLLATION, a comparison; formerly, a conference. (F.,-L.) The verb collate, used by Daniel in his Panegyric to the King, was hardly borrowed from Latin, but rather derived from the sb. collation, which was in very common use at an early period in several senses. See Chaucer, C. T. 8199; tr. of Boethius, pp. 125, 165. The common M. E. form was collacion. - O. F. collasion, collation, a conference, discourse; Roquefort. - Lat. collationem, acc. of collatio, a bringing together, conferring. - Lat. collatum, supine in use with the verb conferre, to bring together, but from a different root. - Lat. col-, for con, i, e. cum, together with ; and latum, supine used with the verb ferre, to The older form of latum was doubtless tlatum, and it was bring. connected with the verb tollers, to take, bear away; so that the Lat. tlatus = Gk.  $\tau \lambda \eta \tau \delta s$ , borne. -  $\checkmark$  TAL, to lift, sustain; whence also E. tolerate, q. v. college, collect. COLLECT, vb., to gather together. (F., -L.) In Shak. K. John, iv. 2. 142. [But the sb. collect is in early use, spelt collecte in the Ancren Riwle, p. 20. This is derived from Lat. collecta, a collection in money, an assembly for prayer; used ecclesiastically to signify a collect; on which see Trench, On the Study of Words. Lat. collecta is the fem. of the pp. collectus, gathered together.] - O. F. collecter, to collect money; Roquefort. - Low Lat. collectare, to collect money.-Lat. collecta, a collection in money.-Lat. collecta, fem. of collectus, gathered together, pp. of colligere, to collect. - Lat. col-, for con, i. e. cum, together; and legere, to gather, to read. COLLIDE, to dash together. (L.) Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, p. 274, uses both collide and collision (R.)-Lat. collidere, pp. collisus, to clash or strike together. - Lat. col-, for con, i.e. cum, together; and ladere, to strike, dash, injure, hurt. See Lesion. Der. collis-ion

COLLIER, a worker in a coal-mine. (E.) M. E. colier, colger; spelt also kolier, cholier, William of Paleme, ed. Skeat, 2520, 2523. Formed from M. E. col, coal, by help of the suffix -er, with the insertion of i for convenience of pronunciation, just as in law-yer for law-er, bow-yer for bow-er, saw-yer for saw-er. Thus the strict spelling should, by analogy, have been col-yer. See further under Coal. Der. collier-y

COLLOCATE, to place together. (L.) In Hall's Chron. Rich. III, an. 3. - Lat. collocatus, pp. of collocare, to place together. - Lat. col-, for con, i.e. cum, together; and locare, to place. - Lat. locus, a place. See Locus. Der. collocat-ion. Doublet, couch, q. v.

COLLOP, a slice of meat. (E. ?) 'Colloppe, frixatura, carbo-nacium, carbonella;' Prompt. Parv. p. 88. The pl. coloppes is in P. Plowman, B. vi. 287. Cf. Swed. kalops, O. Swed. kollops, slices of beef stewed; G. klopps, 'a dish of meat made tender by beating;' Flügel. The tendency in English to throw back the accent is well known; and the word was probably originally accented as colop; or we may imagine a change from dop to colp, whence colop. If so, the word is prob. E. or at least Low German; cf. Du. Moppen, to knock, beat, klop, a knock, stroke, beating, stamp. This Du. kloppen is G. klopfen, to beat, related to G. klopfe, kloppe, a beating, klopf, a clap, a stroke; and these are but secondary forms from Du. klappen, to clap, smack, G. klappen, to clap, strike; cf. Swed. klappa, to strike, and E. elap. See Clap. ¶ I should claim the word as truly English because elop is still used, provincially, as a variation of

And since the word can be thus accounted for from a Teutonic source, And since the word can be thus accounted to nom a return to solver, it is altogether unnecessary to derive it, as some do, from the O. F. colpe (mod. F. coup), a blow, which is from the Lat. colaphus, a buffet. COLLOQUY, conversation. (L.) Used by Wood, Athenæ Oxo-nienses (R.) In the midst of this divine colloguy; Spectator, no. 237.

[Burton and others use the verb to collogue, now obsolete.] - Lat. colloquium, a speaking together. - Lat. coll:qui, to confer, converse with. -Lat. col., for con, i.e. cum, together; and loqui, to speak. + Gk. λάσκειν (root λas), to resound. + Skt. lap, to speak. - & LAK, to resound, speak; Curtius, i. 195. Der. colloqui-al. colloqui-al-ism. COLLUDE, to act with others in a fraud. (L.) Not very common. It occurs in Milton's Tetrachordon (R.) The sb. collusion is commoner; it is spelt collucyoun in Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 1. 1195 .- Lat. colludere, pp. collusus, to play with, act in collusion with .- Lat. col-, for con, i.e. cum, with; and ludere, to play. See Ludiorous. Der. collus-ion, collus-ive, collus-ive-ly, collus-ive-ness; all from the pp. collusus.

COLOCYNTH, COLOQUINTIDA, the pith of the fruit of a species of cucumber. (Gk.) Coloquintida is in Shak. Othello, i. 3. 355. 'Colocynthis, a kind of wild gourd purging phlegm ; ' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Coloquintida stands for colocynthida (with hard e before y), and is the acc. case of colocynthis, the Latinised form of Gk. Rohowwells, the plant colocynth, of which the acc. case is Rohowwbiba. The construction of new nominatives from old accusatives was a common habit in the middle ages. Besides kohokuvolis, we find also κολόκυνθοε, κολοκύντη, a round gourd or pumpkin. β. According to Hehn, cited in Curtius, i. 187, the kolon-wrn, or gourd, was so named from its colossal size; if so, the word is from the same source

COLON (1), a mark printed thus (:) to mark off a clause in a sentence. (Gk.) The word occurs in Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674; and in Ben Jonson, Discoveries, Bellum Scribentium. The mark occurs much earlier, viz. in the first English book ever printed, Caxton's Recuyell of the Historyes of Troye, 1471. - Gk. x@Aov, a member, limb, clause; the mark being so called as marking off a limb or clause of a sentence.

COLON (2), part of the intestines. (Gk.) It occurs in Coles's Dict. 1684. – Gk.  $s \hat{w} \lambda \sigma r$ , a part of the intestines. Cf. Lat.  $c \bar{u} l u s$ , the fundament. [Perhaps a different word from the above.] Der.

COLONEL, the chief commander of a regiment. (F., - Ital., - L.) It occurs in Milton, Sonnet on When the Assault was intended to the City. Massinger has colonelship, New Way to pay Old Debts, Act iii. sc. 2. [Also spelt coronel, Holland's Pliny, bk. xxii. c. 23; which is the Spanish form of the word, due to substitution of r for I, a common linguistic change; whence also the present pronuncia-tion curnel.] - F. colonel, colonnel; Cotgrave has: 'Colonnel, a colonell or coronell, the commander of a regiment.' Introduced from Ital. in the 16th century (Brachet). - Ital. colonello, a colonel; also a little column. The colonel was so called because leading the little column or company at the head of the regiment. 'La campagnie colonelle, ou la colonelle, est la première compagnie d'un regiment d'infanterie; Dict. de Trevoux, cited by Wedgwood. The Ital. colonello is a dimin.

of Ital. colonna, a column. - Lat. columna, a column. See Column, Colonnade. Der. colonel-ship, colonel-cy. [+] COLONNADE, a row of columns. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) Spelt colonade (wrongly) in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. - F. colonnade (not in Cotgrave). - Ital. colonnata, a range of columns. - Ital. colonna, COLONY, a body of settlers. (F.,-L.) The pl. colonyes is in Spenser, View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed. p, 614, col. 2. – F. colonie, 'a colony;' Cotgrave. - Lat. colonia, a colony. - Lat. colo-nus, a husbandman, colonist. - Lat. colore, to till, cultivate land. Root uncertain ; perhaps from 🖌 KAL, to drive ; Fick, i. 527. Der. coloni-al; also colon-ise, colon-is-at-tion, colon-ist.

COLOPHON, an inscription at the end of a book, giving the name or date. (Gk.) Used by Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, sect. 33, footnote 2. - Late Lat. colophon, a Latinised form of the Gk. word.-Gk. κολοφών, a summit, top, pinnacle; hence, a finishing stroke. - A/KAL, perhaps meaning to rise up; whence also Gk. Kol-árry, a hill, Lat. cel-sus, lofty, and E. kol-m, a mound. See Curtius, i. 187; Fick, i. 527. See below. COLOPHONY, a dark-coloured resin obtained from distilling turpentine. (Gk.) Spelt colophonia in Coles's Dict. ed. 1684. Named from Colophon, a city of Asia Minor.-Gk. κολοφάν, a summit ; see above quotation for it. 'That self-same night, when all were lock'd in COLOSSUS, a gigantic <sup>Statue</sup>. (Gk.) Particularly used of the sleep, The sad Bohea, who stay'd awake to weep, Rose from her statue of Apollo at Rhodes. - Lat. colossus. - Gk. κολοσσόs, a great B. Curtius (i. 187) regards notogoos as standing for notonstatue. yos, and as related to nolon-aros or nolin-aros, a long, lean, lank person. Cf. Lat. grac-ilis, slender; Skt. krag-aya, to make meagre, krig, to become thin. Fick, i. 524, rather doubts the connection with Lat. gracilis, yet suggests a comparison with E. lank, q. v. Der. coloss-al; coloss-eum, also written coliseum.

COLOUR, a hue, tint, appearance. (F., -L.) M. E. colur, colour. 'Rose red was his colur;' K. Horn, ed. Lumby, 1. 16. -O. F. colur, colour (F. couleur). - Lat. colorem, acc. of color, colour, tint. The orig. sense of color was covering, that which covers or hides; cf. Lat. cel-are, oc-cul-tare, to hide, conceal, cover. - & KAL, to hide, conceal; whence the latter syllable of E. con-ceal. See ¶ Similarly Skt. varna, colour, is from the root var. Helmet. to cover, conceal; Curtius, i. 142. See Fick, i. 527. Der. colour, verb, colour-able, colour-ing, colour-less.

COLPORTEUR, a pedlar. (F.,-L.) Modern, and mere French. F. colporteur, one who carries things on his neck and shoulders. - F. col, the neck; and porteur, a porter, carrier. - Lat. collum, the neck; and portare, to carry. See Collar and Porter. Der. colport-age.

COLT, a young animal, young horse. (E.) Applied in the A. V. (Gen. xxxii. 15, Zech. ix. 9) to the male young of the ass and camel. M. E. colt, a young ass; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 3. – A. S. colt, a young camel, a young ass; Gen. xxxii. 15. + Swed. dial. kullt, a boy, lad; cf. Swed. kull, a brood, a hatch. The final t is clearly a later affix, and the earliest Low G. form must have had the stem cul; prob. allied to Goth. kuni, kin, race, and also to E. child.  $-\sqrt{GA}$ , to produce. See Kin, Child. See Curtius, i. 215. Der. colt-ick. COLTER ; see Coulter.

COLUMBINE, the name of a plant. (F., -L.) Lit. 'dove-like.' M. E. columbine, Lyric Poems, ed. Wright, p. 26; Prompt. Parv. p. 88 .- O. F. colombin, dove-like. Cotgrave gives: 'Colombin, the herbe colombine; also colombine or dove-colour, or the stuff whereof 'tis made.' - Low Lat. columbina, as in 'Hec cclumbina, a columbyne;' Wright's Vocab. i. 225.-Lat. columbinus, dove-like; fem. columbina. - Lat. columba, a dove.  $\beta$ . Of unknown origin. Cf. Lat. palumbes, a wood-pigeon; Gk. nohupBos, nohupBis, a diver, a sea-bird; Skt. kidamba, a kind of goose. See Culver. COLUMIN, a pillar, body of troops. (L.) Also applied to a perpendicular set of horizontal lines, as when we speak of a column of figures, or of printed matter. This seems to have been the earliest use in English. 'Columne of a lefe of a boke, columna; Prompt. Parv. p. 88. - Lat. columna, a column, pillar; an extension from Lat. columen, a top, height, summit, culmen, the highest point. Cf. also collis, a hill, celsus, high. - & KAL, to rise up; whence also colophon and holm. See Colophon, Holm, Culminate. Der. column-ar; also colonnade, q. v.

COLURE, one of two great circles on the celestial sphere. (L.,-Gk.) So named because a part of them is always beneath the horizon; the word means clipped, imperfect, lit. curtailed, docktailed. Used by Milton, P. L. ix. 66.-Lat. colurus, curtailed ; also, a colure. - Gk. nohoupos, dock-tailed, stump-tailed, truncated; as sb., a colure. – Gk.  $\kappa o\lambda$ -, stem of  $\kappa \delta\lambda os$ , docked, clipped, stunted; and obpć, a tail. ¶ The root of  $\kappa \delta\lambda os$  is uncertain; Curtius (ii. 213) connects it with Lat. cellere, to strike, as seen in percellere and culter; Fick, i. 240, gives 🖌 SKAR, to cut, shear.

COM-, a common prefix; the form assumed in composition by the Lat. prep. cum, with, when followed by b, f, m, or p. See Con. COMLA, a deep sleep, trance, stupor. (Gk.) 'Coma, or Coma somnolentum, a deep sleep;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Late Lat. coma, a Latinised form of Gk. sûµa, a deep sleep. – Gk. souµdou, to put to sleep. See Cometery. Der. comat-ose, comat-ous; from wupar, stem of κώμα, gen. κώματοε. COMCB, a toothed instrument for cleansing hair. (E.) M. E. camb, comb. Spelt camb, Ormulum, 6340. 'Hoc pecten, combe;' Wright's Vocab. i. 199. Spelt komb, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 337. A cock's crest is another sense of the same word. 'Combe, or other lyke of byrdys;' Prompt. Parv. p. 88. It also means the crest of a hill, of a dyke, or of a wave; as in 'the dikes comb;' Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2564. In honey-comb, the cells seem to have been likened to the slits of a comb. - A.S. camb, a comb, crest; camb helmes, the crest of a helmet ; camb on hætte, or on helme, a crest on the hat or helmet; see the examples in Bosworth. + Du. kam, a comb, crest. + Icel. kambr, a comb, crest, ridge. + Dan. kam, a comb, ridge, cam on a wheel. + Swed. kam, a comb, crest. + O. H. G. kambo, champe, M. H. G. kamp, G. kamm, a comb, crest, ridge, cog of a wheel.  $\beta$ . Perhaps named from the gaps or the teeth in it; cf. Gk. γόμφοε, a peg. γαμφή, a jaw; Skt. jambha, jaw, teeth, jabk, to gape. See Fick, iii. 41. Der. comb, verb, comb-er.

COMB, COOMB, a dry measure ; 4 bushels. (F. - L. ?) 'Coomb or Comb, a measure of corn containing four bushels ;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Etym. uncertain ; the A. S. cumb, a liquid measure, in Bosworth, appears to be a fiction. It is more likely a corruption of F. comble, full to the top, given in Cotgrave. 'Comble, sb. masc. (d'an boisseau, d'une mesure, of a bushel, of a measure), heaping.' 'Comble, adj. mf. 1. heaped, quite full ; fig. la mesure est comble, the measure of his iniquities is full. 2. fig. (d'un lieu), crammed, well crammed ;' French Dict. by Hamilton and Legros. Surely this establishes the connection with bushel. – Lat. cumulatus, pp. of cumulare, to heap up. See Cumulate. [*]

COMBAT, to fight, contend, struggle against. (F., -L.) A verb in Shak. Much Ado, ii. 3. 170; a sb. in Merry Wives, i. 1. 165. He also has combatant, Rich. II, i. 3. 117. -O. F. combatre, 'to combate, fight, bicker, battell;' Cot. - F. com-, from Lat. com-, for cum, with; and F. battre, from Lat. batwere, to beat, strike, fight. See Batter. Der. combat, sb., combat-ant (F. combatant, pres. part. of combatre); combat-ive, combat-ive-ness.

COMBIG, a hollow in a hill-side. (C.) Common in place-names, as Faracombe, Hascombe, Compton (for Combe-ton). These names prove the very early use of the word, but the word is not A. S.; it was in use in England beforehand, being borrowed from the Celtic inhabitants of Britain. – W. com [pron. hoom], a hollow between two hills, a dale, dingle; occurring also in place-names, as in Com byehan, i. e. little combe. + Corn. com, a valley or dingle; more correctly, a valley opening downwards, from a narrow point. + Irish estmar, a valley, the bed of an estuary. The orig sense was probably 'hollow'; cf. Gk. swap, a cavity. –  $\checkmark$  KU, to contain. See Cave. COMBINE, to join two things together, unite. (L.) In Shak.

COMBINE, to join two things together, unite. (L.) In Shak. K. John, v. a. 37. M. E. combinen, combynen. 'Combynyn, or copulyn, combino, copulo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 88. – Lat. combinare, to combine, unite; lit. to join two things together, or to join by two and two. – Lat. com-, for cam, together; and binus, pl. bini, two and two. See Binary. Dar. combin-at-ion.

COMBUSTION, a burning, burning up. (F., -L.) In Shak. Macb. ii. 3. 63. Also combustious, adj. Venus and Adonis, 1162. Sir T. More has combustible, Works, p. 264 d. The astrological term combust was in early use; Chaucer, Tro. and Cress. iii. 668.-F. combustion, 'a combustion, burning, consuming with fire;' Cotgrave. -Lat. combustionem, acc. of combustio, a burning.-Lat. combustus, pp. of combustere, to burn up.-Lat. comb., for cum, together, wholly; and wrere, pp. ustus, to burn.+Gk. even, to singe; aver, to kindle.+ Skt. usk, to burn.-  $\checkmark$  US, to burn: Fick, i. 513; Curtius, i. 496. Der. From the same source, combust-ible, combust-ible-ness.

COME, to move towards, draw near. (E.) M. E. cumen, comen, to come; pt. t. I cam or com, thu come, he cam or com, we, ye, or thei comen; pp. cumen, comen, come; very common. -A. S. cuman, pt. t cam, pp. cumen. + Du. komen. + Icel. koma. + Dan. komme. + Swed. komma. + Goth. kwiman. + O. H. G. queman, M. H. G. komen, G. kommen. + Lat. uenire (for guen-ire or guem-ire). + Gk. Balveu, to come, go (where  $\beta$  is for gw, later form of g). + Skt. gam, to come, go; also gá, to come, go.  $- \sqrt{GAM}$ , or GA, to come, go; Fick, i. 63; Curtus, i. 74; q. v. Der. comely, q. v.

COMEDY, a humorous dramatic piece. (F., -L., -Gk.) Shak. has comedy, Merry Wives, iii. 5.76; also comedian, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 194. Spelt commedy, it occurs in Trevisa, i. 315. - O. F. comedie, 'a comedy, a play; 'Cotgrave - Lat. comadia. - GK. κωμφδia, a comedy, ludicrous spectacle. - Gk. κωμο-, crude form of κώμοs, a banquet, a jovial festivity, festal procession; and φδή, an ode, lyric song: a comedy was originally a festive spectacle, with singing and dancing.  $\beta$ . The Gk. κωμου meant a banquet at which the guests lay down or rested; cf. κοίτη, a bed, κοιμώω, I put to bed or put to sleep. The word κώμη, a village (E. kome), is a closely related word, and from the same root; see Curtins, i. 178. See Cemestery, Home. For the latter part of the word, see Ode. Der. comedi-an. Closely related is the adj. comic. from Lat. comicus, Gk. κωμικόs, belonging to comedy; whence. later. comic-ad (Levins).

whence, later, comic-al (Levins). COMELY, becoming, seemly, handsome. (E.) M. E. cumlich, cumelich, comlich, comli, comeliche. Spelt comeliche, Will. of Palerne, ed. Skeat, 962, 987; comly, id. 294. Also used as an adv., id. 659; but in this sense comly'y also occurs; Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 847. The comparative was comloker, and the superl. comlokest or comlisst. – A. S. cymlic, comely, Grein, i. 177; cymlice, adv. id. – A. S. syme, adj. suitable, comely; and lie, like. B. The adj. cyme, suitable, is derived from the verb cuman, to come. For the change of meaning, see Bocome. The word also occurs in O. Du. and O. H. G., but is now obsolete in both languages. Der. comeli-ness.

COMET, a star with a hair-like tail. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. comete, Rob. of Glouc. pp. 416, 548. -O. F. comete, 'a comet, or blazing star;' Cotgrave. But it must have been in early use, though not given in Burguy or Roquefort. - Lat. comete, a cometes, a comet. -

Gk.  $south \tau \eta s$ , long-haired; hence, a comet. - Gk.  $south \tau \eta s$ , the hair of the head; cognate with Lat. coma, the same. For etymology, see Fick, ii. 40. Der. comet-ar-y. GP The Lat. cometa occurs frequently in the A.S. Chron. an. 678, and later. But the loss of final a was probably due to French influence.

COMMENSURATE.

COMIFIT, a confect, a dry sweetmeat. (F., -L.) In Shak. I Hen. IV, iii. 1. 253. Spelt comfitte, Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 14. Corrupted from confit, by the change of n to m before f. M. E. confite, so spelt in Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 121, l. 75. -O. F. confit, it. 'steeped, confected, fully soaked;' Cotgrave. This word is the pp. of confire, 'to preserve, confect, soake;' id. -Lat. conficere, to put together, procure, supply, prepare, manufacture; pp. confectus. -Lat.com-, for cum, with, together; and facere, to make. See Fact. Comfit is a doublet of confect, q. v. Der. confit-ure.

COMFORT, to strengthen, encourage, cheer. (F., -L.) See Comfort in Trench, Select Glossary. Though the verb is the original of the sb., the latter seems to have been earlier introduced into English. The M. E. verb is conforten, later comforten, by the change of n to m before f. It is used by Chaucer, Troil, and Cress. iv. 694, v. 234, 1397. The sb. confort is in Chaucer, Prol. 773, 776 (or 775, 778); but occurs much earlier. It is spelt cunfort in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 185.-O. F. conforter, to comfort; spelt cunforter in Norm. F.; see Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson, 59, 284.-Low Lat. canfortare, to strengthen, fortify; Ducange.-Lat. con-, for cum, together; and fortis, strong. See Fort. Der. comfort, sb.; comfortable, comfort-ably, comfort-less.

COMIC, COMICAL ; see under Comedy.

COMITY, courtesy, urbanity. (L.) An unusual word. 'Comity, gentleness, courtesy, urbanity. (L.) An unusual word. 'Comity, [Not from French, but direct from Latin, the suffix -ity being formed by analogy with words from the F. suffix-itd, answering to Lat.-itatem]. – Lat. comitatem, acc. of comitas, urbanity, friendliness. – Lat. comit, friendly, affable.  $\beta$ . Origin uncertain; more likely to be connected with Skt. cabla, affable, Vedic gagma, kind (see Fick, i. 544), than with Skt. kam, to love; the vowel o being long. COMMA, a mark of punctuation. (L. – Gk.) In Shak. Timon, COMMA, a mark of punctuation. (L, -GK.) In Shak. Timon, i. 1. 48; Hamlet, v. 2. 42. – Lat. comma, a separate clause of a sentence, – Gk.  $\kappa \delta \mu \mu \alpha$ , that which is struck, a stamp. clause of a sentence, comma. – Gk.  $\kappa \delta \pi r \epsilon w$ , to hew, strike. –  $\sqrt{SKAP}$ , to hew, cut; whence also E. capon, q. v. See Fick, i. 238; Curtius, i. 187. And see Chop. COMMAND, to order, bid, summon. (F., – L.) M. E. commanden, comaunden; Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, 260. – O. F. comander, less commonly commander, to command. – Lat. commendere, to entrust to one's charge; in late Latin, to command, order, enjoin; Ducange. Thus command is a doublet of Commend, q. v. Der. command-ant (F. command-sr-ship, command-ing, command-ing-ly; also command-ant (F. commandant, pres. pt. of command-ing-ly; also command-mant (F. commander, M. E. command-ment, in Old Eng. lany, ed. Morris, p. 33). COMMEMORATE, to celebrate with solemnity. (L.) Occurs in Mede's Works, bk. ii. c. 6; Mede died A. D. 1638. [The sb. commemoration is in Tyndal's Works, p. 469, col. 2.] – Lat. commemoratus, pp. of commemorare, to call to memory, call to mind. – Lat. com-, for cum, together; and memorare, to mention. – Lat. memor, mindful. See Memory. Der. commemorar-ion, commemorat-ive. COMMENCE, to begin. (F., -L.) In Shak. Macb. i. 3. 133.

COMMENNENCE, to begin. (F., -L.) In Shak. Macb. i. 3. 133. [In Middle-English, the curiously contracted form commen (for commence) occurs frequently; see P. Plowman, B. i. 161, iii. 103. The sb. commencement was in very early use; see Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 30.] - F. commencer, 'to commence, begin, take in hand;' Cotgrave. Cf. Ital. cominciare, whence it is clear that the word originated from a Low Lat. form cominitiare, not recorded; for the change in spelling, see Brachet. - Lat. com., for curn, together; and initiare, to begin. -Lat. initiam, a beginning. See Initial. Der. commence-man. (F.)

COMMEIND, to commit, entrust to, praise. (L.) M. E. commenden, comenden; Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 4267. - Lat. commendare, pp. commendatus, to entrust to one's charge, commend, praise. - Lat. com-, for cum, with, together; and mandare, to commit, entrust, enjoin (a word of uncertain origin). Der. commend-at-ion (used by Gower, C. A. iii. 145); commend-able, commend-abl-y, commend-able-ness, commend-a-tory. GP Commend is a doublet of command; the former is the Latin, the latter the French form.

COMMENSURATE, to measure in comparison with, to reduce to a common measure. (L.) 'Yet can we not thus commensurate the sphere of Trismegistus; 'Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 3, end. -Lat. commensuratus, pp. of commensurare, to measure in comparison with; a coined word, not in use, the true Lat. word being commentiri, from the same root. -Lat. com-, for cum, with; and mensurare, to measure. See further under Measure. Der. commensurate (from pp. commensuratus), used as an adj.; commensurate-ly, commensurate ness, commensuratus, commensurable-y, commensurate-i-ty. It, ii. 1. 65. The pl. sb. commenter is in Sir T. More, Works, p. 152c. -F. commenter, 'to comment, to write commentaries, to expound;' Cotgrave. - Lat. commentari, to reflect upon, consider, explain; also commentare. - Lat. commentus, pp. of comminisci, to devise, invent, design. - Lat. com-, for sum, with; and the base min-, seen in me-min-i, a reduplicated perfect of an obsolete verb menëre, to call to mind; with the inceptive deponent suffix -sci. - / MAN, to think ; cf. Skt. man, to think. See Mind. Der. comment, sb., comment-ar-y, comment-al-or.

COMMERCE, trade, traffic. (F., -L.) In Hamlet, iii. 1. 110. The primary notion of putare was to make clean, ' then to bring to cleanprimary notion of party was to make clean, then to bring to below ness, to make clear, and according to a genuinely Roman conception, to reckon, to think (cp. I reckon, a favourite expression with the Americans for I suppose); Curtius, i.  $349. - \checkmark PU$ , to purify; see Pure. Der. comput-at-ion, comput-able. Doublet, count, q. v. COMRADE, a companion. (Span., -L.) In Shak. Hamlet, i.

3. 63. [Rather introduced directly from the Span. than through the French; the F. camerade was only used, according to Cotgrave, to signify 'a chamberfull, a company that belongs to, or is ever lodged in, one chamber, tent, [or] cabin.' And this F. comerade was also taken from the Spanish; see Brachet. Besides, the spelling camrado occurs in Marmyon's Fine Companion, 1633; see Nares's Glossary, ed. Halliwell and Wright.] - Span. camarada, a company, society; also, a partner, comrade ; camaradas de navio, ship-mates. - Span. camara, a chamber, cabin. - Lat. camara, camera, a chamber. See Chamber.

CON (1), to enquire into, observe closely. (E.) M.E. cunnien, to test, examine. Of Jesus on the cross, when the vinegar was offered to him, it is said : 'he smeihte and cunnede therof' = he took a smack of it and tosted it, i. e. to see what it was like. - A. S. cunnian, to test, try, examine into; Grein, i. 171. B. CONCERT, to plan with others, arrange.  $(F_{..}-Ital.,-L.)$ [Often confused in old writers with consort, a word of different origin. Thus Spenser: 'For all that pleasing is to living eare Was there consorted in one harmone; 'F.Q. ii. 12, 70. See Consort.] * Will any one persuade me that this was not . . a concerted affair ? Tatler, no. 171 (Todd). - F. concerter, ' to consort, or agree together:' Cotgrave. - Ital. concertare, to concert, contrive, adjust; cf. concerto, concert, agreement, intelligence. B. Formed to all appearance as if from Lat. concertare, to dispute, contend, a word of almost opposite meaning, but the form of the word is misleading. The e (after con) really stands for s. Y. We find, accordingly, in Cotgrave : 'Con-serte, a conference ;' also 'Conserté, ordained, made, stirred, or set up;' and 'Consertion, a joining, coupling, interlacing, intermingling. And, in Italian, we have also consertare, to concert, contrive, adjust ; conserto, concert, harmony, union, also as pp., joined together, interwoven. In Spanish, the word is also miswritten with c, as in someertar, to concert, regulate, adjust, agree, accord, suit one another; concertarse, to deck, dress oneself; all meanings utterly different from what is implied in the Lat. concertare, to contend, certare, to struggle. 8. The original is, accordingly, the Lat. pp. consertus, joined together, from conservere, to join together, to come to close quarters, to compose, connect. - Lat. con-, for cum, together; and serere, to join together, connect. Cf. serta corona, a wreathed garland, with the Span. concertarse, to deck, dress oneself. See Sories. Der. concert, sb. concerto (Ital.), concert-ina.

The fact that the Teutonic and Lat. forms both begin with k (or c) points to the loss of initial s; and the orig. sense was probably 'the little digging animal,' from  $\checkmark$  SKAN, to dig, an extension of  $\checkmark$  SKA, to cut; Fick, i. 802. Cf. Skt. khan, to dig, an extension of  $\checkmark$  SKA, to cut; Fick, i. 802. to dig, pierce ; khani, a mine ; and see Canal. [+]

COO, to make a noise as a dove. (E.) 'Coo, to make a noise as turtles and pigeons do; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. 'Croo, or Crookel, to make a noise like a dove or pigeon;' id. A purely imitative word, formed from the sound. See Cuckoo.

COOK, to dress food ; a dresser of food. (L.) M. E. coken, to cook; P.Plowman, C. xvi. 60; cook, a cook, Chaucer. The verb seems, in English, to have been made from the sb., which occurs as A. S. cóc, Grein, i. 167. The word so closely resembles the Latin, that it must have been borrowed, and is not cognate. - Lat. coguere, to cook, coguus, a cook. + Gk. #érrew, to cook. + Skt. pach, to cook. -PAK, for KWAK, to cook, ripen. Der. cook-er-y = M. E. cokerie, Gower, C. A. ii. 83.

OOOL, slightly cold. (E.) M. E. col, cole; Rob. of Glouc. p. 131. A. S. col, cool, Grein, i. 167. + Du. koel. + Icel. kul, a cold breeze. + Swed. kylig, cool + Dan. köl, kölig, cool, chilly. + G. kukl. Allied to Cold and Gelid. Der. cool, verb; cool-ly, cool-ness, cool-er. [†] COOLIE, COOLY, an East Indian porter. (Hindustani.) A modern word, used in descriptions of India, &c. Hind. kúli, a labourer, porter, cooley; Tartar kúli, a slave, labourer, porter, cooley; Hindustani Dict. by D. Forbes, ed. 1859, p. 309. [†]

COOMB, a dry measure; see Comb (2).

COOP, a box or cage for birds, a tub, vat. (L.) Formerly, it also meant a basket. M. E. cupe, a basket. Cupen he let fulle of flures '= he caused (men) to fill baskets with flowers ; Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, 435; see also ll. 438, 447, 452, 457. -A.S.cypa, a basket; Luke, ix. 17.+Du. kuip, a tub. + Icel. kupa, a cup, bowl, basin.+O. H. G. ehvofa, M. H. G. kuofe, G. kufe, a coop, tub, vat.  $\beta$ . Not a Germanic word, but borrowed from Lat. cupa, a tub, vat, butt, cask; whence also F. cuve. The Lat. cupa is cognate with Gk. story, a hole, hut; and Skt. store, a pit, well, hollow; Curtius, i. 194. The word Cup, q. v., seems to be closely related. Der.

coop, verb ; coop-er, coop-er-age. CO-OPERATE, to work together. (L.) Sir T. More has the pres. part. cooperant (a F. form), Works, p. 383e. - Late Lat, cooperatus, pp. of cooperari, to work together; Mark, xvi. 20 (Vulgate). -Lat. co-, for com, i.e. cum, together; and operare, to work. See Operate. Der. cooperat-or, cooperant (pres. pt. of F. cooperer, to work together, as if from Lat. cooperare), cooperat-ion, cooperat-ive.

CO-ORDINATE, of the same rank or order. (L.) ' Not subordinate, but co-ordinate parts; ' Prynne, Treachery of Papists, pt. i, p. 41.-Lat, co-, for com, i. e. cum, together; and ordinatus, pp. of fullica :<sup>6</sup> Prompt. Parv. p. 95. Cf. A. S. cy/a, butco ; Ælfric's Glossary (Nomina Avium). + Du. koet, a coot. β. The word is, apparently, of Celtic origin ; cf. W. cwtiar, a coot, lit. a bob-tailed hen, from cwta, short, docked, bob-tailed, and iar, a hen. Cf. also W. cwiau, to shorten, dock; ewtog, bob-tailed; ewtiad or ewtyn, a plover; Gael. eut, a bob-tail, eutach, short, docked. The root is seen in the verb to cut. See Cut.

COPAL, a resinous substance. (Span., - Mexican.) · Copal. kind of white and bright resin, brought from the West Indies; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. It is a product of the Rhus copallinum, a native of Mexico: Engl. Cyclopædia – Span. copal, copal. – Mexican copalli, resin. 'The Mexican copalli is a generic name for resin;' Clavigero's Hist. of Mexico, tr. by C. Cullen, ed. 1787; vol. i. p. 33. COPE (1), a cap, hood, cloak, cape. (F., - Low Lat.) M.E.

Claygero's rist. of Mexico, if. by C. Cuiten, cu. 1707; vol. 1, p. 35- COPE (1), a cap, hood, cloak, cape. (F., = Low Lat.) M.E. eate, cope. 'Hee capa, a cope; 'Wright's Vocab. i. 249. And see Ancren Riwle, p. 56; Havelok, 429. Gower has: 'In kirtles and in copes riche;' and again: 'Under the cope of heven;' Conf. Amantis, ii. 46, 102; iii. 138. The phrase 'cope of heaven' is still in use in poetry. However afterwards differentiated, the words cope, the words cope. sape, and cap were all the same originally. Cope is a later spelling of sape: cf. rope from A. S. rip. -O. F. cape. - Low Lat. capa, a cape. See Cape. Der. cop-ing, cop-ing-stone, i. e. capping-stone. [†] COPE (2), to vie with, match. (Du.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 2.

60. The orig, sense was 'to bargain with,' or 'to chaffer with.' 'Where Flemynges began on me for to cry, Master, what will you copen or by ?' i. e. bargain for or buy; Lydgate, London Lickpeny, st. 7, in Spec. of English, ed. Skeat, p. 25. A word introduced into England by Flemish and Dutch traders. – Du. hoopen, to buy, purchase; orig. bargain. This word is cognate with A. S. ceátian, to cheapen, from A. S. ceáp, a bargain. See Oheap. COPIOUS, ample, plentiful. (F., -L.) 'A copyons oost,' Wy-clif, I Maccab. xvi. 5; where the Vulgate has 'exercitus copiosus.'-O. F. copieus, fem. copieuse, ' copious, abundant ;' Cot. - Lat. copiosus, plentiful; formed with suffix -osus from Lat. copi-a, plenty. The Lat. copia probably stands for coopia; from co- (for com, i. e. cum, together, exceedingly), and the stem op., seen in opes, riches, and in in-opia, want. See Opulent. Der. copious-ly, -ness; and see copy.

COPPER, a reddish metal. (Cyprus.) M. E. coper, Chaucer, C. T. 13220 (Chan. Yeom. Tale). = Low Lat. cuper; Lat. cuprum, copper; a contraction for enprium æs, i.e. Cyprian brass. See Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. ii. 257. - Gk. Κύπριο, Cyprian; from Κύπροs, Cyprus, a Greek island on the S. coast of Asia Minor, whence the Romans obtained copper; Pliny, xxxiv. 2. ¶ From the same source is G. kupfer, Du. koper, F. cuivre, copper. Der. copper-y, soper-plate; also copperas, q. v. COPPERAS, sulphate of iron. (F., -L.) Formerly applied also to sulphate of copper, whence the name. M. E. coperose. 'Co-perose, vitriola;' Prompt. Parv. p. 91. - O. F. coperose, the old spelling of couperose, which Cotgrave explains by 'copres,' i. e. copperas. Cf. Ital. copparosa, Span. caparrosa, copperas. B. Diez supposes these forms to be from Lat. cupri rosa, lit. copper-rose, a supposition which is greatly strengthened by the fact that the Greek name for copperas was xálmardoe, lit. brass-flower. Add to this that the F. couperose also means 'having a rash on the face' or 'pimpled.' See above. COPPICE, COPPY, COPSE, a wood of small growth.

(F.,-L.,-Gk.) Coppy (common in prov. Eng.) and copse are both corruptions of coppice. Coppice is used by Drayton, The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 4. It should rather be spelt copice, with one  $p_{-}$ O.F. copeiz, also copeau, wood newly cut; Roquefort. Hence applied to brushwood or underwood, frequently cut for fuel, or to a wood kept under by cutting. Cf. Low Lat. copecia, underwood, a coppice. - O. F. coper (Low Lat. copare), to cut; mod. F. couper. -O. F. cop, formerly colp, colps, a blow, stroke; mod. F. coup. - Low Lat. colpus, a stroke; from Lat. colaphus, a blow. - Gk. uuhapos, a blow; a word of uncertain origin.

COPULATE, to couple together. (L.) Used as a pp. by Bacon, Essay 39. Of Custom. - Lat. copulatus, joined; pp. of copulare. - Lat. copula, a band, bond, link ; put for co-ap-ul-a, a dimin. form, with suffix -u- - Lat. co., for com, i. e. cum, together; and ap-ere, to join, only preserved in the pp. apus, joined. See Apt. Der. copulat-ion, copulat-ive ; and see couple.

COPY, an imitation of an original.  $(F_{.,-}L)$ [The orig. signification was ' plenty ;' and the present sense was due to the multi-plication of an original by means of numerous copies.] M. E. copy, copie. 'Copy of a thinge wretyn, copia;' Prompt. Parv. p. 92. "Grete copy [i.e. abundance] and plente of castelles, of hors, of metal, and of hony;' Trevisa, i. 301.-F. copie, 'the copy of a writing; also store, plenty, abundance of;' Cotgrave.-Lat. copia, plenty. See Copious. Der. copy, verb ; copi-er, copy-ist, copy-hold, copy-right. COQUETTE, a vain flirt. (F.,-L.,-Gk.)

is in particular a great mistress of that part of oratory which is is in particular a great minutes of that part of oralory which is called action; 'Spectator, no. 247. 'Affectations of coquetry;' id. no. 377. – F. coquette, 'a pratling or proud gossip;' Cot. The fem. form of coquet, the dimin. of coq, meaning 'a little cock,' hence vain as a cock, strutting about; like prov. E. cocky. Cf. 'coqueter, to swagger or strowte it, like a cock on his owne dung-hill;' Cot. – F. coq, a cock. See Cock (1). Der. coquet-ry, coquett-ish, coquettish-ly, coquett-ish-ness. CORACLE, a light round wicker boat. (Welsh.) See Southey, Madoc in Wales, c. xiii, and footnotes. In use in Wales and on the Severn. - W. corwgl, cwrwgl, a coracle ; dimin. of W. corwg, a trunk, a carcase, curwg, a frame, carcase, boat. Cf. Gael. curachan, a coracle, dimin. of curach, a boat of wicker-work; Gael. and Irish corrack, a fetter, a boat.

CORAL, a secretion of certain zoophytes. (F., -L., -Gk.) Chaucer has corall, Prol. 158. - O. F. coral; see Supp. to Roquefort. -Lat. corallum, coral; also spelt corallium. - Gk. κοράλλιον, coral. Of uncertain origin. Der. corall-ine; coralli-ferous, i.e. coral-bearing, from the Lat. suffix -fer, bearing, from ferre, to bear.

CORBAN, a gift. (Hebrew.) In Mark, vii. 11. – Heb. gorbán, an offering to God of any sort, whether bloody or bloodless, but particularly in fulfilment of a vow; Concise Dict. of the Bible. Cf.

Arabic gurbán, a sacrifice, victim, oblation; Rich. Dict. p. 1123. [+] CORBEL, an architectural ornament. (F., -L.) Orig. an orna-ment in the form of a basket. Cotgrave translates F. corbeau by *a raven; also, a corbell (in masonry); ' and F. mutules by ' brackets, corbells, or shouldering pieces.' [The O. F. form of corbeau was corbel, but there were two distinct words of this form, viz. (1) a little raven, from Lat. corwas, a raven, and (2) a little basket.] - O. F. corbel, old spelling of corbeau, a corbel; answering to mod. Ital. corbello, a small basket, or to Ital. corbella, a little pannier; given in Florio. - Low Lat. corbella, a little basket ; Ducange. - Lat. corbis, a basket (cf. Ital. corba, a basket), a word of uncertain origin. F. corbeille, a little basket, from Lat. corbicula, a dimin of corbis. Corbel and corbeil differ in the form of the suffixes. See Corvette. [†]

CORD, a small rope. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. corde, cord; Cursor Mundi, 2247. - 0. F. (and mod. F.) corde. - Low Lat. corda, a cord; Lat. chorda. - Gk. xopon, the string of a musical instrument; orig. a string of gut.  $\beta$ . The Gk. xopon, gut, is related to xoldoes, guts, to Lat. haru-spez, i. e. inspector of entrails, and to Icel. gorn or garnir, guts, which is again related to E. yarn. See Curtius, i. 250. See Yarn. Doublet, chord, q. v. Der. cord, verb; cord-age (F. cordage), cord-on (F. cord-on); also cordelier (F. cordelier, a twist of rope, also a Gray Friar, from cordeler, to twist ropes, which from O. F. cordel, dimin. of O. F. corde); also perhaps corduroy, a word orruption of corde du roi, or king's cord. [†] CORDIAL, hearty, sincere. (F., =L.) Also used as a sb. 'For gold in phisik is a cordial;' Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 445. – F. cordial, m. cordiale, f. 'cordiall, hearty;' Cot. Cf. 'Cordiale, the herbe motherwort, good against the throbbing or excessive beating of the heart ;' id. - Lat. cordi-, stem of cor, the heart ; with suffix -alis. Der. cordial-ly, cordial-i-ty. See Core.

CORDWAINER, a shoemaker. (F., - a town in Spain.) 'A counterfeit earl of Warwick, a cordwainer's son ; ' Bacon, Life of Hen, VII, ed. Lumby, p. 177, l. 15. 'Cordwaner, alutarius;' Prompt. Parv. p. 92. It orig. meant a worker in cordewan or cordewane, i. e. leather of Cordova; thus it is said of Chaucer's Sir Thopas that his shoon [shoes] were 'of Cordewane;' C. T. Group B, 1922.-O. F. cordoanier, a cordwainer. - O. F. cordoan, cordouan, cordouan, Cordovan leather; Roquefort.-Low Lat. cordoanum, Cordovan leather; Ducange - Low Lat. Cordoa, a spelling of Cordova, in Spain (Lat. Corduba), which became a Roman colony in s. c. 152. CORE, the central part of fruit, &c.  $(F_{-}, -L_{-})$  'Core of frute, avala; Prompt. Parv. p. 93. 'Take quynces ripe . . . but kest away the core;' Palladius on Husbandry, bk. xi. st. 73.-O. F. cor, coer, the heart - Lat. cor, the heart. See Heart.

CORIANDER, the name of a plant. (F., -L., -Gk.) See Exod. xvi. 31; Numb. xi. 7. - F. coriandre, 'the herb, or seed, coriander;' Cot. - Lat. coriandrum; Exod. xvi. 31 (Vulgate version); where the d is excrescent, as is so commonly the case after n = Gk. κορίαννον, κορίανον, also κόριον, coriander. β. Said to be derived from Gk. sopus, a bug, because the leaves have a strong and bug-like smell (Webster).

CORK, the bark of the cork-tree. (Span., -L.) Corkbarke, cortex; Corketre, suberies; Prompt. Parv. p. 93.-Span. corcko. cork ; whence also Du. kurk, and Dan. and Swed. kork. = Lat. acc. corticem, bark, from nom. cortex (formed just like Span. pancho, the "The coquet (sic) paunch, from Lat. acc. panticem). Root uncertain; but cf. Skt. kritti.

see Curtius, i. 181; Fick, i. 524. Der. cork, verb.

CORMORANT, a voracious sea-bird. (F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 1. 38. 'Cormeraum's, cornus marinus, cormeraudus.' Prompt. Parv. p. 91. The t is excressent, as in ancient. - F. cormoran, Cotgrave; a word which is related to Port. corvomarinho, Span. cuervo marino, a cormorant, lit. sea-crow. - Lat. coruus marinus, which occurs as an equivalent to mergulus (sea-fowl) in the Reichenau Glosses, of the 8th century. ¶ This explanation, given in Brachet, is the best; another one is that F. cormoran is due to a prefix cor- or corb-, equivalent to Lat. cornus, pleonastically added to Bret. morvran (W. mor/ran), a cormorant. The Breton and W. words are derived from Bret. and W. mór, the sea, and bran, a crow, by the usual change of b into v or f. After all, it is probable that F. cormoran, though really of Lat. origin, may have been modified in spelling by the Breton word.

CORN (1), grain. (E.) M. E. corn, Layamon, i. 166. The pl. cornes is in Chaucer, C. T. 15520. - A.S. corn, Grein, i. 166. + Du. kores. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. kors. + Goth. kours. + G. kors. + Lat. granum. + Russ. zerno. And cf. Gk. γύριs, fine meal. β. The original signification was 'that which is ground; 'from  $\sqrt{GAR}$ , to grind. See Fick, i. 564; Curtius, i. 142. See Grain, Kernel. CORN (2), an excressence on the toe or foot. (F., -L.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 5. 19. - F. corne. 's horn. Shak. Romeo, i. 5. 19.-F. corne, 'a horn; ... a hard or horny swelling in the backepart of a horse;' Cotgrave.-Low Lat. corna, a horn, projection.-Lat. cornu, horn, cognate with E. horn, q.v. Der. corn-e-ous, horny; from the same source are cornea, q. v., cornel, q.v., corner, q.v., cornei, q.v., cornelian, q.v.; also corni-gerous, hom-bearing, from Lat. ger-ere, to bear; corni-c-ul-aie, hom-shaped, horned, from Lat. corniculatus, horned; cornu-copia, q. v. CORNEA, a horny membrane in the eye. (L.) Lat. cornea, fem. of corneus, horny; from cornu, a horn. See Corn (2).

CORNEL, a shrub; also called dogwood. (F.,-L.) • Cornels and bramble-berries gave the rest; 'Dryden, Ovid's Metam. bk. i. 1. 136. - F. cornille, 'a cornell-berry; 'Cotgrave; cornillier, 'the long cherry, wild cherry, or cornill-tree;' id. Cornille was also spelt cornoalle and cornoille ; and cornillier was also cornoaller and cornoiller ; id. -Low Lat. corniola, a cornel-berry; cornolium, a cornel-tree. - Lat. cornum, a comel-berry; cornus, a comel-ree, so called from the hard, horny nature of the word. - Lat. cornu, horn. See Corn (2). CORNELLIAN, a kind of chalcedony. (F., -L.) Formerly spelt cornaline, as in Cotyrave. - F. cornaline, 'the cornix or cornaline, a flesh-coloured stone; 'Cotgrave. Cf. Port. cornelina, the cornelian-stone.  $\beta$ . Formed, with suffixes -el- and -in-, from Lat. cornu, a horn, in allusion to the semi-transparent or horny appearance. [Similarly the onys is named from the Gk. orug, a finger-nail.] y. From the same source, and for the same reason, we have the Ital. corniola, a cornelian; whence the G. carneol, a cornelian, and the E. carneol, explained by 'a precious stone' in Kersey's and Bailey's Dictionaries. The change from corneol to carneol points to a popular etymology from Lat. carneus, fleshy, in allusion to the flesh-like colour of the stone. And this etymology has even so far prevailed as to cause cornelian to be spelt carnelian. ¶ It is remarkable that the cornel-tree is also derived from the Lat. cornn, and is similarly called corniolo in Italian. Indeed, in Meadows' Ital. Dict. we find both 'corniolo, a cornel, cornelian-tree,' and ' corniola, a cornel, cornelian-cherry, as well as 'corniola, a cornelian.' [+]

CORNER, a horn-like projection, angle. (F., -L.) M. E. corner; Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 1185.-O. F. corniere, 'a corner; Cotgrave. - Low Lat. corneria, a corner, angle; cf. Low Lat. corneirus, angular, placed at a corner. - Low Lat. corna (O. F. corne), a corner, angle; closely connected with Lat. cornu, a horn, a projecting point. See Corn (2). Der. corner-ed.

CORNET, a little horn; a sort of officer. (F.,-L.) M.E. cornet, cornette, a horn; Octovian Imperator, Il. 1070, 1100; in Weber's Met. Rom. iii. 202, 207. It afterwards meant a troop of horse (because accompanied by a cornet or bugle), Shak. I Hen. VI, iv. 3. 25; lastly, an officer of such a troop. - F. cornet, also cornette, a little horn; dimin. of F. corne, a horn. See Corn (2).

CORNICE, a moulding, moulded projection. (F., - Ital., - L., -Gk.) In Milton, P. L. i. 716. - F. corniche, 'the cornish, or brow of a wall, piller, or other peece of building ;' Cot. [Littre gives an O. F. form cornice, which agrees still better with the E. word.]-Ital. cornice, a cornice, border, ledge. - Low Lat. cornicem, acc. of cornix, a border; which is, apparently, a contraction from Low Lat. coronia, a square frame. - Gk. nopenvis, a wreath, the cornice of a building; literally an adj. signifying 'crooked ;' and obviously related to Lat. corona, a crown. See Crown.

CORNUCOPIA, the horn of plenty. (L.) Better cornu copia, horn of plenty; from cornu, horn; and copia, gen. of copia, plenty. See Corn (2) and Copious.

a hide ; Skt. drit, to cut off, cut. This would give of KART, to cut ; COBOLLA, the cup of a flower formed by the petals. (L.) A scientific term. - Lat. corolla, a little crown; dimin. of corona, a crown.

See Crown. And see below. COROLLARY, an additional inference, or deduction. (L.) 'A corolarie or mede of coroune,' i.e. present of a crown or garland; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, ed. Morris, b. iii. pr. 10, p. 91.- Lat. corol-larium, a present of a garland, a gratuity, additional gift; also an additional inference; prop. neuter of corollarius, belonging to a garland. - Lat. corolla, a garland ; see above.

CORONAL, a crown, garland. (F.,-L.) In Drayton's Pastorals, Ecl. 2. Properly an adj. signifying 'of or belonging to a crown.'-F. coronal, 'coronall, crown-like;' Cotgrave.-Lat. coronalis, belonging to a crown. - Lat. corona, a crown. See Crown. CORONATION, a crowning. (L.) 'Corownynge or coronacion; Prompt. Parv. p. 93. [Not a F. word, but formed by analogy with F. words in -tion.] - Late Lat. coronacio, a coined word, from Lat. coronare, to crown, pp. coronatus. - Lat. corona, a crown. See Crown. CORONER, an officer appointed by the crown, &c. (L.) 'Coroners and bailiffs;' Stow, King Stephen, an. 1142. The word coroner occurs first in a spurious charter of King Athelstan to Beverley, dated A.D. 925, but really of the 14th century; see Diplomatarium Angli-cum, ed. Thorpe, p. 181, last line. Not formed from Lat. coronarius, belonging to the crown; but formed by adding -er to the base coron-of the M. E. verb coronen, to crown. Thus coroner is 'a crown-er,' and the equivalent term crowner (Hamlet, v. 1. 4) is quite correct. Both coroner and crowner are translations of the Low Lat. coronator, a coroner, which see in Blount's Law Dict. and in Ducange .-Lat. coronator, lit. one who crowns. - Lat. coronare, to crown. - Lat.

corona, a crown. See Crown. [†] CORONET, a little crown. [†] With coronettes upon theyr heddes;' Fabyan, Chron. an. 1432. Formed as a dimin., by help of the suffix -et (or -ette) from the O. F. corone, a crown. – Lat. corona, a crown. See Crown.

CORPORAL (1), a subordinate officer. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 1. 128. A corrupt form for caporal. - F. caporal, 'the corporall of a band of souldiers;' Cot. - Ital. caporale, a chief, a corporal; whence it was introduced into French in the 16th century (Brachet); cf. Low Lat. caporalis, a chief, a commander; Ducange. - Ital. capo, the head; whence not only caporale, but numerous other forms, for which see an Ital. Dict. - Lat. caput, the head; see Capital, and Chief. Der. corporal-ship.

CORPORAL (2), belonging to the body. (L.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 80. - Lat. corporalis, bodily; whence also F. corporel. - Lat. corpor-, stem of corpus, the body; with suffix alis. See Corpse. Der. From the same stem we have corpor-ate, corpor-ate-ly, corporat-ion, corpor-e-al (from Lat. corporeus, belonging to the body), corpor-e-al-ly, corpor-e-al-i-ty; and see corps, corpse, corpulent, corpuscle, corset, corslet.

CORPS, CORPSE, CORSE, a body. (F.,-L.) Corps, i. e. a body of men, is mod. French, and not in early use in English. Corse is a variant of corpse, formed by dropping p; it occurs in Fabyan's Chron. K. John, an. 8; and much earlier, in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris. p. 28, 1. 10. Corpse was also in early use; M. E. corps, Chaucer, C. T. 2821; and is derived from the old French, in which the p was probably once sounded. = 0. F. corps, also cors, the body.=Lat. corpus, the body; cognate with A.S. krif, the bowels, the womb, which occurs in E. midriff, q. v. See Fick, i. 526.

Der. corpul-ent, q.v.; corpus-c-le, q.v.; corset, corslet. OORPULEENT, stout, fat. (F., -L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4.464. - F. corpulent, corpulent, gross; 'Cotgrave. - Lat. corpulentus, fat. - Lat. corpus, the body; with suffixes -l- and -ent-. See Corps. Der. corpulent-ly, corpulence. CORPUSCLE, a little body, an atom. (L.) A scientific term.

In Derham, Physico-Theology, bk. i. c. 1. note 2. - Lat. corpusculum, an atom, particle; double dimin. from Lat. corpus, the body, by help of the suffixes -c- and -ul-. See Corps. Der. corpuscul-ar.

CORRECT, to put right, punish, reform. (L.) M. E. correcten; Chaucer, C. T. 6242 .- Lat. correctus, pp. of corrigere, to correct.-Lat. cor-, for con- (i. e. cum) before r; and regere, to rule, order. See Regular. Der. correct-ly, correct-ness, correct-ion. correct-ion-al, correct-ive, correct-or; also corrig-ible, corrig-enda (Lat. corrigenda, things to be corrected, from corrigendus, fut. pass. part. of corrigere). CORRELATE, to relate or refer mutually. (L.) In Johnson's Dictionary, where it is defined by 'to have a reciprocal relation, as father to son.' Cf. 'Spiritual things and spiritual men are correlatives, and cannot in reason be divorced; ' Spelman, On Tythes, p. 141 (R.) These are mere coined words, made by prefixing cor-, for con-(i. e. cum, with) before relate, relative, &c. Ducange gives a Low Lat. correlatio, a mutual relation. Sec Relate. Der. correlat-ive, correlat-ion.

CORRESPOND, to answer mutually. (L.) Shak. has corresponding, l. e. suitable ; Cymb. iii. 3. 31 ; also corresponsive, fitting, Troil. prol. 18. These are coined words, made by prefixing cor- (for con-, i.e. cum, together) to respond, responsive, &c. COSTAL, relating to the ribs. (L.) Errors, b. iv. c. 10. § 5. Formed, with suffix -al, from Lat. costa, a rib. See Coast.

COSTERMONGER, an itinerant fruit-seller. (Hybrid.) Formerly costerd-monger or costard-monger; the former spelling occurs in Drant's Horace, where it translates Lat. pomarius in Sat. ii. 3. 227. It means costard-seller. 'Costard, a kind of apple. Costard-monger, a seller of apples, a fruiterer;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Much earlier, we find : 'Costard, appulle, quirianum ;' Prompt. Parv. p. 94. 'Costardmongar, fruyctier,' i. e. fruiterer ; Palsgrave. A. The etymology of costard, an apple, is unknown; the suffix -ard is properly O. F., so that the word is presumably O. F., and possibly related to O. F. cost, cost, also spice; cf. G. kost, which not only means 'cost,' but also 'focd.' B. The word monger is E.; see Iron-¶ There is no reason whatever for connecting costard monger. with custard. The custard-apple mentioned in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1699 (R.) is quite a different fruit from the M. E. costard. [1

COSTIVE, constipated. (F.,-L.) 'But, trow, is he loose or costive of laughter?' Ben Jonson, The Penates. [It is difficult to account for the corrupt form of the word. It is more likely to have been corrupted from F. constipé than from the Ital. costipativo, a form not given in Florio. It would seem that constipt was first contracted to constip', then to costip', and lastly to costive by a natural substitution of -ive for the unfamiliar -ip. The loss of n before s occasions no difficulty, since it occurs in cost, from Lat. constare.] = F. constipe, constipated. - Lat. constipatus, pp. of constipare, to constipate. Constipate. Der. costive-ness. [***]

Constigate. Der. cositive-ness. ¶ But see Errata. COSTUME, a customary dress. (F., - Ital., -L.) A modern word. Richardson cites a quotation from Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dis. 12.-F. costume; a late form, borrowed from Italian.-Ital. costume. - Low Lat. costuma, contracted from Lat. acc. consultudinem, custom. Costume is a doublet of custom. See Custom.

COT, a small dwelling; COTE, an enclosure. (E.) • A lutel koi; 'Ancren Riwle, p. 362. Core, in Havelok, ll. 737, 1141. 'Hec casa, casula, a core; 'Wright's Vocab. i. 273. – A. S. core, a cot, den; 'tó leófa core' = for a den of thieves, Matt. xxi. 13. 'In corre Ginum,' into thy chamber; Northumbrian gloss to Matt. vi. 6. [Thus cot is the Northern, cote the Southern form.] We also find A.S. cyte, Grein, i. 181. + Du. kot, a cot, cottage. + Icel. kot, a cot, hut. + G. koth, a cot (a provincial word); Flügel's Dict. COULD, was able to; see Can. COULTER, the fore-iron of a plough. (L.) M.E. culter, colter; Chaucer, C. T. 3761, 3774, 3783. - A. S. culter, Ælf. Gloss. 8 (Bosworth); a borrowed word - Lat. culter, a coulter, knife; lit. a cutter. Cf. Skt. karttari, scissors ; karttriká, a hunter's knife ; from krit (base kart), to cut. - VKART, to cut, an extension of VKAR, to wound, shear; see Curtius, i. 181. Der. From the same source COUNCIL, an assembly. (F., -L.) In Shak. L. L. v. 2. 789. Often confused with coursel, with which it had originally nothing to do; council can only be rightly used in the restricted sense of 'as-sembly for deliberation.' Misspelt counsel in the following quotation. \* They shall deliver you vp to their counsels, and shall scourge you in their sinagoges or counsel-houses ; Tyndal, Works, p. 214, col. 2; cf. an assembly, session ; Cotgrave. - Lat. concilium, an assembly called together. - Lat. con-, for cum, together; and calare, to call. -  $\sqrt{KAL}$ , to call, later form of  $\sqrt{KAR}$ , to call; Fick, i. 521, 529. Der.

COUNSEL, consultation, advice, plan. (F., -L.) Quite dis-tinct from council, q. v. In early use. M. E. conseil, cunseil; Hawelok, 2862; Rob. of Glouc. p. 412.-O. F. conseil, conseil, consel. - Lat. consilium, deliberation. - Lat. consulere, to consult. See Consult. Der. counsel, verb ; counsell-or.

COUNT (1), a title of rank. (F,-L.) The orig. sense was 'companion.' Not in early use, being thrust aside by the E. word earl; but the fem. form occurs very early, being spelt cuntesse in the A. S. Chron. A. D. 1140. The derived word count, a county, occurs in P. Plowman, B. ii. 85. Shak. has county in the sense of count frequently; Merch. of Ven. i. 2. 49. - O. F. conte, better comte; Colgrave gives 'Conte, an earl,' and 'Comte, a count, an earle.' - Lat. acc. comitem, a companion, a count; from nom. comes.-Lat. com-, for cum, together; and u-um, supine of ire, to go. - / I, to go; cf. Skt.

(i, to go. Der. count-ess, count-y. COUNT (1), to enumerate, compute, deem. (F.,-L.) ME counten ; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 1730 ; also 1685. - O. F. cunter, conter, mod. F. conter. - Lat. computare, to compute, reckon. Thus count is a doublet of compute. See Compute. Der. count, sb.; count-er, one who counts, anything used for counting, a board on which money is counted.

COUNTENANCE, appearance, face. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. contenaunce, cuntenaunce, countenaunce; P. Plowman, B. prol. 24; Cursor Mundi, 3368. - O. F. contenance, which Cotgrave explains by 'the countenance, look, cheer, visage, favour, gesture, posture, be-haviour, carriage.'-Lat. continentia, which in late Lat. meant 'gesture, behaviour, demeanour;' Ducange.-Lat. continent-. stem of pres. part. of continere, to contain, preserve, maintain; hence, to comport oneself. See Contain.

COUNTER, in opposition (to), contrary. (F.,-L.) "This is counter;' Hamlet, iv. 5. 110; 'a hound that runs counter,' Com. Errors, iv. 2. 39. And very common as a prefix. - F. contre, against; common as a prefix - Lat. contra, against; common as a prefix. See Contra. COUNTERACT, to act against. (Hybrid; F. and L.) Counter-action occurs in The Rambler, no. 93. Coined by joining counter with act. See Counter and Act. Der. counteract-ion, counteract-ive, counteract-ive-ly agree;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - W. cyteno, to agree, to consent, to coincide. (The prefix cy-means 'together,' like Lat. cum.) [*] COTYLEDON, the seed-lobe of a plant. (Gk.) occurs in forfeit, q. v. COUNTERMAND, to revoke a command given. (F., -L.) Used by Fabyan, Chron. c. 245, near end. - F. contremander, 'to countermand, to recall, or contradict, a former command;' Cot. Compounded of contre, against; and mander, to command. - Lat. contra, against; and mandare, to command. See Mandate. Der. countermand, sh.

COUNTERPANE(1), a coverlet for a bed. (F.,-L.) A most corrupt form, connected neither with counter nor with pane, but with quilt and point. The English has corrupted the latter part of the word, and the French the former. The older E. form is counterpoin', as in Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 353. Bedsteads with silver feet, imbroidered coverlets, or counter points of purple silk ;' North's Plutarch, p. 39. 'On which a tissue counterpane was cast;' Drayton, The Barons' Wars, b. vi. - O. F. contrepoint, 'the back stitch or quilting-stitch; also a quilt, counterpoint, quilted covering;' Cot. β. Thus named, by a mistaken popular etymology, from a fancied connection with O. F. contrepointer, 'to worke the back-stitch,' id.; which is from contre, against, and pointe, a bodkin. But Cotgrave also gives 'coutrepointer, to quilt;' and this is a better form, point-ing to the right origin. In mod. F. we meet with the still more corrupt form courtepointe, a counterpane, which see in Brachet. y. The right form is contrepointe or contepointe, where contre is a variant (from Lat. culcitra) of the O. F. coute, quieute, or queute, a quilt, from Lat. culcita, the same as culcitra, a cushion, mattress, pillow, or quilt. See corre in Burguy, where the compound contepointe, kieutepointe, i. e. counterpane, is also given. - Low Lat. enleita puneta, a counterpane; lit. stitched quilt. Estque toral lecto quod supra ponitur alto Ornatus causa, quod dicunt culcita puncta;' Ducange. 8. Thus coutepointe has become courtepointe in mod. French, but also produced contrepoincte in Middle French, whence the E. derivative counterpoint, now changed to counterpane. See Quilt. The pp. punctus is from the verb pungere, to prick ; see Point.

COUNTERPANE (2), the counterpart of a deed or writing. (F., -L.; see Paun.) 'Read, scribe; give me the counterpane;' Ben Jonson, Bart, Fair, Induction. -O. F. con'repan, 'a pledge, gage, or pawne, esp. of an immoveable;' also 'contrepant, a gage, or coun-terpane;' Cotgrave. - F. contre, against; and pan, in the sense of 'a pawn or gage,' id.; just the same word as pan, 'a pane, piece, or pannell of a wall,' id. That is, the word is a compound of Counter and Again pat of counterpant against Pane. Counter and paum, not of counter and pane. See Pawn, Pane. COUNTERPART, a copy, duplicate. (F.,-L.) In S

In Shak. Sonnet 84. Merely compounded of counter and part. COUNTERPOINT, the composing of music in parts. (F., -L.)

'The fresh descant, prychsonge [read prycksonge], counterpoint;' Bale on The Revel, 1550, Bb 8 (Todd's Johnson). - O. F. contre-poinct, 'a ground or plain song, in musick;' Cot. - F. contre, against; and poinct (mod. F. poin'), a point. B. Compounded of counter and point: (mod. F. point), a point.  $\beta$ . Compounded of counter and point. Counterpoint in its literal and strict sense means point against point. In the infancy of harmony, musical notes or signs were simple points or dots, and in compositions in two or more parts were placed on staves, over, or against, each other;' Engl. Cycl. Div. Arts and Sciences, s.v.

COUNTERPOISE, the weight in the other scale. (F., -L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 3. 182. - F. contrepois, contrepoids. Cotgrave gives the former as the more usual spelling, and explains it by counterpois, equall weight.' Compounded of counter and poise, q.v.

Der. counter poise, verb. COUNTERSCARP, the exterior slope of a ditch. (F.) The interior slope is called the scarp. The word is merely compounded of counter and scarp. 'Bulwarks and counterscarps ;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 64. 'Contrescarps, a counterscarfe or counter-mure;' Cot. See Boarp.

COUNTERSIGN, to sign in addition, attest. (F., -L.) 'It was countersigned Melford; Lord Clarendon's Diary, 1688-9; Todd's Johnson. - F. contresigner, 'to subsigne;' Cot. - F. contre, over against; and signer, to sign. Compounded of counter and sign. Dor. countersign, sb. (compounded of counter and sign, sb.); countersign-at-ure.

COUNTERTENOR, the highest adult male voice. (F., - Ital., -L.) It occurs in Cotgrave, who has: 'Contretenewr, the counter-tenor part in musick.'-Ital. contratenore, a countertenor; Florio.-Ital. contra, against; and tenore, a tenor. See Counter and Tenor.

COUNTERVAIL, to avail against, equal. (F., -L.) In Shak.

COUNTRY, a rural district, region. (F.,-L.) In early use. M. E. contre, contree; Layamon's Brut, i. 54. - O. F. contree, country; with which cf. Ital. contrada. - Low Lat. contrata, contrada, country, β. This extenregion; an extension of Lat. contra, over against. sion of form can only be explained as a Germanism, 'as a blunder committed by people who spoke in Latin, but thought in German. Gegend in German means region or country. It is a recognised term, and it signified originally that which is before or against, what forms the object of our view. Now, in Latin, gegen (or against) would be expressed by contra; and the Germans, not recollecting at once the Lat. regio, took to translating their idea of Gegend, that which was before them, by contratum or terra contrata. This became the Ital. contrada, the French contrée, the English country.'-Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. ii. 307. Der. country-dance (not the same thing as contrs-danse), country-man. COUNTY, an earldom, count's province, shire. (F., -L.) M. E. counté, countee; P. Plowman, B. ii. 85. See Count (1).

COUPLE, a pair, two joined together. (F., -L.) M. E. couple, Gower, C. A. iii. 241. The verb appears very early, viz. in ' hupleo bobe togederes' = couples both together; Ancren Riwle, p. 78. - O. F. copie, later couple, a couple. - Lat. copula, a bond, band; contracted from co-ap-ul-a, where -ul- is a dimin. suffix. - Lat. co-, for com, i.e. cum, together; and O. Lat. apere, to join, preserved in the pp. aprus. See Apt. Der. ccuple, verb, coupl-ing, coupl-et. Doublet, copula. COURAGE, valour, bravery. (F., - L.) M. E. courage, corage; Chaucer, C. T. prol. 11, 22; King Alisaunder, 3559. - O. F. corage, couraige; formed with suffix -age (answering to Lat. -aticum) from the sb. cor, cuer, the heart. - Lat. cor (stem cordi-), the heart. See Cordial, and Heart. Der courage-cus, 4y, mess. COURLER, a runner. (F., -L.) In Shak. Macb. i. 7. 23. -O. F. courier, given in Cotgrave as equivalent to courrier, 'a post, or a poster.' - F. courir, to run.-Lat. currere, to run. See Current.

COURSE, a running, track, race. (F., -L.) M. E. course, cours; Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 4318; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1. 288. - O. E. cortais, cortois, seldom corteous. Spelt corteys, Will. of Paleme, 194, 2704; curteys, 231; curteyse, 406, 901.-O.F. cortois, curtois, curteis, courteous. = O. F. cort, curt, a court; with suffix -eis = Lat. -ensis. See Court. Der. courteous-ly, courteous-ness; also courtes-y, q. v.

COURTESAN, a prostitute. (Span.,-L.) Spelt courtezan, Shak. K. Lear, iii. 2. 79. - Span. corresona, a courtesan; fem. of adj. corresono, courteous, of the court. - Span. corres, courteous. - Span.

corte, court. See Court, Courteous. [†] COURTESY, politeness. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. cortaisie, corteisie, curtesie; spelt kurteisie, Ancren Riwle, p. 70.-O.F. cortoisie, curteisie, courtesy. - O. F. cortois, curteis, courteous. See Courteous.

COURTIER, one who frequents the court. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 2. 117. [Courteour, Gower, C. A. i. 89.] A hybrid word ; the suffix -ier is English, as in law-yer, bow-yer, saw-yer, coll-ier. The true ending is er, the -i- or -y- being interposed. See Court. COUSIN, a near relative. (F. -L.) Formerly applied to a Formerly applied to a kinsman generally, not in the modern restricted way. M. E. cosin, cousin; Rob. of Glouc. p. 91; Chaucer, C. T. 1133; first used in K.

"Within secret cover and noukes;' Holland, Ammianus, p. 77.-A.S. cofa, a chamber, Northumbrian gloss to Matt. vi. 6, xxiv. 26; a cave (Lat. spelunca), N. gloss to John, xi. 38. + Icel. koft, a hut, shed, convent-cell. + G. koben, a cabin, pig-sty.  $\beta$ . Remote origin uncertain ; not to be confused with cave, nor coop, nor cup, nor alcove, with all of which it has been connected without reason. Der. cove, verb, to over-arch. The obsolete verb cove, to brood (Richardson) is from quite another source, viz. Ital. covare, to brood; from Lat. cubare; see Covey. COVENANT, an agreement. (F.,-L.) M.E. cournant, cournaunt, covenand (with u for v); often contracted to conand, as in Barbour's Bruce. Spelt covenaunt, printed covenaunt, K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 2036. - O. F. convenant, covenant; Burguy, s. v. venir. Formed as a pres. pt. from convenir, to agree, orig. to meet together, assemble. -Lat. convenire, to come together. See Convene. Der. covenant, verb; covenant-er.

COVER, to conceal, hide, spread over. (F., -L.) M. E. coueren, keueren, kiueren (with u for v). Chaucer has covered, C. T. 6172 .-O. F. courir, couvrir, to cover; cf. Ital. coprire. - Lat. cooperire, to cover. - Lat. co-, for com, i. e. cum. together, wholly; and operire, to shut, hide, conceal.  $\beta$ . It is generally supposed that Lat. aperire, to open. and operire, to shut, are derived from & PAR, to complete, make (cf. Lat. parare, to prepare), with the prefixes ab, from, and ob, over, respectively; see Curtius, i. 170; Fick, i. 664. Der. cover-ing, Ital. cubicare (for cupitare), to covet.  $\beta$ . Formed, as if from a Lat. cupiditare, from the Lat. cupidus, desirous of .- Lat. cupere, to desire. See Cupid. Der. covelous (O. F. covolius, mod. F. convolteux); covelous-ly, covelous-mess. Covelous was in early use, and occurs, spelt covetus, in Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, 1, 355. COVEY, a brood or hatch of birds. (F., -L.) 'Covey of pertry-chys,' i. e. partridges; Prompt. Parv. p. 96-0. F. cover, mod. F. couvie, a covey of partridges; fem. form of the pp. of O. F. cover, mod. F. couver, to hatch, sit, brood. - Lat. cubare, to lie down; cf. E. incubate. - V KUP, seen in Gk. kiwrew, to bend; see Fick, i. 56, Curtius, ii. 142.

COW (1), the female of the bull. (E.) M. E. cu, cou; pl. ky, hie, kye; and, with double pl. form, kin, kuyn, mod. E. kine. The pl. ky is in Cursor Mundi, 4564; and kin in Will. of Palerne, 244, 480.-18 in Cuisor Mana, 4504, and and Marking Crein, i. 173. + Du. kos. + Icel. kyr. + Swed. and Dan. ko. + O. H. G. chuo, chuoa, M. H. G. huo, ku, G. kuh. + O. Irish bó, Gael. bó, a cow; cf. W. biu, kine, cattle. + Lat. bos, gen. bous, an  $\infty$ . + Gk.  $\beta o s$ , an  $\infty$ . + Skt. go, a bull, a cow. The common Aryan form is gau, an  $\infty$ ; from  $\sqrt{GU}$ , to low, bellow; Skt. gw, to sound. Fick, i. 572.

COW (2), to subdue, dishearten, terrify. (Scand.) 'It hath cow'd my better part of man;' Macb. v. 8. 18. – Icel. kúga, to cow, tyrannise over; láta kúgask, to let oneself be cowed into submission; see Cleasby and Vigfusson. + Dan. kue, to bow, coerce, subdue. + Swed. ku/va, to check, curb, suppress, subdue.  $\beta$ . Perhaps connected with Skt. j4, to push on, impel; from  $\checkmark$  GU, to excite, drive; see Fick,

i. 573. COWARD, a man without courage. (F.,-L.) M. E. coward, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, L. more often coward; spelt coward in King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, L 2108. - O. F. couard, more usually coart, coard (see Burguy, s. v. coe), a coward, poltroon; equivalent to Ital. codardo.  $\beta$ . Generally explained as an animal that drops his tail; cf. the heraldic expression lion couard, a lion with his tail between his legs. Mr. Wedgwood refers to the fact that a hare was called coward in the old terms of hunting; 'le coward, ou le court cow'=the hare, in Le Venery de Horn, l. 1444. = O. F. cosin, cousin, a cousin. = Low Lat. cosinus, found Twety, in Reliquize Antiquze, i. 153; and he thinks that the original in the 7th cent. in the St. Gall Vocabulary (Brachet). A contraction sense was 'bob-tailed.' Or again, it may merely mean one who shews his tail, or who turns tail.  $\gamma$ . Whichever be right, there is no doubt about the etymology; the word was certainly formed by adding the suffix -ard (Ital. -ardo) to the O. F. coe, a tail (Ital. coda). = O. F. coe, a tail; with the suffix -ard, of Teutonic origin. - Lat. couda, a tail. See Caudal. Der. coward, adj., coward-ly, coward-liness, coward-is = M. E. cowardis, Gower, C. A. ii. 66 (O. F. coard-ise). [+] COWER, to crouch, shrink down, squat. (Scand.) M. E. couren. 'He koured low;' William of Paleme, 1, 47; 'Ye... couwardli as

COWER, to crouch, shrink down, squat. (Scand.) M. E. couren. 'He koured low;' William of Palerne, l. 47; 'Ye... couwardli as caitifs couren here in meuwe' = ye cowardly cower here in a mew (or cage) like caitiffs: id. 3336.— Icel. kura, to doze, lie quiet. + Swed. kura, to doze, to roost, to settle to rest as birds do. + Dan. kure, to lie quiet, rest.  $\beta$ . These are allied to Icel. kyrr, Dan. quærr, silent, quiet, still, and to the Goth. kwairrus, gentle, 2 Tim. ii. 24; also to G. kirre, tame. Gr The W. curian, to cower, squat, was perhaps borrowed from English, there being no similar word in other Celtic tongues. The resemblance of the E. cower to G. kauern, to squat in a cage, from kaue, a cage, is accidental.

COWL (1), a vessel carried on a pole. (F., -L.) The pole supporting the vessel was called a cowl-staff; see Merry Wives, iii. 3. 156. COWRY, a small shell used for money. (Hind.) 'Couries (the Cypraa moneta) are used as small coin in many parts of Southern Asia, and especially on the coast of Guinea in Africa;' Eng. Cycl., Arts and Sciences, s. v. Coury. The word is Hindustani, and must therefore have been carried to the Guinea-coast by the English. - Hind. hauri, 'a small shell used as coin; money, fare, hire;' Forbes' Hind. Dict. p. 281. [+]

Hind. Dict. p. 281. [†] COWSLIP, the name of a flower. (E.) In Milton, Comus, 894. Shak. has oxlip, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 250. – A. S. cislyppe, cisloppe; for the former form, see Cockayne's Leechdoms, Glossary; the entry 'britannicum, cusloppe' is in Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Somner, p. 64, col. 1.  $\beta$ . By the known laws of A. S. grammar, the word is best divided as cú-slyppe or cú-sloppe, where ci means cow; cf. cú-nille, wild chervil (Leo). The word ox-lip was made to match it, and therefore stands for ox-slip. The sense is not obvious, but it is possible that dype or sloppe means lit. a slop, i. e. a piece of dung. An examination of the A. S. names of plants in Cockayne's Leechdoms will strengthen the belief that many of these names were of a homely character. [†] COXCOMB, a fool, a fop. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Shak. it means (1) a fool's cap, Merry Wives, v. 5.146; (2) the head, Tw. Nt, v. 179, 193, 195; (3) a fool, Com. Err. iii. 1. 32. 'Let the foole goe like a cockescome still;' Drant's Horace, Ep. bk. i. To Scæua. Evidently a corruption of cock's comb, i. e. cock's crest. See Cock

COXSWAIN, COCKSWAIN, the steersman of a boat. (Hybrid; F. and E.) The spelling consumain is modern; cocksumain occurs in Drummond's Travels, p. 70 (Todd's Johnson); in Anson's Voyage, biii. c. 9; and in Cook's Voyage, vol. i. b. ii. c. 1 (R.) The word is compounded of cock, a boat, and suman; and means the person in command of a boat, not necessarily the steersman, though now commonly so used. See Cook (5) and Swain.

COY, modest, bashful, retired. (F, -L.) 'Coy, or sobyr, sobrius, modestus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 86. -O. F. coi, earlier coit, still, quiet. -Lat. quietus, quiet, still. - Lat. quiet-, stem of quies, rest. -4/KI, to lie; whence also cemetery, civil, hive, and home; see Curtius, i. 178. Der. coy-ly, coy-mess, coy-ish, coy-ish-mess. Doublet, quiet.

COZEIN; to faster, to beguile. (F, -L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 2. 180. 'When he had played the cosining mate with others ... himself was beguiled; 'Hackluyt, Voyages, i. 586. Here the spelling cosin is the same as the old spelling of Cousin, q. v. Cozen is, in fact, merely a verb evolved out of cousin. -F. consiner, 'to claime kindred for advantage, or particular ends; as he, who to save charges in travelling, goes from house to house, as cosin to the honour of every one; 'Cot. So in mod. F., cousiner is 'to call cousin, to sponge, to live upon other people; 'Hamilton and Legros. The change of meaning from 'sponge' to 'beguile' or 'cheat' was easy. Der. cozen-age, cozen-er.

CRAB (1), a common shell-fish. (E.) M. E. crabbe, Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 51.-A.S. crabba, as a gloss to Lat. cancer; Ælfric's Gloss. ed. Somner, p. 77 + Icel. krabbi. + Swed. krabba. + Dan. krabbe. + Du. krab. + G. krabbe. ¶ The word bears a singular resemblance to Lat. carabus. Gk. wápa60e, a prickly kind of crab. The Gk. wápa60e also means a kind of beetle, and is equivalent to Lat. scarabasus. This suggests the loss of initial s; perhaps E. crab and Gk. wápa60e are alike from the  $\checkmark$  SKAR. to cut, scratch; cf. Lat. scalpere, to cut, scratch; Du. krabben, to scratch. See Crayfish.

Crayfish. ORAB (2), a kind of apple. (Scand.) 'Mala marciana, wodecrabbis;' MS. Harl. 3388, qu. in Cockayne's Leechdoms, Glossary. 'Crabbe, appulle or frute, macianum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 99. 'Crabbe, tre, accrebus, macianus, arbutus;' id. Of Scandinavian origin; cf. Swed. krabbāple, a crab-apple. Pyrus coronaria. It seems to be related to Swed. krabba, a crab, i. e. crab-fish; perhaps from some notion of pinching, in allusion to the extreme sourness of the taste. See Crab (1); and see Crabbed.

CRABBED, peevish; cramped. (E.) 'The arwes [arrows] of thy crabbed eloquence; 'Chaucer, C. T. 9079. Cf. Lowland Scotch erab, to provoke, in Jamieson; he cites the sentence 'thou hes crabbit and offendit God' from Abp. Hamiltonn's Catechisme, fol. 153 b. 'Crabbyd, awke, or wrawe, ceronicus, bilosus, cancerinus; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 99. B. Of O. Low G. origin, and may be considered as an English word; it is due to the same root as Crab (1), q. v. Cf. Du. krabben, to scratch; kribben, to quarrel, to be cross, to be peevish; kribbig, peevish, forward; evidently the equivalent of crabbed in the sense of peevish. Y. As regards the phrase 'to write a crabbed hand, 'cf. Icel. krab, a crabbed hand, Icel. krabba, to scrawl, write a crabbed hand; Du. krabben, to scribble, scrawl, scrape, a dimin, form from krabben, to scratch. Thus crabbed, in both senses, is from the same root. It is remarkable that the Prompt. Parv. translates crabbed by Lat. cancerinus, formed from Lat. cancer, a crab. Der. crabbed-ly, crabbed-ness.

CRACK, to split suddenly and noisily. (E.) M. E. craken, kraken; Havelok, 1857. 'Speren chrakeden,' spears cracked; Layamon, iii. 94. – A. S. cearcian, to crack, gnash together; the shifting of the letter r in E. words is very common; cf. bird with M. E. brid. 'Cearcigende teö' = crashing or gnashing teeth; Allfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, i. 132. + Du. kraken, to crack, creak; krakken, to crack; krak, a crack; krak, crack l + G. krachen, to crack; krach, a crack. + Gael. crac, a crack, fissure; crace, a crack; creak; co crack, break, crash; gnash. Der. crack, sb., crack-er; crack-le. the frequentative form, signifying 'to crack often;' crake, to boast, an obsolescent word; also crack-n-el, q. v. CRACKNEL, a kind of biscuit. (F., -Du.) 'Crakenelle, brede, crequetulus, fraginellus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 100. 'Crakenelle, craque

CRACKNEL, a kind of biscuit. (F., -Du.) 'Crakenelle, brede, crepetullus, fraginellus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 100. 'Crakenell, craquelin;' Palsgrave. A curious perversion of F. craquelin, which Cotgrave explains by 'cracknell;' the E. crak-en-el answering to F. craq-el-in. = Du. krakeling, a cracknel; formed with dim. suffix -el and the suffix -ing from krakken, to crack; from the crisp nature of the biscuit.

CRADILE, a child's crib; a frame. (C.) M. E. cradel, Ancren Riwle, p. 260. – A. S. cradol; in comp. cild-crad.l, child-cradle; Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, ii. 76. Not a Teutonic word, but borrowed from Celtic. – Irish craidhal, Gael. creathall, a cradle, a grate; W. cryd, a cradle. Cf. Irish craidhlag, a basket, creathach, a hurdle, faggots, brushwood.  $\beta$ . Allied to Lat. cra'es, a hurdle; the E. hurdle is from the same root. Thus cradel means 'a little crate.'  $-\checkmark$  KART, to plait, weave; Fick, i. 525. See Crate, and Hurdle.

CRAFT, skill, ability, trade. (E.) M. E. craft, creft; Layamon, i. 120. – A. S. craft, Grein, i. 167. + Du. kracht, power. + Icel. kraptr, kraftr, craft, force. + Swed. and Dan. kraft, power. + G. kraft, power, energy.  $\beta$ . W. careg, a stone; Bret. karrek, a rock in the sea, rock covered with breakers; Gael. carraig, a rock, cliff, from Gael. carr, a rocky shelf.  $\beta$ . The orig. form is clearly car, a rock; whence, with suffixed t, the Irish ceart, a pebble, and E. chert; also, with suffixed n, the Gael. carn, a cairn, and E. cairn; and with dimin. suffix -ac, the W. car-eg (for car-ac) contracted to W. craig and E. crag. See Chert, Cairn. Der. craggry.

Der. cragg-y. CRAKE, CORNCRAKE, the name of a bird. (E.) So named from its cry, a kind of grating croak. Cf. M. E. craken. to cry, shriek out. 'Thus they begyn to crake;' Pilgrims' Sea Voyage, l. 16; see Stacions of Rome, ed. Furnivall, E. E. T. S. 1867. An imitative word, like crack, creak, and croak ; and see Crow. Gr The Gk. rolf, Lat. crez, also signifies a sort of land-rail, similarly named from its cry.

CRAM, to press close together. (E.) M.E. crammen. crammyd; Wyclif, Hos. xiii. 6. – A. S. crammian, to stuff. • Ful The entry 'farcio, ic crammige' occurs in Ælfric's Grammar, De Quarta Conjugatione. The compound verb undercrammian, to fill underbruise. + Swed. krama, to squeeze, press. + Dan. kramme, to crumple, crush. Cf. O.H.G. chrimman, M.H.G. krimman, to seize with the claws, G. grimmen, to grip, gripe. Allied to Cramp, Clamp, Crab.

CRAMP, a tight restraint, spasmodic contraction. (E.) verb to cramp is much later than the sb. in English use. M.E. crampe, a cramp, spasm. 'Crampe, spasmus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 100. 'I cacche the crampe; P. Plowman, C. vii. 78. An E. word, as shewn by the derivative crompent, full of crumples or wrinkles; Bosworth. + Swed. kramp, cramp ; krampa, a cramp-iron, staple. + Dan. krampe, cramp; krampe, a cramp or iron clasp. + Du. kramp, cramp; cf. krammen, to fasten with iron cramps; kram, a cramp-iron, staple, hinge. + G. krampf, cramp; krampen, krampfen, to cramp. Cf. also Icel. krappr, cramped, strait, narrow; kreppa, to cramp, to clench; where the pp stands for mp, by assimilation, All from a Teutonic KRAMP, to draw tightly together, squeeze ; Fick, iii. 50. Allied to Cram, Clamp, Crimp, Crumple; and perhaps to Crab (1). Der. cramp-fish, the torpedo, causing a spasm; cramp-iron, a vice, clamp. [†] CRANBERRY, a kind of sour berry. (E.) For crane-berry; from some fanciful notion. Perhaps 'because its slender stalk has been compared to the long legs and neck of a crane ' (Webster). The name exists also in G. kranbeere, explained in Flügel's Dict. as 'a crane-berry, red bilberry. And, most unequivocally, in Dan. trans-ber, a cranberry, Swed. transfor, a cranberry, where the word follows the peculiar forms exhibited in Dan. trane, Swed. trana, a crane. See Crane, and Berry.

ORANE, a wading long-legged bird. (E.) 'Crane, byrde, grus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 100. Spelt eron, Layamon, ii. 422.-A. S. eron; we find 'grus, eron' in Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Somner; Nomina Avium. + Du. kraan. + Swed. trana (corruption of krana). + Dan. trans (corruption of krans). + Icel. trani (for krani). + G. kran-ich, a trane (corruption of trane). + 1ccl. trane (for trane). + G. trane.tek, a crane. + W. garan, a crane; also, a shank. + Corn. and Bret. garan, a crane, a crane. Cf. also Lat. grus, a crane; see Curtius, i. 215; Fick, i. 565.  $\beta$ . The word is generally derived from the bird's cry; from  $\checkmark$  GAR, to call, seen in Lat. garrire, garrulus, Gk.  $\gamma\eta\rho\psi_{647}$ , &c. Cf. Lat. gruere, to make a noise like a crane. See Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. ii. 228, 386. ¶ It is remarkable that, in Welsh, Breton, and Cornish, gor means the shank of the leg; and in W. goron also means shank. But this idea may have been borrowed from the crane, instead of conversely. B. It is to be noted, further, that, in the sense of a machine for raising weights, we have still the same word. In this sense, we find Gk. yéparos, Dan. and Swed. kran, Du. kraan, G. krahn; cf. Icel. trana, a framework for supporting timber. In English, erane also means a bent pipe, or siphon, from its likeness to the bird's neck. Dor. cran-berry. [+] CRANIUM, the skull. (L., - Gk.) Medical. Borrowed from Lat. cranium, the skull. - Gk. sparior, the skull ; allied to sapa, sappvov, the head, and to Lat. cerebrum ; cf. also Skt. gira, giras, the head. See Curtius, i. 175. Der. crani-al, cranio-log-y, cranio-log-ist, cranio-log-ic-al (from Gk. λόγοε, discourse, λέγειν, to speak).

CRANK (1), a bent arm, twist, bend in an axis. (E.) Shak. has erank, a winding passage, Cor. i. 1. 141; also erank, to wind about, 1 Hen. 1V, iii. 1. 98. Cf. Milton, L'Allegro, l. 27. 'Cranke of a welle; Prompt. Parv. p. 100. The Eng. has here preserved an ori-ginal root, of which other languages have only less distinct traces; this orig. form was KRANK, to bend, twist. Hence Du. kronkel, a rumple, wrinkle, i. e. little bend; kroskelen, to rumple, wrinkle, bend, turn, wind. Hence also E. Cringe, Cringle, Crinkle, which see. This root KRANK is probably also allied to KRAMP, to

'The Reso-lution was found to be very crank; 'Cook, Voyage, vol. iii. b. i. c. I. The word is best explained by the E. root krank, to twist, bend aside, given above under Crank (1). The peculiar nautical use of the word clearly appears in these derivative forms, viz. Du. krengen, to careen, to bend upon one side in sailing; Swed. kränga, to heave down, to heel; krängning, a careening, heeling over; Dan. krænge, to heave down; also, to lie along, to lurch; krangning, a lurch. And these terms are further allied to Du. and G. krank, sick, ill, indisposed ; see Cringe. Der. crank-y, crank-ness.

before bedred, and caried lyke a dead karkas on fower mannes shoulders, was now cranke and lustle; 'Udal, on Mark, c. 2. Not found, in this sense, at an earlier period; and it appears to be taken from the nautical metaphor of a crank boat; whence the senses of liable to upset, easily moved, ticklish, unsteady, excitable, lively. The remarkable result is that this word actually answers to the Du. krank, sick, ill, indisposed. See Crank (2). ORANNY, a rent, chink, crevice. (F.,-L.) M. E. crany, with one n; see Prompt. Parv. p. 100, where erayne or erays is translated by Lat. rima, a chink. 'Crany, cravasse; 'Palsgrave. Formed by adding the E. dimin. suffix -y to F. cran, a notch; also spelt eren, as in Cotgrave. - Lat. erena, a notch, used by Pliny; see Brachet. β. Fick supposes crēna to stand for cret-na, from A KART, to cut; cf. Skt. krit (for kart), to cut, krintana (for kritana), cutting. Der. (from Lat. crona) cron-aie, q. v., cron-ell-aie, q. v. CRANTS, a garland, wreath. (O. Dutch.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 255. Lowland Scotch crance (Jamieson). The spelling krants is given by Kilian for the Du. word now spelt krans, a wreath, garland, chaplet; cf. Dan. krands, Swed. krans, G. kranz, a wreath.

ORAPE, a thin crisp silk stuff. (F. - L.) 'A saint in crafe;' Pope, Moral Essays, i. 136. - F. crôpe, spelt crespe in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'cipres, cobweb lawne.' - O. F. crespe, 'curled, frizzled, crisped, crispe; id. - Lat. crispus, crisped, curled. See Crisp. Thus crape is a doublet of crisp.

ORASH, to break in pieces forcibly, to make a sudden grating noise. (Scand.) Shak, has the sb. erash, Hamlet, ii. 2. 498. 'He noise. (Scand.) Shak. has the sb. crash. Hamlet, ii. 2. 498. 'He shak't his head, and crash't his teeth for ire;' Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, bk. vii. st. 42. 'Craschyn, as tethe, fremo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 100; and see Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, I. 1109. A mere variant of craze, and both crash and craze are again variants of crack .- Swed. krasa, to crackle; slå i kras, to dash to pieces. + Dan. krase, knase, to crackle; slaae i kras, to break to shivers. See Craze, Crush, Crack. The word is imitative of the sound. Der. crash, sb.

CRASIS, the contraction of two vowels into a long vowel or diphthong. (Gk.) Grammatical. Borrowed from Gk. spages, a mixing, blending; cf. Gk. septarvym, I mix, blend. See Crater. CRASS, thick, dense, gross. (L.) 'Of body somewhat crasse

CRASS, thick, dense, gross. (L.) 'Of body somewhat crasse and corpulent ;' Hall's Chron. Hen. VII, an. 21. - Lat. crasses, thick, dense, fat. Apparently for crattus, i.e. closely woven; from ✓ KART, to weave ; cf. Lat. erates, a hurdle. See Crate. Der. crass-i-tude.

CRATCH, a manger, crib for cattle. (F., -O. Low G.) M. E. eracche, crecche; used of the manger in which Christ was laid; Cursor Mundi, 11237; spelt creache, Ancren Riwle, p. 260.-0. F. creache (mod. F. creache), a manger, crib. [The Provençal form is crepche, and the Ital. is grappia; all are of Low G. origin.]-O. Sax. kribbia, a crib; see the Heliand, ed. Heyne, 1. 382. B. This word merely differs from E. crib in having the suffix -ia or -ya added to it. See F. crèche in Brachet ; and see Crib. Der. cratch-cradle. i. e. crib-cradle ; often unmeaningly turned into scratch-cradle.

CRATE, a wicker case for crockery. (L.) 'I have seen a horse carrying home the harvest on a crate;' Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands. Apparently quite a modern word, and borrowed directly from the Latin .- Lat. crates, a hurdle; properly, of wickerwork. - V KART, to plait, weave like wickerwork; Fick, i. 525. From the same root we have E. Hurdle, q. v. The dimin. of crate is cradle; see Cradle, Crass.

CRATER, the cup or opening of a volcano. (L., - Gk.) Used by Berkeley to Arbuthnot, Description of Vesuvius, 1717 (Todd's Johnson). - Lat. crater, a bowl; the crater of a volcano. - Gk. «partip, a large bowl in which things were mixed together; cf. Gk. Repárrum. I mix, from the base npa; Curtius, i. 181.

CRAVAT, a kind of neckcloth. (F., -Austrian.) Spelt crabat in Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3: 'Canonical crabat of Smeck.' But this is a In Functions, p. 1, c. 3: Canonical tracts of other control the spelling. Dryden has: 'His sword-knot this, his cravat that designed;' Epilogue to the Man of Mode, l. 23.-F. cravate, meaning (1) a Croat. Croatian; and (2) a cravat.  $\beta$ . The history of the word is recorded by Ménage, who lived at the time of the first introduction of cravats into France, in the year 1636. He explains that the ornament was worn by the Croates (Croatians), who were more commonly termed Cravates; and he gives the date (1636) of its introduction into France, which was due to the dealings the French had at that time with Germany; it was in the time of the thirty years war. See the passage quoted in Brachet, s. v. crovate. y. Brachet also explains, s. v. corvée, the insertion, for euphony, of the letter v, whereby Croate became Crovate or Cravate; a similar striking instance occurs in F. powvoir, from Lat. potere, for potesse. The word is, accordingly, of historic origin; from the name of Croatia, now a province of Austria. [+]

CRANK (3), lively, brisk. (E.) Obsolescent and provincial. CRANE, to beg earnestly, beseech. (E.) M.E. crauen (with w Crank, brisk, jolly, merry; Halliwell. 'He who was a little for v); Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1408. - A.S. craftan, to crave; A.S. Chron. an. 1070; ed. Thorpe, p. 344. + Icel. hrefja, to  $\stackrel{6}{}$  Subjects. Also: 'The cress here are excellent good; the propor-crave, demand. + Swed. hräfva, to demand. + Dan. hræve, to crave, demand, exact.  $\beta$ . A more original form appears in Icel. hrafa, a quotation which seems to refer to a portrait.  $\beta$ . That it is Celtic

CRAVEN, one who is defeated, a recreant. (E.) M. E. crauand (with w for v); also spelt crauant, crauand. 'Al ha cneowen ham crawant and ouercumen' = they all knew them to be craven and overcome : Legend of St. Katharine, 132. 'Haal crowands knyghtel' = hal craven knight ; Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, l. 133.  $\beta$ . The term-ination in -w is a mistaken one, and makes the word look like a past participle. The word is really cravand, where -and is the regular Northumbrian form of the present participle, equivalent to mod. E. -ing. Thus cravand means craving, i. e. one who is begging quarter, one who sues for mercy. The word crave, being more Scandinavian than Anglo-Saxon, was no doubt best known in the Northern dialect. See Crave. It must not be omitted that this word cravand was really a sort of translation or accommodation of the O.F. creant, M. E. creant or creaunt, which was very oddly used as we now use its compound recrease. A good instance is in P. Plowman, B. xii. 193, where we have 'he yelte hym creannt to Cryst ' - he yielded himself as defeated to Christ; whilst in B. xviii. 100 the expression is • he yelt hym recreased.' Se: Becreant. CRAW, the crop, or first stomach of fowls. (Scand.) M. E. erawe. 'Crawe, or crowpe of a byrde or other fowlys, gabus, vesicula; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 101. [Allied to crag or craig, the neck.] -Dan. kro, craw, crop of fowls. + Swed. kriftva, the craw, crop; Swed. dial. kroe (Rietz). Cf. Du. kraag, the neck, collar; Swed. krage, G. kragen, a collar. See also Crop. CRAWFISH; see Crayfish.

CRAWL, to creep along. (Scand.) Spelt erall; Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 20. - Iccl. trafta, to paw, to scrabble with the hands; trafta fram sir, to crawl out of. + Swed. krafta, to grope; Swed. kräla, to crawl, creep; Swed. dial. kralla, to creep on hands and feet; krilla, to creep, crawl (Rietz). + Dan. kravle, to crawl, creep.  $\beta$ . The orig. base is here kraf-, signifying 'to paw' or 'seize with the hands;' B. The with the frequentative suffix -la; thus giving the sense of ' to grope, to feel one's way as an infant does when crawling along. From the Teutonic & KRAP, to squeeze, seize; Fick, i. 49. See also Crew. CRAYFISH, CRAWFISH, a species of crab. (F., -O. H. G.)

A mistaken accommodation of M. E. crevis or creves; spelt crevise, Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 158; creveys, Prompt. Parv.=O.F. crevisse, given by Roquefort as another spelling of O.F. escrevisse, mod F. écrevisse, a crayfish; Brachet also cites the O. F. form crevice. -O. H. G. crebiz, M. H. G. krebez, G. krebs, a crayfish, crab; allied to G. krabbe, a crab. See Crab (1). Gr It follows that the true division of the word into syllables is as crayf-ish; and thus all connection with fish disappears.

ORAYON, a pencil of coloured chalk. (F., -L.) Modern. Merely borrowed from F. crayon, explained by Cotgrave as 'drypainting, or a painting in dry colours, &c. Formed with suffix -on from F. craie, chalk. - Lat. creta, chalk. See Cretacoous.

CRAZE, to break, weaken, derange. (Scand.) M. E. crapen, to break, crack. 'I am right siker that the pot was crassed,' i.e. cracked; Chaucer, C. T. 12862. A mere variant of crass, but nearer to the original. = Swed. krasa, to crackle ; slå i kras, to break in pieces. Ihre also cites Swed. gd i kras, to go to pieces; and the O. Swed. kraslig, easily broken, answering to E. erazy. Similar phrases occur in Danish; see Crash. The F. écraser is from the same source; the E. word was not borrowed from the French, but directly from Scand. Der. craz-y, craz-i-ly, craz-i-kass. CREAK, to make a sharp grating sound. (E.) M. E. creken. 'He cryeth and he creketh;' Skelton, Colin Clout, 1. 19. 'A crowe ... kreked;' Fabyan, Chron. vol. i. c. 213. An imitative word, like Crake and Crack. Cf. Du. kriek, a cricket; also F. criquer, which Cotgrave explains by 'to creake, rattle, crackle, bustle, rumble, rustle.' The E. word was not borrowed from the French; but the F. word, like craquer, is of Teutonic origin. See Cricket (1). CREAM, the oily substance which rises in milk. (F., = L.) M. E. ereme, crayme. 'Cowe creme;' Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 266; 'crayme of cowe;' id. 123. - O. F. creme, mod. F. creme, cream. -Low Lat. crema, cream (Ducange); allied to Lat. cremor, the thick juice or milky substance proceeding from corn when soaked, thick broth; allied further to cremare, to burn.  $\beta$ . Hardly allied to A.S. ream, cream (Bosworth), and Icel. rjómi, cream; cf. Scottish and prov. E. ream, cream. Even if A.S. ream stood for aream, the vowels do not agree. Der. cream, verb ; cream-y, cream-i-ness.

CREASE (1), a wrinkle, small fold. (C.?) Richardson well remarks that 'this word so common in speech, is rare in writing.' The presumption is, accordingly, that it is one of the homely monosyllables that have come down to us from the ancient Britons. Rich. quotes an extract containing it from Swift, Thoughts on Various seems to be vouched for by the Bret. kriz, a wrinkle, a crease in the skin of the face or hands, a crease in a robe or shirt; kriza, to crease, wrinkle, fold, esp. applied to garments. Cf. W. crych, a wrinkle, cryck, wrinkled, rumpled, crycku, to rumple, ripple, crease; also perhaps Gael. cruscladh, a wrinkling. ¶ It is usual to cite Swed. krus, a curl, ruffle, flounce, krusa, to curl, G. kraus, crisp, curled, frizzled, kräuseln, to crisp. to curl, as connected with crease; but this is less satisfactory both as to form and sense, and is probably to be rejected. A remote connection with Lat. crispus is a little more likely, but by no means clear.

OREASE (2), OREESE, a Malay dagger. (Malay.) 'Four hundred young men, who were privately armed with cryzes;' Sir T. 'Four nunarea young men, who were privately armed with cryzes; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665; p. 68. – Malay kris or kris, 'a dagger, poignard, kris, or creese; 'Marsden's Malay Dict., 1812, p. 258. CREATE, to make, produce, form. (L.) Orig. a past part. 'Since Adam was create; 'Gascoigne, Dan Bartholomew, His Last Will, l. 3. Cf. K. John, iv. 1. 107. – Lat. creatus, pp. of creates, to create, make. B. Related to Gk. spaire, I complete, Skt. kri, to make, casual kárayámi, I cause to be performed. - VKAR, to make; Curtius, i. 189. Der. creat-ion. creat-ive, creat-or; also creat-ure (O.F. creature, Lat. creatura), a sb. in early use, viz. in Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 38, King Alisaunder, 6948. [+]

CREED, a belief. (L.) M. E. crede, Ancren Riwle, p. 20; and frequently credo, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 75. An A.S. form creda is given in Lye and Bosworth. - Lat. credo, I believe, the first word of the Latin version of the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds; from Lat. credere, to believe. + O. Irish cretim, I believe. + Skt. graddadhámi, I believe; cf. graddha, faith; both from the base grat. → KRAT, belief, faith; see Curtius, i. 316, Fick, i. 551; the Lat. -do being from ✓ DHA, to place. Der. From the Lat. eredere we have also cred-ence, Gower, C. A. i. 249 (O. F. credence, Low Lat. credentia, from the pres. part. credent-); cred-ent, cred-ent-i-al, cred-ible (Gower, C. A. i. 23), cred-i-bil-i-ty, cred-i-ble-ness, cred-i-bl-y; also credit (from Lat. pp. creditus), credit-able, credit-abl-y, credit-able-mess, credit-or; also credulous (Lat. credulus, by change of -us into -ous), credulous-ly, credulous-ness; and credul-i-ty (F. credulité, Englished by credulity in Cotgrave ; from Lat. acc. credulitatem, nom. credulitas).

CREEK, a bend, corner, inlet, cove. (E.) M. E. creke, Chaucer, C. T. prol. 411; allied to Northumbrian crike, spelt krike in Havelok, 708; the latter is the Scandinavian form. - A. S. creeca, a creek; preserved in Creccagelad, now Cricklade in Wiltshire, and in Creccanford, now Crayford in Kent; A.S. Chron. an. 457 and an. 905. + Du. kreek, a creek, bay. + Swed. dial. krik, a bend, nook, corner, creek, cove (Rietz). + Icel. kriki, a crack, nook; handarkriki, the arm-pit; cf. F. crique, a creek, which is probably derived from it.  $\beta$ . Possibly related also to W. crig, a crack, crigyll, a ravine, creek. The Swed. dial. armbrik also means the bend of the arm, elbow (Rietz); and the orig sense is plainly bend' or turn. It may, accordingly, be re-garded as a sort of diminutive of crook, formed by attenuating the garded as a sort of diminutive of crook, formed by attenuating the vowel. See Criok, Orook. Der. creek-y. ORLEP, to crawl as a snake. (E.) M. E. crepen, creopen; Ancren Riwle, p. 292. – A. S. creopan, Grein, i. 160. + Du. kruipen, to creep, crawl. + Icel. krjúpa. + Swed. krypa. + Dan. krybe. [Allied forms are Icel. kreika, to crouch; Swed. kräka, to creep, kräk, a reptile; G. kriseken, to creep, crawl, sneak.] β. From the Teutonic & KRUP, to creep. Fick if it. Broballe ellid to a (KPAP) KPAMP to creep, Fick, iii. 51. Probably allied to VKRAP, KRAMP, to draw together, whence E. cramp; the notion seems to be one of drawing together or crouching down; see Crawl. Der. creeper. CREMATION, burning, esp. of the dead. (L.) Used by Sir

T. Browne, Urn Burial, c. I. - Lat. cremationem, acc. of crematio, a burning. - Lat. erematus, pp. of cremare, to burn; allied to calere, to glow, carbo, a coal. - KAR, to burn, cook; Fick, i. 44.

CRENATE, notched, said of leaves. (L.) A botanical term, Formed as if from Lat. crenatus, notched (not used), from Lat. crena, a notch. See Cranny.

CRENELLATE, to furnish with a parapet, to fortify. (Low L., -F.,-L.) See List of Royal Licences to Crenellate, or Fortify; Parker's Eng. Archæologist's Handbook, p. 233. – Low Lat. crenell-are, whence F. creneler, 'to imbattle;' Cotgrave. – Low Lat. crenell-us, a parapet, battlement; O. F. crenel, later creneau, a battlement; dimin. of O. F. eren, eran, a notch, from Lat. erena, a notch. See Cranny

CREOLE, one born in the West Indies, but of European blood ; see Webster. (F., - Span., - L.) See the quotations in Todd's Johnson. - F. créole. - Span. criollo, a native of America or the W. Indies; a corrupt word, made by the negroes; said to be a contraction of criadillo, the dimin. of criado, one educated, instructed, or bred up, pp. of eriar, lit. to create, but commonly also to bring up, nurse, breed, educate, instruct. Hence the sense is 'a little nursling.'-Lat. a sea-term, 'a ship's crew.' Hence, like many sea-terms, of Scandicreare, to create. See Create.

CREOSOTE, a liquid distilled from wood-tar. (Gk.) Modern: so called because it has the quality of preserving flesh from corrup-tion; lit. 'flesh-preserver.' - Gk. spiwe, Attic form of spices, flesh, allied to Lat. caro, flesh; and our-, base of ourho, a preserver, from ousserve, to save, preserve, on which see Curtius, i. 473. And see Carnal.

CREPITATE, to crackle. (L.) Medical. - Lat. erepitatus, pp. of crepitare, to crackle, rattle; frequentative of crepare, to rattle. Der. crepitat-ion. See Crevice.

CRESCENT, the increasing moon. (L.) Properly an adj. signifying 'increasing ;' Hamlet, i. 3. 11. - Lat. crescent-, stem of cres-cens, pres. pt. of crescere (pp. cretus), to increase, to grow; an inchoative verb formed with suffix -se- from cre-are, to create, make. See Create. Der. From the base of pp. cret-us we have the derivatives ac-cret-ion, con-crete. The Ital. crescendo, increasing, a musical term, is ¶ It must be added that the spelling equivalent to crescent. crescent is an accommodated one. The word was formerly spelt eressent or cressaunt. We find 'Cressaunt, lunula' in the Prompt. Parv. p. 102. This is not from the Latin immediately, but from O. F. creissaunt, pres. part. of O. F. croistre, to grow, from Lat. crescere. It comes to the same at last, but makes a difference chronologically. Cf. 'a cressant, or halfe moone, croissant ;' Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave.

CRESS, the name of several plants of the genus Crucifera. (E.) M. E. crosse, cres ; also spelt herse, hers, carse, by shifting of the letter r, a common phenomenon in English; cf. mod. E. bird with M. E. 'Wisdom and witte now is nought worth a carse;' P. Plowbrid. brid. 'Wisdom and witte now is nought worth a carse;' P. Plow-man, B. x. 17, where 4 MSS. read kerse. 'Cresse, herbe, nasturitum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 102. 'Anger gaynez [avails] the not a cresse;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 343. ['Not worth a cress' or 'not worth a kers' was a common old proverb, now turned into the meaning-less 'not worth a curse.'] = A. S. carse, cyrse, cresse; see numerous references in Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 316. Cf. the entry 'nas-tutium temester' i a turne cress. at Electic Clorence. ed Compaturtium, tun-cerse,' i. e. town-cress, in Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Somner, Nomina Herbarum. + Du. kere, cress. + Swed. krasse. + Dan. karee. + G. kresse, water-cresses.  $\beta$ . Surely a true Teutonic word; and to be kept quite distinct from F. cresson, Ital. cressione, lit. quick-growing, from Lat. crescere, to grow. y. Perhaps from the Teutonic root which appears in the O. H. G. strong verb chresan, to creep, cited by Diez; in this case, it means 'creeper.' CRESSET, an open lamp, placed on a beacon or carried on a pole. (F.-O. Dutch.) 'Cresset, crucibolium;' Prompt. Parv. 0. F. crassel, a cresset. Roquefort gives : 'Crassel, crassel, croissol, lampe de nuit;' and suggests a connection with Lat. erucibulum, a crucible; in which he is correct. This O. F. crasset is a variant. of croiset or creuset. Cotgrave gives: 'croiset, a cruet, crucible, or little earthen pot, such as goldsmiths melt their gold in;' and again : ' creusei, a crucible, cruzet, or cruet, a little earthen pot,' &c.  $\beta$ . A glance at a picture of a cresset, in Webster's Dict. or elsewhere, will shew that it consisted, in fact, of an open pot or cup at the top of a pole; the suggested derivation from O. F. croisette, a little cross, is unmeaning and unnecessary. Y. This O. F. creuset was modi-fied from an older form croiseul (Littré); and the word was introduced into French from Dutch .- O. Du. kruysel, a hanging lamp; formed with dimin. suffix -el from O. Du. kruyse, a cruse, cup. pot (mod. Du. kroes); see Killian. Cf. Rouchi crassé, craché, a hanging lamp. See Cruse.

CRIST, a tuft on a cock's head, plume, &c. (F., -L.) M. E. creste, crest; Chaucer, C. T. 15314. - O. F. creste, 'a crest, cop, combe, tuft;' Cotgrave.-Lat. erista, a comb or tuft on a bird's head, a crest. Root uncertain. ¶ I find no A.S. eræsta, as alleged by ¶ I find no A.S. crassa, as alleged by Somner. Dor. crest, verb, crest-less; crest-fallen, i. e. with fallen or sunken crest, dejected.

CRETACEOUS, chalky. (L.) It occurs in J. Philips, Cyder, bk. i; first printed in 1708. – Lat. cretaceus, chalky; by change of -us to -ous, as in credulous, &c. – Lat. creta, chalk; generally explained to mean Cretan earth, but this is hardly the origin of the word. See Crayon.

CREVICE, a crack, cranny. (F.,-L.) M. E. crevice, but also crevace. Spelt crewisse (with u for v), Gawain and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, 1183; crevace or crevasse, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 996. -O. F. crevasse, 'a crevice, chink, rift, cleft;' Cotgrave. -O. F. (and mod. F.) crever, 'to burst or break asunder, to chink, rive, cleave, or chawn; 'id. - Lat. crepare, to crackle, rattle; also, to burst asunder; a word possibly of imitative origin. Doublet, crevause.

CREW, a company of people. (Scand.) Formerly crue; Gas-coigne, The Fruits of Warre, st. 46; 'If she be one of Cressid's crue;' Turberville, His Love flitted from wonted Truth (R.) Common as navian origin. – O. Icel. krú, given in Haldorson, later grú or grúi, a swarm, a crowd ; mann-grui, a crowd of men, a crew ; cl. grua, to swarm, and see kria, to swarm, in Cleasby, App. p. 775.  $\beta$ . In Rietz's dict. of Swedish dialects, we find also the verb kry, to swarm, to come out in great multitude as insects do; Rietz also cites the Norse kry or kru, to swarm, and the O. Icel. krú, a great multitude, which is just our English word. Y. In Ihre's dict, of Swedish dialects we also find kry, to swarm; frequently used in the phrase kry och kråla, lit. to swarm out and crawl, applied not only to insects, but to a gang of men. Rietz supposes kry to be also con-nected with Swed. dial. krylla, to swarm out, krylle, a swarm, a crawling heap of worms or insects. This verb is obviously connected further with Swed. dial. krilla, kralla, to crawl, and with the E. crawl. Cf. Du. krielen, to swarm, crowd, be full of (insects); Dan. kryb, vermin, creeping things, from krybe, to creep. 8. This account shews why the word crew has often a shade of contempt in it. as when we say 'a motey crew;' see Crue in Sherwood's index to Cot-grave. ¶ E. Müller cites A.S. creiw, but this is the pt. t. of the verb to crow! [\*]

CRIB, a manger, rack, stall, cradle. (E.) M. E. crib, cribbe; Ormulum, 3331; Cursor Mundi, 11237. – A. S. erib, eryb; Grein, i. 169. + O. Sax. kribbia; see Cratch. + Du. krib, a crib, manger. + Icel. krubba, a crib. + Dan. krybbe, a manger, crib. + Swed. krubba. a crib. + O. H. G. chripfa, M. H. G. kripfe, G. krippe, a crib, manger. Remoter origin unknown. Der. crib, verb, to put into a crib, hence, to confine; also to hide away in a crib, hence, to purloin; from the latter sense is cribb-age, in which the crib is the secret store of cards. CRICK, a spasmodic affection of the neck. (E.) 'Crykke, sekenesse, spasmus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 103. ' Those also that with a cricke or cramp have their necks drawne backward ;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xx. c. 5. Also in the sense of twist. 'Such winding slights, such turns and cricks he hath, Such creaks, such wrenches, and such dalliaunce; 'Davics, On Dancing (first printed in 1596). The orig. sense is 'bend' or 'twist.' A mere variant of Creek, q. v.; and allied to Crook.

CRICKET (1), a shrill-voiced insect. (F., -G.) 'Crykette, sala-mander, crillus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 103. Spelt crykett, P. Plowman, C. xvi. 243.-O. F. crequet, later criquet, a cricket, Burguy; a diminutive form. - O. F. eriquer, 'to creake, rattle,' Cotgrave, a word of Germanic origin, being an attenuated form of F. craquer.' to cracke. creake,' id. See Creak, Crack. The Germanic word is preserved in Du. kriek, a cricket, and in the E. creak, sometimes written crick (Webster); also in the Du. krikkrakken, to crackle.  $\beta$ . The same imitative krik appears in W. criciad, a cricket, cricellu, to chirp. Not unlike is the Lat. graculus, a jackdaw, from & GARK, to croak ; Fick, i. 565.

CRICKIET (2), a game with bat and ball. (E.) The word cricket-ball occurs in The Rambler, no. 30. Cotgrave translates the F. crosse as 'a crosser or bishop's staffe; also a cricket-staffe, or the crooked staff wherewith boies play at cricket. The first mention of cricket is in 1598; it was a development of the older game of club-ball, which was played with a crooked stick, and was something like the modern hockey; see Engl. Cycl. Supplement to Arts and Sciences, col. 653. Hence the belief that the name originated from the A.S. crice, a staff, used to translate baculus in Ps. xxii. 5; Spelman's A.S. Psalter. The -et may be regarded as a diminutive Speiman's A. S. Psaiter. The -t may be regarded as a diminutive suffix, properly of F. origin, but sometimes added to purely E. words, as in fresh-et, stream-l-et, kam-l-et. Thus cricket means 'a little staff.' The A. S. crice is closely related to crutch, if indeed it be not the same word. See Crutch. Der. cricket-er. [†] CRIME, an offence against law, sin.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  M. E. crime, cryme; Chaucer, C. T. 6877.-F. crime, 'a crime, fault; ' Cot-Lat.

¶ Generally concrimen, an accusation, charge, fault, offence. nected with Lat. cernere, to sift, and the Gk. spireer, to separate, decide; see Fick, i. 239. But Curtius, i. 191, ignores this, and other analogies have been thought of. Der. From the stem criminof Lat. crimen, we have crimin-al, crimin-al-ly, crimin-al-i-ty, criminate, crimin-at-ion, crimin-at-or-y.

CRIMP, to wrinkle, plait, make crisp. (E.) Chiefly used in cookery, as 'to erimp a skate;' see Richardson and Webster. The frequentative erimple, to rumple, wrinkle, occurs in the Prompt. Parv. p. 103. An attenuated form of cramp, signifying 'to cramp slightly,' to draw together with slight force.' Not found in A. S., but still an E. word. + Du. krimpen, to shrink, shrivel, diminish. + Swed. krympa, to shrink ; active and neuter. + Dan. krympe sig sammen, to shrink oneself together. + G. krimpen, to crumple, to shrink cloth. [Not a Celtic word ; yet cf. W. crim, a ridge, crimp, a sharp ridge, Froissart, vol. ii. c. 157; spelt erammysyn, G. Douglas, Prol. to xii <sup>9</sup> a pitcher, jar. + Irish erogan, a pitcher. + W. erwe, a bucket, pail; Book of Eneados, 1. 15. - O. F. cramoisin, later cramoisi; the O. F. eramoisin is not given in Burguy, but easily inferred from the E. form and from the Low Lat. cramoisinus. The correct Lat. form appears in the Low Lat. carmesinus, crimson; so called from the kermes or cochineal insect with which it was dyed. - Arab. and Persian girmisi, crimson; girmiz, crimson; see Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 470. - Skt. krimija, produced by an insect. - Skt. krimi, a worm, an insect ; and jan, to proproduce.  $\beta$  The colour was so called because produced by the cochineal-insect; see Cochineal. The Skt. krimi stands for kvrimi, and is cognate with Lat. uermis and E. worm ; the Skt. jan, to produce, is cognate with the syllable gen- in generate. See Worm and Generate. Carmine is a doublet of crimson; see Carmine. [+]

CRINGE, to bend, crouch, fawn. (E.) Used by Shak. in the sense of to distort one's face; Ant. and Cleop. iii. 13. 100; cf. crinkle, to wrinkle, which is a derivative of cringe. Not found in M. E., but preserved in A.S. - A.S. cringan, crincgan, crincan, to sink in battle, fall, succumb; Grein, i. 169; and see Sweet's A.S. Reader. Thus eringe is a softened form of ering, and ering stands for an older crink, with the sense of 'to bend' or 'to bow,' and a thinner form of crank. See Crank. Der. crink-le, q. v. CRINITE, hairy. (Lat.) 'How comate, crinite, caudate stars are formed; 'Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, bk. xiv. st. 44.-Lat. crinitus, having long hair.-Lat. crini-, crude form of crinis, hair. Root uncertain ; KAR, to make, has been suggested. CRINKLE, to rumple slightly, wrinkle. (E.) 'Her face all bowsy, Comely crynklyd;' Skelton. Elynour Rummyng, 1. 18. Cf. crencled, full of twists or turnings, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 2008. Formed by adding -le, the common frequentative termination, to the base crime- of the verb to crime. See Crimes. Thus crime-le is to bend frequently, to make full of bends or turns. Compare Crimple.

CRINOLINE, a lady's skirt. (F., -L.) Formerly made of hair-cloth. - F. erinoline, (1) hair-cloth ; (2) crinoline; an artificial word. - F. crin, hair, esp. horse-hair, from Lat. crinem, acc. of crinis, hair; and lin, flax, from Lat. linum, flax. See Linen.

CRIPPLE, one who has not the full use of his limbs. (E.) M. E. erupel, crepel, cripel; see Cursor Mundi, 13106. An A.S. word, but the traces of it are not very distinct. See crepel in Bosworth. The true form should be crypel. + Du. kreupel, adj. crippled, lame; cf. kruipelings, creepingly, by stealth; kruipen, to creep. + O. Frisian kreppel, a cripple. + Icel. kryppill, also kryplingr, a cripple. + Dan. kröbling, a cripple ; cf. Dan. krybe, to creep. + G. krüppel, a cripple ; cf. M. H. G. krúfen, to creep.  $\beta$ . The word means lit. one who creeps; the suffix has the same active force as in A. S. byd-tl, i. e. one who proclaims. See Croop. Der. cripple, verb. CRISIS, a decisive point or moment. (Gk.) 'This hour's the very erisis of your fate ;' Dryden, Spanish Friar (Todd's Johnson). -Gk. spios, a separating, discerning, decision, crisis. -Gk. spiver, to decide, separate; cognate with Lat. cernere, to sift, Icel. skilja, to separate. -  $\sqrt{SKAR}$ , to separate; whence also E. sheer and skill. See Curtius, i. 191; Fick, i. 811. See Critic. CRISP, wrinkled, curled. (L.) M. E. crisp, Wyclif, Judith, xvi. to. Also crips, by change of sp to ps, a phenomenon due to the more frequent converse change of ps into sp, as in aspen, clasp, which see. Crips is in Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 296. In very early use; the A. S. crisp occurs in Ælfred's tr. of Beda, v. 2 (Bosworth). - Lat. crispus, curled ; supposed to be allied to Lat. carpere, to pluck, to card wool. If so, from the KARP, to shear ; whence also E. harvest. Curtius, i. 176; Fick, i. 526. Der. crisp-ly, crisp-ness. CRITIC, a judge, in literature or art. (Gk.) In Shak. Lo. La. Lo. iii. 178. – Gk. πριτικόs, able to discern; cf. πριτήs, a judge. – Gk. πρίτειν, to judge. See Crisis. Der. critic-al (Oth. ii. 1. 120); critic-ise, critic-is-m; critique (F. critique, from Gk. «pirindo). From the same source is criterion, Gk. Kpithpior, a test.

CROAK, to make a low hoarse sound. (E.) In Macbeth, i. 5. 40. Spenser has croking; Epithalamion, 1. 349. From a theoretical A.S. crácian, to croak ; represented only by its derivative crácetung, a croaking ; the expression krafena cracetung, the croaking of ravens, occurs in the Life of St. Guthlac, cap. viii. ed. Goodwin, p. 48. Cf. O. Du. brochen, to lament (Oudemans). B. Of imitative origin ; allied to crake, creak, crow, which see. Cf. Lat. grac-ulus, a jackdaw; Skt. garj, to roar; see Fick, i. 72, 562. Der. croaker. CROCHET, lit. a little hook. (F.) Modern. Applied to work done by means of a small hook. - F. crochet, a little crook or hook; dimin., with suffix -et, from F. croc, a crook. See Crotchet.

CROCK, a pitcher. (C.) M. E. crokke, crok ; the dat. case crocke occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 214. - A. S. crocca, as a gloss to olla in Ps. lix. 8; ed. Spelman. + O. Fries. krocha, a pitcher. + Du.

crochan, a pot. y. A more primitive idea appears in the Cornish crogen, a shell, also a skull ; W. cragen, a shell ; Bret. crogen, a shell. Cf. Skt. karaka, a water-pot, karkari, a pitcher; karaika, a skull; from the notion of hardness. See Curtius, i. 177. See Crag, and Hard. Der. crock-er, a potter, now obsolete, but occurring in Wyclif, Ps. ii. 9; also crock-ery, a collective sb., made in imitation of F. words in -rie; cf. nunnery, spicery. And see Cruse.

CROCODILLE, an alligator. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 299. - F. crocodile, 'a crocodile; Cotgrave. - Lat. crocodilus. - Gk. κροκόδειλοs, a lizard (an Ionic word, Herod. ii. 60); hence, an alligator, from its resemblance to a lizard. Origin unknown. GP The M.E. form was cokedrill, King Alisaunder, 5720; see Cookatrico. CROCUS, the name of a flower. (L.,-Gk.) In Milton, P. L.

iv. 701. - Lat. crocus. - Gk. κρύκου, the crocus; saffron. Cf. Skt. kunkuma, saffron. β. Apparently of Eastern origin; cf. Heb. karkóm, saffron ; Arab. karkam or kurkum, saffron ; Richardson's Dict. p. 1181.

CROFT, a small field. (C.?) M. E. croft, P. Plowman, B. v. 581; vi. 33.-A.S. croft, a field; Kemble's Codex Diplomaticus, 1257 (Leo). + Du. kro?i, a hillock; O. Du. krochte, crocht, a field on the downs, high and dry land; also O. Du. kro?t, krocht, high and dry land (Oudemans). [This is quite a different word from the O. Du. krochte, when used in the sense of crypt; see Crypt.] β. The f perhaps represents an older guttural; which is entirely lost in the mod. Gael. croit, a hump, hillock, croft, small piece of arable ground. Still, the E. word may have been derived from an older form of this Gaelic word, which once contained a guttural, preserved in cruac, a lump, orwach, a pile, heap, stack, hill, from the verb crwach, to heap, pile up. Cf. W. crug, a heap, tump, hillock.

CROMLECH, a structure of large stones. (W.) Modern. Merely borrowed from Welsh.-W. cromleck, an incumbent flag-stone; compounded from crom, bending, bowed (hence, laid across); ORONE, an old woman. (C.?) In Chaucer, C. T. 4852. Of Celtic origin? Cf. Irish crion, adj. withered, dry, old, ancient, prudent, sage; Gael. crion, dry, withered, mean, niggardly; Gael. crionach, withering, also, a term of supreme personal contempt ; Gael. criontag, a sorry mean female, crionna, old, niggardly, cautious. From Gael.

and Irish crion, to wither; cf. W. crino, to wither. Der. cron-y. [\*] CROOK, a hook, bend, bent staff. (E.?) M. E. crok; the pl. crokes is in the Ancren Riwle, p. 174. [Generally called a Celtic word, but on slight grounds, as it appears in O. Dutch and Scandinavian; it is probably entitled to be considered as English.] + O. Du. croke, mod. Du. kreuk, a bend, fold, rumple, wrinkle ; croken, mod. Du. kreuken, to bend, fold, crumple. + Icel. krókr, a hook, bend, winding.+Swed. krok, a hook, bend, angle. + Dan. krog, a hook, crock: kroze. to crook. to hook: kroze, crooked. B. Also in crook; kroge, to crook, to hook; kroget, crooked. the Celtic languages; Gael. crock, a crook, hook; W. crwce, crooked; W. crwg, a crook, hook; W. crych, a wrinkle, also, wrinkled.  $\gamma$ . The similarity of the Welsh and English forms points to the loss of an initial s, and the same loss is assumed by Fick and others in the case of the Lat erwa, a cross, which is probably a related word. This s appears in the G. shräg, oblique. See Fick, i. 813, who gives the  $\checkmark$  SKARK, to go obliquely, wind, as the root of Lat. carcer and crux, of the Ch. Slav. kroze, across, through, the G. skräg, oblique, and G. skränken, to cross, to lay across. Der. crook, verb; crook-ed, crook-ed-ly, crook-ed-ness; also croch-et, q. v.; crutch, q. v. Doublet, cross, q. v. CROP, the top of a plant, the craw of a bird. (E.) M. E. croppe, crop. In Chaucer, prol. 1. 7, 'the tendre croppes' means 'the tender upper shoots of plants.' To crop off is to take off the top; whence crop in the sense of what is reaped, a harvest. – A. S. cropp, crop; whence is a proper state of the top is the top of top of top of the top of explained by 'cima, corymbus, spica, guituis vesicula' in Lye's Dictionary. We find cropp as a gloss to uwam, a grape ; Luke, vi. 44, Northumbrian version. In Levit. i. 16, we have 'wurp pone cropp,' i. e. throw away the bird's crop. The orig. sense seems to have been that which sticks up or out, a protuberance, bunch. + Du. krop, a bird's crop; kroppen, to cram, to grow to a round head. + G. kroff, a crop, craw. + Icel. kroppr, a hunch or bump on the body; Swed. kropp, Dan. krop, the trunk of the body.  $\beta$ . Also in the Celtic kropp, Dan. krop, the trunk of the body.  $\beta$ . Also in the Celtic languages; W. cropa, the crop, or craw of a bird; Gael. and Irish sgroban, the crop of a bird. The latter form clearly shews the original initial s, which the close agreement of the English and Welsh forms would have led us to expect. Der. crop-full, Milton, L'Allegro, 113; crop, verb; crop out, verb. Doublet, croup (a). CROSLER, a staff with a curved top. (F., - Teut.) 'Because a crosser-staff is best for such a crooked time;' Gascoigne, Flowers: Richard Courtop, &c., last line. Spelt crocer, croser, croyer, croyser in the MSS. of P. Plowman, C. vi. 113. Made by adding the suffix bruik. +1 Cel. krukka. +5 Swed. kruka. + Dan. krukke. +0 H.G. chrwac, M.H.G. kruce, G. krug.  $\beta$ . [Yet, notwithstanding the wide spread of the word, it was probably originally Celtic.] - Gael. erog. man, C. xi. 92. The 17th line of Chaucer's Freres Tale alludes to a bishop catching offenders ' with his crook.'-O. F. croce, 'a crosier, B Somewhat oddly, the contracted form is common at a very early a bishop's staff;' Cotgrave. Mod. F. crosse, a crosier. Cf. Low period; crune occurs in Layamon, i. 181; Havelok, 1814.-O. F. Lat. croca, crocia, crochia, a curved stick, a bishop's staff (Ducange). -O.F. eroe, a crook, hook. Of. Teut. origin; cf. Icel. irofsr, a crook, hook. See Crook. ¶ The usual derivation from cross is histohook. See Crook. rically wrong; but, as crook and cross are ultimately the same word and were easily confused, the mistake was easily made, and is not of much consequence. Still the fact remains, that the true shape of the crosser was with a hooked or curved top; the archbishop's staff alone bore a cross instead of a crook, and was of exceptional, not of regular form. See my note to P. Plowman, C. xi. 92.

CROSS, the instrument of the Passion. (F., -L.) M. E. crois, cros, croce. Spelt croys, Rob. of Glouc. pp. 346, 392; cros, Layamon's Brut, iii, 261.-O.F. crois (mod. F. croix), a cross.-Lat. cruc-crm, acc. of crux, a cross, orig. a gibbet.  $\beta$ . The stem crucerve-erv, acc. of crow, a cross, orig. a gibbet.  $\beta$ . The stem erve-answers to W. crog, a cross; W. crug, a crook; cf. also W. crog, hanging, pendent, crogi, to hang; Irish crockaim, I hang, crucify; Gael. croick, a gallows, a gibbet ; crock, to hang. Thus the cross was a gibbet made with a crook or cross-piece. See Crook. Der. cross, adj. transverse, cross-ly, cross-ness, cross-bill, cross-bow, &c.; crossing, cross-wise, cross-let; also crossier, q. v., crusade, q. v., cruise. [\*] OROTCHET, a term in music; a whim. (F.,-Teut.) The sense of 'whim' seems derived from that of 'tune' or 'air,' from the arrangement of crotchets composing the air. 'As a good harper stricken far in years Into whose cunning hands the gout doth fall, All his old crotchets in his brain he bears, But on his harp plays ill, or not at all;' Davies, Immortality of the Soul, s. 32. See Richardson - F. crochet, 'a small hooke . . . also, a quaver in music;' Cotgrave. Dimin. of F. croc, 'a grapple, or great hooke; id. - Icel. brokr, a crook; see Crook. Der. crotchet-y. Doublet, crochet. [†] CROTON, the name of a genus of plants. (Gk.) Modern. - Gk.

npirow, a tick, which the seed of the croton resembles (Webster). Liddell and Scott give notron or noorder, a dog-louse, tick; also, the palma Christi or thorn bearing the castor-berry (from the likeness of this to a tick) whence is produced eroton and castor oil. Perhaps from Gk. sporeir, to rattle, smite, strike.

CROUCH, to bend down, squat, cower. (E.) M. E. crouchen, to bend down, stoop; 'thei so lowe crouchen; 'Piers the Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 303. A variant of, or derivative from M. E. croken, to bend ; Prompt Parv. p. 104 .- M. E. crok, a crook. See Crook. [+]

CROUP (1), an inflammatory affection of the larynx. (E.) Lowland Scotch eroup, the disease; also eroup, eroup, to croak, to cry with a hoarse voice, to speak hoarsely; Jamieson. 'The ropeen of the rauynis gart the crans crope' = the croaking of the ravens made the cranes croup; Complaint of Scotland, ch. vi. ed. Murray, p. 30. The words roup (whence ropen above) and croup are the same - A. S. Aropan, to cry, call aloud; Grein, ii. 108. + Icel. Aropa, to call out. + Goth. Aropan, to call out. + Du. rospen, to call. + G. rufen, to call. Cf. Lat. crepare, to crackle. See Fick, i. 86. The initial c is due to the strong aspirate, or to the prefix ge-, CROUP (2), the hinder parts of a horse, back of a saddle. (F., - Teut.) 'This carter thakketh his hors upon the croupe;' Chaucer, C. T. 7141.-O. F. (and mod. F.) croupe, the crupper, hind part of a horse; an older spelling was crope. The orig sense is a protuberance, as in eroupe d'une montagne, etc.' (Brachet). Cf. E. to crop out. - Icel. kroppr, a hunch or bump on the body; kryppa, a hunch, hump. Thus crowp is a doublet of Crop, q. v. Der. crowpier (see Brachet); also crupper, q. v.

CROW, to make a noise as a cock. (E.) M. E. crowen, crowen; Wyclif, Lu. xxii. 34. - A.S. erdwan, to crow; Lu. xxii. 34. + Du. braaijen, to crow; hence, to proclaim, publish. + G. krähen, to crow. [Crow is allied to erake, croak, and even to crane.] - & GAR, to cry out. See Max Müller's Lectures, 8th ed. i. 416. Der. crow, a croaking bird, from A.S. crawe, which see in Ps. cxlvi. 10, ed. Spelman; and cf. Icel. krákr, kráka, a crow; also crow-bar, a bar with a strong beak like a crow's; also crow-foo!, a flower, called crow-toe in Milton, Lycidas, 143.

CROWD (1), to push, press, squeeze. (E.) M. E. crouden, to push, Chaucer, C. T. 4716. – A. S. creódan, to crowd, press, push, pt. t. creád; Grein, i. 168. Cf. A. S. croda, gecrod, a crowd, throng, id. 169. Also prov. Eng. (Norfolk) crowd, to push along in a wheelbarrow. + Du. kruijen, to push along in a wheelbarrow, to drive. Der. crowd, sb.

CROWD (2), a fiddle, violin. (W.) Obsolete. 'The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling crowd; 'Spenser, Epithalamion, 131. M. E. crowde, Wyclif, Luke, xv. 25, where the Vulgate has chorum; better spelt crouth, King of Tars, 485.-W. crwth, anything swelling out, a bulge, trunk, belly, crowd, violin, fiddle (Spurrell). + Gael. cruit, a harp, violin, cymbal. [†] corone (mod. F. couronne), a crown. - Lat. corona, a garland, wreath. + Gk. Kopurn, the curved end of a bow; Koparvis, Koparvis, curved, bent. + Gael. cruinn, round, circular; W. crwn, round, circular. See Curve. Der. corolla, corollary, coron-al, coron-er, coron-et, all from Lat. corona. See these words. Also crown, vb.

CROWN, a garland, diadem. (F., -L.) M. E. corone, coroune; also in the contracted form erune, crown, by loss of the former o. is that which is torn to pieces, or pinched small. See Crimp.

CRUCIAL, in the manner of a cross; testing, as if by the cross. (F., -L.) 'Crucial incision, with Chirurgeons, an incision or cut in some fleshy parts in the form of a cross; 'Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731.-F. crucial, 'cross-wise, cross-like;' Cotgrave. Formed (as if from a Lat. crucialis) from the crude-form cruci- of Lat. cruz, a cross. See Cross.

CRUCLFY, to fix on the cross. (F., - L.) M. E. crucifien, Wyclif, Mark, xv. 13.-O. F. crucifier, 'to crucifie, to naile or put to death on a cross;' Cotgrave. - Lat. crucificare*, put for crucifigere, to fix on a cross; pp. erucifixus. - Lat. eruci-, crude form of eruz, a cross; and figere, to fix. See Cross and Fix. Der. crucifix, which occurs early in the Ancren Riwle, p. 16; crucifix-ion; both from the Lat. pp. crucificus. From Lat. cruci- are also formed cruci-ferous, cross-bearing, from the Lat. ferre, to bear; and cruci-form. CRUCIBLE, a melting-pot. (Low L., -F., -C.) Spelt crusi-ble in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. - Low Lat. cruci-bulum, crucibolus, a hanging lamp, also, a melting-pot, Ducange; and see the Theatrum Chemicum. Diefenbach's Supplement to Du-cange gives: 'Crucibolus, kruse, kruselin, krug, becher.' The suffix -bolus answers to Lat. -bulum in thuri-bulum, a censer. B. The prefix eruci- points to the fact that the word was popularly supposed to be connected with Lat. crux (gen. crucis), a cross; and, owing to this notion, Chaucer represents crucibulum by the E. word crosselet or croslet, C. T., Group G, 793, 1117, 1147; and the story (probably false) was in vogue that crucibles were marked with a cross to prevent the devil from interfering with the chemical operations performed in them. This story fails to account for the use of crucibulum in the sense of a hanging lamp, which seems to have been the original one. y. The simple explanation is that crucibulum (like cresset, also used in the sense of hanging lamp) was formed on the base which appears in the O.F. cruche. - O.F. cruche, 'an earthen pot, pitcher;' Cot. [Cf. O. F. ereuset, 'a crucible, cruzet, or cruet; a little earthen pot, wherein goldsmiths melt their silver;' id. But this is the dimin. of cruse, though both words are from crock.]-W. cruc, a pail. See Crock, Cruse, Cresset, and Cruet.

CRUDE, raw, unripe. (L.) The words crude, crudenes, and cruditie occur in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth; b. iv. and b. ii. Chaucer has crude, C. T. 16240. - Lat. crudus, raw; connected with E. raw and with Skt. krúra, sore, cruel, hard. - KRU, of which the fun-damental notion is 'to be hard.' See Curtius, i. 191. See Baw. Der. crude-ly, crude-ness, crud-i-ty; and see cruel, crust, crystal.

CRUEL, severe, hard-hearted. (F.,-L.) M. E. cruel, Rob. of Glouc, p. 417.-O. F. cruel, harsh, severe.-Lat. crudelis, severe, hard-hearted. From the same root as crude. Der. cruel-ly; cruel-ly. from O. F. cruelte (mod. F. cruauté), from Lat. acc. crudelitatem.

CRUET, a small pot or jar. (F., - Du.) Spelt crewete in Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 12. It is related to cruzet, a little cruse; see Creuset in Cotgrave, explained by 'a crucible, cruzet, or cruet, a little earthen pot, wherein goldsmiths melt their silver.' β. Mr. Wedgwood suggests that cruet is due to the loss of z in cruzet. More likely, it was a doublet formed from the Dutch kruik, a pitcher, jug. instead of from the Du. kross, of the same signification. It is, in this view, a dimin. rather of crock than of cruse. See Crock, Cruse[ $\uparrow$ ] CRUISE, to traverse the sea. (Du. -F. -L.) 'A cruise to Manilla;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1686. - Du. kruisen, to cross, crucify; also, to cruise, lit. to traverse backwards and forwards. -Du. kruis, a cross. - O. F. crois, a cross. - Lat. crucem, acc. of cruz, a Gross. Thus cruise merely means to eross, to traverse. See Cross. 4 We find also Swed. kryssa, to cruise, Dan. krodse, to cross, to cruise; similarly formed. Dor. cruis-er. CRUMB, a small morsel. (E.) The final b is excrescent. M. E.

crume, crome, crumme, cromme. Spelt crume, Ancren Riwle, p. 342.-A.S. cruma, Matt. xv. 27. + Du. krwim, crumb, pith; cf. Du. krwimelen, to crumble, kruimel, a small crumb; kruimig, kruimelig, crumby, or crummy. + Dan. krumme, a crumb. + G. krume, a crumb; cf. G. krümelig, crumbling; krümeln, to crumble. B. The vowel u answers to the usual vowel of past participles from verbs with a vowel i; cf. sing from sing. Hence we detect the root in the O. H. G. chrim-man, M. H. G. krimmen, to seize with the claws, scratch, tear, pinch. The same verb doubtless appears in the prov. Eng. cream, to press, crimme, to crumble bread (Halliwell); and is closely allied to prov. Eng. crimmle, to plait up a dress (Halliwell), and to E. crimp, to wrinkle, Du. krimpen, to shrink, shrivel, diminish. Thus the sense kruimelen, G. krümeln; perhaps crump-et.

CRUMPLE, to wrinkle, rumple. (E.) M. E. cromplen. 'My skinne is withered, and crompled together;' Bible, 1551, Job, vii. 5. B. The spelling with o points to an original a, and crumple is, in fact, merely the frequentative of cramp, made by adding the suffix 4. It signifies 'to cramp frequently,' to pinch often; 'hence, to pinch or squeeze into many folds or plaits. Cf. A. S. crompekt, full of crumples or wrinkles, obviously from the Teutonic & KRAMP, to pinch ; Fick, iii. 50. As crumple : cramp :: crimple : crimp. See Cramp, Crimp. CRUNCH, to chew with violence, grind with violence and noise. (E.) Rare in books. Swift has craunch. 'She would craunch the wing of a lark, bones and all, between her teeth;' Voyage to Brob-dingnag, ch. 3. An imitative word, and allied to scrunch. Cf. Du. schransen, to eat heartily. 4 A similar imitative word is 'Crunk, to cry like a crane;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. This is the Icel. krunka, to cry like a raven, to croak.

CRUPPER, the hinder part of a horse. (F., - Teut.) Spelt crowper in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 4. 40. – F. crowpiere, as in 'croupiere de cheval, a horse-crupper;' Cot. – F. crowpe, the croup of a horse. See Croup (2).

CRURAL, belonging to the leg. (L.) 'Crural, belonging to the leggs, knees, or thighs; Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674.-'Crural, belonging to Lat. cruralis, belonging to the shin or leg. - Lat. crur., stem of crus, the shin, shank. CRUSADE, an expedition for sake of the cross. (F., - Prov., -L.) 'A pope of that name [Urban] did first institute the croised o; 'Bacon, On an Holy War (R.) Spelt croysado in Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674. [It seems to have been thus spelt from an idea that it was Spanish; but the Span. form is cruzada.] - F. them wears the badge of the cross; 'Cot. = Prov. crozada, a crusade (Brachet). - Prov. eroz, a cross. - Lat. erucem, acc. of cruz, a cross. See Cross. Der. cruzder. [†] CRUSE, a small cup or pot. (Scand.) See 1 Kings, xiv. 3; 2 Kings, ii. 20. M. E. cruse, crouse, crouse. 'Crowse, or cruse, potte, amula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 105. 'A cruse of this [honey] now putte in a wyne-stene;' Palladius on Husbandry, xi. 51. – Icel. Arús, a pot, tankard. + Swed. krus, a mug. + Dan. kruss, a jug. mug. + Du. kross, a cup, pot, crucible. + M. H. G. kruss, an earthen mug.  $\beta$ . The word appears to be related to Icel. kruska, Swed. kruka, Dan. krukke, Du. kruik, G. krug, a pitcher, all of which are cognates of E. crock. See Crock.

CRUSH, to break in pieces, overwhelm. (F., - Teut.) 'Cruschyn or quaschyn, quasso; ' Prompt. Parv. p. 106. - O. F. cruisir, croissir, to crack, break. - Swed. krysta, to squeeze ; Dan. kryste, to squeeze, press; Icel. kreista, kreysta, to squeeze, pinch, press. B. The oldest form of the verb appears in Goth. kriustan, to gnash with the teeth, grind the teeth, Mk. ix. 18; whence Goth. krusts, gnashing of teeth, Matt. viii. 12. Cf. Goth. gakroton, to maim, break one's limbs, Lu. xx. 18.

CRUST, the rind of bread, or coating of a pie. (F.,-L.) M. E. ersst, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 204; Prompt. Parv. p. 106.-O. F. cruste, spelt crouste in Cot. - Lat. crusta, crust of bread. Cf. Irish cruaida, hard; Gk. spice, frost. - KRU, to be hard; Curtius, i. 191. See Crystal. Der. crust, verb; crust-y (Beaum. and Fletcher, Bloody Brother, iii. 2. 23), crust-i-ly, crust-i-ness ; crust-at-ed, crust-at-ion ; also crust-acea, formed with Lat. suffix -aceus, neuter plural -acea.

CRUTCH, a staff with a cross-piece. (E.) M. E. crucche; Layamon's Brut, ii. 394. No doubt an E. word ; we find the nearly related A. S. erice, a crutch, staff, in Ælfred's tr. of Beda, iv. 31; this would have given rise to a mod. E. crick or critch, and is preserved in erick-et; see Cricket (2). + Du. kruk, a crutch. + Swed. krycka, Dan. krykke, a crutch. + G. krücke, a crutch.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense was probably a crook, i. e. a bent stick, and it seems to be a derivate from Crook, q. v. Similarly, the Low Lat. crocia, a crutch, is from Low Lat. croca, a crook ; see Crosier.

CRY, to call aloud, lament, bawl. (F., -L.) M. E. crien, cryse; Rob. of Glouc. p. 401. The sb. cri is in Havelok, l. 270, and in Layamon, ii. 75.-O. F. crier, to cry; of which fuller forms occur in Ital. gridare, Span. gridar, and Port. gritar. - Lat. guiritare, to shriek, cry, lament; see Brachet. This is a frequentative form of Lat. queri, to lament, complaint. See Querulous. Der. cry, sb., cri-er.

CRYPT, an underground cell or chapel. (L., -Gk.) 'Caves under the ground, called crypta;' Homilies, Against Idolatry, pt. iii. - Lat. crypta, a cave underground, crypt. - Gk. «ponty, or «ponty, a vault, crypt; orig. fem. nom. of #purros, adj. hidden, covered, con-cealed - Gk. #purros, to hide, conceal. Doublet, grot.

CRYPTOGAMIA, a class of flowers in which fractification is

Der. crumm-y or crumb-y, adj.; crumb-le, verb, cognate with Du. & xourro-, crude form of xourros, hidden; and yau-eiv, to marry. See Crypt and Bigamy. Der. cryptogam-ic, cryptogam-ous. From the same source, apo-crypk-al.

CRYSTAL, clear glass, a kind of transparent mineral. (F., -L., -Gk.) In its modern form, it is Latinised; but it was first introduced into English from the French. We find M. E. cristal, Floriz and Blancheffur, ed. Lumby, 274 - O. F. cristal, crystal. - Lat. crystallum, crystal. = Gk. κρύσταλλοs, clear ice, ice, rock-crystal. = Gk. κρυσταίνeiv, to freeze. - Gk. spios, frost. - V KRU, to be hard; Curtius, i. 191. See Crude, Cruel, Raw. Der. crystall-ine, crystall-ise, crystall-is-at-ion; also crystallo-graphy, from Gk. ypaper, to describe. CUB, a whelp, young animal. (C.?) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 1. 29. Of uncertain origin; but, like some rather vulgar monosyllables, probably Celtic. – Irish cuib, a cub, whelp, young dog; from cu, a dog. Cf. W. cenau, a whelp, from ci, a dog; Gael. cuain, a litter of whelps, from cu, a dog. The Celtic cu, ci, a dog, is cog-nate with Lat. canis and E. hound. See Hound. [†]

CUBE, a solid square, die.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.,}-Gk_{.})$  In Milton, P. L. vi. 552. The word occurs in Cotgrave, who gives the F. cube, with the explanation 'a cube, or figure in geometry, foursquare like a die. - Lat. cubus, a cube, die. - Gk. κύβοs, a cube. Der. cube, verb; cub-ic, cub-ic-al, cub-ic-al-ly, cub-at-ure, cubi-form; cuboid, from Gk. sußoeion's, resembling a cube, which from sußo-, crude form of sußos, and eld-os, form, figure.

CUBIT, an old measure of length. (L.) M. E. cubite, Wyclif, Matt. vi. 27. - Lat. cubicus, Matt. vi. 27; meaning lit. a bend, an elbow; hence, the length from the elbow to the middle finger's end. Cf. Lat. cubare, to recline, lie down; Gk. surrew, to bend; Fick,

i. 536. See Cup. CUCKOLD, a man whose wife is unfaithful. (F., -L.) M. E. kokewold, kukwald, kukeweld, cokold. Spelt kokewold, Chaucer, C. T. 3154; P. Plowman, B. v. 159. 'Hic zelotopus, a kukwald, Wright's Vocab. i. 217. Spelt kukeweld, Owl and Nightingale, 1542. β. The final d is excrescent; indeed, the word seems to have been modified at the end by confusion with the M. E. suffix wold occurring in anwold, power, dominion, will. The true form is rather colol, extended to coholds in the Coventry Mysteries, p. 120. – O. F. coucool, (sic) a cuckold; Roquefort. [This is but a fuller form of the F. cou-cou, a cuckoo, which must once have had the form coucoul or coucul. The allusions to the comparison between a cuckold and a cuckoo are endless; see Shak, L. L. L. v. 2. 920.] - Lat. cuculus, a cuckoo. See Cuckoo.

CUCKOO, a bird which cries cuckool (F., -L.) M. E. coccou, cukkow, &c. 'Hic cuculus, a cocou, cucko;' Wright's Vocab. pp. 188, 252.-O. F. coucou, mod. F. coucou. - Lat. cuculus, a cuckoo. + Gk. KORRUE, a cuckoo, KORRU, the cry of a cuckoo. + Skt. kokila, a cuckoo. All imitative words, from the sound kuku made by the bird. See Cook, Cockatoo. Der. cuckold, q.v.

CUCUMBER, a kind of creeping plant. (L.) M. E. cucumer. later cucumber, with excrescent or inserted b. Spelt cucumer, Wyclif, Baruch, vi. 69. - Lat. cucumerem, acc. of cucumis, a cucumber. B. Perhaps so called because ripened by heat; cf. Lat. cucuma, a cookingkettle, from Lat. coquere, to cook, bake, ripen. See Cook. CUD, food chewed over again. (E.) M. E. cude, Ormulum, 1236.

In Wyclif, Deut. xiv. 6, where the text has code, three MSS. have quide, which is a mere variant of the same word. See Quid. From the same source as the A.S. ceówan, to chew; see Chew. ¶ No doubt cud means 'that which is chewed,' but it is not a corruption of chewed, for the reason that the proper pp. of ceówan is ceówan, i.e. chewn, the verb being originally strong. Similarly suds is connected with the verb to seethe, though different in form from sodden.

CUDDLE, to embrace closely, fondle. (E.) Rare in books. R. quotes: 'They cuddled close all night;' Somervile, Fab. 11. Clearly a corruption of couth-le, to be frequently familiar, a frequentative verb formed with the suffix -le from the M.E. couth, well known, familiar. The M. E. verb kuppen (equivalent to couthen) with the sense 'to cuddle,' occurs in Will. of Paleme, ed. Skeat, l. 1101. 'Than either hent other hastely in armes, And with kene kosses kubbed hem togidere = then they quickly took each the other in their arms, and with keen kisses cuddled themselves together, or embraced. The same poem shews numerous instances of the change of th to d in the M. E. cu6, i.e. couth, signifying well-known, familiar, as opposed to uncouth. Thus had for cu6 occurs in 11, 51, but soft for Same numerous are number of curit for the former of the same numerous are supposed to uncouth. 114, 501, &c. See numerous examples of couch, familiar, in Jamie-son's Scottish Dict. This adj. couch was originally a pp. signifying known, well-known. - A. S. cub, known, familiar; used as pp. of cunnan, to know; cf. Icel. kuor, old form of kunnr, familiar; Goth. kunths, known, pp. of kunnan, to know. B. Hence the development of the word is as follows. From cunnan, to know, we have concealed. (Gk.) Modern and botanical. Made up from Gk. cut, kud or cud, known, familiar; and hence again couthle or cuddle, to be often familiar. This solution of the word, certainly a correct one, is due to Mr. Cockayne; see Cockayne's Spoon and Sparrow, p. 26. Cf. also Lowland Scot. cutle, cuitle, to wheedle (Jamieson); Lancash. cutter, to fondle (Halliwell); Du. kudde, a flock, 1 Pet. v. 2; O. Du. cudden, to come together, flock together (Oudemans)

CUDGEL, a thick stick. (C.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 292. -W. cogyl, a cudgel, club; cogail, a distaff, truncheon. + Gael. cuigeal, a distaff; cuaille (by loss of g), a club, cudgel, bludgeon, heavy staff. + Irish cuigeal, coigeal, a distaff; cuaill, a pole, stake, B. Evidently a dimin. form; the old sense seems to have staff. been 'distaff.' [Perhaps from Irish cuack, a bottom of yarn; cf. Deen 'distan. [rernaps from irish cuack, a bottom of yam; cr. Irish cuackog, a skein of thread; Gael. cuack, a fold, plait, coil, curl. If so, the verb is Gael. and Irish cuack, to fold, plait.] For the change from g to dg, cf. brig with bridge. Der. cudgel, verb. CUDWEED, a plant of the genus Gnaphalium. (Hybrid; Arab. and E.) 'Cotton-weed or Cudweed, a sort of herb;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. 'Cudweed, the cotton weed;' Halliwell. As the plant is called indifferently cotton-weed and cudweed, we may infer that the latter word is a mere corruption of the former. I The codweed (from A.S. cod, a bag) is quite a different plant, viz. Centaurea nigra; Cockayne's Leechdoms, Glossary.

CUE, a tail, a billiard-rod. (F.,-L.) The same word as queue, q.v. An actor's cue seems to be the same word also, as signifying the last words or tail end of the speech of the preceding speaker. Oddly enough, it was, in this sense, sometimes denoted by Q; owing to the similarity in the sound. In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 1. 39.-O. F. cos, gueue, mod. F. gueue, a tail. - Lat. cola, cauda, a tail; see Brachet. See Caudal. ¶ The F. gueue also means a handle, stalk, billiard-cue. The obsolete word cue, meaning a farthing (Nares), stands for the letter q, as denoting quadrans, a farthing. See note on cu in Prompt. Parv. p. 106.

CUFF (1), to strike with the open hand. (Scand.) Taming of the Shrew, ii. 221. - Swed. huffa, to thrust, push. Ihre translates it by 'verberibus insultare,' and says it is the E. cuff; adding that it is the frequentative of the Swed. kufva, O. Swed. kufwa, to subdue, suppress, cow. See Cow(a). Other traces of the word are rare; Mr. Wedgwood gives 'Hamburg kuffen, to box the ears.' It seems pro-bable that the word is also allied to the odd Goth. kaupatjan, to strike with the palm of the hand, Matt. xxvi. 67. Der. cuff, sb.

CUFF (2), part of the sleeve. (E.?) Formerly it meant a glove or mitten; now used chiefly of the part of the sleeve which covers the hand but partially. M. E. cuffe, coffe. 'Cuffe, glove or meteyne, or mitten, mitta;' Prompt. Parv. p. 106. The pl. coffee is in P. Plow-man, B. vi. 62. The later use occurs in: 'Cuffe over ones hande, poignet; Palsgrave.  $\beta$ . Origin uncertain; but probably the same word as cuffie, which occurs in Kemble's ed. of the A.S. Charters, 1290 (Leo), though there used to signify 'a covering for the head.' Cfi O. H. G. chuppá, M. H. G. kuppe, kuppe, kupfe, a coif. See Coif.

CUIRASS, a kind of breast plate. (F., - Ital., -L.) Orig. made of leather, whence the name. In Milton, Samson, 132. Spelt curace in Chapman's tr. of the Iliad, bk. iii. 1. 223.-O. F. cuirace, cwirasse (now cwirasse), 'a cuirats (sic), armour for the breast and back;' Cot. [Introduced from Ital. in the 16th century (Brachet); but it seems rather to be regularly formed from the Low Latin. Cf. Span. coraza, Ital. corazza, a cuirass.] - Low Lat. coracia, coracium, a cuirass, breast-plate. Formed as if from an adj. coracius, for coriaceus, leathern. - Lat. corium, hide, leather; whence F. cuir, Ital. euojo. + Lithuanian shurà, hide, skin, leather; see Curtius, ii. 116. + Ch. Slavonic skora, a hide; see Fick, ii. 272. + Gk. Xópior (for CUISSES, pl., armour for the thighs. (F.,-L.) In Shak. I Hen. IV, iv. I. 105.-O. F. cuissoux, 'cuisses, armour for the thighs ;' Cotgrave. - F. cuisse, the thigh. - Lat. cond, the hip; see Brachet. Generally derived from  $\checkmark$  KAK, to bind; Fick, i. 516.

CULDEE, one of an old Celtic monkish fraternity. (C.) 'The pure Culdees Were Albyn's earliest priests of God; 'Campbell, Reul-lura. The note on the line says: 'The Culdees were the primitive clergy of Scotland, and apparently her only clergy from the 6th to the 11th century. They were of Irish origin, and their monastery on the island of Iona, or Icolmkill, was the seminary of Christianity in North Britain.'-Gael. cuilteach, a Culdee; Irish ceilede, a servant of God, a Culdee. The latter form can be resolved into Ir. ceile, a servant, spouse, and dé, gen. of dia, God. See Rhys, Lect. on W. Philology, p. 419. Cf. Low Lat. Culdei, Colidei, Culdees; misspelt colidei as if from Lat. colere Deum, to worship God.

CULINARY, pertaining to the kitchen. (L.) 'Our culinary fire; 'Boyle's Works, i. 523. - Lat. culinarius, belonging to a kitchen. -Lat. culing. a kitchen; cf. coguing, a kitchen.

short u) can hardly stand for coe-ling, from Lat, coquere, to cook: some connect it with carbo, a coal, from base KAR, to burn.

some connect it with carbo, "from base KAR, to burn. CULL, to collect, gather. (F., = L.) M. E. cullen. 'Cullyn owte, segrego, lego, separo; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 107.-O. F. coillir, cuillir, cueillir, to cull, collect. = Lat. colligere, to collect. See Collect, of which cull is a doublet. CULLENDER, a strainer; see Colander.

CULLION, a mean wretch. (F., -L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iv. 2. 20. A coarse word .- F. couillon, couille, Cotgrave; cf. Ital. coglione, coglioni, coglionare, Florio. - Lat. colens. From a like source is cully, a dupe, or to deceive.

CULM, a stalk, stem. (Lat.) Botanical. 'Culmus, the stem or stalk of com or grass;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - Lat. culmus, a stalk; cf. calamus, a stalk, stem; cognate with E. haulm. See Haulm. Dor. culmi-ferous, stalk-bearing; from Lat. ferre, to bear.

CULMINATE, to come to the highest point. (L.) See Milton. P. L. iii. 617. A coined word, from an assumed Lat. verb culminare, pp. culminatus, to come to a top. - Lat. culmin-, stem of culmen, the highest point of a thing; of which an older form is columen, a top, summit. See Column. Der. culminat-ion.

CULPABLE, deserving of blame. (F., -L.) M.E. cultable. coulpable, coupable. Spelt culpable, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 302. Spelt compable, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 300.-O. F. culpable, colpable, later coupable, culpable. - Lat. culpabilis, blameworthy. -Lat. culpare, to blame; with suffix -bilis. - Lat. culpa, a fault, failure, mistake, error. Der. culpabl-y; culpabil-i-ty, from Lat. culpabilis; also culprit, q. v. CULPRIT, a criminal. (L.) 'Then first the culprit answered to his name; Dryden, Wife of Bath's Tale, 273. Generally believed to stand for eulpate, an Englished form of the Law Lat. eulpates, i.e. the accused, from Lat. eulpare, to accuse; see above. The r has been inserted (as in cart-r-idge) by corruption; there are further examples of the insertion of r in an unaccented syllable in part-r-idge, from Lat. acc. perdicem ; in F. encre, ink, from Lat. encaustum ; in F. chanvre, hemp, from Lat. cannabis; &c.

CULTER, a plough-iron ; see Coulter. CULTIVATE, to till, improve, civilise. (L.) 'To cultivate ...that friendship;' Milton, To the Grand Duke of Tuscany (R.) It occurs also in Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674. - Low Lat. cultivatus, pp. of cultivare, to till, work at, used A. D. 1446; Ducange. [Hence also F. cultiver, Span. cultivar, Ital. coltivare.] - Low Lat cultivus, cultivated; Ducange .- Lat. cultus, tilled, pp. of colers, to till. See Culture. Der. cultivat-ion, cultivat-or.

CULTURE, cultivation. (F.,-L) 'The culture and profit of their myndes;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 14 d. – F. culture, 'culture, tillage, husbandry;' Cotgrave. – Lat. culture, cultivation. – Lat. culture, turus, fut. part. of colere, to till. Origin uncertain; see Curtius, i. 180. Der. culture, verb. And see above. CULVER (1), a dove. (E. or L.) Used by Spenser, F. Q. ii.

7. 34; Tears of the Muses, 246. Preserved in the name of the Culver Cliffs, near Sandown, Isle of Wight. Chaucer has colver, Leg. of Good Women, Philom. 92. - A.S. culfre, translating Lat. columba, St. Mark, i. 10. β. Probably not a true E. word, but corrupted from Lat. columba. Der. culver-tail, an old word for dove-tail; see Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674.

Biount's Olossographia, ed. 1074. CULVER(2), another form of Culverin; see below. CULVERIN, a sort of cannon. (F., -L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 56. A corrupt form for culevrin. -O. F. couleuvrine, 'a cul-verin, the piece of ordnance called so; 'Cotgrave. Fem. form of O. D. and the source of O. F. couleuvrin, 'adder-like ;' id. - O. F. couleuvre, an adder ; id. -Lat. colubra, fem. form of coluber, a serpent, adder; whence the adj. colubrinus, snake-like, cunning, wily. ¶ It appears that this cannon was so called from its long, thin shape; some were similarly called serpertina; see Junius, quoted in Richardson. Other pieces of ordnance were called falcons.

CULVERT, an arched drain under a road. (F., -L.) Not in Johnson. The final t appears to be merely excrescent, and the word is no doubt corrupted from O F. coulouëre, 'a channel, gutter,' &c.; Cot. - F. couler, to flow. trickle. - Lat. colare, to filter. - Lat. colum, a strainer. See Colander.

CUMBER, to encumber, hinder. (F.,-L.) M.E. combren, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, ed. Morris, p. 94; Piers Plowman's Crede, 461, 765. The sb. comburment occurs in K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 472. – O. F. combrer, to hinder; cf. mod. F. encombre, an impediment.-Low Lat. cumbrus, a heap, 'found in several Merovingian documents, e g. in the Gesta Regum Francorum, c. 25; Brachet. Ducange gives the pl. combri, impediments. Corrupted from Lat. cumulus, a heap, by change of l to r, not uncommon; with inserted b. See Cumulate. Der. cumbr-ous (i.e. cumber-ous), cumbr-ous-ly, β. Culina (with cumbr-ous-ness; also cumber-some, by adding the E. suffix -some.

CUMIN, CUMMIN, the name of a plant. (L., -Gk., -Heb.) Curo. Dor. curac-y. From the Lat. pp. curatus we have also M. E. comin, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 6797; also cummin, Wyclif, curat-ive; and curat-or, Lat. curator, a guardian. M. E. comin, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 6797; also cumnuin, Wyclif, St. Matt. xxiii. 23. In the A.S. translation we find the forms cymyn, cymen, and cumin, in the MSS. There is an O.F. form comin; see Bartsch, Chrest. Franc. col. 275, 1. 29. Cotgrave has: 'Commin, cummin.' Both O. F. and A. S. forms are from the Lat. cuminum or cyminum in Matt. xxiii. 23. - Gk. rupprov. - Heb. kammún, cum-min. Cf. Arab. kammun, cummin seed; Rich. Dict. 1206, 1207. CUMULATE, to heap together. (L.) 'All the extremes of worth and beauty that were cumulated in Camilla;' Shelton's Don Quixote, c. 6. The adj. cumulative is in Bacon, On Learning, by G. Wats. b. iii. c. 1. - Lat. cumulatus, pp. of cumulare, to heap up. - Lat. cumulus, a heap. - VKU, to swell, contain; Curtius, i. 192. See Hollow. Der. cumulat-ive, cumulat-ion; also ac-cumulate, q. v., cumber. q. v. CUNEATE, wedge-shaped. (L.) Modern ; botanical. Formed with suffix -ate, corresponding to Lat. -atus, from Lat. cune-us. a wedge. See Coin. Der. From the same source is cunsi-form, i.e. wedgeshaped : a modern word.

CUNNING (1), knowledge, skill. (Scand.) M.E. cunninge, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 964. Modified from Icel. hunnandi, knowledge, which is derived from kunna, to know, cognate with A.S. cunnan, to know; see Grein, i. 171. ¶ The A.S. cunnung signifies temptation, trial. See Can. CUNNING (2), skilful, knowing. (E.) M. E. cunning, conning; Northern form, cunnand, from Icel. kunnandi, pres. pl. of kunna, to know. Spelt kunnynge, P. Plowman, B. xi. 70. Really the pres. pt. of M. E. cunnen, to know, in very common use; Ancren Riwle, p. 280. - A. S. cunnan, to know. See Can. Der. cunning-ly.

CUP, a drinking-vessel. (L.) M. E. cuppe, Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris. 2310; coppe, Rob. of Glouc. p. 117.-A.S. cuppe, a cup. 'Caupus, vel obba, cuppe;' Ælfric's Gloss. ed. Somner; Nomina Vasorum. Cf. Du. and Dan. kop, Swed. kopp, F. coupe. Span. copa, Ital. copfa, a cup; all alike borrowed from Latin.-Lat. cupa, a vat, butt, cask; in later times, a drinking-vessel; see Ducange.+ Ch. Slavonic kupa, a cup; Curtius, i. 195. + Gk. κύπελλον, a cup, goblet; cf. κύπη, a hole, hollow; also Skt. kúpa, a pit, well, hollow. See Cymbal. Der. cup, verb; cup-board, q.v.; cupping-glass, Beaum. and Fletcher, Bloody Brother, iv. 2.

CUPBOARD, a closet with shelves for cups. (Hybrid; L. and E.) M. E. cup-borde, orig. a table for holding cups. And couered mony a cupbords with clothes ful quite; 'Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 1440; see the whole passage. And cf. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 206. Formed from cup and M.E. bord, a table, esp. a table for meals and various vessels. See Cup and Board. ¶ The sense of the word has somewhat changed; it is possible that some may have taken it to mean cup-hoard, a place for keeping cups; but there was no such word, and such is not the true etymology. CUPID, the god of love. (L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 141.

-Lat. nom. cupido, desire, passion, Cupid -Lat. cupere, to desire. Cf. Skt. kup, to become excited. See Covet. Der. cutid-i-iy, q. v. And, from the same root, con-cup-isc-ence.

CUPIDITY, avarice, covetousness. (F., -L.) Cupiditie, in Hall's Chron. Hen. VII, an. 11. - F. cutidité, 'cupidity, lust, covetousness;' Cotgrave. - Lat. acc. enfiditatem, from nom. enpiditas, desire, covetousness. - Lat. cupidus, desirous. - Lat. cupere, to desire. See above.

CUPOLA, a sort of dome. (Ital., -L.) Cupola, or Cuppola, ... an high tower arched, having but little light;' Gazophylacium Anglicanum, ed. 1689. Spelt cupolo in Blount, Glossographia, edd. 1674, 1681; cupola in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - Ital. cupola, a cuβ. Formed as a diminutive, with suffix -la, from pola, dome. Low Lat. cupa, a cup; from its cup-like shape; cf. Lat. cupula, a Low Lat. cupa, a cup; from its cup-like shape; ci. Lat. cuputa, a little cask. – Lat. cupa, a cask, vat. See Cup. CUPREOUS, coppery, like copper (L.) 'Cupreous, of or per-taining to copper; 'Blount, Glossographia, ed. 1674. – Lat. cupreus, of copper. – Lat. cuprum, copper. See Copper. CUR, a small dog. (Scand.) M. E. kur, curre. In early use. 'The fule kur dogge; i. e. the foul cur-dog, Ancren Riwle, p. 290. Cf. Piers Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 644. – Swed. dial. kurre, a dog; Diate LO Du kurre a honse-dog. watch-dog : Oudemans. B. So Rietz. + O. Du. korre, a house-dog, watch-dog; Oudemans.  $\beta$ . So named from his growling; cf. Icel kurra, to murmur, grumble; Dan. kurre, to coo, whirt; Swed. kurra, to rumble. to croak; O. Du. horrepot, a grumbler (Oudemans), equivalent to Du. knorregot, a grumbler, from Du. knorren, to grumble. growl, snarl. The word is imitative, and the letter R is known to be ' the dog's letter,' Romeo, ii 4. 223. Cf. M. E. hurren, to make a harsh noise. 'R is the dog's letter, and hurretk in the sound ;' Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar. CURATE, one who has cure of souls. (L.) M. E. curat, Chaucer,

C. T. prol. 218. - Low Lat. curatus, a priest, curate. - Low Lat. cur-

CURB, to check, restrain, lit. to bend. (F.,-L.) In Merch, of Ven. i. 2. 26. Curbed - bent. 'By crooked and curbed lines ;' Holland, Plutarch, p. 678. M. E. courben, to bend; used also intransi-tively, to bend oneself, bow down. 'Yet I courbed on my knees;' P. Plowman, B. ii. 1. Cf. Her necke is short, her shulders courbe, i. e. bent; Gower, C. A. ii. 159. - O. F. (and mod. F.) courber, to bend, crook, bow. - Lat. curvare, to bend. - Lat. curvus, bent, curved. See Curve. Der. curb, sb., curb-stone, kerb-stone.

CURD, the coagulated part of milk. (C.) M.E. curd, more often crud or crod, by the shifting of r so common in English. 'A fewe cruddes and creem ;' P. Plowman, B. vi. 284; spelt croddes, id. C. ix. 306. – Irish cruth, curds, also spelt gruth, groth; Gael. gruth, curds; cf. Gael. gruthach, curdled, abounding in curds. B. Perhaps the orig. sense was simply 'milk;' cf. Irish cruth-aim, I milk. [Otherwise, it is tempting to connect it with O. Gael. cruad, a stone ; Gael. and Irish cruadh, cruaidh, hard, firm.] Der. curd-y, curd-le.

CURE, care, attention. (F., -L.) M. E. cure, Chaucer, C. T. prol. 305; King Alisaunder, 4016. - O. F. cure, care. - Lat. cura, care, attention, cure. Origin uncertain ; the O. Lat. form was coera or coira, and some connect it with cauere, to pay heed to; which seems possible. ¶ It is well to remember that cure is wholly unconnected with E. care; the similarity of sound and sense is accidental. In actual speech, care and cure are used in different ways. Der. cure, verb; cur-able; cure less; also curate, q. v.; curious, q. v.

And, from the same source, ac-cur-ale, q. v. CURFEW, a fire-cover; the time for covering fires; the curfewbell. (F., -L.) M. E. courfeu, curfeu, curfu. 'Abouten courfeu-tyme; Chaucer, C. T. 3645. 'Curfu, ignitegium;' Prompt. Parv. p. 110. -O. F. coure-feu, later course-feu, in which latter form it is given by Roquefort, who explains it as a bell rung at seven P.M. as a signal for putting out fires. The history is well known; see Curfew in Eng. Cycl. div. Arts and Sciences. - O. F. courir, later couvrir, to cover; and F. feu, fire, which is from the Lat. focum, acc. of focus. See Cover and Focus. Der. curfew-bell.

CURIOUS, inquisitive. (F., -L.) M. E. curious, busy; Ro-maunt of the Rose, 1052. -O. F. curios, careful, busy. - Lat. curiosus, careful. – Lat. cura, attention. See Cure. Der. curious-ly, curious-ness; curios-i-ly (M. E. curiosité, Gower, C. A. iii. 383), from F. curiosité, Englished 'curiosity' by Cotgrave, from Lat. acc. curiositatem. Bacon uses curiosity to mean 'elaborate work ;' Essay 46. On Gardens.

CURL, to twist into ringlets or curls; a ringlet. (O. Low G.) In English, the verb seems rather formed from the sb. than vice versa. Gascoigne has: 'But curle their locks with bodkins and with braids;' Epil. to the Steel Glas, l. 1142 ; in Skeat, Spec. of English. Curl is from the older form erwl, by the shifting of r; cf. eress, ewrd. Chaucer has: 'With lokkes crulle,' i. e. with curled or crisped locks; Prol. 81. - Du. krul, a curl ; krullen, to curl ; O. Du. krol, adj. curled ; krollen, to curl, wrinkle, rumple. + Dan. krölle, a curl; krölle, to curl. + Swed. krullig, crisp; Swed. dial. krulla, to curl; Rietz. β. The β. The orig. sense is clearly to crumple, twist, or make crooked; and we may regard crul as a contraction of 'to crcokle,' or make crooked. Cf. Du. krullen with Du. kreukelen, to crumple, from kreuk, a crook, a rumple; similarly Dan. krölle may stand for krog-le, from krog, a crook, kroge, to crook; and Swed. krullig may be connected with Swed. krok, a crook. See iurther under Crook. Der. curl-y, curl-ing. CURLEW, an aquatic wading bird. (F.) M. E. corlew, curlew, curlu. Spelt corlew, P. Plowman, C. xvi. 243; corlue, id. B. xiv. 43. -O. F. corlieu, 'a curlue;' Cot. He also gives the F. spellings corlis and courlis. Cf Ital. chiurlo, a curlew; Span. chorlito, a curlew, evidently a dimin. form from an older chorlo. The Low Lat. form is corlinus (corlinus?).  $\beta$ . Probably an imitative word, from the bird's cry. Cf. Ital. chiurlars, to howl like the hom-owl, Meadows; also Swed. kurla, to coo, croo, murmur.

CURMUDGEON, a covetous, stingy fellow. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Spelt curmudgeon, Ford, The Lady's Trial, A. v. sc. 1; curmudgin, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2 (Richardson), altered to curmudgeon in Bell's edition, i. 220. But the older spelling was corne-mudgin or cornmudgin, used by Holland to translate the Lat. frumentarius, a com-dealer; see Holland's tr. of Livy, pp. 150, 1104, as cited in Richardson. The latter passage speaks of fines paid by 'certain cornmadgins for hourding up and keeping in their graine.' B. The word is usually supposed to be a corruption of corn-merchant, which is merely incredible, there being no reason for so greatly corrupting so familiar a word; neither is corn-merchant a term of reproach. y. It is clear that the ending in stands for ing, the final g of ing atus, adj.; curatum beneficium, a benefice with cure of souls per-taining to it. Formed as a pp., from the sb. cura, a cure. See accordingly, corn-mudging, and the signification is, judging by the verb to mudge. The letters dge point back to an older g, as in bridge for brig; or else to an older ch, as in grudge for M. E. grucchen. This identifies the word with mug or much, both of which can be traced. The form mug occurs in 'muglard, a miser,' Halliwell; and again in the Shakespearian expression in huggermugger, i. e. in secrecy. The form muck or mouch occurs very early in the sb. muchares, skulking thieves, in the Ancren Riwle, p. 150. This sb. is more familiar in its later form micher, used by Shakespeare, respecting which see Halliwell, s. v. mich, who remarks that 'in the forest of Dean, to mooch blackberries, or simply to mooch, means to pick blackberries;' Herefordsh. Glos. p. 69. δ. The derivation is from the O.F. muchier, also mucer, written musser by Cotgrave, and explained by 'to hide, conceal, keep close, lay out of the way; also, to lurke, skowke, or squat in a corner.' This verb was especially used of hoarding corn, and the expression was, originally, a biblical one. See the O. F. version of Prov. xi. 26, cited by Wedg-wood, s.v. hugger-mugger: 'Cil que musse les furmes;' A. V. 'he that withholdeth com.' Thus a corn-mudging man was one who withheld corn, and the word was, from the first, one of reproach. The O. F. mucer. to hide, is of unknown origin. ¶ To sum up: Curmudgeon is, historically, a corruption of corn-mudgin, i.e. corn-mudging, signifying 'corn-hoarding' or 'corn-withholding.' = M. E. muchen, to hide; cf. muchares in Ancr. Riwl. 150. - O. F. mucer, to hide, lurk.

CURRANT, a Corinth raisin. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 40. Haydn gives 1533 as the date when currant-trees were brought to England; but the name was also given to the small dried grapes brought from the Levant and known in England at an earlier time. 'In Liber Cure Cocorum [p. 16] called raysyns of corouns, Fr. raisins de Corinthe, the small dried grapes of the Greek corounts, Fr. raising de Corinne, the small dired grapes of the Greek islands. Then applied to our own sour fruit of somewhat similar appearance; Wedgwood. So also we find 'roysynys of coraunce;' Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 211, last line. – F. 'Raisins de Corinthe, currants, or small raisins;' Cot. Thus currant is a corruption of F. Corinthe, Corinth. – Lat. Corinthus. – Gk. Edourdos.

CURRENT, running, flowing. (F., -L.) M. E. currant. 'Like to the currant fire, that brenneth Upon a corde, as thou hast seen, When it with pondre is so beseen Of sulphre;' Gower, C. A. iii. 96. Afterwards altered to current, to look more like Latin. -O. F. curant, pres. pt. of O.F. curre (more commonly corre), to run. - Lat. currere, to run. Cf. Skt. char, to move. - VKAR, to move; see Curtius, i. 77. From the same root is car, q. v. Der. current, sb.; current-ly, currenc-y; curricle, q. v.; and from the same source are cursive, cursory, q. v. From the same root are concur, incur, occur, recur; corridor, courier; course, concourse, discourse, intercourse; excursion, incursion; courser, precursor; corsair, &c.

CURRICLE, a short course ; a chaise. (L.) 'Upon a curricle in this world depends a long course of the next ; Sir T. Browne, Christ. Morals, vol. ii. p. 23 (R.) The sense of 'chaise' is quite modern; see Todd's Johnson. - Lat. curriculum, a running, a course ; also, a light car (Cicero). Formed as a double diminutive, with suffixes -cand -l-, from the stem curri-; cf. parti-cul-a, a particle. - Lat. currere, to run. See Current. Doublet, curriculum, which is the Lat. word, unchanged.

CURRY (1), to dress leather. (F., -L., and Teut.) 'Thei curry kinges,' i. e. flatter kings, lit. dress them; said ironically; Piers Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 365. The E. verb is accompanied by the M.E. sb. curreie, apparatus, preparation; K. Alisaunder, 5118. - O. F. conroier, conreier (Burguy, s. v. roi), later couroier, coureier; whence the forms conroyer, courroyer, given by Cotgrave, and explained by 'to curry, tew, or dress leather.' - O. F. conroi, later emroy, apparatus, equipage, gear, preparation of all kinds. [Formed, like array (O. F. arroi) by prefixing a Latin preposition to a Teutonic word; see Array.]-O.F. con-, prefix, from Lat. con- (for cum), together; and the O.F. roi, array, order. This word answers to Ital. -redo, order, seen in Ital. arredo, array. - Low Lat. -redum, -redium, seen in the derived Low Lat. arredium, conredium, equipment, furniture, apparatus, gear.  $\beta$ . Of Teut, origin; cf. Swed. reda, order, sb., or, as verb, to set in order; Dan. rede, order, sb., or as verb, to set in order; Icel. reiði, tackle. The same root appears in the E. ready, also in array and disarray; and in F. désarroi, which see in Brachet. See Ready. Der. curri-er. (1) The phr. to curry favour is a corruption of M.E. to curry favell, i.e. to rub down a horse. Freuell was a common old name for a horse. See my note to P. Plowman, C. iii. 5.

CURRY (2), a kind of seasoned dish. (Pers.) A general term for seasoned dishes in India, for which there are many recipes. See Curry in Encycl. Britannica, 9th ed., where is also an account of context, 'com-hoarding.' It merely remains to trace further the Coromandel coast, being much used for curries, that plant has also Coromandel coast, being miles aced for curries, that plant has also there the name of kura, which means esculent; see Plants of the Coromandel Coast, 1795: Todd's Johnson. - Pers. khur, meat, flavour, relish, taste; khurdi, broth, juicy meats; Richardson's Dict. pp. 636, 637. Cf. Pers. khurák, provisions, eatables; khurdan, to eat ; id. ; so also Palmer, Pers. Dict. coll. 239, 240.

CURSE, to imprecate evil upon. (E.; perhaps Scand.,-L.) M. E. cursien, cursen, corsen. 'This cursed crone ;' Chaucer, C. T. 4853 ; 'this cursed dede ;' id. 4854. The sb. is curs, Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 663. - A.S. cursian, A.S. Chron. an. 1137; where the compound pp. forcursæd also occurs. The A.S. sb. is curs; Bosworth. B. Remoter origin unknown; perhaps originally Scandinavian, and due to a particular use of Swed. korsa, Dan. korse, to make the sign of the cross, from Swed. and Dan. kors, a cross, a corruption of Icel. kross, a cross, and derived from O. F. crois; see Cross. Dor. curs-ed, curs-er. CURSIVE, running, flowing. (L.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. A mere translation of Low Lat. cursivus, cursive, as applied to handwriting .- Lat. cursus, pp. of currere, to run. See

Current CURSORY, running, hasty, superficial. (L.) The odd form cursorary (other edd. cursenary, curselary) is in Shak. Hen. V, v. 2. 77. 'He discoursed cursorily;' Bp. Taylor, Great Exemplar, pt. iii. § 14. - Low Lat. cursorius, chiefly used in the adv. cursorie, hastily, quickly. -Lat. cursori-, crude form of cursor, a runner. -Lat. cursus, pp. of CURT, short, concise. (L.) 'Massro del campo, Peck! his name is curter, ben Jonson, The New Inn, iii. 1.-Lat. curtus, docked, clipped. - SKAR, to shear, cut; whence also E. shear, and Icel. shardr, docked. See Shear. Der. curt-ly, curt-ness; curt-ail, q. v.

CURTAIL, to cut short, abridge, dock. (F., -L.) a. Curtail is a corruption of an older curtall, and was orig. accented on the first syllable; there is no pretence for saying that it is derived from the F. court tailler, to cut short, a phrase which does not appear to have been used. The two instances in Shakespeare may suffice to shew this. 'I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion ;' Rich. III, i. 1. 18. And again: 'When a Gentleman is dispos'd to sweare, it is not for any standers-by to curtall his oathes;' Cymbeline, ii. 1. 12, according to the first folio; altered to curtail in later editions. B. Cotgrave translates accourcir by 'to shorten, abridge, curtall, clip, or cut short ;' and this may help to shew that the French for to curtail was not court tailler (!), but accourcir. y. The verb was, in fact, derived from the adj. curtall or curtal, having a docked tail, occurring four times in Shakespeare, viz. Pilgr. 773; M. Wives, ii. 1. 114; Com. Err. iii. 2. 151; All's Well, ii. 3. 65. – O. F. courtault [= curtalt], later courtaut; both forms are given by Cotgrave, and explained by 'a curtall;' or, as an adj., by 'curtall, being curtalled.' He also gives: 'Double courtant, a strong curtall, or a horse of middle size between the ordinary curtall, and horse of service.' δ. The occurrence of the final ll in curtall shews that the word was taken into English before the old form courtault fell into disuse. The F. word may have been borrowed from Italian. Cf. Florio, who gives the Ital. cortaldo, a curtall, a horse sans taile; cortare, to shorten, to curtall; corta, short, briefe, curtald.'-O. F. court (Ital. corta), short; with suffix -anli, older -ali, equivalent to Ital. -aldo, Low Lat. -aldus, of Germanic origin, as in Regin-ald; from G. walt, O. Low G. wald (Icel. vald), power. See Brachet's Etym. French Dict.

pref. § 195, p. cix. – Lat. curtus, docked. See Curt. CURTAIN, a hanging cloth. (F., – L.) M. E. cortin, curtin; Chaucer, C. T. 6831. The pp. cortined, furnished with curtains, is in K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1028. – O. F. cortine, curtine, a curtain. -Low Lat. cortina, a small court, small enclosure, croft, rampart or ' curtain' of a castle, hanging curtain round a small enclosure. - Low Lat. corti-, crude form of cort-is, a court; with dimin. suffix -na. See Court. Der. curtain, verb.

CURTLEAXE, a corruption of cutlass; see Cutlass.

CURTSEY, an obeisance; see Courtesy. CURVE, adj. crooked; sb. a bent line. (L.) Not in early use. The M.E. form was courbe, whence E. curb, q.v. Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674, has the adjectives curvous and curvilineal, and the sbs. curvature and curvity. 'This line thus curve;' Congreve, An Impossible Thing (R.) - Lat. curuus, crooked, bent (base cur-); cf. circus, a circle. + Gk. sup-ros, bent. + Ch. Slav. krivů, bent, Lith. kreivas, crooked. See Curtius, i 193. See Circle. Der. curve, verb; curvat-ure, Lat. curvatura, from curvare, to bend; curvi-linear; also curvet, q. v. And see curb. CURVET, to bound like a horse. (Ital., -L.)

The verb is in Shak. As You Like It, iii. 2. 258; the sb. is in All's Well, ii. 3. 299. - Ital. corvetta, a curvet, leap, bound; corvettare, to curvet, frisk. [The E. word was orig. corvet, thus Florio has: ' Corvetta, curry-powders, or various sorts of seasoning used in making curries. a coruet, a sault, a prancing or continual dancing of a horse.'] -"he leaves of the Canthium partificrum, one of the plants of the O. Ital. corvare, old spelling of curvare, 'to bow, bend, make crooked, to stoope, to crooch downward;' Florio. Thus to curvet meant to crouch or bend slightly; hence, to prance, frisk. - Lat. curuare, to bend. - Lat. curuas, bent. See Curve. Der. curvet, sb. CUSHAT, the ring-dove, wood-pigeon. (E.) 'Cowshot, palum-

S. cusceote, a wild pigeon; Anglo-Saxon Glosses in Mone's Quellen und Forschungen, i. 1830, p. 314 (Leo). CUSHION, a pillow, soft case for resting on.  $(F_{.}-L)$ . The pl. cuischum is in Wyclif, I Kings, v. 9. Spelt quysshen, Chaucer, Troil. and Cress. ii. 1228, iii. 915. – O. F. coissin, a cushion; Roquefort ; later coussin, 'a cushion to sit on ;' Cot. - Low Lat. culcitinum, not found, but regularly formed as a dimin. from Lat. culcita, a cushion, pillow, feather-bed. 'Culcitinum first loses its medial t, by rule, then becomes conssin;' Brachet. See Counterpane, and Quilt. ¶ The G. kissen, cushion, is borrowed from one of the Romance forms; cf. Ital. cucino, cuscino, Span. coxin, Port. coxim.

CUSP, a point, tip. (L.) Not in early use. 'Full on his cusp his angry master sate, Conjoin'd with Saturn, baleful both to man;' Dryden, The Duke of Guise, Act iv (R.) It was a term in astrology. 'No other planet hath so many dignities, Either by himself or by regard of the cuspes;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Bloody Brother, iv. 2. -

Lat. cuspis, a point; gen. cuspid-is. Der. cuspid-ate, cuspid-ate-d, CUSTARD, a composition of milk, eggs, &c. (F.,-L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 5. 41; custard-coffin, the upper crust covering a custard; Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 82. The old custard was something widely different from what we now call by that name, and could be cut into squares with a knife. John Russell, in his Boke of Nurture, enumerates it amongst the 'Bake-metes;' see Babees Boke, ed. Furnivall, p. 147, l. 492; p. 271, l. 1; p. 273, l. 23; and esp. the note on l. 492, at p. 211. It was also spelt custade, id. p. 170, 802. B. And there can be no reasonable doubt that such is the better spelling, and that it is, moreover, a corruption of the M. E. erustade, a general name for pies made with crust; see the recipe for crustode ryal quoted in the Babees Book, p. 211. [A still older spelling is crustate, Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 40, derived immediately from Lat. crustates.] - O. F. croustade, 'paté, tourte, chose qui en couvre une autre,' i. e. a pasty, tart, crust ; Roquefort. Roquefort gives the Prov. form crustado. Cf. Ital. crostata, 'a kind of pie, or tarte with a crust; also, the paste, crust, or coffin of a pie;' Florio.-Lat. crustarus, pp. of crustare, to encrust. See Crust. Der. custard apple, an apple like custard, having a soft pulp; Dampier, Voyage, an. 1699. CUSTODY, keeping, care, confinement. (L.) Spelt custodye, Sir T. More, Works, p. 40. - Lat. custodia, a keeping guard. - Lat. custodi-, crude form of custos, a guardian. - √ KUDH, to hide, conceal; whence also Gk. neiveuv, to hide, and E. hide. See Curtius, i. 322. See Hide. Der. custodi-al, custodi-an.

CUSTOM, wont, usage. (F., -L.) M. E. custume, custome, costume; Chaucer, C. T. 6264. Spelt custume, Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 11, 1. 11. – O. F. costume, custume, custom. – Low Lat. cos-tuma (Chartulary of 705). This fem. form is (as in other cases) due to a neut. pl. form consustumina, from a sing. consustumen, parallel to the classical Lat. consuetudo, custom ; see Littré. - Lat. consuetus, pp. of consuescere, to accustom ; inchoative form of Lat. consuere, to be accustomed. - Lat. con-, for cum, together, greatly, very; and suere, to be accustomed (Lucr. i. 60), more commonly used in the inchoative form suescere.  $\beta$ . Suere appears to be derived from Lat. suus, one's own, as though it meant 'to make one's own;' from the pronominal base swa, one's own, due to the pron. base sa, he. Der. custom-ar-y, custom-ar-i-ly, custom-ar-i-ness, custom-er; custom-house; siso ac-custom, q.v. [†]

CUT, to make an incision. (C.) M. E. cutten, hitten, ketten, a weak verb; pt. t. kutte, kitte, cutted. The form cutte, signifying 'he cut,' appear to be the earliest passages in which the word occurs. It is a genuine Celtic word = W. cwtaw, to shorten, curtail, dock; cwta, short, abrupt, bobtailed; cwtogi, to shorten; cwtws, a lot (M. E. cut. Chaucer, C. T. prol. 837, 847), a scut, short-tail; cwt, tail, skirt. + Gael. cutaich, to shorten, curtail, dock ; cutach, short, docked ; cut, a bob-tail, a piece. Cf. Irish cut, a short tail; cutach, bob-tailed; cot, a part, share, division. Also Corn. cut, or cot, short, brief. B. The occurrence of E. scut, a bob-tail, shews that the word has lost an initial s. Cf. Gael. sgothadh, a gash, slash, cut; sgath, to lop off, prune, destroy, cut off; Irish sgathaim, I lop, or prune; W. ysgythru, to lop, prune, carve. The original sense is clearly 'to dock.' Der.

cut, sb.; cutt-ar; cut-ar; cut-parse. CUTICLE, the outermost skin. (L.) 'Cuticle, the outermost thin skin;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. The adj. cuticular is in Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674.-Lat. cuticula, the skin; double dimin., with suffixes -c and -ul-, from cuti-, crude form of cutis, the skin, hide. [Cf. particle from part.] The Lat. cutis is cognate with E, hide.-

cul-ar, from the Lat. cuticula; also cut-an-e-ous, from a barbarous Latin cutaneus, not given in Ducange, but existing also in the F. cutané, skinny, of the skin (Cotgrave), and in the Ital. and Span. cutaneo

CUTLASS, a sort of sword. (F., -L.) The orig. sense was 'a little knife.' Better spelt cullas, with one s. = F. coutelas, 'a cuttelas, or courtelas, or short sword, for a man-at-arms;' Cot. Cf. Ital. coltellaccio, ' a curtleax, a hanger ;' Florio. [The Ital. suffix -accio is a general augmentative one, that can be added at pleasure to a sb.; thus from libro, a book, is formed libraccio, a large ugly book. So also Ital. coltellaccio means 'a large ugly knife. ] - O. F. coutel, cultel (Littré), whence F. couteau, a knife. Cí. Ital. coltello, a knife, dagger. -Lat. cullellus, a knife; dimin. of culter, a ploughshare. See Coulter. . ¶ The F. suffix -as, Ital. -accio, was suggested by the Lat. suffix -accus; but was so little understood that it was confused with the E. and. Hence the word was corrupted to curileane, as in Shak. As You Like It, i. 3. 119: 'a gallant curileane upon my thigh.' Yet a curileane was a sort of sword!

CUTLER, a maker of knives. (F., -L.) M.E. coteler ; Geste Historval of the Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton and Donaldson, 1597.-O. F. cotelier; later coutelier, as in mod. F.-Low Lat. cultellarius, (1) a soldier armed with a knife; (2) a cutler. Formed with suffix -arius from Lat. cultell-, base of cultellus, a knife, dimin. of culter, a ploughshare. See Coulter. Der. culter-y. [+] CUTLET, a slice of meat. (F., -L.) Lit. 'a little rib.' 'Cut-lets, a dish made of the short ribs of a neck of mutton; ' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715 .- F. cotelette, a cutlet; spelt costelette in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'a little rib, side, &c.' A double diminutive, formed with suffixes -el- and -ette, from O. F. coste, a rib (Cotgrave),

-Lat. costa, a rib. See Coast. CUTTLE, CUTTLE-FISH, a sort of mollusc. (E.) Cot-grave translates the F. cornet by 'a sea-cut or cuttle-fish;' and the F. seeke by 'the sound or cuttle-fish.' According to Todd's Johnson, the word occurs in Bacon. Corrupted from cuddle by the influence of similar words in O. Du. and H. German. The form cuddle is a legitimate and regular formation from A. S. cudele, the name of the fish. 'Sepia, cudele, vel wase-scite ;' Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Somner, Nomina Piscium. [The name wase-scite means ooze-shooter, dirt-shooter, from the animal's habit of discharging sepia.] + O. Du. huttel-visch, a cuttle-fish; Kilian. But this is rather a High-German form, and borrowed from the G. kuttel-fisch, a cuttle-fish.  $\beta$ . The remoter borrowed from the G. kuttel-fisch, a cuttle-fish.  $\beta$ . The remoter origin is obscure; it may be doubted whether the G. kuttel-fisch is in any way connected with the G. kuttel, bowels, entrails, CYCLE, a circle, round of events. (F., -L., -Gk.) ' Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb;' Milton, P. L. viii. 84. – F. cycle, 'a round, or circle;' Cotgrave. – Lat. cyclus, merely a Latinised form of Gk. sinkos, a circle, cycle. + Skt. chakra (for hakra), a wheel, disc, circle, astronomical figure. Allied to E. circle, curve, and ring; see Curtius, i. 193. ¶ The word may have been borrowed immediately from Latin, or even from the Greek. Der. cycl-ic, cycl-ic-al ; cycloid, from Gk. RUKLOELD's, circular (but technically used with a new sense), from Gk. nuklo, crude form of nuklos, and eldos, form, shape; cycloid-al; cyclone, a coined word of modern invention, from Gk. κυκλών, whirling round, pres. part. of κυκλόω, I whirl round, from Gk. sushos. [Hence the final -e in cyclone is mute, and merely indicates that the vowel o is long.] Also cyclo-metry, the measuring of circles; see Motro. Also cyclo-padia or cyclo-pedia, from Gk. xvκλοπαιδία, which should rather (perhaps) be encyclopedia, from Gk. έγκυκλοπαιδεία, put for έγκύκλιοs παιδεία, the circle of arts and sciences, lit. circular or complete instruction; der. from eyebechios, circular, and raideia, instruction; which from  $i_{T}$ , in kinkos, a circle, and raideia, instruction; which from  $i_{T}$ , in kinkos, a circle, and raide (gen. raidois), a boy, child. Also epi-cycle, bi-cycle. CYGNET, a young swan. (F.) Spelt cignet in old edd. of Shak. Tro. and Cress. i. 1. 58. Formed as a diminutive, with suffix -4, from D. F. dimensioner and the state of the state of the state of the state of the state.

O.F. cigne, a swan; Cot. 1. At first sight it seems to be from Lat. cygnus, a swan; carlier form cycnus. - Gk. kukvos, a swan. On the origin, see Curtius, i. 173. 2. But the oldest F. form appears as cisne (Littré); cf. Span. cisne, a swan; and these must be from Low Lat. eccins (Diez), and cannot be referred to eygnus. [†] CYLINDER, a roller-shaped body.  $(F_{..}-L_{.}-GK.)$  The form chilyndre is in Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 1396, where Tyrwhitt reads kalender, C. T. 13136. It there means a cylindrically shaped portable sun-dial. - O. F. cilindre, later cylindre, the y being introduced to look more like the Latin; both forms are in Cotgrave. - Lat. cylindrus, a cylinder. - Gk. κύλινδρου, a cylinder, lit. a roller. - Gk. κυλίνδειν, to roll; an extension of subles, to roll. Cf. Church-Slav. kolo, a wheel.

See Curtus, i. 193. Der. cylindr-ic. cylindr-ic-al. CYMBAL, a clashing musical instrument. (F., -L., -Gk.)M. E. cimbale, cymbale; Wyclif, 2 Kings, vi. 5; Ps. cl. 5. -O. F. cimbale, 'a cymball; Cotgrave. Later altered to cymbale (also in Cotomorphic tech later altered to cymbale (also in KU, to cover; allied to & SKU, to cover. See Hide. Der. cuti- Cotgrave) to look more like the Latin. - Lat. cymbalum, a cymbal; also spelt cymbalon. - Gk. κύμβαλον, a cymbal; named from its hollow, cup-like shape. - Gk. κύμβοι, κύμβη, anything hollow, a cup. nonow, cup-like snape. - GK. kuppes, kuppes, kuppes, anything nonow, a cup, basin.+Skt. kumbhá, khumbhí, a pot. jar. Cf. Skt. kubja, hump-backed, and E. hump; Benfey, pp. 195, 196. Allied to Cup, q. v. The form of the root is KUBH; Benfey, p. 196; Fick, i. 537. CYNIC, misanthrophic; lit. dog-like. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. Jul. Cæs. iv. 3. 133. - Lat. cynicus, one of the sect of Cynics. - Gk. nurusía, dog-like, cynical, a Cynic. - Gk. suv., stem of sizev, a dog. + Lat.

con-is, a dog. + Irish cii (gen. ecn), a dog. + Skt. quan, a dog. + Goth. hunds, a hound. See Hound. Der. cynic-al, cynic-al-ly, cynic-ism; and see cynosure.

CYNOSURE, a centre of attraction. (L., - Gk.) 'The cynosure of neighbouring eyes;' Milton, L'Allegro, 80. - Lat. cynosura, the constellation of the Lesser Bear, or rather, the stars composing the tail of it; the last of the three is the pole-star, or centre of attraction to the magnet, roughly speaking. - Gk. suvoovpa, a dog's-tail; also, the Cynosure, another name for the Lesser Bear, or, more strictly, for the tail of it. - Gk. nurós, dog's, gen. case of nuw, a dog; and ov the tail of R. = OK. 2000, dog s, gen. case of now, a dog, and obs, a tail, on which see Curtius, i. 434. See Cynic. CYPRESS (1), a kind of tree. (F., =L., =Gk.) M. E. ci/res, cipresse, cupresse. 'Ase palme other ase cypres;' Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 131. 'Leves of cupresse;' Palladius on Husbandry, b. x. st. 6. Also called a cipir-tre. 'Hec cipressus, a cypyr-tre;' Wright's Vocab. i. 218.-O. F. cypres, later cypres, explained by Cotgrave as 'the Cyprus tree, or Cyprus wood.'-Lat. cyparisus; also cupressus.-Gk. numápiogos, the cypress.  $\beta$ . The M. E. cipir-tre is from the Lat. cyprus, Gk. κύπροι, the name of a tree growing in Cyprus, by some supposed to be the Heb. gopher, Gen. vi. 14; see Liddell and Scott. But it does not appear that the form sumápiogos has anything to do

CYPRESS (2), CYPRESS-LAWN, crape. (L?) 'A cipresse [or cypress] not a bosom Hideth my heart; 'Tw. Nt. iii. I. 132. 'Cypress black as e'er was crow; 'Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 221. See note on cypress in Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 3. 121, ed. Wheatley.  $\beta$ . Palsgrave explains F. crespe by 'a cypress for a woman's neck; and Cotgrave has: 'Crespe, cipres, cob-web lawn.' The origin is unknown; Mr. Wheatley suggests that it may have been named from the Cyperus textilis, as the Lat. cyperus became cypres in English; see Gerarde's Herbal and Prior's Popular Names of British plants. Cf. 'Cypere, cyperus, or cypresse, galingale, a kind of reed;' Cot. [†]

CYST, a pouch (in animals) containing morbid matter. (Gk.) Formerly written cystis. ' Cystis, a bladder ; also, the bag that contains the matter of an imposthume; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - Late Lat. cystis, merely a Latinised form of the Gk. word. - Gk. wuorus, the bladder, a bag, pouch. - Gk. sives, to hold, contain. -  $\checkmark$  KU, to take in; see Curtius, i. 192. Dor. cyst-ic.

CZAR, the emperor of Russia. (Russ.) 'Two czars are one too many for a throne; 'Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii, 1278 - Russian tsare (with e mute), a king. 'Some have supposed it to be derived from Casar or Kaisar, but the Russians distinguish between czar and kesar, which last they use for emperor... The consort of the czar is called czarina;' Engl. Cyclop. div. Arts and Sciences. It cannot be a Slavonic word, and the connection with Casar is quite right. Der. czar-ina, where the suffix appears to be Teutonic, as in landgravine, margravine, the Russ. form being tsaritsa; also czarou i.z., from Russ. tsarevich, the czar's son. [*]

DAB (1), to strike gently. (E.) M. E. dabben. 'The Flemmisshe hem dabbeth o the het bare' - the Flemings strike them on the bare head; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 192. The M. E. sb. is dabbe. 'Philot him gaf anothir dabbe '= Philotas gave him another blow;' K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 2406. Now generally associated with the notion of striking with something soft and moist, a notion im-ported into the word by confusion with daub, q.v.; but the orig. sense is merely to tap. An E. word. + O. Du. dabben, to pinch, to knead, to fumble, to dabble; Oudemans. + G. tappen, to group, fumble; cf. prov. G. tappe, fast, paw, blow, kick; Flüger, Dict. Also G. tippen, to tap. ¶ From the G. tappen we have F. taper, and E. tap. Hence dab and tap are doublets. See Tap. Der. dab, sb. See Dabble.

DAB (2), expert. (L.?) The phrase 'he is a dab hand at it' means he is expert at it. Goldsmith has: 'one writer excels at a plan;... another is a dab at an index;' The Bee, no. 1. A word of corrupt form, and generally supposed to be a popular form of adept, which seems to be the most probable solution. It may have been to some extent confused with the adj. dapper. See Adept and Dapper.

DABBLE, to keep on dabbing. (E.) The frequentative of day, with the usual suffixed le. The word is used by Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 25; see quotations in Richardson. Cf. dabbled in blood; Shak. Rich. III, i. 4. 54. + O. Du. dabbelen, to pinch, to knead, to fumble, to dabbe, splash about; formed by the frequentative suffix -el-from O. Du. dabben, with a like sense; Oudemans. See Dab (1). Cf. Icel. dafla, to dabble.

DAB-CHICK, DOB-CHICK; see Didapper. DACE, a small river-fish. (F., -O. Low G.) 'Dace or Dare, a small river-fish;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Shak. has dace, a Hen. IV, iii. 2. 356. 1. Another name for the fish is the dart. 2. Dare, a second data is simple the E dard (= Low Lat acc. formerly pronounced dahr, is simply the F. dard (= Low Lat. acc. dardum), and dart is due to the same source. 8. So also dace, for-O. F. nom. dars or darz, a dart, javelin, for which Roquefort gives quotations, and Littré cites O. F. dars with the sense of dace. This U. r. dars is due to Low Lat. nom. dardus, a dart, javelin. ¶ From this O. F. dars is also derived the Breton darz, a dace; cf. F. dard, 'a dart, a javelin; ... also, a dace or dare fish; Cotgrave. named from its quick motion. See Dart. [†] DACTYL, the name of a foot, marked - u. (L., -Gk.) Puttenham, Arte of Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 82 speeched for the second

DACTYL, the name of a foot, marked - . . (L., -Gk.) Puttenham, Arte of Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 83, speaks of 'the Greeke dactilus;' this was in A. D. 1589. Dryden speaks of 'spondees and dactyls' in his Account prefixed to Annus Mirabilis. - Lat. dactylus, a dactyl. - Gk. dásrulos, a finger, a dactyl; co-radicate with digit and tor. See Digit. See Trench, On the Study of Words, on the sense of dactyl. Der. dactyl-ic.

DAD, a father. (Celtic.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iv. 2. 140; K. John, ii. 467.-W. tad, father; Corn. tat. + Bret. tad, tat, father. + Irish daid. + Gael. daidein, papa (used by children). + Gk. Tára, Térra, father; used by youths to their elders. + Skt. tata, father; tata, dear one; a term of endearment, used by parents addressing their children, by teachers addressing their pupils, and by children addressing their parents. A familiar word, and widely spread. Der. dadd-y, a dimin. form.

DAFFODIL, a flower of the lily tribe. (F., -L., -Gk.) initial d is no part of the word, but prefixed much in the same way as the t in Ted, for Edward. It is difficult to account for it; it is just as the rin Fea, for Educard. It is diment to account for it, its just possible that it is a contraction from the F. flewr d'affrodille. At any rate, the M. E. form was affodille. 'Affodylle, herbe, affodillus, albucea;' Prompt. Parv. - O. F. asphodile, more commonly affrodille, 'th' affodill, or asphodill flower;' Cotgrave. Cf. 'aphrodille, the affodill, or asphodill flower;' id. [Here the French has an inserted r, which is no real part of the word, and is a mere corruption. It is clear that the E. word was borrowed from the French before this r was inserted. We have sure proof of this, in the fact that Cotgrave gives, not only the forms asphrodille, asphrodile, and affrodille, but also asphodile (without r). The last of these is the oldest French form of all.]-Lat. asp'odelus, borrowed from the Greek.-Gk.  $d\sigma\phi\delta\delta\epsilon\lambda os$ , asphodel. See Asphodel. Der. Corrupted forms are daffadilly and daffadowndilly, both used by Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, 11. 60, 140. [+] DAGGEER, a dirk; short sword for stabbing. (C.) M. E. dag-gere, Chaucer, C. T. prol. 113. Connected with the M. E. verb daggen, to pierce. Derfe dynttys thay dalte with daggande sperys. i.e. they dealt severe blows with piercing spears; Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 3749. Cf. O. Du. daggen, to stab; Oudemans; O. Du. dag, a dagger; id. Of Celtic origin. - W. dagr, a dagger; given in Spurrell's Dict., in the Eng.-Welsh division. + Irish daigear, a dagger, poniard. + O. Gael. daga, a dagger, a pistol; Shaw, quoted in O'Reilly's Irish Dict. + Bret. dag, dager, a dagger. Cf. Cf. French dague, a dagger, of Celtic origin. The word dirk is also Celtic DAGGLE, to moisten, wet with dew. (Scand.) So in Sir W. Scott. 'The warrior's very plume, I say, Was daggled by the dashing spray;' Lay of the Last Minstrel, i. 29. Pope uses it in the sense of to run through mud, lit. to become wet with dew; Prol. to Satires, It is a frequentative verb, formed from the prov. Eng. dag, l. 225. to sprinkle with water; see Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary.-Swed. dagga, to bedew; from Swed. dagg, dew. + Icel. döggva, to bedew; from Icel. dögg, dew. These sbs. are cognate with E. dew. See Dow. DAGUERROTYPE, a method of taking pictures by photography. (Hybrid; F. and Gk.) 'Daguerrotype process, invented by Daguerre, and published A. D. 1838; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Formed from Daguerre, a French personal name (with o added as a connecting vowel), and E. type, a word of Gk. origin. See Type. DAHLIA, the name of a flower. (Swedish.) 'Dahlia, a flower brought from Mexico, of which it is a native, in the present [19th] century, and first cultivated by the Swedish botanist Daki. In 1815 it was introduced into France; 'Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Daki is a Swedish personal name; the suffix -ia is botanical Latin.

deinté, deinte, generally as a sb.; Ancren Riwle, p. 412. But Chaucer has: 'Ful many a deynté hors hadde he in stable;' C. T. prol. 168. This adjectival use is, however, a secondary one, and arose out of such phrases as 'to leten deinte' - to consider as pleasant (Ancren Riwle, p. 412), and 'to thinken deyntee,' with the same sense (P. Plowman, B. xi. 47). = O. F. daintie (to be accented daintie), agreeableness. 'Sentirent la flairor des herbes par daintie' = they enjoyed the fragrance of the herbs in an agreeable way; Roman d'Alixandre, in Bartsch's Chrestomathie Française, col. 177, l. 4. - Lat. acc. dignitatem, dignity, worth, whence also the more learned O. F. form digniteit. - Lat. dignus, worthy. See Dignity. ¶ Cotgrave gives the remarkable adj. dain, explained by 'dainty, fine, quaint, curious (an old word); 'this is precisely the popular F. form of Lat. dignus, the more learned form being digns. Der. dainti-ly, dainti-ness. [+]

DAIRY, a place for keeping milk to be made into cheese. (Scand.) M. E. daierie, better deverye, Chaucer, C. T. 597 (or 599). The Low Lat. form is dayeria, but this is merely the E. word written in a Latin fashion. a. The word is hybrid, being made by suffixing the F. -erie (Lat. -aria) or F. -rie (Lat. -ria) to the M. E. deye, a maid, a female-servant, esp. a dairy-maid. Similarly formed words are buttle-ry (= bottle-ry), vin-t-ry, pan-t-ry, laund-ry; see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 233. B. The M.E. deye, a maid, oc-curs in Chaucer, Nonne Pr. Tale, 1. 26, and is of Scand. origin. = Icel. deigja, a maid, esp. a dairy-maid; see note upon the word in Cleasby and Vigfusson. + Swed.  $d_{d,a}$ , a dairymaid.  $\gamma$ . However, the still older sense of the word was 'kneader of dough,' and it meant at first a woman employed in baking, a baker-woman. The same maid no doubt made the bread and attended to the dairy, as is frequently the case to this day in farm-houses. More literally, the word is 'dough-er:' from the Icel. deig, Swed. deg, dough. The suffix -ja 'dough-er;' from the Icel. deig, Swed. deg, dough. The suffix -ja had an active force; cf. Moeso-Gothic verbs in -jan. See further under Dough ; and see Lady

DAIS, a raised floor in a hall. (F., -L., -Gk.) Now used of the raised floor on which the high table in a hall stands. Properly, it was the table itself (Lat. discus). Later, it was used of a canopy over a seat of state or even of the seat of state itself. M. E. deis, deys, sometimes dais, a high table; Chaucer, Kn. Tale, 1342; P. Plowman, C. x. 21, on which see the note. - O. F. deis, also dois, dais, a high table in hall. The later sense appears in Cotgrave, who gives : 'Dais, or Daiz, a cloth of estate, canopy, or heaven, that stands over the heads of princes; also, the whole state or seat of estate.' For an example of O. F. dois in the sense of 'table,' see Li Contes del Graal, in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 173, l. 5.- Iat. discus, a quoit, a plate, a platter; in late Latin, a table (Ducange).

-Gk. discose, a round plate, a quoit. See Dish, Disc. DAISY, the name of a flower. (E.) Lit. day's sys, or sys of day, i.e. the sun; from the sun-like appearance of the flower. M. E. dayssys; explained by Chaucer: 'The daysays, or elles the sys of the day,' Prol. to Legend of Good Women, 184 (where the before day is not wanted, and better omitted). - A. S. dagesége, a daisy, in MS. Cott. Faustina, A. x. fol. 115 b, printed in Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 292. - A. S. dages, day's, gen. of dag, a day; and ege, more com-

DALE, a low place between hills, vale. (E.) M. E. dale, Orm-ulum, 9203. – A. S. dæl (pl. dalu), a valley; Grein, i. 185. [Rather Scand. than A. S.; the commoner A. S. word was denu, Northumbr. Schul, than A.S.; the commoner A.S. which was denu, Northuber, dene, used to translate uallis in Lu. iii. 5; hence mod. E. dean, dene, den: see Den.] + Icel. dair, a dale, valley.+ Dan. dal. + Swed. dal. + Du. dal. + O. Fries. del. + O. Sax. dal. + Goth. dal or dals. + G. thal.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense was 'cleft,' or 'separation,' and the word is closely connected with the vb. deal, and is a doublet of the sb. deal. See Deal, and Dell. [\*]

DALLY, to triffe, to fool away time. (E.?) M. E. dalien. 'Dysours dalye,' i.e. dicers play; K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 6991. 'To daly with derely your daynte wordez' = to play dearly with your dainty words; Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 1253. Also spelt daylien, id. 1114. I suppose this M. E. dalien stands for, or is a dialectal variety of the older M.E. dwelien, to err, to be foolish. 'Swite ge dwelieb'-ye greatly err, in the latest MS. of A.S. Gospels, Mark, xii. 27.-A.S. dweligean, to err, be foolish, Mark, xii. 27; Northumbrian duoliga, dwoliga, id. + Icel. dvala, to delay. + Du. dwalen, to err, wander, be mistaken. Closely connected with Dwell, q. v., and with Dull and Dwale. The loss of the w presents no great difficulty; it was already lost in the A. S. dol, foolish, of which the apparent base thereby became dal-, and gave rise to the form dalien, regularly. Later, the word dalien was imagined to be French, and took the F. suffix -ance; whence M. E. daliannee, Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 1012. But all this is conjectural only. Der. dalli-ance, explained above. [†]

DAINTY, a delicacy; pleasant to the taste. (F., -L.) M. E. <sup>4</sup>tr. by Lat. agger; Prompt. Parv. p. 113. No doubt an E. word, deinté, deinté, generally as a sb.; Ancren Riwle, p. 412. But Chaucer | being widely spread; but not recorded. We find, however, the derived verb fordemman, to stop up; A.S. Psalter, ed. Spelman, Ps. lvii. 4. + O. Fries. dam, dom, a dam. + Du. dam, a dam, mole, bank; whence the verb dammen, to dam. + Icel. dammr, a dam; demma, to dam + Dan. dam, a dam; damme, to dam. + Swed. damm, sb.; dämma, verb. + Goth. dammjan, verb, only used in the comp. faurdammjan, to stop up; 2 Cor. xi. to + M. H. G. tam, G. damm, a dike.  $\beta$ . Remoter origin unknown. Observe that the sb. is older in form than the verb. Der. dam, vb.

[†] DAMCE, a lady, mistress. (F. - L.) In early use. M. E. dame, Ancren Riwle, p. 230. - O. F. (and mod. F.) dame, a lady. - Lat. domina, a lady; fem. form of dominus, a lord. See Don, and Dominate. Der. dam-s-el, q. v. Doublet, dam (2). DAMN, to condemn. (F.,-L.) M. E. damnen; commonly also dampnen, with excrescent p. 'Dampned he was to deye in that prisoun ;' Chaucer, C. T. 14725 (Group B, 3605). - O. F. damner ; frequently dampner, with excrescent p. - Lat. damnare, pp. damnatus, to condemn, fine. - Lat. damnum, loss, harm, fine, penalty. Root uncertain. Der. damn-able, damn-able-ness, damn-at-ion, damn-at-or-y; and see damage.

DAMP, moisture. vapour. (E.) In Shak. Lucrece, 778. The verb appears as M. E. dampen, to choke, suffocate, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 989. Though not found (perhaps) earlier, it can hardly be other than an E. word. [It can hardly be Scandinavian, the Icel. dampr being a mod. word; see Cleasby and Vigfusson.] + Du. damp, vapour, steam, smoke; whence dampen, to steam. + Dan. damp, vapour; whence dampe, to reek. + Swed. damb, dust; damma, to raise a dust, also, to dust. + G. dampf, vapour. B. Curtius (i. 281) has no hesitation in connecting G. dam/f, vapour, with Gk. rupos, smoke, mist, cloud, vapour, and with Skt. dhupa, incense, dhup, to burn incense. The Gk, base  $rup (for <math>\theta v p)$  and Skt. dhisp are extensions of the  $\checkmark$  DHU, to rush, excite; cf. Gk.  $\theta v ev$ , to rush, rage, buos, incense; see further under Dust, with which damp is thus connected. This explains the sense of Swed. damb above. Der. damp, verb; damp, adj.; damp-ly, damp-ness; and cf. deaf, dumb, dumps. [+] DAMSEL, a young unmarried woman, girl. (F.,-L.) M. E. damosel. 'And ladies, and damoselis;' K. Alisaunder, 171.-O. F. damoisele (with many variations of spelling), a girl, damsel; fem. form of O. F. damoisel, a young man, squire, page, retained in mod. F. in the form damoiseau. - Low Lat. domicellus, a page, which occurs in the Statutes of Cluni (Brachet). This is equivalent to a theoretical dominicellus, a regular double diminutive from Lat. dominus, a lord; made by help of the suffixes -c- and -el-. See Don (2), and Dominate. ¶ For dan = sir (Chaucer), see Don (2). DAMSON, the Damascene plum. (Proper name.) 'When damsines I gather;' Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, 162. Bacon has dammasin, Essay Igainer; Spenser, Snep. Kal. April, 102. Dacon nas dammatus, Essay 40, Of Gardens; also 'the damaine plumme;' Nat. Hist. s. 509. – F. damaisine, 'a Damascene, or Damson plum;' Cotgrave. – F. Damas, Damascus; with fem. suffix -ine. – Lat. Damascus. See Damask. DANCE, to trip with measured steps. (F., – O. H. G.) M. E. damnen, dannen; 'Maydens so dannen', K. Alisaunder, 5213. – O. F. danser, dancer (F. danser), to dance. – O. H. G. danson, to draw, draw along trail, a secondary work from M. G. danson, to draw, draw along, trail; a secondary verb from M. H. G. dinsen, O. H. G. tinsen, thinsen, to draw or drag forcibly, to trail along, draw a sword; cognate with Goth. thinsan, which only occurs in the compound atthinsan, to draw towards one, John, vi. 44, xii. 32. β. Related to M.H.G. denen, O.H.G. thenen, to stretch, stretch out, draw, trail; conjectural only. Der. dalli-ance, explained above. [†] DAM (1), an earth-bank for restraining water. (E.) M. E. dam, under Thin. - A TAN, to stretch. Der. danc-er, danc-ing. DANDELION, the name of a flower.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  The word occurs in Cotgrave. The older spelling dent-de-lyon occurs in G. Douglas, Prol. to xii Book of Æneid, l. 119; see Skeat, Specimens of English. - F. dent de lion, 'the herbe dandelyon.' [Cf. Span. diente de loon, dandelion.]  $\beta$ . The E. word is merely taken from the French; the plant is named from its jagged leaves, the edges of which present rows of teeth. - Lat. dentem, acc. of dens, a tooth; de. preposition; and leonem, acc. of leo, a lion. See Tooth, and Lion.

DANDLE, to toss a child in one's arms, or fondle it in the lap. (E.) In Shak. Venus, 562; 2 Hen. VI, i. 3, 148. The orig. meaning was, probably, to play, trifle with. Thus we find: 'King Henry's ambassadors into France having beene dandled [trifled with, cajoled] by the French during these delusive practises, returned without other by the relation during index or side practices, i.e. index without a side of the practice of the relations; 'Speed, Hen. VII, b. ix. c. 20. s. 28. It may be considered as English, though not found in any early author. a. In form, it is a frequentative verb, made by help of the suffix -le from an O. Low German base dand- or dant-, signifying to trifle, play, dally, loiter. Traces of this base appear in prov. Eng. dander, to talk incoherently, to wander about ; Lowland Sc. dandill, to go about idly; O. Du. danten, to do foolish things, trifle; O. Du. dantinnen, to trifle (whence probably F. dandiner, 'to go gaping ill-favouredly, to look like an ass;' Cotgrave.) Cf. also Swed. dial. danka, to saunter about; Rietz.  $\beta$ . The shortest form appears in O. Du. dant, a headstrong, capricious, effeminate man; see Oudemans. The corresponding High-German word is the O. H. G. tant, G. tand, a trifle, toy, idle prattle; whence tändeln, to toy, trifle, play, dandle, lounge, tarry (Flügel). This G. tändeln is exactly cognate with E. dandle, and is obviously due to the sb. tand. Remoter origin unknown.  $\gamma$ . Cf. O. Ital. dandolare, dondolare, 'to dandle or play the baby,' Florio; dandola, dondola, 'a childes baby [doll]; also, a dandling; also, a kind of play with a tossing-ball;' id. This word, like the F. dandiner, is from a Low G. root.

DANDRIFF, sourf on the head. (C.) Formerly dandruff; 'the dandruffe or unseemly skales within the haire of head or beard;' Holland's Pliny, b. xx. c. 8. – W. ton, surface, sward, peel, skin; whence W. marwdon, lit. dead skin (from marw, dead, and don, permuted form of ton), but used to mean scurf, dandriff. Cf. Bret. tan, tin, scurf. This clearly accounts for the first syllable.  $\beta$ . As to the second, Mr. Wedgwood well suggests that it may be due to the W. drwg, bad. Cf. Gael. drock, bad; Bret. drouk, droug, bad. The final ff would thus correspond, as usual, to an old guttural sound.  $\P$  In Webster's Dict., the derivation is given from A.S. tan, an eruption on the skin, and drof, dirty. Of these words, the first is merely another form of W. ton, as above; it occurs in Alfric's Glossary, ed. Somner, p. 71, where we find: 'Mentagra, tan; Allox, micele tan.' The latter word drof, dirty, is not proven to exist; it is one of the unauthorised words only too common in Somner. It should be remembered that the placing of the adjective after the substantive is a Welsh habit, not an English one; so that an A.S. origin for the word is hardly admissible.

DANDY, a fop, coxcomb. (F.?) Seldom found in books. Probably from the same base as Dandle, q.v. Cf. O. Du. dant, a headstrong, capricious, effeminate man; whence O. F. dandin, 'a meacock, noddy, ninny;' Cotgrave. Perhaps dandy was merely borrowed from F. dandin.

DANGER, penalty, risk, insecurity. (F., -L.) On the uses of this word in early writers, see Trench, Select Glossary, and Richardson; and consult Brachet, s.v. danger. M. E. daunger, daungere; Rob. of Glouc. p. 78; Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 663 (or 665). Still earlier, in the Ancren Riwle, p. 356; 'ge polieð ofte daunger of swuche oðerwhule þet multe beon eower prel'=ye sometimes put up with the arrogance of such an one as might be your thrall. - O.F. dangier (mod. F. danger), absolute power, irresponsible authority; hence, power to harm, as in Shak. Merch. of Venice, iv. 1. 180. The word was also spelt dongier, which rimes with alongier in a poem of the 13th century cited in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 362, l. 2; and this helps us out. B. According to Littré this answers to a Low Lat. dominiarium, a form not found, but an extension from Low Lat. dominium, power, for which see Dominion. At any rate, this Low Lat. dominium is certainly the true source of the word, and was used (like O. F. dongier) to denote the absolute authority of a feudal lord, which is the idea running through the old uses of F. and E. danger. y. Brachet remarks: 'just as dominus had become domnus in Roman days, so dominiarium became domniarium, which consonified the ja (see the rule under abréger and Hist. Gram. p. 65), whence domnjarium, whence O. F. dongier; for m=n, see changer [from Low Lat. cambiare]; for -arium = -ier see § 198.' A word similarly formed, and from the same source, is the E. dungeon. See Dominion, and Dungeon. Der. danger-ous, ~er-ous-ly, danger-ous-ness.

DANGLE, to hang  $10^{05}$ ely, swing about. (Scand.) In. Shak. Rich. II, iii. 4. 29. – Da<sup>n.</sup> dangle, to dangle, bob. + Swed. dial. dangla, to swing, Rietz; who also cites the North Friesic dangela from Outzen's Dict. p. 44- Another form appears in Swed. dingla, to dangle, Icel. dingla, Dan. dingle, to dangle, swing about.  $\beta$ . The suffix -le is, as usual, frequentative; and the verb appears to be the frequentative of ding, to strike, throw; so that the sense would be to strike or throw often, to bob, to swing. See Ding. [†] strike or throw often, to bob, to swing. See Ding. [+] DANK, moist, damp. (Scand.) In the allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1. 313, we find 'the dewe that is dannke;' and in 1. 3750, we have it as a sb. in the phrase 'one the danke of the dewe,' i. e. in the moisture of the dew. And cf. 'Dropis as dew or a danke rayne;' Destruction of Troy, 2368. It also occurs as a verb, in Specimens of Lyric Poetry, ed. Wright; see Specimens of Early Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, sect. IV d. 1. 28: 'deawes donketk the dounes,' i. e. dews moisten the downs. [The connection with dew in all four passages should be noticed.] -Swed. dial. dank, a moist place in a field, marshy piece of ground; Rietz. + Icel. dökk, a pit, pool; where dökk stands for dönk, by the assimilation so common in Icelandic, and dönk again represents an older dankw. ¶ It is commonly assumed that dank is another form of damp, but, being of Scand. origin, it is rather to be associated with Swed. dagg, dew, and Icel. dögg, dew; and, indeed, it seems to be nothing else than a nasalised form of the prov. Eng. dag, dew. See Daggle. DAPPER, spruce, neat. (Du.) Orig. good, valiant; hence

DAPPER, spruce, neat. (Du.) Orig. good, valiant; hence brave, fine, spruce, neat. (Du.) Orig. good, valiant; hence brave, fine, spruce. Spenser speaks of his 'dapper ditties;' Shep. Kal. October, l. 13. 'Dapyr, or praty [pretty], elegans;' Prompt. Parv. – Du. dapper, valiant, brave, intrepid, bold. + O. H. G. taphar, heavy, weighty, (later) valiant; G. tapfer, brave. + Ch. Slav. dobru, good; Russ. dobrui, good, excellent. + Goth. ga-dobs, gadofs, fitting.  $\beta$ . The root appears in Goth. gadaban, to be fit, to happen, befall, suit. Perhaps the Lat. faber, a smith, is from the same root DHABH. See Fick, ii. 387.

DIADR. See Fice, it. 307. DAPPLE, a spot on an animal. (Scand.) 'As many eyes upon his body as my gray mare hath dapples;' Sidney, Arcadia, b. ii. p. 271. Hence the expression - 'His stede was al dapple-gray;' Chaucer, C. T. 13813 (Group B, 2074). – Icel. depill, (=dapill), a spot, dot; a dog with spots over the eyes is also called depill; the orig. sense is a pond, a little pool; from dapi, a pool, in Ivar Aasen; Cleasby and Vigfusson. Cf. Swed. dial. depp, a large pool of water; dypla, a deep pool; Rietz. Rietz also cites (from Molbech) Dan. dial. duppe, a hole where water collects; cf. also O. Du. dobbe, a pit, pool (Oudemans), and prov. Eng. dwb. a pool.  $\beta$ . The ultimate connection is not with the E. dab, to strike gently, but with the verb to dip, and the sb. dimple. See Dip, Dimple, Deep. Der. dapple, verb; 'Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey;' Much Ado, v. 3. 27; and dappled. ¶ As Mr. Wedgwood well observes, 'the resemblance of dapple-grey to Icel. apalgrar, or apple-grey, Fr. gris pommelé, is accidental.' The latter phrase is equivalent to Chaucer's pomely-grey, C. T. prol. 616 (or 618).

C. T. prol. 616 (or 618). DARE (1), to be bold, to venture. (E.) DARE (1), to be bold, to venture. (E.) a. The verb to dare, pt. t. dared, pp. dared, is the same word with the auxiliary verb to dare, pt. t. durst, pp. durst. But the latter keeps to the older forms; dared is much more modern than durst, and grew up by way of distinguishing, to some extent, the uses of the verb.  $\beta$ . The present tense, I dare, is really an old past tense, so that the third person is he dare (cf. he shall, he can); but the form he dares is now often used, and will probably displace the obsolescent he dare, though grammatically as incorrect as he shalls, or he cans. M. E. dar, dear, I dare; see Stratmann's O. E. Dict. p. 122. 'The pore dar plede,' i. e. the poor man dare plead; P. Plowman, B. xv. 108. Past tense dorste, durste. 'For if he gaf, he dorste mak auaunt '= for if he gave, he durst make the boast; Chaucer, C. T. prol. 227. - A. S. ie dear, I dare; bu dearst, thou darest; he dear, he dare or dares; we, ge, or hig durran, we, ye, or they dare. Past tense, ic dorste, I durst or dared; pl. we durston, we durst or dared. Infin. durran, to dare; Grein, i. 212.+Goth. dars, I dare; daursta, I durst; pp. daursts; infin. daursan, to dare. + O. H. G. tar, I dare ; torsta, I dared ; turran, to dare. [This verb is different from the O. H. G. durfan, to have need, now turned into dürfen, but with the sense of dare. In like manner, the Du. durven, to dare, is related to Icel. purfa, to have need, A. S. purfan, Goth. paurban, to have need; and must be kept distinct. The verb requires some care and attention.] + Gk.  $\theta a \rho \sigma \epsilon \hat{u}$ , to be bold;  $\theta \rho a \sigma v s$ , bold. + Skt. dhrish, to dare; base dharsh. + Church Slav. drižati, to dare; see Curtius, i. 318. -  $\checkmark$  DHARS, to be bold, to dare; Fick, i. 117. Der. dar-ing, dar-ing-ly.

DARE (2), a dace; see Dace.

DARK, obscure. (E.) M. E. dark, derk, deork; see deare in Stratmann, p. 122.-A. S. deore, Grein, i. 191. ¶. The liquid r is convertible with the liquid n; and the word may perhaps be connected with Du. donker, dark, Swed. and Dan. dunkel, dark, Icel. dökkr. dark, and O. H. G. tunkel (G. dunkel), dark; forms in which the -er  $\overset{\odot}{}$  or -el is a mere suffix.  $\beta$ . On the other hand, we should observe the M. H. G. and O. H. G. tarnjan, tarchanjan, to render obscure, hide, whence G. tarnkappe, a cap rendering the wearer invisible. Der. dark-ly, dark-ness, dark-is, dark-en; and see darkling, darksome.

DARKLING, adv., in the dark. (E.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dream, ii. 2. 86; Lear, i. 4. 237. Formed from dark by help of the adverbial suffix-ling, which occurs also in faciling, i.e. flatly, on the ground; see Halliwell's Dict. p. 360. It occurs also in healling; 'heore hors kedlyng mette,' i.e. their horses met head to head, King Alisaunder, I. 2261.  $\beta$ . An example in older English is seen in the A.S. backing, backwards, Grein, i. 76; and see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence. sect. 322. Adv. Suffixes in -long. -ling.

lines of Eng. Accidence, sect. 322, Adv. Suffixes in -long, -ling. DARKSOME, obscure. (E.) In Shak. Lucrece, 379. Formed from dark by help of the suffix -some (A.S. sum); cl. fulsome, blithesome, win-some, &c.

DARLING, a little dear, a favourite. (E.) M. E. deorling, derling, durling; spelt deorling, Ancren Riwle, p. 56. – A. S. deorling, a favourite; Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, lib. iii. prosa 4.  $\beta$ . Formed from deor, dear, by help of the suffix -ling, which stands for -l-ing, where -l and -ing are both suffixes expressing diminution. Cf. duckling, gos-l-ing; see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, sect. 321.

DARN, to mend, patch. (C.) 'For spinning, weaving, derning, and drawing up a rent;' Holland's Plutarch, p. 783 (R.) – W. darnio, to piece; also, to break in pieces; from W. darn, a piece, fragment, patch. Cf. Corn. darn, a fragment, a piece; Williams' Dict. Also Bret. darn, a piece, fragment; darnaoui, to divide into pieces; whence O. F. darne, 'a slice, a broad and thin peece or partition of;' Cotgrave.  $\beta$ . Perhaps from  $\sqrt{DAR}$ , to tear; see Tear. Cf. also W. darnio, break in pieces (above); Skt. dárana, adj. splitting, from dri, to tear.

DARNEL, a kind of weed, rye-grass. (F.?) M. E. darnel, dernel, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 25, 29. Origin unknown; probably a F. word, of Teut. origin. Mr. Wedgwood cites (from Grandgagnage) the Rouchi darnelle, darnel; and compares it with Walloon darnise, dawnese, tipsy, stunned, giddy (also in Grandgagnage).  $\beta$ . It is difficult to account for the whole of the word, but it seems probable that the name of the plant signifies 'stupefying;' cf. O. F. darne, stupefied (Roquefort); also O. Du. door, foolish (Oudemans), Swed. ddra, to infatuate, ddre, a fool, Dan. daare, a fool, G. thor, a fool; all of which are from a base DAR, which is a later form of DAS, to be (or to make) sleepy, which appears in the E. daze and doze. See Daze, Doze. ¶ Wedgwood cites Swed. ddr-reta, darnel; the right word is ddr-repe, from ddr-, stupefying, and repe, darnel. This supports the above sugrestion.

This supports the above suggestion. DART, a javein. (F.) M. E. dart, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 178; Chaucer, C. T. 1564. -O. F. dart (mod. F. dard), a dart; a word of O. Low G. origin, which modified the form of the original A. S. daroö, daraö, or dareö, a dart. + Swed. dart, a dagger, poniard. + Icel. darraðr, a dart.  $\beta$ . Perhaps from the base dar of A. S. derican, to harm, injure.  $\P$  The F. dard, Low Lat. dardus, is evidently from a O. Low German source. Der. dart, verb.

DASH, to throw with violence. (Scand.) Orig. to beat, strike, as when we say that waves dask upon rocks. M. E. daschen. dasschen. 'Into the cité he con dassche,' i. e. he rusbed, King Alisaunder, 2837; and see Layamon, l. 1469. – Dan. daske, to slap. + Swed. daska, to beat, to drub; Swed. dial. daska, to slap with the open hand, as one slaps a child; Rietz.  $\beta$ . A shorter form appears in Swed. dial. disa, to strike (Rietz). Der. dash-ing, i. e. striking; dash-ing-ly.

dash-ing-ly. DASTARD, a cowardly fellow. (Scand.; with F. suffx.) 'Dastarde or dullarde, duribuctius;' Prompt. Parv. p. 114. 'Dastarde, estourdy, butarin;' Palsgrave. 1. The suffix is the usual F. ard, as in dull-ard, slugg.ard; a suffix of Germanic origin, and related to Goth. hardus, hard. In many words it takes a bad sense; see Brachet, Introd. to Etym. Dict. sect. 196. 2. The stem dast- answers to E. dazed, and the t appears to be due to a past participial form - Icel. destr, exhausted, breathless, pp. of desa, to groan, lose breath from exhaustion; closely related to Icel. dasadr, exhausted, weary, pp. of dasask, to become exhausted, a reflexive verb standing for dasa-sik, to daze oneself. Another past participial form is Icel. dasinn, commonly shortened to dasi, a lazy fellow. Thus the word is to be divided das-t-ard, where das- is the base, -t- the past participial form, and -ard the suffix. The word actually occurs in O. Dutch without the t, viz. in O. Du. dasaert, daasaardt, a fool; Oudemans. On the other hand, we find Swed dial. däst, weary (Rietz). See further under Daze. ¶ The usual derivation from A.S. adastrigan, to frighten, is absurd; I find no such word; it was probably invented by Somner to account (wrongly) for the very word dastard in question. Der. dastard-ly, dastard-li-ness. [+]

DATE (1), an epoch, given point of time. (F., -L.) M. E. date; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 505. 'Date, of scripture, datum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 114. - F. date, the date of letters or evidences; Cotgrave. - Low Lat. data, a date. - Lat. data, neut. pl. of datus, pp. of dare, to give. In classical Latin, the neut. datum was employed to mark the time and place of writing, as in the expression datum Roma, given (i. e. written) at Rome. + Gk.  $\delta t$ - $\delta a$ - $\mu_1$ , I give;  $\delta t$   $\delta a$ - $rh\rho$ , a giver,  $\delta or \delta s$ , given. + Skt. da-da-mi, I give, from the root da, to give; cf. datti, a giver. + Church Slav. dami, I give (Curtius, i. 393); Russ. darite, to give. -  $\checkmark$  DA, to give. Der. From the Lat. datus, given, we have also neut. sing. datum, and neut, pl. data; also dat-ive. DATE (2), the fruit of a palm. (F., -L., -Gk.) M.E. date; Maundeville's Travels, p. 57. 'Date, frute, dattilus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 114.-O. F. date (Littré); later F. datte, badly written dacte, a date; both spellings are in Cotgrave. - Lat. dactylus, a date; also, a dactyl. - Gk.  $\delta a \sigma ru \lambda os$ , a finger; also, a date, from its long shape, slightly resembling a finger; also, a datyl. Date is a doublet o\_datyl and co-radicate with Digit and TOO. [\*]

DAUB, to smear over.  $(F_{.,-}=L)$  M. E. duuben, to smear; used to translate Lat. linire, Wyclif, Ezek. xiii. 10, 11; and see note 3 in Prompt. Parv. p. 114.-O. F. dauber, occurring in the sense of 'plaster.' See a passage in an O. F. Miracle, pr. in the Chaucer Society's Originals and Analogues, part III; p. 273; l. 639. 'Que n'i a cire se tant non C'un po daube le limaignon'= there is no wax [in the candles] except as much as to plaster the wick a little.' (Quoted by Mr. Nicol, who proposes the etymologies here given of daub and of O. F. dauber.) The earlier form of this O. F. word could only have been dalber, from Lat. dealbare, to whitewash, plaster. [Cf. F. aube from Lat. alba (see Alb), and F. dorer from Lat. deaurare.]  $\beta$ . This etymology of dauber is confirmed by Span. jalbegar, to whitewash, plaster, corresponding to a hypothetical Lat. derivative dealbicare. [Cf. Span. jornada from Lat. divinatia; see Journey.] Y. From Lat. de, down; and albare, to whiten, which is from albus, white. See Alb. The sense of the word has probably to some extent influenced that of dab, which is of Low G. origin. And it has perhaps also been confused with W. dub, plaster, whence dubio, to daub; Gael. dob, plaster, whence dobair, a plasterer; Irish dob, plaster, whence dobaim, I plaster. [†]

DAUGHTER, a female child. (E.) M. E. doghter, doughter, douhter, dohter, dowter, &c.; the pl. dohtren occurs in Layamon, l. 2024; dehtren in O. Eng. Homilies, i. 247; dester in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 270. – A.S. dóhtor, pl. dóhtor, dóhtra, dóhtru, and dóhter; Grein, i. 195. + Du. dochter. + Dan. datter, dotter. + Swed. dotter. + Icel. dóttir. + Goth. dauhtar. + O. H. G. tohter, G. tochter. + Russ. doche. + Ck.  $\theta u\gamma \acute{a} \tau \eta \rho_{2}$  + Skt. duhitti.  $\beta$ . 'Lassen's etymology from the Skt. duh (for dhugh), to milk—' the milker'—is not impossible;' Curtius, i. 320. And it seems probable. DAUNT, to frighten, discourage. (F., -L.) M. E. daunter, DAUNT, to frighten, discourage. (F., -L.) M. E. dounten, K. Alisaunder, 1312. -O. F. danter (Roquefort), donter (Cotgrave), (of which the latter = mod. F. dompter) written for an older domter, to tame, subdue, daunt. - Lat. domitare, to subdue; frequentative of domare, to tame; which is cognate with E. tame. See Tame. Der. dauntless, daunt-less-ness.

DAUPHIN, eldest son of the king of France. (F., -L., -Gk.)Formerly spelt Doulphin, Fabyan, vol. ii. Car. VII. an. 26; also Dolphine, Hall, Edw. IV, an. 18. – O. F. doulphin, for douphin, a dolphin; also 'the Dolphin, or eldest son of France; called so of Doulphine, a province given or (as some report it) sold in the year 1349 by Humbert earl thereof to Philippe de Valois, partly on condition, that for ever the French king's eldest son should hold it, during his father's life, of the empire;' Cotgrave. Brachet gives the date as 1343, and explains the name of the province by saying that 'the Dauphiné, or rather the Viennois, had had several lords named Dauphin, a proper name which is simply the Lat. delphinus.' A doublet of dolphin; see Dolphin.

DAVIT, a spar used as a crane for hoisting a ship's anchor clear of the vessel; one of two supports for ship's boats. (F.) 'Davit, a short piece of timber, us'd to hale up the flook of the anchor, and to fasten it to the ship's bow; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Apparently corrupted from the French. – F. davier, forceps; 'davier de barbier, the pinser wherewith he [the barber] draws or pulls out teeth;' Cotgrave. He also gives: 'Davier d'un pelican, a certain instrument to pick a lock withall; an iron hook, or cramp-iron for that purpose.' Origin unknown.

DAW, a jackdaw, bird of the crow family. (E.) In Skelton, Ware the Hawk, l. 327. In l. 322 he uses the compound daw-cock. The compound ca-daw, i.e. caw-daw, occurs in the Prompt Parv. p. 57; on which see Way's Note. May be claimed as an E. word, being certainly of O. Low G. origin.  $\beta$ . The word is best traced by Schmeller, in his Bavarian Dict. col. 494. He says that the Vocabularius Theutonicus of 1482 gives the forms dach and dula; the latter of these answers to G. dohle, a jackdaw, and is a dimin. form, for an older dahala, dimin. of daha. This daha is the O. Low G. form answering to O. H. G. táha, M. H. G. táhe, a daw; whence O. H. G. takele (for takela), the dimin. form, later turned into dal ele, and now spelt dakle. Y. The word, like chough, is doubtless imitative; Schmeller gives dah dah as a cry used by hunters. By the mere change of one letter, we have the imitative E. word caw; and by uniting these words we have caw-daw, as above. Cf. also Ital. taccola or tacca, 'a railing, chiding, or scolding; ... also a chough, a rook, a jack-dawe;' Florio. This Ital. word is plainly derived from Old High German. Der. jack-daw. DAWN, to become day. (E.) M.E. dawnen; but the more usual form is dawen. 'Dawyn, idem est quod Dayyn, dawnyn, or dayen, auroro;' Prompt. Parv. p. 114. 'That in his bed ther daweth him no day;' Chaucer, C.T. 1676; cf. l. 14600. We find daiening, daigening, daning, = dawning; Genesis and Exodus. 77, 1808, 3264.  $\beta$ . The -n is a suffix, often added to verbs to give them a neuter or passive signification; cf. Goth. fullnan, to become full, from fulljan, to fill; Goth. gahailnan, to become whole; and the like. The M. E. word is to be divided as daw-n-en, from the older dawen. Y. The latter is the A.S. dagian, to dawn; Grein, i. 182; from the A.S. dag, day. So G. lagen, to dawn, from lag, day. See Day. Der. dawn, sh. DAY, the time of light. (E.) M. E. day, dai, dai; spelt dai in DAY, the time of light. (E.) Layamon, l. 10246. - A. S. dag, pl. dagas, + Du. dag, + Dan. and Swed. dag. + Icel. dagr. + Goth. dags. + G. tag. ¶ Perhaps it is well to add that the Lat. dies, Irish dia, W. dydd, meaning 'day,' are from quite a different root, and have not one letter in common with the A.S. dag; that is to say, the Lat. d would answer to an A.S. t, and in fact the Lat. Dies-piter or Jupiter is the A.S. Tiw, whose name is preserved in Tuesday. The root of Lat. dies and of A.S. Tiw is DIW, to shine; but the root of A. S. dag is quite uncertain. Der. dai-ly, day-book, day-break, day-spring, day-star, and other compounds. Also dawn, q. v. DAZE, to stupefy, render stupid. (Scand.) M. E. dasen; the pp. dased is in Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 150; in the Pricke of Conscience, 6647; and in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 1085. - Icel. dasa, in the reflexive verb dasask, to daze oneself, to become weary and exhausted. + Swed. dasa, to lie idle.  $\beta$ . Probably related to A.S. dwois, or gedwoks, stupid, foolish (Grein, i. 394), and to the Du. dwoas, foolish. Probably related also to Dizzy, q. v.; and possibly even to Dull. Further, it is nearly a doublet of Doze, q. v. Der.

das-t-ard, q. v., and dazzle, q. v. DAZZLE, to confuse the sight by strong light. (Scand.; with E. suffix.) In Shak. Hen. V, i. 2. 279; also intransitively, to be confused in one's sight, 3 Hen. VI, ii. 1. 25. The frequentative of daze, formed with the usual suffix -le; lit. 'to daze often.' See Daze.

DE-, prefix, (1) from Lat. prep. de, down, from, away; also (2) occurring in French words, being the O. F. des-, F. de- in comoccurring in French words, comp position; in which case it = Lat. dis. 'It is negative and oppo-position; in which case it = Lat. dis. 'It is intensitive in declare, It is intensitive in declare, desolate, desiccate, &c.;' Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence; sect. 326.

DEACON, one of the lowest order of clergy. (L., - Gk.) M.E. deten; Chaucer has the compound archedeken, C. T. 6884. The pl. dekenes is in Wyclif, 1 Tim. iii. 8. - A. S. deacon, Exod. iv. 14. - Lat. diaconus, a deacon. - Gk. diánovos. a servant ; hence, a deacon. 'Buttmann, in his Lexilogus, s.v. diántopos, makes it very probable, on prosodical grounds, that an old verb διάκω, διήκω, to run, hasten (whence also διώκω) is the root; διάκτοροs being a collateral word from the same;' Liddell and Scott. Curtius, ii 309, approves of this, and says: 'We may regard diame- as an expansion of the root di, djá (cf. i, já); perhaps we may follow Buttmann in deriving  $\delta dx$ -oros,  $\delta da$ -rap from the same source.' [It is meant, that the first syllable is  $\delta dx$ -, not  $\delta a$ -, and that the common Gk. prep.  $\delta d$  has nothing to do with the present word.] He further explains (i. 78) that the w is, nevertheless, no part of the original root, and reduces dian- to dia-, derived (as above) from the 🖌 DI, to hasten. Cf. Gk. δίω, I flee away, δίεμαι, I speed, hasten; Skt. di, to soar, to fly. -✓ DI, to hasten; Fick, i. 109. Der. deacon-ess, where the suffix is of F. origin ; deacon-ship, where the suffix is of A.S. origin ; deacon-ry, with F. suffix -ry (for -rie); also diacon-ate, diacon-al, formed from the Lat. diaconus by help of the suffixes -ate and -al, both of Lat. origin.

DEAD, deprived of life. (E.) M. E. deed, ded; Chaucer, C. T. prol. 148. -A.S. deád, dead, Grein, i. 189; [where deád is described as an adjective, rather than as a past participle. And to this day we distinguish between dead and died, as in the phrases 'he is dead' and 'he has died;' we never say 'he has dead.' But see below.] + Du. dood. + Dan. död. + Swed. död. + Icel. dawor. + Goth. dawhs, dead. ' he termination -the in Mœso-Gothic is the special mark of beat, See Beat, and Batter. Der. debate, sb. debate-er, debat-able.

a weak past participle, and there can be no reasonable doubt that dauths was formed with this participial ending from the past tense dau of the strong verb diwan, to die.  $\gamma$ . Moreover, the Goth. dau-thus, death, and the causal verb dauhjan, are clearly to be referred to the same strong verb diwan, to die, of which the pp. is diwans, 8. Hence, it is clear that dead, though not the pp. of the died verb to die, is formed upon the base of that verb, with a weak participial ending in place of the (originally) strong one. See further under Die. Der. dead-ly (M. E. deedli, Wyclif, Heb. vii. 8); deadli-ness, dead-en, dead-ness ; and see Death.

DEAF, dull of hearing. (E.) M. E. deef, def, defa; Chaucer, C. T. prol. 446 (or 448). - A. S. deáf; Grein, i. 190. + Du. doof. + Dan. döv. + Swed. döf. + Icel. daufr. + Goth. daubs. + G. tawb. β. Probably allied to the G. toben, to bluster, rage, be delirious; also to the Gk. rupos, smoke, darkness, stupefaction, stupor, Gk. ruper, to burn, Skt. dhúp, to burn incense, dhúpa, incense; see Curtius, i. 281, 321. The orig. sense seems to have been 'obfuscated,' and the similar Gk. word τυφλόs means ' blind ;' whilst we have an E. word dumb, also probably related. These forms are from a 🖌 DHUP or DHUBH, a lengthened form of the  $\checkmark$  DHU, to rush, excite, raise a smoke; see Dust; and see Dumb. Der. deaf-ly, deaf-ness, deaf-en.

DEAL (1), a share, division, a quantity, a thin board of timber. (E.) The sense of 'quantity' arose out of that of 'share' or 'por-tion;' a piece of decl is so called because the timber is sliced up or divided. M. E. deel, del, Chaucer, C. T. 1827; Kn. Tale, 967. - A.S. del, a portion, share; Grein, i. 186. + Du. deel, a portion, share; also, a deal, a board, a plank. + Dan. deel, a part, portion. + Swed. del, a part, share. + Icel. deild, deild, a deal, dole, share ; also, dealings. + Goth. dails, a part. + O. H. G. teil; G. theil. Root unknown. Dor. deal, verb ; whence deal-er, deal-ing, deal-ings ; cf. dole. [*]

DELAL (2), to divide, distribute; to traffic. (E.) M. E. delen, Chaucer, C. T. prol. 247, where it has the sense of 'traffic.' – A. S. delan, to divide; Grein, i. 186. + Du. deelen, to divide, share. + Dan. dele. + Swed, dela. + Icel. deila. + Goth. dailjan. + O. H. G. teilan; G. theilen.  $\beta$ . The form of the Goth. verb is decisive as to the fact that the verb is derived from the sb. See Deal (1).

DEAN, a dignitary in cathedral and college churches. (F., -L.) The orig. sense is 'a chief of ten.' M. E. den, deen, dene, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 65; also found in the comp. pl. suddenes, equivalent to subdenes, i.e. sub-deans; P. Plowman, B. ii. 172.-O.F. deien (Roquefort); mod. F. doyen. - Lat. decanus, one set over ten soldiers; later, one set over ten monks; hence, a dean - Lat. decem, ten; cognate with E. ten. See Decemvir and Ten. Der. dean-ery, dean-ship; also decan al, directly from Lat. decanus.

DEAR, precious, costly, beloved. (E.) M. E. dere, deere; spelt deore in Layamon, l. 143. – A. S. deore, dyre, Grein, i. 193, 215. + Du. duur. + Dan. and Swed. dyr, dear, expensive. + Icel. dyrr, dear, precious. + O. H. G. tiuri, M. H. G. tiure, G. thener, dear, beloved, sacred. Root unknown. Der. dear-ly, dear-ness; also dar-ling, q. v.,

dear-th, q. v. DEABTH, dearness, scarcity. (E.) M. E. derthe, P. Plowman, B. vi. 330. Not found in A.S., but regularly formed from A.S. deore, dear; cf. heal-th, leng-th, warm-th; see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, sect. 321. + Icel. dyrd, value; hence, glory. + O. H. G. tiurida, value, honour. See above.

DEATH, the end of life. (E.) M. E. deeth, deth, Chaucer, C. T. 964 (or 966). We also find the form ded, Havelok, 1687; a Scand. form still in use in Lincolnshire and elsewhere. - A. S. deao, Grein, i. 189. + Du. dood. + Dan. död. + Swed. död. + Icel. dauði. + Goth. dauthus. + G. tod. See Dead and Die. ¶ The M. E. form ded is rather Scandinavian than A.S.; cf. the Danish and Swedish forms.

DEBAR, to bar out from, hinder. (Hybrid.) In Shak. Sonnet 28. Earlier, in The Floure of Curtesie, st. 10, by Lidgate; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. ccclviii, back. Made up by prefixing the Lat. prefix de, from [or O. F. des= Lat. dis-], to the É. bar; on which see Bar. ¶ It agrees in sense neither with Low Lat. debarrare, to take away a bar, nor with O.F. desbarrer, to unbar Cotorave)

DEBARK, to land from a ship. (F.) Debark (not much used). to disembark;' Ash's Dict. 1775. - F. debarquer, to land; spelt desbarquer in Cotgrave. - F. des- (for Lat. dis-, away), and F. barque, a bark, ship. See Bark. Dor. debark at-ion, also spelt debarc-at-ion. DEBASE, to degrade. lower, abase. (Hybrid.) In Shak. Rich. II, iii. 3. 127. A mere compound, from Lat. de-, down, and base. See

DEBAUCH, to seduce, corrupt. (F.) Only the pp. debauched is in Shakespeare, and it is generally spelt debook d; Tempest, iii. 2. 29. - O. F. desbaucher (mod. F. debaucher), to debosh, mar, corrupt, spoil, viciate, seduce, mislead, make lewd, bring to disorder, draw from goodness. = O. F. des., prefix, from Lat. dis-, away from; and O. F. bauche, of rather uncertain meaning. Cotgrave has: 'bauche, a rew [row], rank, lane, or course of stones or bricks in building." See Bauche in Diez, who remarks that, according to Nicot, it means a plastering of a wall, according to Ménage, a workshop (apparently in order to suggest an impossible derivation from Lat. apotheca). β. The compounds are esbaucher, to rough-hew, frame (Cotgrave), embaucher, 'to imploy, occupy, use in business, put unto work' (id.), and desbaucher. Roquefort explains O. F. bauche as a little house, to make it equivalent to Low Lat. bugia, a little house. Diez proposes to explain debaucher by ' to entice away from a workshop.' He suggests as the origin either Gael. balc, a balk, boundary, ridge of earth, or the Icel bills a balk beam . Y. I incline to the latter of or the Icel. bulk, a balk, beam.  $\gamma$ . I incline to the latter of these suggestions; the word bauche had clearly some connection with building operations. At this rate, we should have esbaucher, to balk out, i.e. set up the frame of a building; embaucher, to balk in, to set to work on a building; desbaucher, to dis-balk, to take away the frame or the supports of a building before finished. See Der. debauch, sb.; debauch-ee (F. debauche, debauched); Balk debauch-er-y

DEBENTURE, an acknowledgment of a debt. (L.) Spelt debentur by Lord Bacon, in the old edition of his speech to King James, touching Purveyors. The passage is thus quoted by Richardson : ' Nay, farther, they are grown to that extremity, as is affirmed, though it be scarce credible, that they will take double poundage, once when the debenture [old ed. debentur] is made, and again the second time when the money is paid.' Blount, in his Law Dict., has: 'Debentur, was, by a Rump-Act in 1649, ordained to be in the nature of a bond or bill, &c. The form of which debentur, as then used, you may see in Scobel's Rump-Acts, Anno 1649, cap. 63.'-Lat. debentur, they are due; 'because these receipts began with the words debentur mihi; Webster. - Lat. debere, to be due. See Debt. DEBILITATE, to weaken. (Lat.) The verb occurs in Cot-grave; Shak, has debile, i. e. weak, Cor. i. 9. 48; and debility, As You Like It, ii. 3. 51; cf. O. F. debiliter, 'to debilitate, weaken, enfeeble ;' Cotgrave. - Lat. debilitatus. pp. of debilitare, to weaken. -Lat. debilis, weak; which stands for dehibilis, compounded of de, from, away from, and habilis, able; i.e. unable. See Able. Der. From the same source is debility, O. F. debilité, from Lat. debilitatem, acc. of debilitas, weakness.

DEBONAIR, courteous, of good appearance. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. debonere, Rob. of Glouc. p. 167; also the sb. de-bonairte, O. Eng. Hom. p. 269, l. 15. -O. F. debonere, debonaire, adj. affable; compounded of de bon aire, lit. of a good mien. Here de is Lat. de, of; bon is from Lat. bonus, good; and aire was a fem. sb, (= Ital. aria), signifying 'mien,' of uncertain origin, but perhaps related to Low Lat. area, a nest. See remarks on Aery. ¶ For the sense of aire, cf. our phrase 'to give oneself airs.'

DEBOUCH, to march out of a narrow pass. (F., -L.) A modern military word (Todd). - F. debnucher, to uncork, to emerge. - F. de-, for Lat. dis-, out, away; and boucher, to stop up the mouth; thus deboucher is lit. 'to unstop.'-F. bouche, the mouth.-Lat. bucca, the cheek; also, the mouth. DEBRIS, broken pieces, rubbish. (F., -L. and G.) Modern. Merely French. - F. débris, fragments. - O. F. desbriser, to rive asunder; Cot. - O.F. des-, for Lat. dis-, apart; and briser, to break, of German origin. See Bruise.

DEBT, a sum of money due. (F., -L.) The introduction of the b (never really sounded) was due to a knowledge of the Latin form, and was a mistake. See Shak. L. L. L. v. 1. 23. M. E. dette, Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 280 (or 282); P. Plowman, B. xx. 10. The pl. dettes and dettur (i. e. debtor) both occur on p. 126 of the Ancren debita, a sum due; fem. of debitus, owed, pp. of debere, to owe. β. Debere is for dehibere, lit. to have away, i. e. to have on loan; from de, down, away, and habere, to have. See Habit. Der. debt-or (M. E. dettur, O. F. deteur, from Lat. debitorem, acc. of debitor, a debtor). We also have debit, from Lat. debitum.

DEBUT, a first appearance in a play. (F.) Modern, and French. -F. debut, a first stroke, a first cast or throw in a game at dice. The O. F. desbuter meant 'to repell, to put from the mark he aimed at; Cot. The change of meaning is singular; the sb. seems to have meant 'a miss,' a bad aim.' = O. F. des-, for Lat. dis-, apart; and but, an aim. See Butt (1).

DECADE, an aggregate of ten. (F., -Gk.) The pl. decades is in Hackluyt, Voyages, vol. iii. p. 517. - F. decade, 'a decade, the tearme or number of ten years or months; also, a tenth, or the number of

Only the pp. debauched 🕇 ten; ' Cot. - Gk. δεκάδα, acc. of δεκάs, a company of ten. - Gk. δέκα, ten; cognate with E. Ten, q. v.

DECADENCE, a state of decay. (F.,-L.) In Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, let. 39. - F. decadence, 'decay, ruin;' Cot. -Low Lat. decadentia, decay. - Lat. de, down; and Low Lat. cadentia, a falling. See Cadence. Der. decadencey; and see decay.

DECAGON, a plane figure of ten sides. (Gk.) So named because it also has ten angles. A mathematical term; in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Comp. of Gk. déna, ten, and youria, a corner, an angle; which Curtius (i. 220) regards 'as a simple derivative from yorv, the knee.' See Ton and Knee.

DECAHEDRON, a solid figure having ten bases or sides. (Gk.) A math. term. Not in Kersey or Bailey. Comp. of Gk. (Gk.)  $\delta i \kappa a$ , ten; and  $i \delta \rho a$ , a base, a seat (with aspirated e). - Gk.  $i \delta - o$ , a seat; from the base  $h \in \delta$ , cognate with E. sit. See Ton and Sit.

DECALOGUE, the ten commandments. (F., -L., -Gk.) Written decaloge; Barnes, Epitome of his Works, p. 368. Earlier, in Wyclif, prologue to Romans; p. 299.-F. decalogue; Cot.-Lat. decalogus.-Gk. δεκάλογοs, the decalogue; comp. of Gk. δέκα, ten, and loros, a speech, discourse, from lerver, to speak. DECAMP, to go from a camp, depart quickly. (F.,-L.)

Formerly discamp, as in Cotgrave. Decamp occurs in the Tatler, no. 11, and in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715, who also gives decampment. - F. decamper; Cot. gives ' descamper, to discampe, to raise or to remove a camp.'-Lat. dis-, away; and campus, a field, later a camp (Ducange). See Camp. DECANAL; see under Dean.

DECANT, to pour out wine. (F., -Ital., -O. H. G.) ·Let it stand some three weeks or a month . . . Then decant from it the clear juyce ;' Reliq. Wottoniane, p. 454 ; from a letter written A. D. 1633. Kersey explains decantation as a chemical term, meaning 'a pouring off the clear part of any liquor, by stooping the vessel on one side. -F. decanter, to decant. - Ital. decantare, a word used in chemistry; see the Vocabolario della Crusca. The orig. sense appears to have been ' to let down (a vessel) on one side. '- Ital. de-, prefix, from Lat. de, down from ; and Ital. canto, a side, corner. See Cant (2). Der. decant-er. [+]

DECAPITATE, to behead. (Lat.) Cotgrave has: * Decapiter, to decapitate, or behead.'-Low Lat. decapitatus, pp. of decapitare, to behead; Ducange. - Lat. de, down, off; and capit-, stem of caput, the head, cognate with E. Head, q.v. Der. decapitat-ion.

DECASYLLABIC, having ten syllables. (Gk.) Modern. Coined from Gk. 8(ka, ten; and outhabh, a syllable. See Ten, and Syllable.

DECAY, to fall into ruin. (F., -L.) Surrey uses the verb decaie actively, in the sense of 'wither;' The Constant Lover Lamenteth. The sb. decas (= Lat. decasus) is in Gower, C. A. i. 32. - O. F. decaer, also spelt dechaor, dechaoir, &c., to decay; cf. Span. decaer. - O. F de, prefix, and caer, to fall. - Lat. de, down; and cadere, to fall. See Cadence. Der. From the same source is decadence, q.v.; deciduous, q. v. DECEASE, death. (F., -L.)

M. E. deces, deses; spelt deces in Gower, C. A. iii. 243; deses in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 126. - O. F. deces (mod. F. décès), decease. - Lat. decessus, departure, death .- Lat. decedere, to depart. - Lat. de, from ; and cedere, to go.

See Code. Dor. decease, verb. DECEIVE, to beguile, cheat. (F.,-L.) M. E. deceynen (with u for v); P. Plowman, C. xix. 123. The sb. deceit is in P. Plowman, C. i. 77.-O. F. decever, decevoir.-Lat. decipere, pp. deceptus, to take away, deceive. - Lat. de, from; and capere, to take. - & KAP, to hold. Der. deceiv-er, deceiv-able, deceiv-abl-y, deceiv-able-ness; also deceit (through French from the Lat. pp. deceptus), spelt disseyte in K. Alisaunder, 7705; deceit-ful, deceit-ful-ly, deceit-ful-ness; also (from Lat. deceptus) decept-ive, decept-ive-ly, decept-ive-ness ; deception, 9. v. DECEMVIR, one of ten magistrates. (L.) In Holland's Livy, pp. 109, 127. - Lat. decemuir, one of the decemuiri, or ten men joined together in commission .- Lat. decem, ten; and uiri, men, pl. of uir, a man, which is cognate with A.S. wer, a man. Dor. decemvir-ate, from Lat. decemviratus, the office of a decemvir.

DECENNIAL, belonging to ten years. (L.) Decennial, be-longing to or containing ten years. Bount's Gloss. ed. 1674. - Lat. decennalis, of ten years; modified in the English fashion. - Lat. decem, ten; and ann-us, a year, changing to enn-us in composition. Der.

From the same source is dec-enn-ary, which see in Richardson. DECENT, becoming, modest. (F., -L.) 'Cumlie and decent;' R. Ascham, Scholemaster, ed. Arber, p. 64. - F. decent, 'decent, seemly;' Cot. - Lat. decent., stem of decens, fitting, pres. pt. of decere, to become, befit; cf. Lat. decus, honour, fame. See Decorate. Der. decent-ly, decenc-y

F. des-, prefix, = Lat. dis-, apart, away; and face, a face, from Lat. facies, a face. Similarly, Ital. sfacciare, to deface (Florio), is from Ital. prefix s-=Lat. dis, and Ital. faccia, a face. And see Efface; also Disfigure. Der. deface-ment. DEFALCATE, to lop off, abate, deduct. (L.)

See Trench. Select Glossary. Used as a pp. by Sir T. Elyot: 'yet ben not these in any parte defalcate of their condigne praises;' The Governour, b. ii. c. 10. [But this is a false form, due to partial confusion with O. F. deffalquer, 'to defaulke, deduct, bate' (Cotgrave). He should have written difalcate or diffalcate.] - Low Lat. diffalcare, difalcare, to abate, deduct, take away. - Lat. dif- = dis-, apart ; and late Lat. falcare (see falcastrare in Ducange), to cut with a sickle. - Lat. falc-, stem of falx, a sickle; see Falchion. ¶ From the same source are falz, a sickle; see Falchion. ¶ From the same source are O. F. deffalquer (above), and Ital. diffalcare, to abate, retrench. Here O. F. def-= O. F. des-= Lat. dis-; as before. Der. defalcat-ion. DEFAME, to destroy fame or reputation. (F.,-L.) M.E. defame, diffame, used convertibly, and the same word. Chancer has both 'for his defame' and 'of his diffame;' Six-text, Ellesmere MS., Group B. 3738, Group E. 730; (C. T. 14466, 8606.) The verb dif-famen is used by Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 321; and by Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 490. - O. F. defamer, to take away one's reputation (Roquefort, who gives a quotation). - Lat. diffamare, to spread abroad a report, esp. a bad report; hence, to slander, - Lat.

dif-, for dis-, apart, away; and fama, a report. See Fame. ¶ The prefix de- = O. F. de-, short for des- = Lat. dis-; the prefix dif- = dis-, is strictly a Latin one. Der. defam-at-ion, defam-at-or-y. [+]

DEFAULT, a failing, failure, defect, offence. (F., -L.) M.E. defaute; the l was a later insertion, just as in fault. The pl. defautes, meaning ' faults' is in the Ancren Riwle, p. 136; Gower has defaulte, a default, fault, as in Cotgrave. See faillir in Burguy. - O. F. def-Lat. dif-, for dis-, apart; and faute, oldest form faile, a fault (= Ital. falta, a failing). - Low Lat. fallita, a deficiency, pp. of Low Lat. fallire, to be defective, fail, derived from Lat. fallere, to fail. See

DEFEASANCE, a rendering null and void. (F.,-L.) A law term. 'Defeizance, a condition relating to a deed, ... which being performed, ... the deed is disabled and made void;' Blount's Law Dict. ed. 1691. Spenser has defeasance = defeat; F. Q. i. 12. 12. - O. Norm. F. law term defaisance or defeisance, a rendering void. - O. F. defaisant, deffaisant, desfaisant, pres. part. of defaire, deffaire, desfaire, to render void, lit. to undo. -O. DEFEND, to ward off, protect. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E.

defenden; defendyng occurs as a sb. in K. Alisaunder, 676.-O.F. defendre. - Lat. defendere, to defend. - Lat. de-, down ; and (obsolete) fendere, to strike, occurring in the comp. de-fendere, of-fendere.  $\beta$ . Fendere is by Benfey and Pott connected with Skt. han, to kill; from VGHAN, to strike, kill, though Benfey gives the form of the root as DHAN. On the other hand, cf. Gk. Beiveev, to strike, from / DHAN, to strike; Curtius, i. 516; Fick, i. 632. Der. defend-er, defend-ant (F. pres. pt.); also defence, q. v. DEFER (1), to put off, delay. (F., - L.) 'Deferred vnto the yeares of discretion;' Tyndall, Works, p. 388. M. E. differren, Gower, C. A. i. 262. [A similar confusion between the prefixes de- and difoccurs in defame, q. v.] – O. F. differer, 'to defer, delay;' Cot. – Lat. differre, to bear different ways; also, to delay. – Lat. dif- dis-, apart; and ferre, to bear. See Bear. ¶ Distinct from the following.

DEFER (2), to submit or lay before; to submit oneself. (F., -L.) 'Hereupon the commissioners . . . deferred the matter unto the earl of Northumberland;' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 65. The sb. deference occurs in Dryden (Todd's Johnson). - O. F. deferer, 'to charge, accuse, appeach; deferer à un appel, to admit, allow, or accept of, to give way unto an appeale; Cot. - Lat. deferre, to bring down, to bring a thing before one. - Lat. de, down; and ferre, ¶ Distinct from the above. Der. defer-ence, to bear. See Bear. defer-enti-al, defer-enti-al-ly. DEFLANCE, DEFICIENT; see Defy, Defect.

DEFILE (1), to make foul, pollute. (Hybrid; L. and E.) clumsy compound, with a Lat. prefix to an E. base. The force of the word is due to E. foul, but the form of the word was suggested by O.F. defouler, to trample under foot; so that the M.E. defoulen, to tread down, passed into (or give way to) a later form defoilen, whence our defile. Both sources must be taken into account. A. We have (1) M. E. defoulen, to tread down. Rob. of Glouc., describing how King Edmand seized the robber Liofa, says that he 'from the borde hym drou, And defouled hym under hym myd honde and myd fote,' i. e. thrust him down. Again, Wyclif translates conculcatum est (A. V. 'was trodden down') by was defoulid ; Luke, viii. 5. Again, 'We defoule wip our fet be fine gold schene,' as a transla-tion of 'aurum pedibus conculcanus;' Alexander and Dindimus, ed. C. A. ii. 122. - O. F. deffaute, defaute, fem., later defaut, default, masc., Skeat, 1027. This is the O. F. defauler, 'to tread or trample on ;' Cot.

DEFILE.

Derived from Lat. de-, down; and Low Lat. fullare, folare, to full "perform. See Function. cloth; see Fuller. B. Again, we have (2) M. E. defoulen, to defile, imitated from the former word, but with the sense of E foul engrafted on it. Wyclif translates coinquinat (A. V. 'defileth') by defoulith ; Matt. xv. 11. Later, we find defoylyd, Sir T. More, Works, b, 771; afterwards defile, Much Ado, iii, 3. 60. This change to defile was due to the influence of M. E. fylen, the true E. word for 'to pollute,' correctly used as late as in Shak. Mach. iii. 1. 65: ' have I fu'd my mind.' This is the A.S. fylan, to make foul, whence the comp.  $a'_i y'_{ian}$ , to pollute utterly, in Gregory's Pastoral, § 54, ed. Sweet, p. 421; also be'j'_ian, to defile; Bosworth. The verb  $f'_i$  ian is regularly formed, by the usual change of ú to ý, from the adj. fúl, foul. See Foul. Der. defile-ment.

DEFILE (1), to pass along in a file.  $(F_1, -L_1)$  'Defile, to march or go off, file by file;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Hence 'Defile, or Defilee, a straight narrow lane, through which a company of soldiers can pass only in file;' id. - F. depler, to file off, defile; the earlier sense was to unravel, said of thread. -F. de = O. F. des = Lat. dis-, apart; and filer, to spin threads. <math>-F. fil, 'a thread, .... also a file, ranke, order;' Cot. - Lat. filum, a thread. See File. Der. defile, sb.

DEFINE, to fix the bounds of, describe. (F., -L.) M. E. diffinen; 'I have diffined that blisfulnesse is be sourcyne goode;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 2; p. 66. Cf. diffini ioun, Chaucer, C. T. 5607. These are false forms for definen, defini ioun. The form define is in the Romaunt of the Rose, 1. 6634. - O. F. definer, 'to define, conclude, determine or discuss, precisely to express, fully to describe; Cot.-Lat. definire, to limit, settle, define.-Lat. de-, down; and finire, to set a bound.-Lat. finis, a bound, end. See Finish. Dor. defin-able, defin-ite, defin-ite-ly, defin ite-ness, defin-it-ion, defin-it-ive, defin-it-ive-ly.

DEFLECT, to turn aside, swerve aside. (L.) 'At some part of the Azores it [the needle] deflecteth not;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. ii. c. 2, § 13. 'Deflexure, a bowing or bending;' Blount's away; and flectere, to bend; pp. flexus. See Flexible. Der.

deflect-ion, deflex-ure. DEFLOUR, DEFLOWER, to deprive of flowers, to ravish. (F.,-L.) M.E. deflouren; Gower, C.A. ii. 322. Spelt defloure, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 75.-O.F. defleurer, 'to defloure, to defile;' Cot. - Low Lat. deflorare, to gather flowers, to ravish. - Lat. de, from, away; and flor-, stem of flos, a flower. DIBBER, DIBBLE, a tool used for setting plants. (Scand.) ' I'll not put The dibble in earth to set one slip of them; ' Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 100. The suffix -er or -le denotes the agent. - Prov. Eng. ' dib, to dip; used in the same senses as dip, and identical with it; cf. to only used in the same senses as dip, and identical with l; cr. Swed. dial. dbb, to dive, dip oneself, and Dan. dyb, deep, dybe, to deepen, in which b takes the place of p, as in our [Cleveland] word; Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary. Cf. 'Dib, a depression [i.e. dip] in the ground;' id.  $\beta$ . Hence Prov. Eng. dib = E. dip; cf. 'to dibbe, dip, intingere,' Levins, 113. 16; the change from p to b being due (perhaps) to Danish influence. See Dip. Der. The verb dibble, in angling, is the frequentative of dib. to dip. DICE, the plural of die; see Die (2).

DICOTYLEDON, a plant with two seed-lobes. (Gk.) A mod. botan. term; in common use. Coined from Gk. &-, double (from δίs, twice); and Gk. κοτυληδών, a cup-shaped hollow or cavity. - Gk. κότύλη, anything hollow, a cup. Remoter origin obscure. Der. dicotyledon-ous.

DICTATE, to command, tell what to write. (L.) 'Sylla could not skill of letters, and therefore knew not how to dietate; ' Bacon, Adv. of Learning, ed. W. A. Wright, i. 7. 29; p. 66. Shak. has dic'a'or; Cor. ii. 2. 93. – Lat. dictatus, pp. of dictare, to dictate; cf. 'Sylla non potuit literas, nescuit dictare,' quoted in Bacon, Essay xv.  $\beta$ . Dictare is the frequentative of dicere, to say; see Diction. Der. dictat-ion. dictat-or, dictat-or-ship, dictat-or-i-al, dictat-or-i-al-ly.

DICTION, manner of discourse. (F., -L.) In Shak. Haml. v. 2. 133. - F. diction, 'a diction. speech, or saying;' Cot. - Lat. acc. dictionem, from nom. dictio, a saying, speech. - Lat. dictus, pp. of dicere, to say, also, to appoint ; from the same root as dicare, to tell, publish. + Gk.  $\delta \ell i arrow, I$  shew, point out. + Skt. diq, to shew, pro-duce. + Goth. ga-teihan, to tell, announce. + G. zeihen, to accuse; zeigen, to point out.  $- \checkmark$  DIK, to shew, point out; see Didactio. See Curtius, i. 165; Fick, i. 103. Der. diction-ary; also dictum (neut. sing. of Lat. pp. dictus), pl. dicta; and see ditto. Hence also benediction, benison, male-diction, malison, contra-diction, &c. From the same root are indicate, indict, index, avenge, judge, preach, &c. [†] DID, pt. t. of  $d_{2}$ ; see Do.

DIDACTIC, instructive. (Gk.) In Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 10; also in his Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. s. 9 (R.) – Gk. διδαπτικόs, instructive; cf. 1 Tim. iii. 2. – Gk. διδάσκειν, to teach; where διδάoneir = di-dan-oneir. + Lat. doc-ere, to teach; cf. disc-ere, to learn. -✓ DAK, to shew, teach; an older form of DIK (see Diction). This root is an extension of ✓ DA, to know, whence Gk. δα-ήναι, to learn, Sé-ba-ev, he taught; cf. Zend da, to know. See Curtius, i.

284; Fick, i. 103. Der. didactic-al. didactic-al-ly. DIDAPPER, a diving bird, a dabchick. (E.) 'Doppar, or dy-doppar, watyr-byrde, mergulus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 127. For dive-dapper. 'Like a dive-dapfer peering through a wave; 'Shak. Venus, 86. Compounded of dive (q. v.) and dapper, i.e. a diver, dipper, plunger, so that the sense of dive occurs twice in the word, according to a common principle of reduplication in language. [Cf. Derwentwater = white-water-water.] β. The verb dap or dop, to dive, is a variant of dip; traces of it are clearly seen in dop-chicken, the Linc. word for the dab-chick (Halliwell); in doppers, i.e. dippers or Anabaptists, used by Ben Jonson in his masque entitled News from the New World; and in the form doppar cited from the Prompt. Parv. above. And, in fact, the A. S. form dufe-doppa actually occurs, to translate the Lat. pelicanus (Bosworth). Cf. Swed. doppa, to dip, plunge, immerge; Dan. döbe, to baptise; Du. doopen, to baptise, dip; G. taufen, to baptise. Hence also dap-chick, i. e. the diving bird, corrupted to dab-chick for ease of pronunciation. See Dip, Dive. DIE (1), to lose life, perish. (Scand.) M. DIE (1), to lose life, perish. (Scand.) M. E. dien, dyen, disen, desen, deyen. Spelt desen in Layamon, 31796. [The A. S. word is steorfan or sweltan; hence it is usual to regard die as Scandinavian.] -Icel. deyja, to die. + Swed. dö. + Dan. döe. + O. Sax. döian. + Goth. diwan. + O. H. G. tówan, M. H. G. towwen, to die; whence G. todt, dead. Cf. also O. Fries, deia, deja, to kill; Goth. af-daujan, to harass, Matt. ix. 36. See Death, Dead. DIE (2), a small cube used for gaming. (F., -L.) The sing. die

DIE (2), a small cube used for gaming.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.})$  The sing. die is in Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 27; he also uses the pl. dice (id. i. 2. 133). Earlier, the sing. is seldom found; but the M. E. pl. dys is common; see Chaucer, C. T. 1240, 11002, 12557. Some MS. spell the word dees, which is, etymologically, more correct. = O. F. det, a die (Burguy), later dé, pl. dez (Cotgrave); cf. Prov. dat, a die (Brachet); also Ital. dado, pl. dadi, a die, cube, pedestal; Span. dado, pl. dados; Low Lat. dadus, a die.  $\beta$ . The Prov. form dat is the oldest. as t becomes occasionally weakened to d; e. g. the Low Lat. dadea = Low Lat. datus, lit. a thing thrown or given forth; the masc. sb. talus, a die, being understood.  $\gamma$ . Datus is the pp. of dare, to give, let go, give forth, thrust, throw. See Date (1). Der. die, a stamp, pl. dies; also dice, verb, M. E. dycen, Prompt. Parv. p. 121.

Lat. datas, it. a thing thrown or given forth; the masc. so. itatus, a die, being understood.  $\gamma$ . Datas is the pp. of dare, to give, let go, give forth, thrust, throw. See Date (1). Der. die, a stamp, pl. dies; also dice, verb, M. E. dycen, Prompt. Parv. p. 121. DIET (1), a prescribed allowance of food. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Of his diete mesurable was he; 'Chaucer, C. T. 437. Cf. 'And ji thow diete the thus,' i. e. diet thyself in this way; 'P. Plowman, B. vi. 270. -O. F. diete, 'diet, or daily fare; also, a Diet, Parliament; 'Cot. -Low Lat. dieta, dicata, a ration of food. -Gk. diaura, mode of life; also, diet.  $\beta$ . Curtus connects dicara with didas, which he regards as the orig. form of (das, I live; and this he again derives from  $\sqrt{GI}$ , to live; whence also Zend. ji, to live, Skt. jiv, to live, and E. quick, living. See Quick. Der. diet-ary, diet e-ie. DIET (2), an assembly, council. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Thus would

DIIST (2), an assembly, council. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Thus would your Polish Diet disagree;' Dryden, Hind and Panther, ii. 407. It occurs also in Cotgrave. -O.F. diete, 'diet; also, a Diete, Parliament;' Cot. -Low Lat. dicata, a public assembly; also, a ration of food, diet.  $\beta$ . The peculiar spelling dicata and the suffix -ta leave no doubt that this word is nothing but a peculiar use of the Gk. Slawa, mode of life, diet. In other words, this word is identical in form with Diet (1), q. v.  $\gamma$ . At the same time, the peculiar sense of the word undoubtedly arose from a popular etymology that connected it with the Lat. dies, a day, esp. a set day, a day appointed for public business; whence, by extension, a meeting for business, an assembly. We even find dicata used to mean 'a day's journey;' Ducange.

DIFFER, to be distinct, to disagree. (L.) 'Dyuerse and differyng substaunces;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 5; p. 168. Ch. also has the sb. difference, id. b. v. pr. 6; p. 176, l. 5147. - Lat. differre, to carry apart, to differ; also, to defer. - Lat. dif- (for diz-), apart; and ferre, to bear, cognate with E. bear. See Boar (1). (Observe that differ is derived directly from Latin, not through the French; the O. F. differer meant 'to defer' (see Cotgrave), and had not, as now, also the sense of 'to differ.' The O. F. for 'to differ' was differenter or differanter, a verb formed from the adj. different. Der. different.(O. F. different, from Lat. pres. part. stem different-), different-ly, different-i-al; also differ-ence (O. F. difference, from Lat.

differentia). DIFFICULTY, an obstacle, impediment, hard enterprise. (F., -L.) [The adj. difficult is in Shak. Oth. iii. 3, 82, but it is somewhat rare in early authors, and was merely developed from the sb. difficulty, which was a common word and in earlier use. The M. E. word for 'difficult' was difficile, occurring in Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 23.] M. E difficultate; Chaucer, C. T. 6854. - O. See Facile, Faculty. Der. difficult, difficult-ly.

difficult-ly. DIFFIDENT, distrustful, bashful. (Lat.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 563, ix. 293. Shak. has diffidence, K. John, i. 65. – Lat. diffidentem, acc., of diffidens, pres. pt. of diffidere, to distrust; cf. Lat. diffidentia, distrust. – Lat. dif-edis-, apart. with negative force; and fidere, to trust. – Lat. fides, faith. See Faith. Der. diffident-ly, diffidence; see diffidence in Trench, Select Glossary.

DIFFUSE, to shed abroad, pour around, spread, scatter. (L.) of form; whence Goth digan, deigan, to knead, mould plastic material,

In Shak. Temp. iv. 1. 79. Chaucer has diffusion, Troilus, iii. 296.-Lat. diffusus, pp. of diffundere, to shed abroad.-Lat. dif-edu-, apart; and fundere, to pour, from Lat.  $\checkmark$  FUD.-  $\checkmark$  GHUD, to pour, an extension of  $\checkmark$  GHU. to pour. DIG, to turn up earth with a spade.  $(\tilde{E}.)$  M. E. diggen. 'Dikeres and delueres digged up the balkes'=ditchers and delvers dug up the baulks; P. Plowman, B. vi. 109, where, for digged, the earlier version (A. vii. 100) has dikeden. Thus diggen is equivalent to dikien, to dig.=A.S. dician, to make a dike or dyke; Beda, i. 12; Two Saxon Chron. ed. Earle. p. 155.=A.S. die, a dyke, or dike, a ditch. + Swed. dika, to dig a ditch, from dike, a ditch. + Dan. dige, to dig. from dige, a ditch. ¶ As the A.S. dician is a secondary verb, formed from a sb., it was at first a weak verb; the strong pt. t. dug is of late invention, the true pt. t. being digged, which occurs 18 times in the A.V. of the Bible, whereas dug does not occur in it at all. So too, Wycliff has diggide, Gen. xxi. 30. Observe also, that the change from dikien to diggen may have been due to Danish influence. See Dike. Der. digg-er, digg-ings.

DIGEST, to assimilate food, arrange. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 289; Merch. iii. 5. 95. [But digestion is much earlier, viz. in Chaucer, C. T. 10661; so also digestive, id. 14967; and digestible, id. 439.] M. E. digest, used as a pp. = digested; Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 195. – Lat. digestus, pp. of digerere, to carry apart, separate, dissolve, digest. = Lat. digestum), digest-er, digest-ible, digest-ion, digestive, digest., sb. (Lat. digestum), digest-er, digest-ible, digest-ion, digestive, digest-ibil-i-y.

DIGHT, prepared, disposed, adorned. (L.) Nearly obsolete. 'The clouds in thousand liveries dight; 'Milton, L'All. 62. Dight is here short for dighted, so that the infinitive also takes the form dight. 'And have a care you dight things handsomely; 'Beaum. and Fletcher, Coxcomb, Act iv. sc. 3. M. E. dikten, digten, verb; the pp. dight is in Chaucer, C. T. 14447. - A.S. dikten, to set in order, dispose, arrange, prescribe, appoint; Luke, xxii. 29. - Lat. dietare, to dictate, prescribe. See Dictate. ¶ Similarly, the G. dichten, M. H. G. tihten, dillen, O. H. G. dictón, is unoriginal, and borrowed from the same Lat. verb.

DIGIT, a finger, a figure in arithmetic. (L.) 'Computable by digits;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 12. § 23. - Lat. digitus, a finger, a toe; the sense of 'figure' arose from counting on the fingers. + Gk.  $\delta d\kappa \tau \nu \lambda os$ , a finger. + A. S. tá, a toe. + G. zehe, a toe. A shorter form occurs as the base of the Teutonic words. The root I hold to be  $\delta \epsilon \kappa (\delta s \chi)$  in  $\delta \epsilon \kappa \rho \mu a \mu$ , and its meaning has the same relation to the root as that of G. finger to fangen, to catch;' Curtius, i. 164.  $\gamma$ . That is, Curtius derives it from  $\checkmark$  DAK, to take; not from  $\checkmark$  DAK, to shew, which gives diction and didactic. Der. digit-al, digit-at-ed, digit-at-ed, digit-at-ion. See Too.

DIGNIFY, to make worthy. (F., -L.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 4. 158.-O. F. dignifier, to dignify; omitted in Cotgrave, but given in Sherwood's index to that work.-Low Lat. dignificare, to think worthy, lit. to make worthy.-Lat. digni, for digno, crude form of dignus, worthy; and ficare, a suffix due to facere, to make. DIGRAPH, a double sign for a simple sound. (Gk.) Modern. Made from Gk. &-, double, and ypáque, to write.

DIGREESS, to step aside, go from the subject. (L.) In Shak. Romeo, iii. 3. 127. ['The sb. digression is much older, and occurs in Chaucer, Troilus, i. 143.] – Lat. digression, pp. of digredi, to go apart, step aside, digress. – Lat. di-edis-, apart; and gradi, to step – Lat. gradus, a step. See Grade. Der. digress-ion, digress-ion-al, digressive, digress-ive-ly.

DIRCE, a trench, a ditch with its embankment, a bank. (E.) M. E. dik, dyk, often softened to dich, whence the mod. E. dikk. 'In a dyke falle '= fall in a ditch (where 2 MSS. have dicke); P. Plowman, B. xi. 417.- A. S. dic, a dike; 'hi dulfon áne mycle dic' = they dug a great dike; A. S. Chron. an. 1016. + Du. dijk. + Icel. diki. + Dan. dige. + Swed. dike. + M. H. G. tick. a marsh, canal; G. teich, a pond, tank; the mod. G. deich, a dike, being merely borrowed from Dutch. + Gk.  $\tau \epsilon \chi cos.$  a wall, rampart;  $\tau o \chi cos.$  wall of a house (standing for  $\theta \epsilon \chi cos.$ ). + Skt. dehi, a mound, rampart (Curtins, i. 223).  $\beta$ . All these are from  $\checkmark$  DH1GH, to touch, to feel, knead. Lat. fingere, Gk. 017 yareir, to touch, Skt. dik, to besmear. Hence the orig. sense of dike, like that of dough, is ' that which is formed," . e. artificial. Der. dig, q. v.; from the same root is dough, q. v.

DILACERATE, to tear asunder. (L.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 6, § 3. - Lat. dilaceratus, pp. of dilacerare, to tear apart - Lat. di -= die-, apart; and lacerare, to tear. See La-

Cerate. Der. dilaceration. DILAPIDATE, to pull down stone buildings, to ruin. (L.) In Levins, 41. 36. Used by Cotgrave, who translates F. dilapider by 'to dilapidate, ruin, or pull down stone buildings.'- Lat. dilapidatus, pp. of dilapidare, to destroy, lit. to scatter like stones or pelt with stones; cf. Columella, x. 332. - Lat. di- = dis-, apart; and lapid-, with stones; cf. Columelia, x. 332. - Lat. di-= dis-, apart; and lapid-, stem of lapis, a stone. See Lapidary. Der. dilapidation. DILATE, to spread out, enlarge, widen. (F., -L.) 'In dylating and declaring of hys conclusion;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 648 h. [Chaucer has the sb. dilatation, C. T. 4652.] = O. F. dilater, 'to dilate, widen, inlarge;' Cot. - Lat. dilatus, spread abroad; used as pp. of differre, but from a different root. - Lat. di-= dis-, apart; and latus, carried, borne, from O. Lat. tlatus = Gk.  $\tau\lambda \eta \tau \delta_{5}$ , borne, endured. - VTAL, to lift; whence Lat. tollere. Dor. dilat-er, dilat-able, dilat-abil-i-ty, dilat-ion, dilat-or-y, dilat-or-i-ness; also dilat-at-ion (O.F. dilatation, which see in Cotgrave).

DILEMMA, a perplexity, puzzling situation. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, iv. 5. 87; All's Well, iii. 6. 80. - Lat. dilemma. -In Gk. δίλημμα, a double proposition, an argument in which one is caught between (διαλαμβάτεται) two difficulties. - Gk. διαλαμβάτομαι, I am caught between, pass. of dialaµbáreir, to take in both arms, grasp. - Gk. διά, between ; and λαμβάνειν, to take. - Gk. / ΛΑΒ, to take; discussed in Curtius, ii. 144. - A RABH, to take. DILETTANTE, a lover of the fine arts. (Ital., - L.) Modern. The pl. dilettanti occurs in Burke, On a Regicide Peace (Todd). -Ital. dilettante, pl. dilettanti, a lover of the fine arts ; properly pres. pt. of dilettare, to delight, rejoice. - Lat. delectare, to delight. See Delight. Der. dilettante-ism.

DILIGENT, industrious. (F., -L.) Chaucer has diligent, C. T. 485; and diligence, id. 8071. -O. F. diligent; Cot. - Lat. diligentem, acc. of diligens, careful, diligent, lit. loving; pres. part. of diligere, to select, to love; lit. to choose between - Lat. di - dis-, apart, between; and legere, to choose, cognate with Gk. Aéyew, to choose, say. Der. diligent-ly, diligence.

DILL, the name of a plant. (E.) M. E. dille, dylle. 'Dylle, herbe, anetum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 121. – A. S. dile; 'myntan and dile and cymyn'=mint and dill and cummin; Matt. xxiii. 23. + Du. dille.

'Diluted, alayed, tempered, mingled with water, wet, imperfect; 'Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674 .- Lat. dilu:us, pp. of diluere, to wash away, mix with water. - Lat. di- = dis-, apart ; and luere, to wash, cognate with Gk. λούειν, to wash. Der dilute, adj., dilut-ion ; from the same source, dilu-ent, diluv-ium, diluv-ial, diluv-ian; and see deluge. DIM, obscure, dusky, dark. (E.) M. E. aim, dimme; 'though I loke dymme;' P. Plowman, B. x. 179. - A. S. dim, dark; Grein, i. 194. + Icel. dimmr, dim. + Swed. dimmig, foggy; dimma, a fog, a mist, haze. + M.H.G. timmer, timber, dark, dim.  $\beta$ . These words are probably further related to O. Sax. thim, dim (with the remarkable change to th), and further to G. dümmerung, dimness, twilight; which are cognate with Lat. tenebræ, darkness, Irish teim, dim, Russ. Y. The last of these is derived temauii, dim, and Skt. tamas, gloom. from tam, to choke, hence, to obscure ; and all are from V TAM, to choke. See Curtius, ii. 162. Dor. dim-ly, dim-ness.

DIMENSION, measurement, extent. (F., -L.) 'Without any dimensions at al;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1111g. - O. F. dimension, 'a dimension, or measuring;' Cot. - Lat. acc. dimen ionem, from nom. dimensio, a measuring. - Lat. dimensus, pp. of dimetiri, to measure off a part of a thing, to measure out .- Lat. di-= dis-, apart; and metici, to measure. See Measure.

DIMINISH, to lessen, take from. (F., -L.) 'To fantasy [fancy] that giving to the poore is a diminishing of our goods;' Latimer, Sixth Ser. on Lord's Prayer (R.) [Chaucer has diminucion, i. e. diminution, Troilus, iii. 1335.] A coined word, made by prefixing di- to the E. minish, in imitation of Lat. diminuere, to diminish, where the prefix di- = Lat. dis-, apart, is used intensively. B. The E. minish is from O. F. menusier, menusier, Low Lat. minutiare, a by-form of minutare, to break into small fragments (Ducange). - Lat. minutus, small, pp. of minuere, to lessen. See Minish, Minute. Der. diminish-able; from Lat. pp. diminutus are diminution (O.F. diminution, Lat. acc. diminutionem), diminut-ive, diminut-ive-ly, diminut-ive-ness.

'Without the DIMISSORY, giving leave to depart. (L.) bishop's dimissory letters presbyters might not go to another dioces;' of the light, passing thro' transparent mediums;' Kersey's Dict. ed. Bp. DIMITY, a kind of stout white cotton cloth. (F.?-L.,-Gk.) 'Dimitty, a fine sort of fustian;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. [Cf. Du. diemet, dimity.]-Gk. Simros, dimity.-Gk. Simros, made with a double thread. - Gk. &i-, double; and wiros, a thread of the woof. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood quotes from Muratori a passage containing the words 'amita, dimita, et trimita, 'explained to mean silks woven with one, two, or three threads respectively. The word thus passed from Gk. into Latin, and thence probably into French, though not re-DIMPLE, a small hollow. (E.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. ii. 3. 101. The orig. sense is 'a little dip' or depression; and it is a nasalised form of dipp-le, i. e. of the dimin. of dip make by help of the suffix -le. Cf. Norse dipel, depil, a pool; the dimin. form of Swed. dial. depp. a large pool of water, which is a derivative of Swed. dial. dippa, to dip. See depp, dippa, in Rietz; and see Dapple, and Dip. The G. dumpfel, a pool, is a similar formation from the same root. Der. dimpl-y, dimpl-ed. Doublet, dingle, q. v.

DIN, a loud noise, clamour; to sound. (E.) The sb. is M. E. din, dene, dune ; spelt dine, Havelok, 1860 ; dune, Layamon, 1009.-A.S. dyn, dyne, noise; Grein, i. 213; dynnan, to make a loud sound; id. + Icel. dynr, a din; dynja, to pour, rattle down, like hail or rain. + Swed. dan, a din; dana, to ring. + Dan. dön, a rumble, booming; döne, to rumble, boom. + Skt. dhuni, roaring, a torrent; dhuani, a sound, din; dhvan, to sound, roar, buzz.

DINE, to take dinner, eat. (F.) M. E. dinen, dynen; P. Plow man, B. v. 75; Rob. of Glouc. p. 558. [The sb. is diner (with one n), P. Plowman, B. xiii. 28; Rob. of Glouc. p. 561.] = O. F. diner, mod. F. diner, to dine; cf. Low Lat. dinare, to dine; of unknown origin.  $\beta$ . Cf. Ital. desinare, disinare, to dine; supposed by Diez to stand for Lat. december; from de-, fully, and connere, to take supper, from cana, supper, or dinner. Der. dinner. (M. E. diner, from O. Der. ding-dong. ¶ I imitative word, like din. Or perhaps related to Dint. ¶ Probably an Gr The Supposed A. S. denegan is probably an invention of Somner's. DINGLE, a small dell, little valley. (E.) In Milton, Comus, 312. A variant of dimble, used in the same sense. 'Within a gloomie dimble shee doth dwell, Downe in a pitt, ore-grown with brakes and briars;' Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, A. ii. sc. 8 (R.) 'And satyrs, that in shades and gloomy dimbles dwell;' Drayton, And satyrs, that in shades and gloomy annotes dwell; Drayton, Poly-Olbion, s. 2. Dimble is the same word as dimple, used in the primitive sense of that word, as meaning 'a small dip' or 'depression' in the ground. See Dimple, and Dip. [†] DINGY, soiled, dusky, dimmed. (E.) Very rare in books. 'Dingy, foul, dirty; Somersetshire; 'Halliwell. This sense of 'dirty' is the original one. The word really means 'dung-y' or 'soiled with dung. The i is due to an A. S. y, which is the modification of u, by the usual rule; cf. fill, from full: whilst g has taken the sound of j. \beta. This change from u to i appears as early as the tenth century; we find 'finus, divig' = dug; and 'stercoratio, dinging' = a dug-ing; Ælfric's Vocab., pr. in Wright's Vocab. i. 1. col. 1. See Dung. ¶ Cf. Swed. dyngig, dungy, from dynga, dung. DINNER; see under Dine.

DINT, a blow, force. (E.) M. E. din', dunt, dent; spelt din!, Will. of Paleme, 1234, 2784; dent, id. 2757; d.n.d. Layamon, 84:0. -A.S. dyn, a blow; Grein, i. 213. + Icel. dyn/r, a dint; dyn/a, to β. Perdint.+ Swed. dial. dunt, a stroke; dunta, to strike, to shake. ¶ Can it be connected with Gk. Oeiveer. haps related to Ding. to strike, Lat. -fendere in offendere, defendere?

DIOCESSE, a bishop's province. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. diceise, Chaucer, C. T. 666. - O. DISMAL, gloomy, dreary, sad. (Unknown.) More foul than dismall day; 'Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 26. The oldest use of the word appears to be in the phrase 'in the dismal,' nearly equivalent to the modern E. 'in the dismals,' meaning 'in mournful mood.' It occurs in Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 1206; where the knight, in describing with what perturbation of mind he told his tale of love to his lady, says: 'I not [know not] wel how that I began, Ful euel rehersen hit I can; And eek, as helpe me God withal, I trow hit was in the dismal, That was the woundes of Egipte,' where some copies read, 'That was the ten woundes of Egipte.' The sense is: 'I believe it was in perplexity similar to that caused by the ten plagues of Egypt.' The obscurity of the word seems to be due to the difficulty of tracing the origin of this phrase.  $\beta$ . As regards the form of the word, it answers to O.F. dismal, corresponding to Low Lat. decimalis, regularly formed from the M. E. disme (Gower, C. A. i. 12), O.F. disme, Low Lat. decima, a tithe, from Lat. decem, ten. It is just possible that the original sense of in the dismal was in tithingtime; with reference to the cruel extortion practised by feudal lords, who exacted tenths from their vassals even more peremptorily than tithes were demanded for the church. See Decima, Decimalis in Ducange; and Dismes (tithes) in Blount's Law Dict. Chaucer's reference to the ten plagues of Egypt may have a special meaning in it. y. In any case, the usual derivation from Lat. dies malus, an evil day, may be dismissed as worthless; so also must any derivation that fails to account for the final-al. See Trench's Select Glossary, where it is shewn that 'dismal days' were considered as unlucky days.

Der. dismal-ly. [†] DISMANTLE, to deprive of furniture, &c. (F.) In Cotgrave; and in Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 4, 666. 'Lambert presently took care so to dismanule the castle [of Nottingham] that there should be no more use of it for a garrison ;' Clarendon, Civil War, vol. iii. p. 192. -O.F. desmanteller, 'to take a man's cloak off his back; also, to dismantle, raze, or beat down the wall of a fortress;' Cot. - O. F. des-, Lat. dis-, apart, away; and manteler, 'to cloak, to cover with a cloak, to defend;' id. - O. F. mantel, later manseau, a cloak. See Mantle.

DISMASK, to divest of a mask. (F.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 296. - O.F. desmasquer, 'to unmaske;' Cot. - O.F. des-, from Lat. dis-, away; and O.F. masquer, to mask. See Mask.

DISMAY, to terrify, discourage. (Hybrid; Lat. and O. H. G.) In early use; in King Alisaunder, 2801. - O. F. desmayer \*, a form not found, but equivalent to Span. desmayar, to dismay, dishearten, also, to be discouraged, to lose heart. The O.F. desmayer was supplanted in French by the verb esmayer, to dismay, terrify, strike powerless. These two verbs are formed in the same way, and only differ in the form of their prefixes, which are equivalent respectively to the Lat. dis-, apart, and to Lat. ex, out. Both are hybrid words, formed with Lat. prefixes from the O. H. G. magan (G. mögen), to be able, to have might or power. B. Hence we have O. F. desmayer and esmayer, to lose power, to faint, fail, be discouraged, in a neuter sense; afterwards used actively to signify to render poweriess with terror, to astonish, astound, dismay, terrify. y. The O. H. G. magan is the same word with A. S. magan, and E. may; see May. 8. Cf. also Ital. smagare, formerly dismagare, to lose courses. Elories the latter states with the same states are been supported by the same states are been powerless with terror, to astonish, astound, dismay, terrify. courage; Florio gives the latter spelling, and assigns to it also the active sense 'to quell,' i. e. to dismay. See Di- and Syllable. Der. disyllabic. .  $\P$  The spelling with double s is really wrong, but the error appeared first in the French; the l before the final e has been inserted to bring the spelling nearer to that of syllable. The spelling disyllable is in Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674.

DISTAFF, a staff used in spinning. (E.) The distaff is a staff provided with flax to be spun off. Palsgrave has: 'I dysyn a dystaffe, I put the flaxe upon it to spynne.' M. E. distaf, Chaucer, C. T. 3772. 'Hec colus, a dysestafe;' 15th cent. Vocabulary, in Wright's Vocab. p. 260, col. I. – A. S. distaf, rare; but we find 'Colus, distaf' in a Vocabulary of the 11th century, in Wr. Vocab. p. 82, col. I, 1. 10.  $\beta$ . The quotation from Palsgrave and the spelling dysestafe shew that A. S. distaf – dis-staff or diss-staf. The latter element is our E. Staff, q. v.  $\gamma$ . The former element is remarkably exemplified by the Platt-deutsch disses, the bunch of flax on a distaff; Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 215, v. 284; also by the E. Dizson, q. v. Perhaps we may also consider the following words as related, viz. •DIZEN, to deck out. (E.) Used by Beaum. and Fletcher, in Monsieur Thomas, iii. 6. 3, and The Pilgrim, iv. 3. Palsgrave has: •I dysyn a distaffe, I put the flax upon it to spin.<sup>4</sup> Thus to dizen was, originally, to furnish a distaff with flax; hence, generally, to clothe, deck out, &c.  $\beta$ . Possibly connected with Swed. dial.  $d\bar{\sigma}ca$ , to stack (hay); Eng. dial. dess, to pile in layers, used at Whitby; Icel. dys, Dan. dysse, a small caim or pile of stones. Thus the orig. sense was 'to heap on,' to cover with a bunch. For further remarks, see Distaff. Der. be-dizen, q. v. DIZZY, giddy, confused. (E.) M. E. dysy, Pricke of Conscience, 771; dusie, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 117; superl. dusigest, Ancren Riwle, p. 182. – A. S. dysig, foolish, silly; Grein, i. 24; cf. dysigian, to be foolish; id.  $\beta$ . Compounded of a base dus, and suffix -ig; be foolish; id. where dus is another form of dwas, whence A.S. dwds, answering to Lat. hebes, dull; Ælfric's Gloss., ed. Somner, p. 74, col. 2.-✓ DHWAS, to crumble, perish; whence Skt. divam, to crumble, perish, pp. divasia, fallen, lost; Fick, i. 121. See Doze. + O. Du. duyzigh, dizzy. Oudemans; cf. DO (2), to be worth, be fit, avail. (E.) In the phrase 'that will  $d_{D}$ ' (i. e. suit), the verb is totally distinct from the above. It is the prov. E. dow, to avail, be worth, suit; M. E. duyen, Stratmann, p. 136. 'What dows me be dedayn, oper dispit make,' i. e. what does it avail me to shew disdain or dislike; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 50. - A.S. dugan, to be worth; see Doughty. ¶ Perhaps the phrase 'how do you do' is a translation of O.F. 'comment le faits vos?' see Wedgwood.

DOCILE, teachable, easily managed. (F., -L.) 'Be brief in what thou wouldst command, that so The docile mind might soon thy precepts know; 'Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace, Ars Poet. 335, 336, where the Lat. text has 'animi dociles.' -F. docile, 'docible, teachable;' Cot. -Lat. docilis, teachable. - Lat. docere, to teach.  $-\checkmark$  DAK, to teach; a causal extension of  $\checkmark$  DA, to know, seen in Gk.  $\delta\epsilon\deltaa\omega$ , taught, Zend dá, to know; Curtius, i. 284. Der. docil-i-iy. From the same root, didactic, q. v., disciple, q. v.; also doctor, doctrine, document, q. v.

didactic, q. v., disciple, q. v.; also doctor, doctrine, document, q. v. DOOK (1), to cut short, curtail. (Celtic?) 'His top was docked lyk a preest biforn;' Chaucer, C. T. 592 (or 590). A. Perhaps of Celtic origin; cf. W. tocio, to clip, to dock; whence tocyn, a short piece, a ticket. Sce Docket. B. Or perhaps Scand. Mätzner cites O. Icel. dockr, a tail, from Haldorsson; cf. 'dokkyn, or smytyn awey the tayle;' Prompt. Parv. [†]

DOCK (a), a kind of plant. (Celtic?) M. E. dokke; Chaucer, Troil. iv. 461. – A. S. docce, a dock; very common in Cockayne's ed. of A. S. Leechdoms; see Glossary in vol. iii. [Probably not E., but borrowed from Celtic.] – Gael. dogha, a burdock; Irish meacandogha, the great common burdock, where meacan means a tap-rooted plant, as carrot, parsnip, &c. Cf. Gk. daûwor, daûwor, a kind of parsnip or carrot. Der. bur-dock.

planning or carrot. Der. bur-dock. DOCK (3), a basin for ships. (Du., - Low Lat., - Gk.?) In North's Plutarch, p. 536 (R.) Cotgrave explains F. haute as 'a dock, to mend or build ships in.'-O. Du. dokke, a harbour; Kilian, Oudemans; cf. Dan. dokke, Swed. docka, G. docke, a dock. - Low Lat. doga, a ditch, canal; in which sense it appears to be used by Gregory of T. urs; see doga in Diez; the same word as Low Lat. doga, a vessel or cup. - Gk.  $\delta \propto \pi$ , a receptacle. - Gk.  $\delta \epsilon \propto 0$  and the same word as Low Lat. doga, a vessel or cup. - Gk.  $\delta \propto \pi$ , a receptacle. - Gk.  $\delta \epsilon \propto 0$  and the same word as Low Lat. doga, a total complexity of the same word of the same word is not quite clear; see Diez.

word is not quite clear; see Diez. DOCKET, a label, list, ticket, abstract. (Celtic?) 'The docket doth but signify the king's pleasure for such a bill to be drawn;' State Trials, Abp. Laud, an. 1640 (R.) 'Mentioned in a doequet;' Clarendon, Civil War, v. ii. p. 426. Formed, with dimin. suffix -et, from the verb dock, to clip, curtail, hence to make a brief abstract; Cl. 'doket, or dockyd;' Prompt. Parv. See Dock (1). Der. docket, verb. DOCTOR, a teacher, a physician. (L.) 'A doctour of phisik;' Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 413 (or 411); spelt doctor, P. Plowman, C. xii.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 413 (or 411); spelt doctor, P. Plowman, C. xii. o6. - Lat. doctor, a teacher. - Lat. doctus, pp. of docere, to teach. See Doctlo. Der. doctor-ate; and see doctrine. DOCTRINE teaching. learning. (F - L). In P. Plowman

In Chauter's works, ed. 1501, 101. 341. - P. document, 'a document;'
 Cot. - Lat. documentum, a proof. - Lat. docere, to teach, with suffix -mentum; see Dooile. Der. document-al, document-ar-y.
 DODECAGON, a plane figure, having 12 equal sides and angles. (Gk.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Coined from Gk.
 δώδεκα, twelve; and γωνία, an angle. β. The Gk. δώδεκα is from δω. i. e. δύο, two; and δέκα, ten. See Decagon.

DODECAHEDRON, a solid figure, with five equal pentagonal sides. (Gk.) Spelt dodecaedron in Kersey, ed. 1715. Coined from Gk. biobera, twelve; and $8pa, a base. See above, and see Decahedron.

DODGE, to go hither and thither, evade, quibble. (E.?) 'Let there be some dodging casuist with more craft than sincerity;' Milton, Tenure of Kings and Magistrates (R.) Of uncertain origin. a. The base seems to be that which appears in the Lowland Scotch dod, to jog, North Eng. dad, to shake; whence the frequentative forms seen in North Eng. daddle, to walk unsteadily, dodder, to shake, tremble, totter, as also in dadge, or dodge, to walk in a slow clumsy manner; see Halliwell, and Brockett.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense appears to be 'to move unsteadily,' or 'to shift from place to place.' Cf. the following passage. 'Mé pinc' jæt pú mé dwelige and dyderie [Cott. MS. dydrie] swá mon cild dép; látst mé hider and pider on swá picne wudu þæt ic ne mæg út áredian;' i.e. methinks that thou deceivest and misleadest me as one does a child, and leadest me hither and thither in so thick a wood that I cannot divine the way out; Ælfred'a Boethius, cap. 35. sect. 5 (b. iii. pr. 12). This A.S. dyder-ian or dydr-ian is related to the prov. Eng. dodder, and means lit. 'to make to go unsteadily,' the suffix -ian having, as usual, a causal force.  $\gamma$ . Similarly, doge may answer to a M. E. dod-ien, to make to jog; the final -ge is perhaps due to the softening of a causal ending. As to the root, cf. Skt. dhú, to shake. Der. dodg-er. [†] ending. As to the root, cf. Skt. dhú, to shake. Der. acag-er. [1] DODO, a kind of large bird, now extinct. (Port.) In Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 403, is a drawing of a dodo; at p. 403 he speaks of 'the dodo, a bird the Dutch call walgh-wogel or dod-erren,' which was then found in the Mauritius. In his fourth edition, 1677, he adds: 'a Portuguize name it is, and has reference to her simplenes.' - Port. doudo, silly, foolish. Perhaps allied to Dote, q. v. ¶ Similarly the booby was named. also by the Portuguese. See the long article on the dodo in the Engl. Cyclopædia. Walg-wogel in Dutch means 'nauseous bird;' it seems that the sailors killed them so easily that they were surfeited of them. [†]

DOE, the female of the buck. (E.) M. E. doo; Wyclif, Prov. vi. 5. -A. S. dá, translating Lat. dama in a copy of Ælfric's Glossary cited by Lye. + Dan. daa, a deer; daa-hiort, lit. doe-hart, a buck; daa-hind, lit. doe-hind, a doe. + Swed. dof hjort, a buck; dof lind, a doe.  $\beta$ . Root unknown; hardly borrowed from (still less cognate with) the Lat. dama, W. damas, a deer.

DOFF, to take off clothes or a hat. (E.) 'And doffing his bright arms;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 9, 36. 'Dof blive jis bere-skin' = doff quickly this bear-skin; William of Palerne, 2343. A contraction of do off, i.e. put off, just as den is of do en, and dup of do up. The expression is a very old one. 'Pá he him of dyde isernbyrnan' = then he did off his iron breast-plate; Beowulf, ed. Grein, 671. DOG, a domestic quadruped. (E. or O. Low G.) M. E. dogge (2 syllables); Ancren Riwle, p. 290. Not found in A. S., but an Old Low German word. + Du. dog, a mastiff. + Swed. dogg, a mastiff. + Dan. dogge, a bull-dog. Root unknown. Der dog, verb, to track (Shak.); dogg-ish, dogg-i.h-ly, dogg-ish-ness; also dogg-ed, i.e. sullen (Shak. K. John, iv. 1. 129), dogg-ed-ly, dogg-ed-ness. Also dog-brier, -cart, -day, -fish, -rose, -star; dog's-ear. [†] DOG-CHEAP, very cheap. (Scand.) Found also in Swed. dial.

DOG-CHEAP, very cheap. (Scand.) Found also in Swed. dial. dog = very. Rietz gives the examples dog indl, extremely greedy; dog lat, extremely idle. Cf. Swed. dugtigt, strongly, much – Swed. duga, to be fit (-A.S. dugan); see DO (2). So too Platt-Deutsch döger, very much; from the vb. dögen, to avail; Bremen Wörterb, i. 221.

DOGLE, a duke of Venice (Ital., -L) In Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674; and Kersey, ed. 1715. – Ital doge, dogio, a doge, captain, general; a provincial form of duce, more commonly written duca. – Lat. ducem, acc. of dux, a leader. See Duke. [+]

DOGGEREIL, wretched poetry. (Unknown.) Orig. an adj., and spelt dogerel. 'This may wel be rime dogerel, quod he;' Chaucer, C. T. 13853. 'Amid my dogrell rime;' Gascoigne, Counsel to Withipoll, I. 12. Origin unknown.

DOGMA, a definite tenet. (Gk.) 'This dogma of the world's eternity; 'Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 251 (R.) Rich. also quotes the pl. dogmata from Glanvill, Pre-existence of Souls, c. 12. Gk.  $\delta\delta\gamma\mu a$ , that which seems good, an opinion; pl.  $\delta\delta\gamma\mu a ra. - Gk.$  boxes, pref. pass.  $\delta\delta\delta\sigma\gamma\mu a r$ , I am valued at, I am of opinion. Cognate with Lat. decet, it behoves, decus, ornament, and Skt. dapa; fame; Curtius, i. 165.  $-\checkmark$  DAK, to bestow; see Decorum. Der. dogmat-ic-al. dogmat-ic-al-ly, dogmat-ise, dogmat-is-er, dogmat-ise, dogmat-ise, all from the stem  $\delta\delta\gamma\mu a ra$ . DOILLY, a small napkin. (Dutch.) Also used as the name of a

DOILY, a small napkin. (Dutch.) Also used as the name of a woollen stuff. 'We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine; a fool, and a doily suff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety;' Congreve, Way of the World. 'The stores are very low, sir, some doiley petticoats and manteaus we have, and half a dozen pair of laced shoes;' Dryden, Kind Keeper, iv. 1. It will be observed that doil-y or doil ey is here an adjective; the sb. is properly doil, the same as prov. Eng. (Norfolk) dwile, a coarse napkin or small towel; a term also applied, according to Forby, to the small napkin which we now call a doily. Du. dwaal, a towel; the same word with E. Towel, q.v. ¶ The suggestion in Johnson's Dictionary, 'so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker,' is a guess which rests on some authority; see Errata. [*]

DOIT, a small Dutch coin. (Du.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 33. – Du. duit, a doit. Remoter origin unknown; but perhaps allied to Dot, q.v. DOLE, a small portion. (E.) M. E. dole, dale. Spelt dcle, Ancren Riwle, pp. 10, 412; dale, Layamoa, 19646, where the later text has dole – A. S dúl, ge-dúl, Grein, i. 390; a variant of A. S. dál, a portion. Thus dole is a doublet of deal. q.v. ¶ The difference between deal and dole appears to be dialectal; cf. Lowland Sc. bane. mair, with E. bone more.

DOLEFUL, sad, miserable. (Hybrid; F. and E.) A hybrid Dominate. Horn, ed. Lumby, 1048; dol in O. Eng. Hom. i. 285, l. 4. - O. F doel, duel, dol, dul, deol, mod. F. deuil, grief, mourning; verbal sb. of O. F. doloir, to grieve; cf. Lat. cordolium, grief at heart - Lat. dolere, to grieve; perhaps related to dolare, to hew, from  $\checkmark$  DAR, to tear. See Tear, vb. Der. doleful-ly, doleful ness. See con dole, and dolour.

DOLL, a child's puppet. (Du.) In Johnson's Dict. Originally, 'a plaything.'-O. Du. dol, a whipping-top (Oudemans); cf. Du. dollen, to sport, be frolicsome. From the same root as Du. dol (= E.dull), mad; see Dull. Cf. prov. E. doil, strange nonsense; doil, stupid; dale, mad; dulies, a child's game. But see Errata. [*] DOLLLAR, a silver coin. (Du., -G.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2, 62.-

Du. daalder, a dollar. Adapted and borrowed from G. thaler, a dollar. B. The G. thaler is an abbreviation of Joachimsthaler, a coin so called because first coined from silver obtained from mines in Joachimsthal (i e. Joachim's dale) in Bohemia about A. D. 1518; they were sometimes called Schlickenthaler, because coined by the counts of Schlick. The G. thal is cognate with E. dale. Thus dollar = dale-er. See Dale.

DOLOUR, grief, sorrow. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iii. 1. 240. M. E. dolour, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 212.-O. F. dolsur, 'grief, sorrow;' Cot. = Lat. dolorem, acc. of dolor, grief. Lat. dolere, to grieve; see Doleful. Der. dolor-ous, used by Cot-grave to translate O. F. doloureux, from Lat. adj. dolorosus.

DOLPHIN, a kind of fish. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11, 23. M. E. dolphyne, Allit. Morte Arthure, 2053. [M. E. delphyne, King Alisaunder, 6576, is immediately from Lat. delphinus.]-O.F. daulphin, older spelling of dauphin; Cot. - Lat. delphinus. - Gk. δελφιν-, stem of δελφίε, a dolphin ; supposed to mean ' belly-fish ; ' cf. Gk. δελφίε, womb. See Curtius, i. 81.

DOLT, a dull or stupid fellow. (E.) In Shak. Oth. v. 2. 163. M. E. dult, blunt; ' dulte neiles,' blunt nails, i. e. instruments of the Passion; O. Eng. Hom. i. 203; and see Ancren Riwle, p. 292, where for dulte another reading is dulle. The word is a mere extension, with suffixed -i, of M. E. dul, dull. Cf. Prov. E. dold, stupid, confused (Halliwell), shewing that the suffixed -t = -d = -ed; and dolt or dult stands for dulled, i e. blunted. Der. dol:-ish, dolt-ish-ness.

DOMAIN, territory, estate. (F., -L.) 'A domaine and inheritance; 'Holland's Pliny, b. xiii. c. 3. - O. F. domaine, 'a demaine' (vic), Cot.; O. F. domaine, (less correctly) demaine, a domain; Burguy. -Lat. dominium, lordship.-Lat. dominus, a lord; see Dominate. Doublet, demesne, q. v.

DOMLE, a hemi-spherical roof. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Dome, a townhouse, guild-hall, state-house, meeting-house in a city, from that of Florence, which is so called. Also, a flat round loover, or open roof to a steeple, banqueting house, &c. somewhat resembling the bell of a great watch; 'Blount's Glos. ed. 1674. – O. F. dome, 'a town-house, guild-hall,' &c. (as above); also dosme, 'a flat-round loover,' &c. (as above); Cot. [The spelling dosme is false.]–Low Lat. doma, a house; cf. 'in angulo domatis,' Prov. xxi. 9 (Vulgate).–Gk. δώμα, a house; allied to Gk. δώμος, a building.–  $\checkmark$ DAM, to build. See below. (For this solution, see Scheler.)

DOMESTIC, belonging to a house. (F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. III, ii. 4. 60. - F. domestique, 'domesticall, housall, of our houshold;' Cot. - Lat. domesticus, belonging to a household; on the form of which see Curtius, i. 290. - Lat. domus, a house. - A DAM, to build; whence also E. timber, q. v. Dor. domestic-al-ly, domestic-ate, domesticat-ion; and see domicile, dome.

DOMICILE, a little house, abode. (F., -L.) 'One of the cells, or domicils of the understanding;' Bacon, on Learning, by G. Wats, ii. 12 (R.) - O. F. domicile, 'an house, mansion;' Cot. - Lat. domicilium, a habitation; on which see Curtius, i. 290. - Lat. domi-(= domo-), crude form of domus, a house; and -cilium, supposed to be connected with Lat. celare, to hide; see Dome and Conceal.

Dor. domicili-ar-y, domicili-ate, from Lat. domicili-arm. DOMINATE, to rule over. (L.) Shak. has dominator, L. L. L. i. 1. 222; Titus, ii. 3. 31. [The sb. domination, M. E. dominacion, is in early use; see Chaucer, C. T. 12494; from O. F. dominacion.] = Lat. dominatus, pp. of dominari, to be lord. - Lat. dominus, lord; connected with Lat. domare, to tame, and E. tame; see Tame. Der. dominat-ion (F. domination), dominat-ive, domin-ant (F. dominant, pres. pt. of dominer, to govern); and see domineer, dominical, dominion, domino, don.

DOMINEER, to play the master. (Du., -F., -L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 226.-O Du. domineren, to feast luxuriously; Oudemans. - O. F. dominer, 'to govern, rule, command, master, domineer, to have soveraignty;' Cot. - Lat. dominari, to be lord; see > DORMOUSE, a kind of mouse. (Scand. and E.)

The E. Word preserves the orig. F. sense; it is only the suffix -eer that is feally Dutch. See Cashier, verb.

DOMINICAL, belonging to our Lord. (F., -L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 44. - O. F. dominical; Cot. - Low Lat. dominicalis, dominical. - Lat. dominicus, belonging to a lord. - Lat. dominus, a lord; see Dominate.

DOMINION, lordship. (Low L.) 'To have lordship or dominion; 'Lidgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii; The Answer of King Ethiocles. - Low Lat. acc. dominionem, from nom. dominio. - Lat. dominium, lordship. - Lat. dominus, a lord ; see Dominate.

DOMINO, a masquerade-garment. (Span., -L.) * Domino. kind of hood worn by the canons of a cathedral church; also a mourning-vail for women; ' Kersey, ed. 1715. - Span. domino, a masquerade-dress. Orig. a dress worn by a master. - Span. domine, a master, a teacher of Latin grammar. - Lat. dominus, a master; see Dominate. Der. dominoes, the name of a game.

DON (1), to put on clothes. (E.) 'Don his clothes;' Hamlet, iv. 5. 52. A contraction of do on, i. e. put on. Brutus hehte his beomes don on hure burnan' = Brutus bade his men do on their breast-

DON (2), sir; a Spanish title. (Span, -L.) In Shak. Two Gent, i. 3. 39. - Span. don, lit. master, a Spanish title. - Lat. dominus, a master; see Dominate. The fem. is donna; also duenna, q.v. master; see Dominate. ¶ Increm. is donna; also auenna, q.v. The word itself is ultimately the same as the M. E. dan, as in 'dan John,' or 'dan Thomas' or 'dan Albon,' used by Chaucer, C. T. 13935. This form is from the O. F. dans = Lat. dominus. DONATION, a gift. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 85. - F. donation, 'a donation, a present;' Cot. - Lat. acc. donationsm, from

nom. donatio. - Lat. donatus, pp. of donare, to give. - Lat. donum, a gift; cognate with Gk.  $\delta \hat{\omega}_{por}$ , a present, Skt. dána, a gift.  $-\sqrt{DA}$ , to give; cf. Skt. dá, to give. Der. From the some source are donative, don-or, don-ee. From the same root are anecdote, antidote, condone, dose, dower ; also date (1), dative.

DONJON, the keep of a fortress; see Dungeon.

DONKEY, a familiar name for an ass. (E.) Common in mod. E., but very rare in E. literature; not in Todd's Johnson, nor in Richardson. a. The word is a double diminutive, formed with the suffixes -k- and -y (-ey), the full form of the double suffix appearing in the Lowland Scotch lass-ickie, a little-little lass; this double suffix is particularly common in the Banffshire dialect, which has beastikie from beast, horsikie from korse, &c., as explained in The Dialect of Banfishire, by the Rev. Walter Gregor, p. 5. β. The stem is dun, a familiar name for a horse, as used in the common phrase 'dun is in the mire; ' as to which see Chaucer, C. T. Mancip. Prol. 1. 5; Shak, Romeo, i. 4. 41. The name dun was given to a horse or ass in allu-sion to its colour; see Dun. ¶ Similarly was formed dunnock, M. E. donek, a hedge-sparrow, with a single suffix -ock. [†] DOOM, a judgment, decision. (E.) M. E. dom; Havelok, 2487; and common. - A. S. dim; Grein, i. 196. + Swed. and Dan. dom. + Icel. domr. + Goth. doms. + O. H. G. twom, judgment. + Gk. Of us, law. - & DHA, to place; cf. Skt. dhá, to place, set. Der. deem, verb; q. v.; dooms-day, q. v. Observe that the suffix -dom (A.S. -dom) is the same word as doom

DOOMSDAY-BOOK, a survey of England made by William I. 'Doomsday-book, so called because, upon any difference, the (E.) parties received their doom from it. . . In Latin, dies judicarius; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. The reason of the name is rather obscure, but the etymology is obvious, viz. from A.S. domes dag, the day of judgment or decision ; cf. M. E. domesday, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 194.

DOOR, an entrance-gate. (E.) M. E. dore, Havelok, 1788. -A.S. duru; Grein, i. 212. + Du. deur. + Dan. dör. + Swed. dörr. + Icel. dyrr. + Goth. daur. + O. H. G. tor, G. thor, thür. + Lat. pl. fores. + Gk. 05pa. + Skt. dvára, dvár, a door, gate. Root uncertain; see Curtius, i. 320. Der. door-nail (M. E. dorenail, Will. of Paleme, 628); door-pin_(M. E. dorepin, durepin, Gen. and Exodus, 1078); door-ward (M. E. doreward, dureward, Layamon, ii. 317). DORMANT, sleeping. (F., -L.) 'A table-dormant; 'Chaucer,

C. T. 355. – F. dormant, pres. pt. of dormir, to sleep. – Lat. dormire, to sleep; see Dormitory. Der. dormanc-y. DORMER-WINDOW, an attic-window. (F. and E.) A dormer was a sleeping-room. 'Or to any shop, cellar, ... chamber, dormer; 'Chapman, All Fools, Act iv. sc. 1. Formed from O. F. dormir, to sleep; cf. O. F. dormir, 'a nap, sleep, a sleeping;' Cot. See Dormant, Dormitory.

DORMITORY, a sleeping-chamber. (L.) • The dormitoriedoor ; ' Holinshed, Desc. of Ireland, c. 3. - Lat. dormitorium, a sleeping-chamber; neut. of dormitorius, adj. of or belonging to sleeping. -Lat. dormitor, a sleeper. - Lat. dormitare, to sleep; frequent. of dormire, to sleep; cognate with Gk. dapdaver, to sleep, Skt. drá. to sleep. - & DAR, or DRA, to sleep; see Curtius, i. 288; Fick, i. 618. 'Lay still lyke a dormouse, nothynge doyn g]e;' Hall, Hen. VI, an. 7 (R.) M. E. dormouse. 'Hic sorex, a dormous;' Wright's Vocab. i. 220, col. 1; and in Prompt. Parv. Lit. 'dozing-mouse.' The prefix is from a prov. E. dor, to sleep, appearing in dorrer, a sleeper, lazy person (Halliwell), and prob. closely related to E. doze, q.v. B. Apparently of Scand. origin. Cf. Icel. dár, benumbed, very sleepy, as in dár gleymskusvefn, a benumbing sleep of forgetfulness; dúrr, a nap, slumber; dúra, to take a nap; dús, a lull, a dead calm. See Dose

DORSAL, belonging to the back. (F., -L.) The term ' dorsal fin ' is used by Pennant, who died A.D. 1798. - F. dorsal, of or belonging to the back; Cot. - Low Lat. dorsalis, belonging to the back. -Lat. dorsum, the back ; related to Gk. deepds, a mountain-ridge, deeph, Sept, a neck, mountain-ridge; Curtius, i. 291; and see Fick, i. 616. DOSE, a portion of medicine. (F., -Gk.) 'Without repeated doses; ' Dryden's tr. of Virgil, Dedication. And used by Cotgrave. -O.F. dose, 'a dose, the quantity of potion or medicine,' &c.; Cot. – Gk.  $\delta \delta \sigma u_s$ , a giving, a portion given or prescribed. – Gk.  $\delta \delta \sigma u_s$ , a giving, a portion given or prescribed. – Gk. base  $\delta \sigma_s$  appearing in  $\delta \delta \sigma u_s$ , I give. – 4 DA, to give; cf. Skt.  $du_s$ , to give. Der.  $d\sigma u_s$ , verb. See Donation. DOT, a small mark, speck. (Du.) Not in early use, and uncommon in old authors. It occurs in Johnson's Dict., and the phrase dotted lines' occurs in Burke's Letters (Todd). Cotgrave has: Caillon, a dot, clot, or congealed lump.' The only other early trace I can find of it is in Palsgrave, qu. by Halliwell, who uses dor in the sense of 'a small lump, or pat.' Cf. prov. Eng. 'a tiny little dor,' i.e. a small child. - Du. dor, 'a little bundle of spoiled wool, thread, silk, or such like, which is good for nothing; ' Sewel. β. The remoter origin is obscure; cf. Swed. dial. dott, a little heap, clump; E. Friesic dotte, dot, a clump (Koolman); Fries. dodd, a clump (Outzen). ¶ It is possible that in the phrase 'not worth a dotkin,' cited in Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674, the reference is to this Du. dot, instead of to Du. duit, a doit, as is usually supposed; or the two words may have been confused. [+]

DOTAGE, childishness, foolishness. (E., with F. suffix.) M. E. detage, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 1425. From the verb dote, with

F. suffix -age, answering to Lat. suffix -aticum. See Dote. DOTARD, a foolish fellow. (E., with F. suffix.) In Chaucer, C. T. 5913. From the verb dote, with F. suffix -ard, of O. H. G. orgin. See Dote.

DOTE, to be foolish. (E.) In early use. M. E. dotien, doten; Layamon, l. 3294; P. Plowman, A. i. 129; B. i. 138. An Old Low G. word. Cf. O. Du. doten, to dote, mope, Oudemans; Du. dutten, to take a nap, to mope; dut, a nap, sleep, dotage. + Icel. dotta, to nod with sleep. + M. H. G. tuzen, to keep still, mope. ¶ The F. radoter, O. F. redoter, is of O. Low G. origin, with Lat. prefix re-Der. do:-age, q. v.; dot-ard, q. v.; dott-er-el, a silly bird, Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 25 (R.); and Prompt. Parv.

DOUBLE, two-fold. (F., - L.) M. E. double, Ancren Riwle, p. 70 - O. F. doble, later double. - Lat. duplus, double, lit. twice-full. -Lat. due, for duo, two; and -plus, related to Lat. plenus, full, from the root PAR, to fill; see Two and Full. Der. double, verb; double-ness; also doublet, q. v., doubloon, q. v.

DOUBLET, a thick garment, (F, -L) In Shak. Temp. ii. 1. 102. M. E. dobbelet, 'a garment, bigera;' Prompt. Parv.; see Way's note. - O. F. doublet, 'a doublet, a jewell, or stone of two peeces joyned or glued together;' Cot. [Here doublet is probably used in a lapidary's sense, but the word is the same; cf. O. F. doublure, lining for a garment.] = F. double, double; with dim. suffix -et; see Double. DOUBLOON, a Spanish coin. (F., - Span., - L.) A Spanish word, given in Johnson's Dict. as doublos, which is the French form. -Span. doblon, so called because it is the double of a pistole. - Span. doblo, double; with augmentative suffix -on (= Ital. -one.) - Lat.

duplus; see Double. DOUBT, to be uncertain. (F.,-L.) M. E. douten, commonly in the sense ' to fear ;' Havelok, l. 708. - O. F. douter, later doubler, as in Cotgrave, whence b was inserted into the E. word also. - Lat. dubitare, to doubt, be of two minds; closely connected with dubius, doubtful ; see Dubious. Der. doubt, sb. ; doubt-er, doubt-ful, doubtful-ly, doubt-ful-ness, doubt-less, doubt-less-ly.

DOUCEUR, a small present. (F., -L.) A French word, used by Burke (Todd). - F. douceur, lit. sweetness. - Lat. dulcorem, acc. of dulcor, sweetness. - Lat. dulcis, sweet ; perhaps cognate with Gk.

Note: See Curtius, i. 446. DOUCHE, a shower-bath. (F., - Ital., - L.) Modern, and a French word. - F. douche, a douche, a shower-bath, introduced from Ital. in the 16th cent. (Brachet) .- Ital. doccia, a conduit, canal, water-pipe, spout. - Ital. docciare, to pour; formed as if from a Low canal; see Duct.

spelt do3, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 205; see da3 in Stratmann, p. 119. -A.S. dah, gen. dages, dough; A.S. Leechdoms, ii. 342, l. 18. + Du. deeg. + Dan. deig. + Swed. deg. + Icel. deig. + Goth. daigs, a kneaded lump, + G. teig.  $\beta$ . The sense is 'a kneaded lump;' the root appears in Goth. deigan, digan, to knead, to form out of a plastic material, Rom. ix. 20; cognate with Lat. fingere, to form, shape, mould; also with Gk. Biggáreir, to handle; also with Skt. dih, to smear. - V DHIGH, to touch, feel, knead ; whence also E. dike, q. v., figure, &c. See Curtius, i. 223. Der. dougk-y. And see Figure, Fiction. [+]

DOUGHTY, able, strong, valiant. (E.) M. E. duhti, dohti, dou3ti ; Layamon, 14791 ; P. Plowman, B. v. 102.-A. S. dyhtig, valiant; Grein, i. 213. - A.S. dugan, to be strong, to avail. + Du. deugen, to be worth. + Dan. due, to avail; whence dygtig, able, capable. + Swed. duga, to avail; whence dugtig, able, fit. + Icel. duga, to avail; whence dygougr, doughty. + Goth. dugan, to avail, suit. + O. H. G. tugan, G. taugen, to be worth; whence G. tüchtig, able. β. All these are probably connected, as Fick suggests (i. 120), with Skt. duh (for dhugh), to milk, also to enjoy, to draw something out of something; from  $\checkmark$  DHUGH, to yield profit, to milk; whence also E. daughter, q.v. ¶ The A. S. dugan is prov. E. dow, to be worth, and E. do in the phrase ' that will do;' see Do (2).

DOUSE, to plunge into water, immerse. (Scand.) 'I have washed my feet in mire or ink, douz'd my carnal affections in all the wasned my teet in mire of ink, down a my carnat affections in all the vileness of the world; 'Hammond, Works, iv. 515 (R.) 'He was very often used... to be dowssed [perfundebatur] in water luke warme;' Holland, Suetonius, p. 75 (R.) 'To swing i'th' the air, or douce in water;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. 502.—Swed. dunsa, to plump down, fall clumsily; cf. Dan. dundse, to thump, where the d is excressent; see dunsa in Rietz.—Swed, dial. duns, the points of a fully before. noise of a falling body; Rietz. – Swed. dial. duna, to make a din; see Din.  $\P$  The loss of n before s and th is an E. peculiarity, as in goose, tooth. The word may have been confused, lately, with

In goose, tools. The word may have been contused, latery, with douche, q.v. It appears to differ from douse, q.v. DOUT, to extinguish. (E.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 2. 11. Doue. is for do out, i. e. put out. Cf. doff, don, dup, for do off, do on, do up. DOVE, the name of a bird. (E.) M. E. doue, doune, doune (where u = v); P. Plowman, B. xv. 393. – A. S. dúfa\*, only found in the compound dufe-doppa, used to translate Lat. pelicanus (Bosworth); the usual A. S. word was culfra. + O. Sax. duva (Heliand). + Goth. dubo. + O. H. G. tuba, G. taube.  $\beta$ . The sense is 'diver,' the form dufa being from the verb dufan, to dive, with the suffix -a denoting the agent, as usual; for a similar formation, see Columbine. And see Dive. Der. dove-cot; also dove-tail, q. v.

DOVETAIL, to fasten boards together. (E.) 'Dovetaild is a term among joyners,' &c.; Blount's Gloss. From dove and tail; from the shape of the fitted ends of the board. DOWAGER, a widow with a jointure.  $(F_{..}-L.)$

In Shak. Mids. N. D. i. 1. 5, 157. A coined word, made by suffixing r (for -rr) to dowage. 'To make her dowage [endowment] of so rich a jointure;' Merry Devil of Edmonton (R.)  $\beta$ . Again dowage is a coined word, as if from a F. dou-age, from the F. douer, to endow .-Lat. dotare, to endow. See Dower. [†] DOWER, an endowment. (F.,-L.)

M.E. dower, Chaucer, C. T. 8683. - O. F. doaire, later douaire. - Low Lat. dotarium. - Lat. dotare, to endow. - Lat. dot-, stem of dos (gen. dotis), a gift, dowry + Gk. Sárs, a gift. - 4 DA, to give; cf. Skt. dá, to give. Der. dower-ed, dower-less; dowry (for dower-y); and see dowager. [†]

DOWN (1), soft plumage. (Scand.) In Gower, C. A. ii. 103.-Icel. dúnn, down. + Swed. dun. + Dan. duun. + Du. dons. Cf. Icel. daunn, a smell, fume.  $\beta$ . The words down, fume, and dust are all. from the same root; down was so called from its likeness to dust, when blown about. See Dust, Fume. Der. down-y; eider down.

DOWN (2), a hill. (C.) M. E. dun, doun; I. Layamon, 27256; Ormulum, 14568.-A. S. dún, a hill; Grein, i. 213.-Irish dún, a fortified hill, fort, town; Gael. dun, a hill, mount, fort; W. din, a B. Cognate with A.S. tún, a fort, enclosure, town; the hill-fort. A. S. t answering to Celtic d by Grimm's law. See Town. Der.

a-down, q. v.; also down (3), q. v. DOWN (3), adv. and prep. in a descending direction. (A. S., from C.) The prep. down is a mere corruption, by loss of the initial, of M. E. a-down, which again is for A. S. of-dúne, i. e. off or from the hill. The loss of the prefix is of early date; dun (for a-dune) occurs in Layamon, 6864, in the phrase 'he dun læi' = he lay down. It will be observed that this form due was originally an adverb, not a preposition. See Down (2), and Adown. Der. down-cast, down-fall, down-hearted, down-hill, down-right, down-ward, down-wards. Dunward (downward) occurs in Layamon, 13106.

Lat. ductiare *, a derivative of ductus, a leading, in late Lat. a duct, canal; see Duct. DOUGH, kneaded flour. (E.) M. E. dak, dagh, do;, dagh, dow; to strike; 'Bailey, qu. by Todd. M. E. duschen, to strike; 'such a dasande drede ducked to his heart '= such a dazing dread struck to $ Skt. dhri, to bear, to carty. See Curtius, i. 235. his heart; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 1538.-Of Scand. origin; cf. Norwegian duta, to break, cast down from, Ger. dial. dusen, tusen, to strike, run against, cited by Rietz s. v. dust; also O. Du. doesen, to beat heavily, strike (Kilian); E. Fries. dössen, to strike (Koolman). B. The derived forms Swed. dust, Dan. dyst, a conflict, combat, shock, set-to, correspond to the E. derivative doust or dust, a stroke, blow, used by Beaum. and Fletcher (Todd); whence the verb dust, to beat (Nares, ed. Halliwell and Wright). y. Perhaps allied to dash, q. v.; and prob. distinct from dows, to plunge, q. v. DOWSE (2), to plunge into water; see Douse.

DOWSE (3), to extinguish. (E.) A cant term ; dowse the glim, i. e. extinguish the light. Yet good English. -A. S. dwæscan, to extinguish; Grein.  $-\sqrt{DHWAS}$ , to perish; see Doze, Dissy. The change of dwa- to dw- (= dow-) is seen in dull, q. v. DOXOLOGY, an utterance of praise to God. (L., - Gk.)

• Dowology, a song of praise. &c.; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. - Low Lat. dowologia. - Gk. δοξολογία, an ascription of praise. - Gk. δοξολόγos, giving praise. - Gk. δοξο., for δόξα, glory; and -λύγοε, speaking, from λέγειν, to speak. Δόξα meant originally 'a notion,' from δοκείν, to think, expect; see Dogma.

DOXY, a disreputable sweetheart. (O. Low G. or Scand.) Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 3. 2. See Duck (3). DOZE, to sleep lightly, slumber. (Scand.)

'Doz'd with his fumes, and heavy with his load. They found him snoring in his dark abode; Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Ecl. vi. 14. Here doz'd means 'stu-pefied,' 'rendered drowsy.' - Icel. dúsa, to doze. + Swed. dial. dusa, to doze, slumber; Rietz. + Dan. döss, to doze, mope. -  $\checkmark$  DHWAS, to crumble, perish; whence A.S. dwas, stupid, stupefied; Du. dwaas, foolish. Cf. Dan. dös, drowziness; Icel. dúrr, a nap, dúra, to take a nap. Connected with dizzy; and probably also with daze, and even with dull and dwell. Cf. Skt. dwri, to cause to fall; dwams, dwas, to crumble, perish, fall. See Dizzy, Dormouse. DOZEN, twelve. (F., -L.) M. E. dosain; K. Alisaunder, 1. 657.

-O. F. dosaine, dozaine; mod. F. donzaine, a dozen. -O. F. doze, mod. F. douze, twelve; with suffix -ain (= Lat. -anus or -enus). - Lat. duodecim, twelve - Lat. duo, two. cognate with E. two; and decem, ten, cognate with E. ten. See Two and Ton.

DRAB (1), a low, sluttish woman. (C.) In Shak. Mach. iv. J. 31. Of Celtic origin; Gael. and Irish drab, preserved in Irish drabog, a slut, slattern, Gael. drabag, a slattern; Gael. draback, dirty, slovenly, drabaire, a dirty, slovenly man; where the endings -og, -ag are dimin. suffixes, -ach is an adj. suffix, and -aire denotes the agent. β. All from Irish drab, a spot, a stain, which is nearly related to Gael. and Irish drabh, draff, the grains of malt, whence also the Gael. drabhag, dregs, lees, a little filthy slattern. The peculiar use of the word is Cellic; the corresponding E. word is Draff, q.v. Der. drab, verb; Hamlet, ii. 1. 26.

DRAB (2), of a dull brown colour. (F.) 'Drab, adj. (with clothiers), belonging to a gradation of plain colours betwixt a white and a dark brown; 'Ash's Dict. ed. 1775. He also gives: 'Drab, s. (in commerce) a strong kind of cloth, cloth double milled.' It would appear that drab was applied to the colour of undyed cloth. -F. drap, cloth.-Low Lat. acc. drappum, from nom. drappus, in Charlemagne's Capitularies (Brachet). ¶ Brachet says 'of un-known origin.' Cotgrave, however, gives to draper the sense 'to full cloth ;' and it seems possible to refer the Low Lat. drappus to the O. Low G. root drap, seen in Icel. drepa, to beat, smite (-G. treffen). See Drub. We must be careful, however. not to overlook the Low Lat. trapus, Span. trapo, cloth, another form of the word. See Drape, Trappings.

DRACHM, a weight ; see Dram.

DRAFF, dregs, refuse, hogwash. (E.) M. E. draf, Chaucer, C. T. 17346; and earlier, in Layamon, 29256. Not found in A. S., but may be considered an E. word. + Du. draf, swill, hog's wash. + Icel. draf, draff, husks. + Swed. draf, grains. + Dan. drav, dregs, lees. + Gael. drabh, draff, the grains of malt; cf. drwaip, lees, dregs; Irish drabh, grains, refuse; cf. druaid, lees. + G. träber, pl. grains, husks. Allied to Drab (1), q. v. ¶ The supp dregs, is wholly unauthorised, and due to Somner. ¶ The supposed A.S. drabbe.

A corruption of DRAFT, the act of drawing, a draught. (E.) draught, by the usual change of gh to f, as in lawgh (pron. lawf). See Draught. Dor. draft, verb, drafts-man.

DRAG, to pull forcibly. (Scand.) M. E. draggen, Prompt. Parv. A secondary weak verb, due to draw. - Swed. dragga, to search with a grapnel. - Swed. dragg, a grapnel; cf. Dan. drag, a pull, tug, draught, haul. - Swed. draga, to draw. + Icel. draga, to draw, puil, carry. + Dan. drage, to draw, pull, drag. + Goth. dragan, to draw. + O. H. G. tragan, G. tragen, to bear, carry. β. Cf. Gk. δολιχόε, long; Skt. dirgha, long, drágh, dhrágh, to lengthen, to exert oneself. | g HARGH, an extension of  $\checkmark$  DHAR, to bear, to carry; cf

¶ Fick, i. 634. distinguishes between the Pots dhargh, to make fast, and dhargh, to carry, and between Goth. Gragan and Icel. draga ; this seems doubtful. Curtus remarks that 'the Lat, trakere must be rejected (as cognate) on account of its t.' Der. drag, sb., drag-net; also dragg-le, q. v.; and see Draw. [+]

DRAGGLE, to make or become dirty by drawing along the ground. (E.) 'His draggling tail hung in the dirt;' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 449. The frequentative of drag, by addition of the usual suffix-le; cf. straggle from stray. See Drag. Doublet, drawl. DRAGOMAN, an interpreter. (Span., -Gk., -Arab.) Spelt drug-german, Pope, Sat. viii. 83. [Found very early, spelt drogman, in King Alisaunder, I. 3401; from F. drogman.] - Span. dragoman; cf Ital. dragommanno, an interpreter. A word of Eastern origin, introduced from Constantinople by the Crusaders, who had borrowed it from the medizeval Gk. Spayobuaros, an interpreter (Brachet). - Arab. tarjuman, an interpreter, translator, dragoman; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 131; Rich. Dict. p. 388. Cf. Chaldee targum, a version, interpretation. DRAGON, a winged serpent. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. dragun; Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 24, l. 759.-F. dragon.-Lat. acc. draconem. from nom. draco.-Gk. sparser, a dragon; lit. 'sceing one,' i. e. sharp-sighted one. - Gk. Boas., base of bepropue, I see - VDARK, to see; cf. Skt. drig, to see. Der. dragon-isk, dragon-et (dimin. form), dragon-fly; and see dragoon.

DRAGOON, a kind of light horseman. (F., -L., -Gk) 'A captain of dragoons;' Spectator, no. 261. -F. dragon, a dragoon, horse-soldier; the same word with F. dragon, a dragon, though the reason for the name has not been clearly made out. - Lat. acc. dracenem, from nom. draco, a dragon. See Dragon. Der. dragenade, a French word. ¶ In connection with dragoon, observe the curious passage in Barbour's Bruce, ii. 203, viz. 'And bad him men of armys ta, ... And byrn, and slay, and raiss dragoum; ' on which my note is, 'i.e. lit. to raise the dragon ... I would suggest that it means to raise the devil's standard. Ducange gives : " Draco (1) vexillum in quo draconis effigies efficta ; (2) effigies draconis, que cum vexillis in ecclesiasticis processionibus deferri solet, qua vel diabolus ipse, vel hæresis designantur, de quibus triumphat ecclesia." We are all familiar with St. George and the dragon, wherein the dragon represents evil. Perhaps the verb to dragoon has hence drawn somewhat of its sinister meaning.' Add to this that M. E. dragon was common in the sense of 'standard ;' cf. 'Edmond ydyst hys standard . . . and hys dragon vp yset;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 303; cf. pp. 216. 545; Rich. Coer de Lion, 2967; and see Littré. [+] DRAIN, to draw off gradually. (E.) In Shak. Mach. i. 3. 18

-A.S. drehnigean, drehnian, drenian; in the phr. 'ge drehnigean [var. read. drehnian, drenian] bone gnæt aweg.' i.e. ye drain away the gnat; Matt. xxiii. 24.  $\beta$ . Here dreh=drah=drag; and the counterpart of the word occurs in Icel. dragna, to draw along. y. Formed, with suffix -n- (cf. Goth. verbs in -nan) from the base drag-; see Drag. B. Or formed from the sb. dreg, from the same root, as when we speak of 'brewers' drains;' see Dregs. 🗲 It is a mistake to connect the word with dry, which has a different vowel; or with G. thräne, a tear, of which the O. Sax. form is trakai.

and the Du. form traan. Der. drain, sb.; drain-age, drain-er. DRAKE, the male of the duck. (E.) 'As doth the white 'As doth the white doke after hir drake ;' Chaucer, C. T. 3576 ; cf. Havelok, 1241. A contraction of ened-rake or end-rake, a masc. form from A. S. ened, a duck (Bosworth). The A. S. ened became M. E. end or ende, badly spelt hende in Havelok, 1241; hence endrake, and the corrupted drake, by the loss of the first two letters. + Icel. önd (= andu). a duck; whence the O. Icel. andriki, a drake (Haldorsson); cf. Icel. andarsteggi, a drake, in which the original a reappears. + Swed. and, a wild duck; anddrake, a male wild duck. + Dan. and, a duck; andrik, a drake. + G. ente (O. H. G. anat, ante), a duck; enterich, a drake. B. Cf. also Du. eend, a duck; Lat. anas (crude form anati-), a duck; Gk. vijooa (=aryrea), a duck; on which see Curtins, y. The suffix appears again in the G. günse-rick, a i. 394. gander; taube-rich, a cock-pigeon; and in some proper names, as Frede-rick, G. Fried-rich, Mœso-Goth. Fritha-reiks. It appears as a separate word in Goth. reiks, chief, mighty, ruling, having authority, whence reiki, authority, rule; cf. E. bishop-ric; see further under Rogal. Thus the sense is 'lord of the duck,' or 'duck-king.' [1]

DRAM, DRACHM, a small weight, small quantity. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Timon -Gk.) In Shak. Timon, v. 1. 154; Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 6. <sup>4</sup> Drame, wyghte [weight], drama, dragma;' Prompt. Parv. – O. F. drame, dragma, drachmu, 'a dram; the eighth part of an ounce, or three scruples; also, a handful of;' Cot. – Lat. drachma, borrowed from Gk. δραχμή, a handful, a drachma, used both as a weight and a coin; cf. δράγμα, as much as one can grasp. - Gk. δράσουμαι, l grasp; from APAK, discussed by Curtius, ii. 98. DRAMA, a representation of actions. (L.,-Gk.)

DRAPE, to cover with cloth. (F.) Formerly, to manufacture cloth ; 'that the clothier might draps according as he might afford ; Bacon, Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 74. - F. draper, to make cloth; Cot. - F. drap, cloth; see Drab (2). Der. drap-er, occurring in P. Plowman, B. v. 255; drap-er-y.

DRASTIC, actively purgative, effective. (Gk.) ' Drastica, drastick remedies, i. e. such as operate speedily and effectually ;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - Gk. Spar rinde, drastic, effective. - Gk. Span, I effect; see Drama.

DRAUGHT, also DRAFT, a drawing. (E.) 'A draught of win; 'Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 396 (or 308); spelt drakt, Layamon, 29259. Not found in A. S., but evidently derived from A. S. dragan, to draw, drag; see Draw, Drag. The suffixed - appears also in flight from fly, drift from drive, &c. + Du. dragt, a load, burden; from dragen, to carry, + Dan. dragt, a load. + Icel. drdttr, a pulling, a draught (of fishes); from Icel. draga, to draw. Der. draughthouse, draughts-man or drafts-man; also draughts, a game in which alternate draughts, i. e. ' moves,' are made ; Chaucer uses draughtes, in the sense of 'moves' at the game of chess, in The Boke of the Duchesse, I. 655; cf. Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, 1779, 1812. DRAW, to pull along. (E.) A primary strong verb. M.E. drawen, earlier form drayen; see Layamon, 10530. - A.S. dragan, Grein, i. 202. + O. Sax. dragan, to carry. + Swed. draga, &c. See Drag. Der. draw-back, draw-bridge, draw-er, draw-ers, draw-ing. draw-ing-room (short for withdraw-ing-room), draw-well; also withdraw, q. v.; drawl, q. v.; drawght, q. v.; and dray, q. v. DRAWL, to speak very slowly. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 1. 145. An extension of draw, with the suffix -I, giving a frequentative force. Thus drawl is a doublet of draggle, q. v. Cf. Du. dralen, to loiter, linger, delay; similarly formed from dragen, to
